7413. Would you be in favour of a classification of inmates?—I would.

7415. You did not mean putting into one workhouse all the inmates?—No, sir; but according to character.

7416. Mr. Muldoon.—How would you deal with the class which we may call the criminal class of paupers?—I would refuse them the workhouse?—Do you mean to say tramps? Oh, I would refuse them entirely. I would make them a Government charge; put them elsewhere in the hands of the police.

7417. You think that would be an effective method of dealing with them?—I do.

7418. With regard to the employment of paupers in the workhouse, what is your view?—I would like to see the paupers all kept busy in some way or other—either in the market garden or, if they know any trade, to give them some light work at that trade—they would be far happier.

7419. CHAIRMAN.—Suppose you had very few in your workhouses who would be able to do even a few hours' work in the day?—Well, even very little.

7420. How many men could do masonry spreading for inmates?—I would not ask them to do that; I would give them the very lightest work to keep their minds occupied.

7421. Mr. Muldoon.—Would you propose to keep them at employment which would compete with labour under outside?—What I had in my mind more was to be in for market-gardening, where they could send their produce somewhere else.

7422. As to the dietary scale in Monaghan, what is your view?—I think it is very good.

7423. Are there any papers providing extras?—I think at the present moment there are four.

7424. In case of any workhouses being discontinued in the county, how would you propose to deal with the distressed workhouses?—You would want to have in each town where a workhouse at present exists, you would have to have some sort of a district hospital; I think district hospitals might also be started in towns where workhouses do not exist.

7425. Have you any town in your mind when you suggest that?—Ballybay, and another place in Enniscorthy.

7426. In the event of these district hospitals being established in these towns and union workhouses dissolved, do you see any difficulty in transporting paupers of the county generally to Monaghan?—There would be no difficulty that could not be got over, I think.

7427. Do you suggest district nursing?—I do.

7428. You think it would be necessary?—Certainly; I think it would be most serviceable.

7429. CHAIRMAN.—That is to have a district nurse in every dispensary district?—Yes; the same as you have a midwife at present.

7430. Mr. MULDOON.—What is your view on the question of the women who use workhouses for the purpose of giving birth to children?—I would like to see them in separate establishments by themselves.

7431. Do you mean a separate establishment or a separate part of the building?—I would have them in a separate establishment in the county.

7432. What would you do with the children?—Board them out as soon as possible.

7433. CHAIRMAN.—You mean for the women something not under the Guardians at all?—They might be under the Guardians; but suppose you take a part of one workhouse—that is if any of the workhouses are abolished—a part of a workhouse might be taken over for these women.

7434. Or if they were sent to a religious penitentiary?—That would be a very good way.

7435. Under the management of the religious body to which they belonged themselves?—That might be a very good way out of the trouble.

7436. Then they would be saved still further contamination that they are apt to receive in the workhouse where they meet with other women even in a worse position than themselves?—That would be a good idea.

7437. And their children could be boarded out?—They might.

7438. Mr. MULDOON.—Do you think these penitentiaries should receive support from the rates?—I think so.

CHAIRMAN.—The rates at present support the women in the workhouse, and they possibly would have to pay for in a penitentiary.

7439. Mr. MULDOON.—One such institution might serve for a number of counties?—Yes; a great many.

CHAIRMAN.—And would receive as well as maintain.

7440. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—The number of that class in Monaghan is very small?—In the town of Monaghan very small indeed.

7441. I understand only two within the last year or two?—That is all.

7442. CHAIRMAN.—You think they don't go elsewhere?—I don't think so. I hear there are only about five in the entire county.

CHAIRMAN.—There are existing penitentiaries in Ireland. I don't know whether they would be equal to this task or not.

7443. Mr. MULDOON.—What is your view upon the outdoor relief question?—I have always been against outdoor relief, and I am against it, except relief on a medical certificate.

7444. CHAIRMAN.—Take the case of a man who had a large family and had no charitable friends to look to, if he got knocked up by accident, broke his leg, and had wife and family what would you do in that case; you would not offer them the workhouse?—I would not like to offer them the workhouse; I would sooner try and get up subscriptions for them.

7445. Free Law relief, you think, ought not to deal with such a case?—I don't like outdoor relief in any form; it has a demoralising effect on the people.

7446. You have been all your life connected with Monaghan, and the outdoor relief has been very small in this union?—Very small.

7447. Going about as much as you have done, have you heard ever any reasonable complaints against the Guardians in the Union of Monaghan on account of any suffering that might have occurred owing to their refusal?—I have never known an instance of it.

7448. Mr. MULDOON.—But the Monaghan Guardians do give outdoor relief?—They have since the passing of the Local Government Act, but very little.

7449. Is it not your view that in the case which the President of the Commission has put to you, of the bread-winner struck down, it might be useful in such a case to give outdoor relief until he would get better?—I think it is a case for private charity.

7450. Do you not think that while a charitable organisation would be starting a subscription the person might suffer considerable hardship if the relieving officer did not visit him?

CHAIRMAN.—I suppose you don't look to subscriptions so much as to the charity of individuals?—Yes.

7451. Is not that a precarious thing?—It is quite possible there would be hardship.

7452. It would be the relieving officer's business in case there were any hardship to at once afford relief by giving provision?—If a man was sick relief would be given under a medical certificate; that is one of the cases, I think, in which relief should be given.

7453. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—For instance, in the case of a man who had a decided dislike to go into the workhouse, would you leave him there to die?—If the man was sick the medical officer would give a certificate saying so.

7454. He might not be absolutely ill, from a professional point of view, but he might not be in good health or able to do anything; would you leave that man to starve?—I don't know of such a case, and cannot see that such a case would occur.

7455. It has come under the notice of some Guardians?—I have never known a case of it.

7456. CHAIRMAN.—You believe there would be a charitable feeling in his neighbourhood?—I am certain of it; the neighbours would not see him want.

7457. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Is that fair to the neighbours—that they should not only contribute to the upkeep of the union but also assist local cases?—I think it would be a very small thing, and I don't think people should be relieved from individual charity of that sort; I think it does them good.

7458. It does the people good who give?—And the people who receive.

7459. But the patient who is only awaiting the influence of charity, don't you think his position is rather risky?—I don't think so.

7460. Mr. MULDOON.—Do you think that some of the relief now given in outdoor relief does not go down to the maintenance of the poor?—I cannot speak from my own experience, but I have heard a good deal does not.

CHAIRMAN.—There was only £117 in the last audited year spent in this union; it is very, very small.

7461. Mr. MULDOON.—You think the reduction of workhouses would lessen the tramp evil to a great extent?—It is bound to do that.

7462. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think the tramp won't go on marching even if these barracks are closed to him; that he won't go on marching and put up in farmers' yards and under haystacks?—I would let the police look after that; I would pass a law that a tramp was to report himself at the police barracks of every town he went through.

7463. It would be rather hard to enforce that?—They are not killed with work.

7464. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—The tramp question is not of great importance to Monaghan?—I saw a few days ago about a dozen go on.

7465. CHAIRMAN.—The fair day, I suppose?—I think we do suffer greatly from tramps here.

Mr. MURTAGHAN.—There was only one on the particular day given on this sheet.

7466. Mr. MULDOON.—In the event of its being considered desirable to continue two unions in the county, would you say Monaghan would be a more convenient place than Clonsilla?—I would; Monaghan and Castleblayney.

7467. You think Clonsilla is an out-of-the-way place for a union for the northern part of the county?—It is exactly on the edge of the county.

7468. Dr. BROWNE.—About the county infirmary, does it serve for the whole county?—It does.

Nov. 24, 1908.

Dr. Hall.

Nov. 24, 1903.

Dr. Hall.

7460. Do you get many cases from the extreme south and extreme north?—No, of course, so many as we get quite close.

7470. The numbers decrease as the radius increases?—Yes.

Chairman.—We found that was not the case to a very remarkable extent at Lifford; we found great numbers coming from long distances.

7471. Dr. BAKER.—How do the patients mostly come to the infirmary?—A great many by train and a great many drive over.

7472. It is more a surgical hospital, I presume?—We take in both surgical and medical cases.

7473. How are they admitted?—By ticket from the governors.

7474. Are there any restrictions at all; if any poor person goes there that is a proper case is there any trouble in getting a ticket for admission?—I don't think so.

7475. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose if an urgent case comes in you have full power to take it in?—Yes; we are bound to take in any medical or surgical case.

7476. Dr. BAKER.—They would have to come on their own responsibility?—That it is understood we take in all urgent cases at once.

7477. Are there many consumptive cases in the workhouse?—No; at present we have none.

7478. In the infirmary?—There is one at present.

7479. Is it isolated?—No it is an old man, who only came in to-day or yesterday.

7480. Have you any words for the treatment of consumption?—No; not any special words. I am quite in favour of isolation. When I have two or three consumptives in I try and keep them in a ward by themselves.

7481. In these most consumption in the county, in the immediate neighbourhood of Monaghan?—Not very much; not any more than the average; it is not worse than other counties.

7482. Do you and a good many cases of surgical tuberculosis?—We get a good deal of that; it is very prevalent.

7483. Could you make any recommendation how consumptive cases should be treated?—Some of the distasteful workhouses might be used as a place for consumptives—as isolation hospital or sanatorium.

7484. Do you think would consumptive patients go very far to get into such an institution?—I think they would, because a good many people come to me for information about how they should get to the one in Wicklow; so I think they would take advantage of the hospital.

7485. Have you been often asked about that?—Very often.

7486. You know how difficult it is to get into that?—I believe it is.

7487. And how long a period they have to wait, so that a case might be hopeless before they get in?—I have known of such cases.

7488. Would that lead you to believe that there is an urgent necessity for something to meet the increase of consumption?—Yes; I think it would be most advantageous to have a hospital of the sort.

7489. CHAIRMAN.—In some healthy situation?—Yes; the healthiest of course.

7490. Near the sea would do as well as the mountain?—Yes; as long as it was not too relaxing.

7491. A place like Brandon?—Brandon would be first rate; a fine healthy place.

7492. Mr. James Monaghan.—When you say Monaghan would sufficiently meet the needs of the county, is that in regard to the number of inmates?—Yes.

7493. The same statement could be made of any of the other unions in the county?—I cannot answer that.

7494. Do you think it would be a suitable locality to serve the needs of the whole county; how would you get here from Carrickmacross; is it not a most difficult thing to get from Carrickmacross and the district south to Monaghan?—I believe it is.

7495. It is over twenty miles; in some parts twenty-six. If then there were two workhouses is not chosen in the same situation to Monaghan that Castleblayney is to Carrickmacross; both on the extreme edge?—Monaghan and Castleblayney, I think, would be the two most central ones.

7496. Don't you think Carrickmacross is just in the same position as Monaghan?—I think if you look at the map you will find Castleblayney is more central.

7497. Mr. Muldon.—In the case of a re-arrangement, you don't mind whether it is Carrickmacross or Castleblayney?—No; but somewhere in that district.

7498. Mr. Dringdale.—You told us your own opinion is that one union and workhouse would be sufficient for the county?—Yes.

7499. And that would be Monaghan?—I say either Monaghan or Castleblayney.

7500. The asylum buildings at present in Monaghan are not sufficient for the needs of Monaghan and Castle?—So I hear.

7501. The present workhouse buildings in Monaghan are just across the road from the asylum?—They are.

7502. And don't you think that if it should be decided to abandon Monaghan Workhouse it could be very successfully used as an addition to the asylum buildings?—Certainly.

7505. It would be a difficulty?—I don't think so; I think that could be managed the same as the Protestant orphan as managed now. The Guardians could have a list of respectable farmers who were anxious to take in children, and the Guardians could have a supervision over them or get the various clergy of the different dioceses to visit them.

7506. You would not be in favour of outdoor relief, and in that case you would have to transport all the paupers to this Union of Monaghan, which is a long distance by railway and very inconvenient?—Once you get into a train it is a very little matter if you have to go a little distance farther.

7507. Is not Monaghan rather favourably situated for transport?—Yes; I think there are a good many.

7508. They would not get near Carrickmacross easily?—I don't know about that.

7510. Would there not be a difficulty in transferring people suddenly left penniless from one portion of the county to a central institution simply for a fortnight or three weeks?—That would be a case of illness.

7511. No; not altogether illness, but absolute destitution; that the people had got into such a state that they had nothing to do?—If there were cases that happened like that there would have to be some provision made for them.

Chairman.—You would be afraid they would continue on the relief but if they got on once?—Yes.

7514. Mr. MURPHY.—But with proper supervision, would there be any danger of that?—Supposing the relieving officer had more power than he has at present, supposing the auditor looked to him for the proper performance of his duty, do you not think that difficulty could be overcome to a certain extent?—I think it could, but I think such cases would have to be treated on its merits.

7515. But you seem to be decidedly against outdoor relief on principle?—I am.

7516. I want to ask you your principle and to get you to admit that you are wrong?—You are supposing an extreme case.

7517. No; these cases do occur, and occur frequently?—I think, for the credit of Monaghan, I may say they don't.

7513. I know heads of families become temporarily impeded. I know instances of it in my own neighbourhood. I have had considerable experience of it, and know it does occur. I don't think it occurs here; they would all be relieved in the neighbourhood.

7514. I am glad to hear you have in Monaghan such charitable disposed people. I am sorry to say in some parts of the country we have not got them?—In Monaghan, I think, we have.

7515. Dr. BROWNE.—Just one question: about the class of cases treated in the district hospitals, about operation cases, what would you recommend should be done; would you recommend they should be treated in the district hospital or brought to a larger institution in the county?—I think I would leave it to the medical officer in charge.

7516. CHAIRMAN.—It would be necessary to have in every district hospital some place where emergency operations could be safely carried out?—Yes; you would want that.

7517. Dr. BROWNE.—But there are operations that could not; would you recommend that those should be taken to the county infirmary?—I would leave that to the medical officer himself; possibly in the district hospital he would be single-handed, and he might wish to come over to the county infirmary with his patient.

7518. CHAIRMAN.—We had evidence to that effect from some county surgeons, who thought it would be a good plan, with a premium for an easy method of transfer from the district hospital to the county infirmary, which should be the main headquarters for surgical operations of the county; do you think that would be possible?—I think it would.

7519. And desirable?—And desirable.

Mr. PATRICK KIRKMAN examined.

7520. Mr. Malleson.—You are Chairman of the Monaghan Board of Guardians?—Yes.

7521. And have been chairman since the Local Government Act was passed?—Yes.

7522. Have you considered the question of the amalgamation of unions?—Yes; I consider amalgamation of unions for this county is desirable.

7523. Is it your view that one union in the County Monaghan would be sufficient for all practical purposes?—I think so, for the area and size of the county, and particularly for the number of workhouse inmates in the county; now at the present time we have 471 inmates in four workhouses, and in 1880 we accommodated in Monaghan Workhouse 1,380.

7524. And you think the workhouses could be reduced to one situated in the town of Monaghan without inflicting any serious hardship on the sick poor?—With regard to economy I consider that the only way you can economize is by amalgamation—having a county union and a county rating;—and Monaghan, to my mind, in that case, owing to the extent of its buildings and the farm attached, is the most appropriate and suitable.

7525. And owing to the central situation of the town?—The central situation, from Monaghan to the County Tyrone; the furthest point of our union is fifteen English miles towards the Clogher Union.

7526. And you have good buildings; excellent buildings and excellent staff?—We have good buildings, but a quantity of them vacant; we have only in the house at present 115, and we could accommodate over 1,350.

7527. Do you think that upon such an amalgamation of unions taking place some provision should be made for the sick poor in some of the outlying localities of the county?—I would; I would approve of some of the disused workhouses being utilized as hospitals in the case of accidents or emergencies under the supervision of the dispensary doctor and the dispensary nurse, which would mean very little further expense—hospitals in towns in which the present workhouses exist.

7529. How far is it from Monaghan to the remotest part of Derragh?—Thirteen Irish miles; fifteen or sixteen English.

7531. In the event of amalgamation taking place as at in this county, can you see any reason for retaining Clones, having regard to its proximity to Monaghan?—I don't see any reason for retaining Clones; if, for the convenience of transferring the sick poor to it, Clones is retained you would have over twenty-seven miles to transfer the sick poor from the furthest part of our union to Clones, and I see in the evidence given in the County Fermanagh that they are despatching limousines and establishing a hospital there.

7532. Would you be inclined to change the name workhouse both as regards the workhouse proper and in regard to the workhouse hospital?—I would; I know there are a number of well-to-do people in our district who have been abandoned by their families; the family had to leave to seek employment in foreign countries, and after a number of years forget their sick parents, and those parents had to go to the workhouse. I know there are a number of them in our district who would die at the back of the ditch before they would go to the workhouse; that is the reason I would change the name of the house to a home, or something like that.

7533. CHAIRMAN.—What do you attribute that dislike of the workhouse to?—The name poorhouse or workhouse; I have known it in my own experience as a member of the board.

7536. And that portion of Castleblayney which goes into Armagh might be left to Armagh?—Quite right.

7537. And the one workhouse in Monaghan might take in its own county and that portion of Castleblayney I think it could accommodate all.

7538. And you would make the County Monaghan a self-contained unit for county purposes?—Quite right.

7539. CHAIRMAN.—What would be the governing body?

Mr. Malleson.—The Guardians, with one workhouse situated in Monaghan town?—Yes.

7540. That would entail a reduction in the number of Guardians; you would not need the same number from each electoral division that now go to the other four unions of the county?—I should say the Guardians should be elected to represent dispensary districts, and I would also approve of the old dispensary committees electing the governors of the county infirmary, and you might have obligees of all denominations in the dispensary district on the committee.

7541. Do you think this amalgamation you suggest would lessen the tramp evil?—The distance, I believe, would lessen the tramp evil—the distance to travel.

7542. What is your view generally upon the tramp question?—My view would be that a tramp should have a ticket from a Guardian of the town to the dispensary doctor of the town, who would examine him and certify to the master that he was unfit for further travelling or work.

7543. Have you many tramps in the Monaghan Workhouse?—We have.

7544. On the occasion of markets and fairs, I suppose?—Yes; and on the occasion of fairs in the neighbourhood.

7545. Do you consider that the treatment of the sick and destitute poor in Monaghan is satisfactory?—I do.

Nov. 26, 1900

Dr. Hall

Mr. Patrick Kirkman.

Nov. 24, 1900.

Mr. Patrick
Kilman.

7551. And economical?—And economical as well. I think we are under the average cost of any other union in Ireland.

7552. CHAIRMAN.—You are the lowest in the country?—I believe we are.

7553. The high valuation has a good deal to do with that?—It is the weekly average cost of the inmates; they are very well treated; the doctor and the inspectors approve of the treatment.

7554. Mr. Muldoon.—The Monaghan Guardians would be unanimously opposed to going to Clonest?—They would, particularly the Guardians of the principal part of our county, which lies in distant districts.

7555. Clonest is an outlying district?—There are Guardians in Derragoola that have to go to the nearest railway station, which is Glaslough, over nine Irish miles, and to Monaghan it would be thirteen.

7556. And if you went there you would have to listen to Dr. Thurney's speeches?—Yes.

7557. You would not relish that very much?—I would not have any objection.

7558. The Clonest witnesses suggest that your union workhouse is only suitable as an auxiliary asylum; do you share that view?—I don't believe it would be in the interests of the poor of the county, owing to the central position in which Monaghan is. I won't say it is in the centre of the county, but it is in a central position, and has a house that can accommodate all the inmates of the county.

7560. What is your view about the boarding out of children?—I am strongly in favour of boarding out children, for the reason that children, as a rule, reared in the workhouse become perversely all their lives, and know nothing of the world. I would pay liberally for the boarding out of them, and have them trained and schooled, and have the relieving officers see that they were cared and well-treated, and then you don't leave them perversely. Children reared in an institution of this sort, when they get out at a certain age, it leaves them wild; they don't know anything of the world.

7561. CHAIRMAN.—Not much use for work?—No use for work.

7562. Mr. Muldoon.—What would you say to the boarding out of inmates?—I would not approve of it; it might be abused. It does not appear to me to be workable; inmates would come in for the purpose of being boarded out again.

7563. CHAIRMAN.—You would be afraid of too many families trying to put their old people on the boarded-out list?—I would be afraid there would.

7564. Mr. Muldoon.—What is your view about outdoor relief?—I cannot see that we can get away from outdoor relief; but outdoor relief, I believe, should be given through the dispensary doctor, and that he would report such cases as accidents or sickness to the relieving officer, and in case where immediate medical relief was needed that he would have power, until the Board of Guardians met, to deal with that on his own responsibility, and at the same time the relieving officer would report to the Guardians.

7565. CHAIRMAN.—The relieving officer has that power at present?—Yes; and the medical officer in the case of sickness.

7566. You propose to give the relieving officer power as regards giving relief pending the meeting of the Guardians?—I do.

7567. That would be rather a new duty to put upon a medical man to make him inquire into the circumstances of families?—As a rule he visits these people.

7568. Do you think the medical profession as a body would like to accept that job?—I don't know that they should object to it; they get a red line for a sick person.

7569. Oh, yes; but to report whether they require outdoor relief?—The persons seeking outdoor relief are sick persons as a rule.

7570. The doctor would be quite willing to say whether a person was sick or not, but as to ordering relief for him, that is a different matter?

Mr. Muldoon.—Do you think the doctor's certificate might be confined to a recommendation for outdoor relief, there might be sick persons who were shamming, and would impose on the relieving officer?—My reason for giving the dispensary doctor as an authority on outdoor relief is he, as a rule, is visiting on tickets from year to year, and knows the position of these people and their state of living more than any outside person or Guardian or representative.

7571. You think every such case of illness should be examined into by the medical doctor?—Yes; and ascertaining officer.

7572. What is the system of the Monaghan Guardians in giving outdoor relief?—Every case is required to go on its merits. First, a Guardian makes application to the board for relief in his district, and the relieving officer is asked to visit such person and report at the next meeting, and then the matter is principally decided on the report of the relieving officer.

7573. The amount expended by your union on outdoor relief is very small; how do you account for that?—It amounts to close on £9 at the present time.

7574. CHAIRMAN.—The last audited year was £127?—Well, it has increased since.

7575. Mr. Muldoon.—At all events do you stimulate the smallness of the amount to the strict supervision of the Guardians over every case?—I do; every quarter the list is revised, and parties who had been getting outdoor relief owing to being incapacitated for work, and had gone to work again, are secured off our books.

7576. What is the largest amount you give in any particular case?—In the case of a family of four or five we have given 4s. and 5s., and 2s. 6d., and to one person 1s. 6d. We are opposed to giving outdoor relief in the case of one person. We would wish, in the case of an old person living in a little house of their own, not fit for human habitation, that the relieving officer should have power to remove them, whether they like it or not, to the house, and under the care of a nurse.

7577. I believe before the Local Government Act there was sent to you outdoor relief given by the Monaghan Guardians?—None at all.

7578. You have related that to some extent?—We have.

7579. And I believe the tendency is with you to increase, specially in the winter time?—Yes. And there was a case with Dr. Crawford—the late board refused to give medical relief on the application of Dr. Crawford, and he paid it himself and appealed to the Local Government Board and made the late board pay him.

7581. Did you know since you became chairman if any case of real hardship in which outdoor relief was refused?—Not to my knowledge.

7582. As regards the treatment of old married couples in the workhouse, do you think any relaxation of the present rules might be introduced?—I do; I would approve that there should be a place set apart for these old couples to live together where they are compelled to seek the shelter of the house by no fault of their own, the family having gone to other quarters, and they have no means and they are unfit for any labour or employment.

7583. CHAIRMAN.—You would give them the option of leaving altogether if they wished?—Yes.

7584. Mr. Muldoon.—And that an apartment in the house might be set apart for that purpose?—Yes.

7585. Have you any suggestion to make to the Commission about the employment of inmates in the workhouse?—In Monaghan I would suggest the female portion should get knitting and sewing; at the present time, I may state, that all the knitting for the board is done by the inmates, all the boots are mended by the inmates; they all get employment and are supplied with knitting, leather, and sewing; all that is done in the house. We have only four able-bodied men in the house altogether, and they work on the farm—do the cattle and pigs. I think the farm has paid very well.

7586. You think the Monaghan Guardians, in case of amalgamation, would be willing to appoint a night nurse?—I would suggest a night nurse.

7587. CHAIRMAN.—Do you mean to say you have not a night nurse now? Why should you want a day for that?—I approve of one being appointed.

7588. Mr. Muldoon.—Has there ever been a demand made for one?—None; the present nurse attends to any night calls.

7589. At present the nurses act in turn every night?—They do; and if there is a patient ill the worsted, of course, sits up with that sick patient and calls in a nurse when it is needed.

7590. But you think it would be an improvement if a night nurse was appointed?—I do.

7501. And the Guardians will be willing to do so?—
Yes.

7502. CHAIRMAN.—I hope you won't wait until our report comes out?—We will not.

7503. Mr. MURPHY.—Has the Local Government Board never pointed out the inadequacy of those arrangements?—I believe the inspector did.

7504. And the inspector having done that, what stood in the way?—I cannot say; I don't know that the inspector did report.

7505. CHAIRMAN.—Was it economy that stopped you?—It was not; we have an efficient staff, and heard no reports from the doctor or nurse that there was anything wanting in the treatment.

7506. Mr. Muldon.—I believe the nurse and ward-maid are in touch with the patient during the entire night?—They are.

7507. No complaint, at all events up to this, has arisen?—No.

7508. CHAIRMAN.—Except from the inspector?—I believe the inspector did.

Mr. Muldon.—Was it in his report or by way of friendly suggestion?

CHAIRMAN.—By way of friendly suggestion in his report.

7509. Mr. Muldon.—When was that report made?

CHAIRMAN.—How many reports were made?—I cannot say.

7510. Mr. Muldon.—What do you think should be done with women who use the workhouse for the purpose of giving birth to children; do you think they should be retained in one workhouse in the county?—I don't know that they could be retained in one workhouse.

The suggestion I made is that the hospital of the different unions under the supervision of the dispensary doctor and nurse should be sufficient for these cases. You might not have time to convey a person from a remote part of the district to a union a distance from them.

7511. About the water supply to the workhouse, I believe you are contemplating an improvement to that?—Our improvements to the present house in Monaghan have been adjourned in the event of an amalgamation scheme, and also the water scheme, which is now almost completed. We propose to make the house sanitary when we have the water; before this we could not do much; we had no water. There is to be a general improvement and a general renovation of the house when we get the water scheme.

7512. At present it is quite satisfactory to its needs?—Yes; at the present time we are spending a good deal of money.

7513. Mr. Dwyer.—It has not been in a quite satisfactory sanitary state up to the present?—It is satisfactory enough.

7514. You were speaking about the distance from Derragola—that is the most distant part of the union?—It is eleven English miles from Monaghan.

7515. And it is nine miles from Glaslough?—It might be more.

7516. And you said, I think, that it would be unreasonable to think that Guardians from Derragola would go to Clones?—I did not speak of the Guardians; I said it would be unreasonable to transfer a sick patient by the ambulance from the furthest part of our union to Clones—a distance of over twenty-seven miles.

7517. How far is the south part of Charlemacross from Monaghan?—I believe it is twenty miles from here to Charlemacross.

7518. Well, the furthest part would be considerably beyond that; do you think it would be convenient to take them from there to Monaghan?—The sick can be taken from any part of the county by ambulance—that is the alling sick. In the case of accidents or emergencies I say retain the hospital at Charlemacross and these other places.

7519. In the hospital at Monaghan what kind of beds have you; are I right in saying they are strong beds?—There are some of them, and we have iron mattresses.

7520. Mr. MURPHY.—Did you ever consider the question of county boundaries at all in taking up this matter. You have outlined a scheme that would necessitate a county rate?—Yes.

7521. How could the thing be managed if a portion of a Poor Law Union were lying outside your county; unless you got a county self-contained, how would you fix the per capita for the upkeep of the patients in the outlying unions?—I would leave each county to deal with itself.

7522. CHAIRMAN.—Would you have the whole County Monaghan in the new proposed union?—Yes; and let Monaghan and Armagh take its portion.

7523. Mr. MURPHY.—And you would have all managed by some central committee?—I would appoint a dispensary committee. I would suggest that the elected Guardians be elected from the dispensary district, reduce the number, and elect whatever number is necessary for the size of the dispensary district to represent it.

7524. Then you would make the dispensary district the area of management?—I would have a committee of management appointed as the governors of the asylum are—by the County Council, with outsiders.

7525. You would like to see the dispensary committee re-established?—They would be more in touch with their own districts.

7526. You think the management of the dispensary was more carefully looked after under the old arrangements?—I should think so.

7527. You would like to see them re-established again?—I would, in the event of Monaghan being amalgamated into one union.

7530. Why should they not stay where they are and be made well there; why should there not be hospitals in those localities?—It is a matter of economy.

7531. You might push economy too far?—If you use hospitals for keeping all these patients they might live there for years; we should keep up a staff.

7533. Do you not think it would be better for the sick to have to come to a central point instead of being attended to in the neighbourhood of their homes?—I think they would be better treated in one house than to have them separated in the different unions.

7534. CHAIRMAN.—Leaving the local hospitals for some cases?—Yes, sir.

7535. Mr. MURPHY.—Outdoor relief seems to be cut down to a fine point in Monaghan; why do you wish to take the power from the Guardians and give it to the medical officer or relieving officer?—They would know the districts and the poor.

7536. Would not the Guardians know it?—The doctor would know their state of living better than the Guardians; the Guardians would not like to inquire into their state of living.

7537. Have the Guardians shown any neglect of the poor?—They have not.

7538. Why should you wish to take it out of their hands?—I only made that suggestion.

7539. You surely have not been extravagant in this union?—We have increased.

7540. You have increased from nothing?—Outdoor relief was nothing in the union until the Local Government Act was passed.

7541. You certainly have increased from the old arrangement when you gave nothing, but at the same time you are giving comparatively nothing in this union in outdoor relief?—We have increased it.

7542. Don't you think that the public money, when collected for a certain purpose, which is the relief of the destitute, should be distributed for that purpose. When the industrious poor get into such a condition that they have nothing to eat, don't you think that there should be some alternative besides the workhouse?—We have not refused any person brought under our notice.

7543. Have you many agricultural labourers in this union?—I could not tell.

7544. Because it is generally from that class that these recipients of outdoor relief come?—In our union they are quite aged persons.

7545. Do you not think that if boarding out was carefully managed that would be an economical and humane method of giving assistance?—I don't believe it would be workable.

Nov. 24, 1905.
Mr. Patrick
Nolan.

Nov. 24, 1865.

Mr. Patrick
Swansea.

7625. Are you not aware that the thing the poor sigh for most is a little freedom and intercourse with their own friends?—If you board out the inmates of the house the chances are you will not get people who will keep them.

7627. If you could get such people, and if some standard was provided that would guarantee no waste of public money, do you not think that that would be a very proper way of administering relief?—I am of opinion it would not be workable in our district.

7628. In the neighbouring county we found that although the treatment given in the institution was much higher than yours and far kinder, still the people, we are told, sighed to be outside?

CHAIRMAN.—People would rather get the spending of money than be fed and clothed in an institution?—I don't know that there are country farmers here would take an old person of seventy or eighty to board out at any price.

7629. Unless they were relations?—Yes.

7630. Mr. MURKIN.—In the case of a person of sixty or sixty-five, who could do little turns about the house, don't you think that class might be taken out, and it would lighten the life of the poor creature if something of the kind could be done, without adding to the rates?—If that class of person would go out, and if a farmer asked them to work for the treatment they were getting, they might object and come back to the house again. As a matter of fact we have a boy in our house now over fourteen; we had him twice out, and he came back. I am afraid these people if asked to work will come in again and leave the farmer.

7641. If that boy had been sent out amongst the farmers he would not have got such a love for the workhouse, and he would have stayed out?—In his youth if he had been boarded out he would have stayed out; he would not have come back to the workhouse. We had him out with a very respectable man, and he left him, and we put him serving his time with a shoemaker, and he left him.

7642. Is not that an example of the undesirability of keeping children a long time in the workhouse?—I would approve of boarding them out.

7643. How many children in your house?—Six.

7644. How many are boarded out?—I think two, and we have one apprenticed to the tailoring business.

7645. So you think on the whole it would be desirable that Monaghan was a self-contained county, that it administered the Poor Law system within its own area, and that the dispensary area would be a good one for administration?—Quite right.

7646. Mr. James MURKIN.—You propose to have only one workhouse?—Yes.

7647. At Monaghan. Is it not about ten miles from Carrickshannagh?—I think about that.

7648. And from that to the south of the county nearly sixteen more?—I am not quite sure.

7649. You object to go twenty-seven miles down to Clonsilla; would you not think it would be a hardship to go twenty-eight?—If you make it a county union. My reason for suggesting Monaghan is that we have the buildings there; you have not the buildings in other places, and cannot accommodate us worse.

7650. I think the Carrickshannagh Workhouse will accommodate 600—it was built for 1,042; but you think it would be too much to go twenty-seven miles?—Carrickshannagh is at the far end of the county.

7651. Is not twenty-eight miles an extreme length to transport people who are aged and infirm?—In case of emigration if you adopt any workhouse Monaghan is the most central for the county.

7652. Do you think that twenty-eight miles would be far to bring them?—I don't know, by ambulance, that you would have any difficulty in transferring the sick poor. You would retain your hospital there for the sake of accidents and emergencies.

7653. You don't think it would be a long distance for the aged poor?—Not with a proper ambulance; it would be far easier for them to be transferred with a proper ambulance.

7654. What do you propose to do with the district workhouse; do they propose to use any of them for an additional lunatic asylum?—I don't know.

7655. Which of the other three do you think would be most suitable in case Monaghan were made the workhouse for the whole county, and you were going to utilize one of the other workhouses for additional accommodation for lunatics?—I think I have stated that we have accommodation for all the harmless lunatics as well as the 471 patients, and if you board out children there will be more room.

7656. So you think if Monaghan were made the workhouse no additional accommodation would be required for lunatics?—No.

7657. Mr. MULFESS.—Have the Local Government Board actually asked you for an explanation of the figures of outdoor relief quite recently. Have you been present at a recent meeting of the board at which there was a letter of the Local Government Board asking for an explanation of the increase?—I have not; I don't remember.

7658. Mr. DRUMMOND.—Did the Local Government Board ask you for an explanation about the straw beds?—The Inspector's report mentions about the straw beds.

7659. You took no notice of that friendly suggestion either?—The Guardians referred it to their doctor, and we are prepared to deal with his suggestion, and his statement to us was that he had a number of patients there, and he had no complaints; they were all healthy, and in fact his patients were healthier on the straw beds, and if we adopted the principle of their maintenance he would be turning them out as refuse every week.

7660. Do you think a hospital with straw beds and no night nurse is a good model for the County Monaghan?—I approve of night nursing, but I leave the matter of bedding to the doctor.

7661. CHAIRMAN.—In the outdoor relief do you feel much difficulty in ascertaining whether the people who apply for it are really in need of it or not?—We go into that matter. We send the relieving officer, no matter how far distant it is; he sees the person, and even examines their beds and houses, and returns to us all he knows of the patient.

7662. Have you now a great increase in applications?—In the winter season we have.

7663. No outdoor relief was given before 1859, or very little?—I don't know any—very little, if any.

7664. Now do you find the number of applications increasing very much?—They have increased with us.

7665. Do you give outdoor relief to all that apply, or do you refuse some?—We refused some who are too creatures whom the relieving officer reported were in a very destitute state, without a house fit for human habitation, and not fit to care themselves; we have tried and got some of these people in.

7666. Does the relieving officer report that some people, in his opinion, are not fit subjects for outdoor relief, and you offer them the house as a last of desperation?—He does; but very few.

7667. How many relieving officers have you got in this large union?—One.

7668. Were you asked to appoint another?—Not to my knowledge.

7669. Is one relieving officer supposed to make a personal inspection and report on every application for outdoor relief in the large Union of Monaghan?—He has, and he got an increase of salary for that purpose.

7670. He did not get an increase of legs or motor power?—I think he got an increase to get a leggin.

REV. J. WALLACE TAYLOR examined.

Rev. J.
Wallace
Taylor.

7671. Mr. MULFESS.—Were you Chaplain to the Bishopscroft Workhouse for a number of years?—Several years, at a time when I was there as curate.

7672. Are you also Secretary to the Monaghan Protestant Orphan Society?—I was for a number of years.

7673. You are familiar with the Poor Law system of the county?—Pretty well.

7674. And with the geography and distances of Monaghan County?—Fairly well.

7675. Is it your view that the number of workhouses in the county might be reduced?—Certainly.

7676. How many would you say would be sufficient in the county?—I think one would be sufficient.

7677. Where do you think that one might be placed?—As near the centre as possible.

7678. Having regard to your knowledge of the county?—This place or Carrickshannagh—whichever place was found most advisable.

7078. You know the buildings of the Monaghan Workhouse?—Yes.

7079. Would they be quite suitable, in your opinion, for all the paupers that would come from the entire county?—My opinion is not much matter, but I should say it would.

7080. Have you any view on the outdoor relief question?—Yes; I should like to see it increased. There is no question as to all that the destitute poor will not go into the workhouse; my parish of Rergal is a great part of it; a mountain parish; there are 4,000 people, roughly, in it, and as a matter of fact it is only at the very last gasp they will enter the workhouse.

7081. Is it your view that heretofore in Monaghan Union hardship must have followed from the refusal of the Monaghan Guardians to give outdoor relief?—Most emphatically; if you wish for instances I can give them.

7082. I wish you would?—I know one case in which I went into the man's house, and there was no fuel—within half a mile of my own house, Errigal Glebe—there was neither fuel, nor food, nor anything else; the neighbours, certainly, had done all they could, but simply for the reason that what is every man's business is no man's to be neglected.

7083. CHAIRMAN.—what was the number in family?—There was one old man, and no one to take care of him.

7084. Would he not do better going to the workhouse?—When he would not get outdoor relief I proposed to send him to the workhouse, and so did the parish priest; we did our best, but he would not go, and I say he died in the house, although there was charity to provide for him to some extent.

7085. That is one case? There was another case—this case, probably, could have had outdoor relief if it had been known in time.

7086. That is the case you are about mentioning?—Yes; the man would not go to the workhouse; he was found to death, practically, in his own house.

7087. Did the people advise him to go to the workhouse?—Certainly.

7088. What age was he?—A man of about sixty.

7089. Indram; unable to go about?—Indram; he could go about a little; he could not work much. He had a brother with him who was rather feeble-minded, but still could take care of him.

7090. Do you think these are cases to justify enlarged giving of outdoor relief, or do you not think they are cases in which the local authority might safely ask for power to intervene and take them as bodily?—That is another matter.

7091. Which do you think most sensible to do. If you gave him 2s. 6d. a week how would he manage?—It is astonishing how much they could do with it.

7092. But these cases you mention are cases of men who could not light their own fire or do anything for themselves?—They would make a struggle to do it, and it is wonderful how they would succeed; you must remember there was no fire for them to light; no fuel.

7093. I don't suppose they could buy food and provisions with the sum allotted?—It is wonderful how well the poor can manage if they get a little assistance.

7094. These are individual cases?—I could mention more; they are chiefly individuals, as far as I can remember at present.

7096. I think it is a terrible sentiment to give a man 2s. 6d. or 3s. a week where he cannot do anything for himself or care himself?—They were not just so feeble as that, but, of course, I quite agree with you that it would be much better to have them in the care of the workhouse, and in some institutions sadder where they did go they were very thankful they did afterwards, when I saw them in it; if they knew it was so good they would have been there before.

7097. MR. MURPHY.—Now, in the case of a woman with some children—a widow—how would it affect her; you would hardly like to see her compelled to bring her children into the workhouse?—Certainly not.

7098. Do you not think it would be much better for her and her children, and the parish, if she got some assistance?—Most undoubtedly, and what she could earn herself with wool; a very little help would tide her over the difficulties. I might venture to say I think the sum of £5 a week spent in the parish of Errigal would meet all the really destitute cases in it.

7099. Do you know any cases of widows with children being left in destitution?—No; there don't come so many of those under my ken, because in those cases we have charitable societies which take charge of the orphans.

7100. But still there might be without your knowledge?—There might, because a very much larger proportion are Catholics in my district.

7101. MR. MURPHY.—Your parish is Errigal Trough—a very poor parish?—Yes.

7102. Since the Monaghan Guardians began to give outdoor relief has any case of hardship come under your notice recently in which the Guardians refused to give relief?—Yes; this last case I mentioned to the Chairman; or, perhaps I am wrong, they might not have refused it; it may not have been brought before them.

7103. Your parish is a large one?—Yes.

7104. The remote part would be a considerable distance from Castleblayney?—It would—twenty-four or twenty-five Irish miles.

7105. How far would the most remote part be from Monaghan?—Twelve to thirteen Irish miles.

7106. Castleblayney Union, a great portion of it goes into Anagh?—Yes.

7107. In the event of only keeping one union in the county, would you seriously propose that one might be kept at Castleblayney; would not that be very hard on Clones that we hear so much about?—It seems natural to me that Monaghan would be the union, but that is a matter of detail.

7108. There is no doubt of its convenience in your case?—Certainly.

MR. PATRICK WHELAN, J.P., EXAMINED.

7109. MR. MURPHY.—Are you the Chairman of the Monaghan Rural District Council?—Yes.

7110. Are you also a County Councillor?—Yes.

7111. And a Poor Law Guardian, of course, of Monaghan?—Yes.

7112. Are you anything else—an agricultural committee-man, and so forth?—And a supporter of the co-operative movement and many other movements in this country.

7113. Have you considered the question of the amalgamation of unions in the County Monaghan?—I have.

7114. Have you come to the conclusion that four unions in this county are too many?—I think so.

7115. And you think some unions should go?—I think that one workhouse would be quite sufficient to meet the requirements of the poor in the County Monaghan, and I think that this could be managed by a Board of Guardians appointed from the different unions of the county, and I think also that there should be a local committee in every union that would look after the question of education of children—look after doctors', and the duties of the officials in those unions and look after the necessity for outdoor relief in those unions.

7116. And that the representation of the local districts should be kept up in this way, but that one workhouse would be sufficient for the county?—Exactly; they should have fewer representatives.

7117. Where do you think that workhouse should be situated; what is the central town in your view?—I believe Monaghan would be the most convenient, because if we take the case of the Monaghan Workhouse and apply it to the Monaghan Union we find that the Monaghan Workhouse is fourteen Irish miles from some parts of the union. In the case of amalgamation I think it would not be too much to expect a little stretch in dealing with Castleblayney and Carrickmacross. As regards Clones I believe there would be very little inconvenience to the Clones people in coming to Monaghan. I would like to say a word with regard to the outdoor relief question that has been raised.

Nov. 24, 1895.

Rev. J. Wallace Taylor.

Mr. Patrick Whelan.

Nov. 24, 1905.

Mr. Patrick
Whelan.

7719. We will come to that later. Clones would not even be a suitable centre in case there were only two workhouses left in the county?—Most certainly not: it is situated in an out of the way place, geographically.

7720. You heard the Clones witnesses suggest that the union workhouse should be left there in case two were retained, and your workhouse could be turned into a portion of the asylum?—I believe that the asylum question should be worked out upon its merits, and I don't think that any of the workhouses in Monaghan are suitable for asylum purposes.

7721. To come to the outdoor relief question: first of all it is a fact that the Local Government Board have asked you for an explanation about the increase?—I have a distinct recollection of this question being asked from the Local Government Board once, and I think I could venture to say twice during the past three years.

7722. CHAIRMAN.—In connection with the fact of their being only one relieving officer?—Oh, no.

7723. I think you will find that?—Well, possibly; but as regards outdoor relief the Local Government Board have asked us to give an explanation with regard to the increase in one particular period of the year as compared with the corresponding period in the previous year.

7724. How many cases have you now on the books?—107 cases, and we relieve 180 persons, and so far as I am aware, and I have a very good knowledge of the circumstances of the people over the entire district, there are no cases of hardship at the present time existing in the union, and every case of outdoor relief or application for outdoor relief is very carefully considered. The Guardian of the district brings forward the application, and he gives his views upon the nature of the case, and the Guardians, before determining it, send out the relieving officer, who makes a very careful inquiry into each case, and comes back to the Guardians and gives his opinion, and the Guardians finally decide, but it is quite possible on some occasions, where a very strong case has been made, the Guardians agree at that very meeting to give it, provided that the relieving officer, when he goes out, says the parties are fit subjects.

7725. You say there are no cases of hardship now?—Not that I have heard of.

7726. And you most likely would hear of it if there were any?—I would.

7727. If you found that in the two years outdoor relief had doubled would that be a sign that destitution or poverty had doubled?—It would be a sign that some great change had come over the face of the country.

7728. Or over the face of the Guardians?

Mr. MURKHOUGH.—Or over the spirit of the Guardians?—All these things could take place. I was one of the parties who moved the adoption of the system of outdoor relief after the Local Government Act came into operation, and I found a very large number of people strongly opposed to the system being introduced into the union at all, and I believe, of course, that they held these views owing to the fact that no such thing took place, so far as I can recollect, at any time during the time of office of our predecessors.

7729. CHAIRMAN.—Do you happen to know the amount of relief they spend yearly in Clones?—I do not.

7730. Well, £37; you are £116; Carrickmacross is the next highest, £262; and at Castleblayney they spent £260; so you see there is a nice little step-ladder there; the valuation of Castleblayney is £20,000, and yours is £183,000?—But you must remember that every union should be dealt with on its own circumstances and merits.

7732. There was no change made in Castleblayney?—As far as I know in Castleblayney outdoor relief existed for many long years; in Monaghan it was a thing that was not in existence until after the passing of the Local Government Act.

7733. Mr. Muldoon.—You inherited in Monaghan a system under which no outdoor relief was given at all?—Quite so.

7734. You changed that. Since you came into office have you refused the application in twenty that have been made?—Certainly not.

7735. Then if as a result the outdoor relief in Monaghan is smaller than in the others, it is not the fault of the Guardians who have refused practically no cases?—That is so.

7736. CHAIRMAN.—What is your test of fitness for outdoor relief?—That the party is unable to support himself or has no visible means of subsistence either by members of their own family or their own capacity to work for their livelihood.

7737. And you go directly on the lines of destitution?—Yes; and convenience of removal. I hold opinions of my own on that question; I hold it is absolutely unfair to force a poor old party from the home of their forefathers if we can by any reasonable means keep them living there during their life; I think old people will spend the end of their days more comfortably in the home of their forefathers than in a house in the workhouse.

7738. You would go so far as to say that in the case of a single old person living in a house, such as Dr. Taylor described, he should be left there?—If they had no one to look after them, I certainly, in the absence of evidence that they had some one to take care of them, could not see any way to advise them to stay there.

7739. Or give them outdoor relief?—I would give them outdoor relief if I saw they had any means of being cared.

7740. Mr. Muldoon.—I believe your relieving officer is a particularly active man?—He is very active and hard-working.

7741. An ardent cyclist?—Yes.

7742. And so far as you know, up to this at all events, he has been?—He has been quite capable of discharging the onerous and responsible duties attached to the position.

7743. CHAIRMAN.—Could he do the whole county, to you think, if he got the whole county in?—I think it would be impossible for a man under the present system.

7744. If he got a motor bicycle?—It is quite possible he would; but I don't say that a relieving officer could do the work of the county; such a proposition, in my opinion, would be absurd.

7745. Mr. Muldoon.—In the case of amalgamation and reduction of the number of Guardians it might be useful to increase the number of relieving officers?—Quite so.

7746. You yourself have not heard of any case of hardship following a refusal to give outdoor relief in the Monaghan Union?—Certainly not.

7747. As regards the bedding in the workhouse infirmary?—That question has been continuously before the Guardians, and the Guardians hold, and have always held, that it is advisable in the proper administration of the business, such as is entrusted to them, that they should follow the advice of their medical officer as regards questions affecting the well-being of inmates both in the houses and hospital, and they think if he is not capable of understanding what is best for the inmates and patients in his own house he ought not to be there, and consequently the doctor in the case has recommended the present system as quite satisfactory.

7748. And the Guardians thought he was as good a judge as anybody else on that question?—Certainly; he is a man of eminence.

7749. And if he should recommend a different system the Guardians would be perfectly willing to follow his advice?—At once.

7750. As regards the classification of inmates, have you any suggestion to make to the Commission?—I think it possible women who come into the house for the purpose of giving birth to illegitimate children should be kept by themselves, and I believe as well that some system should be put in force whereby men and women would not be separated when they seek the shelter of the workhouse in their old age.

7751. You have heard, generally, the evidence of Mr. Kiernan on the Monaghan Workhouse?—Quite so.

7752. And you agree with him?—I do.

Mr. JOHN TRAYNER examined.

Nov. 24, 1906.

7753. Mr. Muldoon.—You formerly were a Guardian of the Monaghan Union?—I never was a Guardian.

7754. You are Chairman of the Urban Council?—Yes.

7755. And you know the County Monaghan well?—Yes.

7756. Is it your view that one union workhouse would be sufficient for Monaghan?—I would say so, and I would say that Monaghan would be the most convenient place—best accommodation and best facilities.

7757. You think the buildings at Monaghan would be sufficient for the poor of the whole county?—I think so.

7758. You have heard Mr. Kiernan and Mr. Whelan giving evidence?—I have.

7759. And, generally, do you agree with the evidence they gave about the suitability of Monaghan?—I do.

7760. And you think any other centre would not be satisfactory or convenient?—Not so convenient or satisfactory, or with the same accommodation.

Mr. John Trayner.

Mr. BERNARD KIERNAN examined.

Mr. Bernard Kiernan.

7761. Mr. Muldoon.—You were for many years a Guardian of the Monaghan Union?—I was fourteen years under the old system and three under the new.

7762. And you are now a member of the Urban Council?—Yes; always have been.

7763. You are in favour of amalgamation of unions?—Yes.

7764. And you think one would be sufficient for this county?—I do.

7765. And you think it should be situated at Monaghan and not elsewhere?—I do.

7766. Did you hear the evidence which has been given by Mr. Kiernan and Mr. Whelan?—I heard Mr. Whelan and Mr. Trayner.

7767. And you agree generally with that evidence as to the suitability of Monaghan and Monaghan Workhouse?—Yes; Monaghan Workhouse would be able to hold the poor of the whole county.

7768. Will you tell us why you did not give outdoor relief formerly?—There never was outdoor relief given under the old Guardians, and when I got to be a Guardian under the new system I opposed it for a while until I saw there were deserving cases that should get it.

Mr. Muldoon.—I have no further evidence. I have some other witnesses who would corroborate what has been said, but repetition does not strengthen an argument.

The Sitting terminated.

Nov. 25, 1903.

SIXTEENTH PUBLIC SITTING—WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 25TH, 1903.

At the Workhouse, Castleblayney.

Present.—Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. COREY BIGGER.

Mr. C. Lavery appeared for the Castleblayney Board of Guardians.

Mr. John McElveen (Instructed by Mr. D. X. Keenan) appeared for the Monaghan Board of Guardians.

Mr. James Augustine Murnaghan (Instructed by Mr. Grant) appeared for the Carrickmacross Board of Guardians.

Mr. Lavery.—Perhaps, sir, it is better for me at the outset to make some statement with regard to the position of the Castleblayney Guardians towards this question. The Poor Law Guardians of Castleblayney, after carefully considering the question of amalgamation, have come to the conclusion that the general principle of amalgamation is not desirable, and that the principle should not be acted upon in this county. I may also say they are of this opinion that if the principle of amalgamation could be introduced into the county with economy and without interfering with the comfort of the poor—the aged and pauper poor, and the infirm and sick poor—if it could be introduced into the county without interfering with the comfort of that class of persons, then I think the Castleblayney Guardians would be in favour of the principle of amalgamation. But they are of opinion that amalgamation of unions could not take place in this county without interfering with the comfort of the sick and pauper inmates, because amalgamation, in their opinion, means that some workhouses of the county must be wiped out and closed up and other workhouses must be retained. The result of that would be, in their opinion, to very considerably extend the area of the new unions so that the cost of the transit of the pauper residents of the county generally would be tremendously increased, and increased also to the prejudice of the comfort and of the proper treatment of the pauper residents of the locality. For instance, in this part of the county there are two workhouses; if one of them was closed—if the Carrickmacross Workhouse was closed—it would mean that all the pauper residents in Carrickmacross, except those who are sick—for it is admitted that part of the workhouses that would be shut up would be retained as hospitals or infirmaries—but the other portion of the pauper residents of the county would have to be conveyed a distance of sometimes seventeen or eighteen miles down to Castleblayney, because the upper end of this county above Carrickmacross is something like that distance from Castleblayney. If you shut up Castleblayney the same state of affairs would arise with regard to Carrickmacross, because it would be the same distance almost from the lower part of our union towards Carrickmacross, consequently in very severe weather, when there would be heavy frost, snow, or storm, if it became a necessity to remove any sick person or pauper from a distance as great as that it might not only interfere with their health and comfort, but endanger their lives sometimes, so that on that account they think it would be hardly right or practicable to centralise any of the unions in our county at present. But, of course, if there were effective, cheap means of transit from one of these places to another then it would be a very different matter, and amalgamation might then be carried out with considerable economy, and if that were so, and the principle of amalgamation could be carried out with economy, the Guardians of Castleblayney Union would be the first to applaud that principle. They are also of opinion that if the principle of amalgamation is carried out it would affect the administration of outdoor relief, inasmuch as according to the present system of administration of outdoor relief the Guardians of the different electoral divisions are really the persons who superintend the administration of outdoor relief. The old system of administration by dispensary committees has, of course, been done away with, and it is now administered, practically, through the relieving officer, by the different Guardians representing the electoral divisions, and on account of the great distances that these Guardians would have to travel it is estimated and believed that the attendance at the different weekly meetings would not be so frequent as it would be if they had only to travel a short distance, as now. For instance, if our workhouse was closed our Guardians would have to go to Carrick, and if the Carrick Workhouse was closed the Guardians would have to come to Castleblayney. We are all human, and we know a man would be disposed to take a short journey far more frequently than he would be disposed to take a long journey, and, consequently, we think the supervision of outdoor relief would be thus impaired, for the Guardians of the different electoral divisions would not attend as frequently as they ought. The Guardians also think that if the unions were amalgamated the bodies would be swelled—they would be rather large. There are a great number of Guardians in this union, and also in the other unions of the county, so that if these bodies were thrown together—if the unions were amalgamated—the Guardians of our union think that the bodies would be altogether too unwieldy for practical work, and the work would not be done as effectively. Then the question of gratuities and pensions and increase in salaries also arises, and, having regard to all these things, the Guardians of our union believe the principle of amalgamation cannot be carried out with economy and in such a way as to reduce the rate of the district. But if the result of this Commission would be that they find after due inquiry throughout the whole country that the principle of amalgamation can be effectively applied to Ireland in such a way as to reduce the taxation of the country, as I stated before, the Castleblayney Guardians would be the first to applaud it if they thought that was so, without interfering with the comfort of the poor. At this stage I need hardly tell you that supposing that larger scale of affairs was brought about, that amalgamation would mean a reduction of expense without impairing the administration of the Poor Law, I think that we Castleblayney would have a very strong claim to represent not only our part of the county, but I might say the whole county if amalgamation of unions should take place in this county, and if, as I have stated in Monaghan yesterday, one workhouse is only to be retained for the whole county. With regard to Castleblayney Workhouse I don't think in the whole County of Monaghan there will be found, at least, a better workhouse; it will compare favourably with any workhouse in Monaghan. Within the last four years a sum of nearly £2000 has been spent on repairing the workhouse; that money has been spent on the infirmary, which is, I think, a credit to the Guardians, and if you inspect it you will find it is really all I say—very neat and clean, and a credit to the Castleblayney Board. That sum of money has been spent upon the infirmary—upon the aged ward—which is also very neat and clean. I was through it all yesterday, and I, as a Castleblayney man and a resident of this union, was proud of the state of the aged ward; it is very neat and clean, and they have had out very nice little gardens for it, and the aged and infirm could not possibly be better cared than they are in this house. They have lately erected two new convalescent wards, and I think that is a claim that cannot be made by any other union in the county; we have two wards lately erected, especially for convalescents, and properly equipped. On the drainage system they have spent a large sum of money; it has been constructed on modern principles, and covers the whole establishment with pipe drains and everything like that, so that the workhouse at present could not be better, from a sanitary point of view, both on account of the position and the drainage that has been introduced. Then they have a really good water supply with hot and cold water, baths and water-closets in connection with the infirmary; they have also spent a good sum of money on securing a first-class ambulance on the lines of the Dublin & Wick Brigade, with four wheels and rubber tyres, and a good ambulance for the fever hospital equipped with stretchers. The surgery is also equipped with a cold and hot water supply, and the aged and infirm wards are very good too, and in fine order, and have movable baths on rubber wheels. The condition of the whole house, I might say, could not be in a more efficient state than it is at present, and I don't think there is any other workhouse in the county which does it very much. The site of a workhouse is a matter that ought to be very seriously considered; we are situated on a hill right above the town—not at all like some of the workhouses, actually situated below the level of the town—and if we are to believe in the laws of gravitation we must accept the theory that a lot of the sewage of a town thus situated must go down to the workhouse, and it cannot be a healthy site. But here the workhouse of Castleblayney is situated on the top of a hill, well-drained and very airy. We have also a detached building which could be used for either an auxiliary asylum or converted into an orphanage—a detached building that is not being used at all at present. We have one trained nurse and two assistants and two wardmaids in the infirmary; we have a trained nurse and a wardmaid in the fever hospital, and in the sick ward a male and female attendant. Dr. Wilson will tell you all about that later on. In the aged ward also there are several domesticities, a comfortable day-room, and all that, and if you think it worth your while to inspect the house you will find I have not exaggerated very much.

CHAIRMAN.—We have seen it—last week.
Mr. Loomer.—It was originally for 1,056, and last Saturday night there were only 196 in, so, in the matter of accommodation, I think we are in a position to accommodate all comers. We have ample room in the building we have, and ample room to build upon, for we have eight acres not yet built upon. The town, of course, is in a very central position. Castleblayney will become, I hope, in a year or two one of the most important railway centres in this part of the country. There is a new railway being constructed from Carrigrohane, and there is also a Bill lately passed through Parliament for the construction of the railway from Kinsale to Castleblayney, so that we will be able to serve nearly all the districts lying adjacent to ours. The station itself extends ten miles in every direction except in the direction of Carrigrohane, where it only extends four miles, but even at present we have a railway that could serve that portion of the district very well; there are two railway stations—one at Ollerville and one at Inniskenny; both of them are in the Carrigrohane Union, and that line has direct communication with Castleblayney; ten or fifteen minutes will bring anybody down from that portion of Carrigrohane Union into Castleblayney, so with regard to the position of Castleblayney everything points to its being the most central place and the most likely and the best place for administering those districts, if you think it right to recommend the amalgamation of unions for this county. There are a number of important towns in our union as well; the Poor Law Union of Castleblayney comprises the towns of Hollyday, the town of Crossmaglen, and the town of Newtownhamilton, and I might also say that we are really the best place that the towns of Newtownhamilton and Carrigrohane could be served out of, because we are right in the centre, and in a year or two will become a railway centre that will serve all these districts, so that if the unions are to be amalgamated I don't think a better centre could be selected for the administration of the Poor Law than the town of Castleblayney. That can be more fully said in a year or two, when we have these two new railways constructed. There is another question that will be dealt with by Mr. Smith will refer to a matter that will perhaps weigh very much with your Commission, and that is a question of religious denomination. Mr. Smith will elaborate all that himself, but it is from his point of view and the point of view of the different religious persuasions in the county—a very serious religious question—which will be taken into consideration by you. The reason that the Guardians arrived at the conclusion that they did not want amalgamation was that they have a very fine workhouse; they are getting on very harmoniously together; there are never any quarrels at the board; they are very intelligent and business-like body; they don't usually come here to make a parade of their eloquence, but to do business, and the fact that they have done business is amply proved by these statements I have made with regard to the improved hospital and all that. These are matters that ought to be taken into consideration, and when unions are going to be changed I think a preference ought to be given to the best business people. I might also mention that without increasing the number of inmates in our workhouse we have reduced the outdoor relief by £240, and there is no corresponding increase in the number of inmates.

CHAIRMAN.—You have got the figures for this year just over!

Mr. Loomer.—Yes; the clerk will give them.

Dr. Wilson examined.

7708. Mr. Loomer.—Are you the Medical Officer for this union?—Yes.

7770. What way would you suggest that this matter of amalgamation should be approached yourself; what is your own view with regard to it?—I think there are too many workhouses in the county.

7771. How many workhouses would you think would be sufficient?—I think two would meet the requirements of the case.

7772. Would you suggest where these workhouses should be situated?—I would have one in the north and the other in the south, so as to catch both ends, and make them as central as possible.

7773. You would not agree with the evidence that was given at Monaghan yesterday by a battalion of witnesses that one workhouse would be enough for the county, and that that should be in Monaghan?—I think that would entail a great deal of hardship on the poor—the convenience of them during the winter time.

7774. Do you think that the distance from the upper end of the county, above Carrigrohane, to Monaghan would be too great?—It would be an utter impossibility in some cases.

7775. As a matter of fact that distance would be nearly thirty miles. With regard to our own house here, are you aware how much money has been spent lately in improving it?—Within the past four years, I was looking over the accounts, there has been over £280 spent, and there was £200 spent a few years before that on another building.

7776. Was that money spent to improve the infirmary and other wards?—Principally the infirmary and sick wards.

7777. Have you also constructed two new consumption wards?—We have thoroughly equipped them with all the modern improvements.

7778. And was some of that money also spent on the effective drainage of the establishment?—There was; the house is thoroughly drained with pipe drains.

7779. In your opinion, as sanitary medical officer, is it in a thoroughly sanitary condition at the present time?—It is; and there has been a marked improvement in the health of the old people since the drainage was completed.

7780. Have you noticed since the drainage was completed a marked decrease in disease that usually arises from defective drainage?—I have just stated that.

7781. Have you also introduced into the workhouse a good water supply?—We have a very good water supply now.

7782. And you have cold and hot water baths in the infirmary?—We have on both sides—male and female.

7783. Was a new ambulance lately purchased at a cost of nearly £200?—We have a very fine ambulance—four-wheeled with rubber tyres—from the St. John's Ambulance Society.

7784. Did you also acquire a new ambulance for the fever hospital?—Yes; a four-wheeled ambulance too.

7785. Is it properly equipped with stretchers?—It is.

7786. Are you, as medical officer, satisfied with the kind of surgery they have given you?—Yes; they have improved the surgery lately; there is hot and cold water put in, and a new operating room.

7787. You have a private ward, too, have you not, in the infirmary?—We have one private ward.

7788. Now, with regard to the staff, are you satisfied with the kind of staff you have in this workhouse?—Yes, I am fairly satisfied.

7789. How many trained nurses have you here?—Two trained nurses—qualified nurses.

7790. Have you any assistants?—We have three wardmaids.

Nov. 25, 1901.

Dr. Wilson.

7791. You have, of course, a male and female attendant in the idiot ward?—A male and female paid attendant in the lunatic wards.

7792. I don't think I exaggerated much when I referred to the idiot ward; is it not in a creditable state at present?—The idiots are very comfortable; there were also two day-rooms built for them recently, which you did not mention.

7793. And they have very comfortable quarters as regards dormitories?—Yes. The whole hospital and the male lunatic wards are supplied with wire-mesh stretchers and hair mattresses; most of them in the infirmary now are Lawson Tait's Improved.

7794. And you supply very comfortable quarters to the nursing staff?—There have been two new dormitories built or fitted up for the nurses lately; they have three dormitories.

7795. And they are in a very good condition, and well kept?—They are.

7796. As all the other parts of the house appear to be. Taking for granted that this principle of amalgamation would be carried out, how would we be fixed with regard to accommodation?—The number of beds we have in the hospital is sixty-three; thirty-six of them are occupied to-day, and in the idiot wards we have twenty-six idiots; all the beds are filled but one. We have accommodation for five consumption males, with a thousand cubic feet for each patient, on the male side, and five on the female side; we have a thousand cubic feet on each side.

7797. How many patients does the fever hospital accommodate?—It would accommodate twenty-eight.

7798. How many does the infirmary accommodate?—Sixty-three.

7799. What about the infirm wards; I want you to tell us all you can about them?—We have sixty-three beds in the infirmary.

7800. How many could you accommodate in the consumption wards?—Ten.

7801. Apart from these wards, is there not a detached building that could also be used in case of necessity for increased accommodation?—Yes; there is a large detached wing that would accommodate fifty at least.

7802. And we have eight acres of land attached to this workhouse?—We have.

7803. That could be built upon?—If necessary. That large wing has not been occupied in my time; it would hold, at least, fifty people; there are three large dormitories in it; the reason that place was not occupied formerly was that we had no water supply for it; now there is a new water supply coming into the town.

7804. Does that water supply actually run past your gates?—Yes; that place could be utilized now at very little expense.

7805. Suppose the Government think well of introducing a Bill to do away with a lot of these workhouses, how would Castletown stand?—Stand centrally for the south division.

7806. And are they not constructing a new railway between Armagh and Keady?—Yes.

7807. And has there not also been a Bill passed for the construction of a railway from Kingsport to Castletown?—I don't know that it has passed.

Mr. Loneroy.—It has; Mr. Daly can tell us that?

Mr. James Daly.—That will cut two ways.

7808. Mr. Loneroy.—Since the infirmary has been brought up to date and modernized and improved, have not the small farmers of the locality availed of it far more than they used to do?—Yes; every day we are getting a better class of patients in; the small farming class are sending in their sick, and there has been no change for so far; the Guardians have not made a charge for so far.

7809. Our hospital here is not, unfortunately, one of these county-at-large charges, as at Carrickmacross, and Monaghan, and Clones; we have to pay for it ourselves?—The fever hospital is not a county-at-large charge; it is the only one in the county that is not.

7810. Carrickmacross can boast of that distinction?—It can; and Clones and Monaghan.

7811. By reason of our not being a county-at-large charge, how much additional expenditure does that entail here?—I cannot say; that would be a matter for the clerk.

7812. How many towns are there in this district; four or five, are there not?—Castletown is the centre of five towns—between six to nine miles.

7813. Just mention those towns?—Carrickmacross, nine; Greenanagh, six; Newtownhamilton, eight; Keady, eight; Ballybay, seven; it is the centre of the spider's web.

7814. CHAIRMAN.—Who is the spider?—Castletown.

7815. Mr. Loneroy.—And Mr. Daly is the fly. You could not tell us anything about the reduction of the outdoor relief?—I don't know that.

7816. Mr. Molloy.—In the event of this Commission reporting that one union would be sufficient for the needs of Monaghan County, would it be any advantage if that union were placed in the centre of the county?—It would certainly; it would entail less hardship in bringing the people from the outskirts.

7817. Yes; I agree with you. Do you know the relation of the portion of this union which extends into the County Armagh?—I do not.

7818. The railway facilities that your solicitor spoke of would also be very useful in taking patients and persons out of Castletown as well as bringing them into it?—It would.

7819. Mr. Loneroy.—Would it be to Monaghan?—Not to Monaghan.

7820. Mr. James J. McNamee.—Is Castletown in North or South Monaghan?—It is in the centre of the South; it is more nearly the centre of the county.

7821. So that if you were going to have two workhouses, in dividing the county, would it not be on the very dividing line?—It would be nearer than any of the others.

7822. It could not be the centre of the entire county and the centre of the southern part?—It is in the north of the southern part, but it is the most central town, I think, in the county.

7823. Ballybay would be in the centre of the county, and it is just on the same line as Castletown; is not Castletown on the dividing line; if the county were divided into two parts would not the line be drawn past Ballybay and Castletown?—It would, I think.

7824. So if you wanted to have a central workhouse in each part of the county would not Carrickmacross be more central than any other?—It would not.

7825. I think your spider sits in the corner of his web this time?—No; he would sit in the centre of the southern division to a large extent.

7826. Do you remember in 1800 the dietary in Castletown Union?—I do.

7827. What kind of a diet had you before 1800?—We had a middling diet.

7828. You changed the diet?—We changed the diet; we have a fairly good dietary at present.

7829. In 1800 was there any pressure on you by the Local Government Board to change the dietary?—There was some pressure, but the Guardians resisted it.

7830. Have you had any inquiries during the past number of years?—We had one.

7831. Only one?—One, as far as I am concerned; I don't remember any others; we had some within the last ten years; two, I think.

7832. Only two?—As far as I remember, only two; well, labourers' cottages, if you wish that.

7833. Was there any inquiry into the administration of the workhouse, of the staff, do you remember?—There were complaints made.

7834. Was there an inquiry held?—There was, and the staff was completely exonerated.

7835. Who complained of them; why was the inquiry started?—It was started by the wife of a deceased patient.

7836. There were several inquiries then?—I know of two, that is all.

7837. This proposed railway will run from Carrickmacross, won't it?—It will.

7838. And there will be a station at Carrickmacross?—Yes.

7839. Dr. RIDGER.—You stated that there were a better class of patients coming into the infirmary now?—There is decidedly.

7840. There is also the same class—that is the poor?—They are coming in still; but there is a class that did not come in formerly.

7841. By that you mean to show that the infirmary is serving a more useful purpose?—It is becoming better known, and the people are appreciating the skill nursing, and if the same workhouse could be done away with I believe we would get more in.

7842. You mentioned also that the Guardians had not charged for the treatment of patients?—They have not; they have never charged here except a few cases.

7843. Why should they allow better-off people to come in without paying?—It is to encourage them to come in.

7644. Would it not be a proper thing for the ratepayers and also for the patients themselves that they should pay and not receive it off the rates?—The Guardians have acted very generously in the matter.

7645. Do you think they are acting properly in the matter?—That is another matter.

7646. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose you would hardly like to give an opinion on that?—I would not.

7647. Dr. BROSSE.—With regard to operations, do you think that all small operations or all classes of operations should be performed in these hospitals?—I do not.

7648. What class do you think should be performed and what class should go elsewhere?—Special cases, eye operations a general practitioner should do.

7649. But large operations?—I think they are justified in performing them now—abdominal surgery and such matters.

7650. You would not approve of sending large operations to the county infirmary provided they were able to go, and not emergency cases?—I would not; only special cases.

7651. Don't you think their chance of recovery would be better there?—I don't think so.

7652. Better equipment of the operating room?—I think they would have just as good a chance here. There was a question about the classification, about the children; we have twenty-one children.

7653. CHAIRMAN.—Are you in favour of keeping them in the workhouse?—We have twenty-one children between three and thirteen years of age in the workhouse; of these twelve are orphans and deserted; the other nine are children with their mothers. I would make a distinction between those children. I think the twelve children should not be retained here. I have a very strong opinion, after twenty years' experience of workhouse children; I think they should be sent to a central industrial school with either one, two or three acres contributory to it.

7654. Mr. Lowry.—You are Vice-Chairman of the County Council of Monaghan?—I am.

7655. Suppose some of the workhouses in the County Monaghan were wiped out, how many workhouses do you think should be kept?—Well, you would require two at least, if you did not want to inflict a very great hardship on the aged poor and the infirm and sick.

7656. You don't agree with the Monaghan folk?—I certainly do not.

7657. Even taking it for granted that the Monaghan people were right, would you think that the Monaghan people should be allowed to keep the county workhouse as well as the county lunatic asylum and the county infirmary, and half a dozen other things?—I would not object to them having the workhouse for the northern part of the county.

7658. But you would object to having the workhouse for the whole county situated in Monaghan?—Certainly.

7659. Why?—Because it would entail a great hardship on the people living in South Monaghan to be taken there—the aged poor and sick.

7660. What do you think would be the most central place for the two workhouses?—I am not sure of the geographical position of North Monaghan, but the most central part of North Monaghan and the most central part of South Monaghan.

7661. Where do you think the workhouse for South Monaghan ought to be situated; we will let North Monaghan take care of itself?—The way we are situated at present Castleblayney is the most central place for South Monaghan, but it could be made more central if you built another workhouse in South Monaghan, but as it stands it is the most central.

7662. And you would be in favour of retaining the workhouse in Castleblayney?—I would.

7663. Mr. James A. Monaghan.—I just want to ask you about the location of Castleblayney; you seem to think it is in the centre of South Monaghan; how far is it from Castleblayney to Monaghan?—About eleven miles by road; the travelling from Castleblayney to Monaghan is very inconvenient by rail.

7664. How far is it from Castleblayney away down near Kingscourt, where the county goes to; is it not ten or twenty?—I think the Castleblayney division only goes three miles beyond Carrickmacross.

7665. Dr. BROSSE.—Or boarded out?—No; not boarded out. My experience is not favourable to boarding out children; I prefer an industrial school where they would learn something, and not turn up like a halfpenny every year, as they do when kept in a workhouse.

7666. CHAIRMAN.—What experience have you had of boarding out children that makes you have an unfavourable opinion of them?—Well, they very often come back here, even the boarded-out children.

7667. Can you give me instances of boarded-out children; are you speaking of hired-out children or boarded out?—I am speaking of hired-out children.

7668. We are not talking of that at all; have you had any experience of boarded-out children?—Not much.

7669. Do your remarks altogether apply to hiring out?—Yes.

7670. As regards boarding out, have you any experience of that?—No; not much.

7671. Have you had any at all?—I cannot say I have. We have two classes of aged and infirm here; there are some in the place for twenty years that I remember—people that came in here through circumstances over which they had no control; broken down in health and other causes—and then there are others here of the tramp class—wild-lands—they come and go; I don't think they should be classed together; I think these other classes who have no friends and relations should be sent to a central or auxiliary asylum.

7672. You would classify them according to character?—I would; and the tramp class the same. The porter tells me that of every thirteen tramps who come here ten of them are of the stigmatized class—the pickpocket class—and the three are down on their luck—honest tramps; ten out of every thirteen turn up here every three months.

MR. PATRICK DUFFY EXAMINED.

Mr. Patrick Duffy.

7673. How far is it from here to Carrickmacross?—Nine miles.

7674. How far would you make North Monaghan come down if you were asking a division of the county; how far north of Monaghan?—As the division is at present, I don't think you could make any change more suitable than it is at the present time if you have two workhouses for the whole county.

7675. You will have to divide the county into two if you propose two workhouses?—My idea would be to have a workhouse at Monaghan, as it is there at present, and everybody admits that Castleblayney is the most central in the southern division.

7676. I want to find out how far you would let Monaghan Union come down south of Monaghan town; is it not ten miles from Monaghan to the extreme north of County Monaghan?—It may be.

7677. Is it not ten down to Castleblayney?—Yes.

7678. Does not that just show that Monaghan is in the middle of North Monaghan?—Then why not give them the workhouse in North Monaghan?

7679. You said Castleblayney was not in South Monaghan at all?—I did not say anything of the sort.

7680. Monaghan is to be the centre of North Monaghan; how far are you going to let Monaghan come down south of Monaghan?—Down to the southern line of North Monaghan.

7681. How far is that?—I am not sure; I have not the slightest idea; the present union boundary.

7682. If it is central at all it must come down five or six miles; how far is it from here to Monaghan Union?

A Guardian.—Five miles.

7683. How far is it down to Kingscourt?—About twelve to fourteen miles.

7684. If it is five to the north and fourteen to the south Castleblayney cannot be in the centre?—Except you built a new workhouse altogether and put it into the south of South Monaghan I don't see how you could change it.

7685. How far do you go from Castleblayney to get to the County Armagh; about three miles?—There may be a short cut that three or four miles would bring you into it.

7686. So that Castleblayney is really on the edge, in a kind of corner of the south?—It is very easy to see that by the map.

Am. 28, 1905.
Mr. Patrick
Duffy.

7897. If you come to examine it it is not so centrally situated at all.—We are not considering that at all, but we are contending that as it exists it is more central than Carrickmacross to administer the Poor Law.

7898. When the railway comes down to Carrickmacross won't it be in the centre of South Monaghan?—I don't think it would, and I don't think you think it either.

7899. Is not Castleblayney just in the direct line between Dundalk and Monaghan; is not that the way the tramps go?—It is not indeed, I wish it was. We have to go to Clones and branch off to Monaghan.

7900. The tramps don't go by Clones to Monaghan?—What other way would they go except by road.

7901. A man that tramps usually goes the shortest way; he would not go to Clones if he was going to Monaghan?—If he goes by rail he must go that way.

7902. A tramp does not go by rail; Castleblayney is just in the direct line between Dundalk and Monaghan?—It is by road.

7903. So that is just a convenient resting place for tramps; would they ever go by Carrickmacross?—They could not possibly if going from Dundalk to Monaghan; but I suppose they would if they made anything by it.

7904. Mr. MURKIN.—Was this question of amalgamation discussed at the County Council meeting?—It was, but I was not present.

7905. CHAIRMAN.—What do you suggest should be done as regards part of the Cooteshill Union that is in the County Monaghan and the part of the Clones Union that is in the County Fermanagh?—I am reluctant to tell you I don't know sufficient about the whole thing to give you an answer; I have not studied it.

7906. Have you studied as regards the part of the Cooteshill Union that is in Monaghan?—I have not.

7907. Mr. LEWIS.—Don't you know the part of the country that lies a little beyond Ballybay in the Cooteshill Rural District?—I do.

7908. Where would that be most conveniently attached if amalgamation were carried out; would it be more conveniently attached to Castleblayney than Monaghan?—To Castleblayney.

7909. CHAIRMAN.—Clones or Castleblayney?—I think Castleblayney.

7910. Mr. LEWIS.—Is there not a railway station at Rocknure that serves that, and there is a train from Rocknure into Castleblayney?—Yes.

7911. Ten or fifteen minutes would take them from that district here by rail, and fully half an hour to go to Clones?—It would.

7912. Mr. MURKIN.—Are you a member of the Board of Guardians?—I am not.

Mr. JAMES KILLAGHAN examined.

Mr. James
Killaghan.

7913. Mr. LEWIS.—You are an engineer?—I am.

7914. You are Engineer to the Poor Law Guardians here?—Yes.

7915. Have you taken the trouble to look into the map?—I did.

7916. Will you throw some light on this much-contested centre?—I don't know.

7917. How far is it from the lower portion of Monaghan to Castleblayney?—It is twenty-three miles by furrows from the lower portion to the Monaghan Union.

7918. From the upper portion of Carrickmacross Union how far is it?—From the upper portion of Carrickmacross to the Monaghan Workhouse, twenty-six miles two furrows twenty paces.

7919. Would Castleblayney be a more central place for a workhouse, supposing there were two retained in the County Monaghan, than Carrickmacross?—Oh, it would.

7920. You were a Poor Law Guardian for a number of years yourself?—I was.

7921. But you would be of the opinion that Castleblayney would be the place for the workhouse for this end of the county. There have been a great deal of improvements carried out here in this county?—There have.

7922. And have not these repairs improved the workhouse very much indeed?—Oh, they have.

7923. You have not been a member of the Poor Law Board since the Local Government Act came in?—I have not; you cannot act in two capacities. As to the one workhouse, from the lower end of the county to Castleblayney it is twenty-four and a quarter miles, and from the upper end of Carrickmacross to Monaghan it is twenty-six miles, so that Castleblayney has two and a quarter miles of an advantage if there is only one retained—it is two and a quarter miles more central. Taking your union as it stands at present, if you retain the portion of Armagh, undoubtedly Castleblayney is far from central.

7924. Suppose there is a workhouse in Castleblayney retained, you think the Armagh portion of our union should be still kept on?—It would be very inconvenient to send them any place else.

7925. How far would it be to Dundalk from that end of the union?—Dundalk is not on this map; I don't know exactly.

7926. You are well acquainted with that district of Cooteshill?—Yes; I am the architect for the labourers' cottages there.

7917. Suppose there is a re-arrangement of unions, where do you think that part of Cooteshill Union should go?—The greater bulk of it should come here.

7918. Mr. MURKIN.—Did you ever hear of a place called Clones?—I did; I know it very well.

7919. How far is it from Castleblayney?—As the crow would fly it is twenty-one statute miles.

7920. And the furthest end of that near Roslea would be still further?—Oh, yes; it would be further.

7921. Do I understand you to have made Castleblayney the centre of the County Monaghan in case that only one union is retained?—It is the most central; twenty-four miles will bring you to the verge of the County Monaghan from Castleblayney to any part; whereas it will take you twenty-six and a half miles from Monaghan.

7922. That is a remarkable engineering feat—a perfectly astonishing result?—Well, I cannot help it.

7923. Mr. James A. MURKIN.—This place is in the centre of the county?—I did not say that.

7924. You said it was twenty-four miles from one end and twenty-six from the other; if it is the centre of the county and the county was cut in two it could not be the centre of the county and then the centre of another part.

7925. Mr. MURKIN.—The county cannot have two centres by any engineering?—I really don't follow you.

7926. Mr. James A. MURKIN.—If you were going to divide the county into two divisions would you not divide it near the centre?—I would not; if I was making two divisions of it that would necessitate two workhouses.

7927. If there were two workhouses, and you were going to have two divisions of the county, would you not just draw the line past Castleblayney?—I said I would do nothing of the sort.

7928. Well, if it was in the centre, and you were going to divide it?—Ballybay is the centre of the county.

7929. How far is Ballybay from Castleblayney?—Ballybay is seven miles from Castleblayney and eight from Monaghan; if there was going to be one workhouse in the county, Ballybay would be the place to build it.

7930. Is it not in the same line as Castleblayney?—It is, but I don't see that would help us in this inquiry.

Mr. EDWARD McDONNELL examined.

Mr. Edward McDonnell.

7931. Mr. LEWIS.—You are the Chairman of the Board of Guardians?—I am.

7932. And the Guardians are against this principle of amalgamation because they think it cannot be economically carried out?—Yes.

7933. Suppose the powers that be don't agree with the Castleblayney Board of Guardians and carry out this principle of amalgamation, where would you think the workhouse should be placed?—I would say Castleblayney ought to be kept away.

7334. Why do you think so?—Well, it is the largest union; Carrickmacross is not much more than half of the value in the valuation.

7335. Do you know the valuation?—We could find it here.

7336. The population of Carrick is not near as large as any other?—Of course it is not.

7337. Do you think that it would be a wise thing or a good thing, or an economical thing either for that matter, to retain only one workhouse in the County Monaghan?—I don't think it would; the expense of transit would cover the saving, in my opinion.

7338. Then you would hardly know what to do with the white elephants left on your hands in the shape of giant workhouses?—No; I would not.

7339. Would it not be too far to convey the aged and sick and infirm poor in winter long journeys of that sort?—It would.

7340. You have effected very considerable improvements in the workhouse of late years?—Yes.

7341. Spent hundreds of pounds in repairing the place and putting it into its present perfect condition?—Yes.

7342. Supposing there was a re-arrangement of unions where would you think the County Monaghan portion of the Castletown Union should be placed?—It could come here.

7343. Would it be more convenient for it to come here than to any other part of this county?—I would; I suppose portion could go to Clonsilla too.

7344. Do you think the Crossmaglen portion of this union could be more conveniently taken on to another union than this?—No; except one portion at the lower end could be put into Newry.

7345. Mr. James A. MURTAGHAN.—When you sold the valuation of Castletown Union was about twice as much as Carrickmacross, you were not speaking from figures, were you?—Yes.

7346. You have the figures, have you?—I have them in my head.

7347. Do you know that the valuation of Carrickmacross is £55,000?—It is hardly that; the valuation of the union was £75,000 twenty-five years ago.

7348. About half of it is in Armagh?—No; about a third.

7349. Anyway, there is a large portion of Castletown in Armagh?—There is.

7350. And it is only £75,000 in valuation?—It was £75,000 twenty-five years ago, and it is greatly increased since; there have been more buildings done.

Mr. LORRY.—The valuation of Carrickmacross is £55,000 in last Thom's Directory.

7351. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—You say you are in favour of amalgamation, and you think it is necessary as well to retain all the workhouses in Monaghan?—I am not in favour of amalgamation, and I will show you why. I came in here as a Poor Law Guardian twenty-five years ago with a determination to knock down all the poor-houses if I could. I went through these hospitals, and, looking at the poor aged and infirm people there, I changed my mind. In those times that I speak about on the farm of land on which I was reared there were no cottier houses, and everyone of them had their turf-locks, and they would be only too glad to get a poor man or a poor woman to stop there; they let nothing by it. Now that is gone away out of the country; there are no hogs, no firing, and those poor people can get no shelter; there might be an odd person would keep them, but the majority would not.

7352. But you know things have changed a good deal since twenty-five years ago—the population has decreased very much?—It has.

7353. And the social condition of the country is not the same as it was twenty-five years ago?—It is not; they have not the means at their disposal to be social; the firing has left the country.

7354. Apart from firing, is not the condition of the people better than it was twenty-five years ago—not so very many poor people as then?—Well, I suppose there are not.

7355. And that being so, what was needed twenty-five years ago is not needed to-day?—Still, if there was no workhouses for them in the country, they would rather stay in it.

7356. In the four workhouses in this county—Carrickmacross, Monaghan, Clonsilla, and Castletown—there are only something like 400 inmates altogether; half of those inmates are sick, and would require some attention, perhaps locally?—They would.

7357. The children taken out of that would reduce the number of what you would call infirm or candidates for a workhouse down to about 200; do you not think that one workhouse in the County Monaghan could easily accommodate 200 inmates?—I suppose it could.

7358. And if some provision was made in different localities for the care of the sick, do you not think that it would meet the requirements of charity and humanity?—You could hardly establish these places without heavy cost too.

7359. Do you not know that the cost of keeping up a workhouse in the matter of fuel and staff is very great?—It is.

7360. Suppose you could do away with the staff and the fuel?—I don't think you could do away with the staff altogether without giving them pensions.

7361. A pension would be a disappearing charge?—I was taking for my standpoint of view the Monaghan jail when that was thrown off this county; I was a keen observer at the time, and I could not see that the county cost was anything cheaper; there was more charged for the conveyance of criminals from Bailly and Rockmore and Monaghan, and those places, with a policeman or two along with them, than would maintain them in the jails, and if those workhouses were done away with there would be as much expense for the conveyance of those patients, perhaps, as would support them a year in the workhouses.

7362. That is hardly a fair comparison; I don't think the county cost was responsible for that charge to a great extent?—It was.

7363. That was a small item?—It was a very big item in the County Monaghan.

7364. You could hardly get that in comparison with the condition of things at present with regard to the Poor Law; what I want to get from you, as a man of experience, is, supposing that three of the unions in this county were abolished, supposing that the firing and the upkeep of the institutions and staff ceased to be a charge on the ratepayers, do you not think that that would bring about a considerable reduction in the local rates?—It would; but what would you do with the houses; they would fall for want of firing.

7365. We would look after the houses?—You cannot do it without coal or firing.

7366. If the houses were abandoned you would have no need of firing?—Then they would fall.

Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Tell them to some enterprising neighbour to make an industrial home.

CHAIRMAN.—Or for a quarry.

Rev. R. H. SMYTHE examined.

7367. Mr. LORRY.—You are the Presbyterian clergyman for this district?—Yes; one of them. I am Chaplain of the workhouse.

7368. What do you think about this arrangement of the unions—the reduction of workhouses?—Well, I would be strongly in favour of amalgamation, and from the remarks made by this gentleman here (Mr. Murtaghan), more strongly now than ever I have been.

7369. That being so, where would you say the workhouses should be retained; how many would you keep?—Two workhouses would fully satisfy all the needs of this county.

7370. Where do you think these two workhouses should be placed?—Of course, looking at it from my own standpoint—that is the religious standpoint—I should say that if a workhouse be retained in South

Monaghan it should be at Castletown. Of course, I have many other reasons I could assign why this should be the workhouse retained.

7371. Just tell us what you think about it?—It is purely a personal matter with me.

7372. What is the reason why you would oppose the workhouse being closed here?—Religiously?

7373. No; give us the other reasons first?—On account of the equipment of the workhouse and its central position; these reasons have been given already.

7374. Now, on the religious aspect, what is your reason?—In this particular district the north-east and northern district lying around Castletown, and then the western district towards Bailly, there is a very considerable Presbyterian population, representing somewhere about fourteen congregations; in the town of Curriculum there is no Presbyterian Church and no Presbyterian minister nearer, I think, than at least three Irish miles, and I would consider that a very great hardship on Presbyterian inmates who might be taken from two miles or so beyond Newtownhamilton to Currimacross, a distance of sixteen or eighteen miles, and also within, I suppose, five miles of Monaghan; and also from Ballyear district and all round. We have only one little Presbyterian Church between this and Currimacross, eight miles, Broomfield; the Presbyterian population has largely on the other side of Castletown.

7975. You, of course, agree with the other witnesses that this would be more central than any other town in this part of the county?—Certainly, to any person who knows the geography; some people don't seem to have studied the geography of the county; they take an angle for a whole, which is a great mistake.

7977. Have you seen it?—I have not seen it, but I have been strongly recommended, and recommended by officials in connection with the Poor Law system, and strongly recommended to myself, but I have had to personal experience in places where I have been. It was not in force in places where I have been before I came to Castletown, and since I came here we have had no experience of it; but I would be strongly opposed to the system of hiring out children; and another thing I wish to say with regard to the workhouse system is the great necessity of having a classification of the inmates—I consider that to be one of the greatest hardships in connection with our workhouses—according to character, and another thing is the tramp question.

7978. Before you leave that part I want to ask your opinion about girls who come in to have illegitimate children in the home; would you be in favour of some arrangement that would exclude all girls in that condition from workhouses where they would meet other women in the same position?—Strongly in favour of that.

7979. It has been suggested by witnesses elsewhere that a good method of dealing with such cases would be by sending them to a central penitentiary conducted by religious bodies belonging to the various religions that these girls might belong to, and having them dealt with there with a view to reclaiming them after their first lapse, and endeavouring to put them forward in the world in a more hopeful position in the future.—I would consider that one of the greatest acts of mercy that could be performed towards unfortunate girls is circumstanced; as if they were taken in hand very frequently at that particular period of their life they would be saved from a life of degradation and put under a good religious influence in connection with whatever denomination they belonged to.

7980. I am not aware that your religious denomination has any penitentiaries at present in Ireland.—We have none.

7981. But you think if there was a necessity for it—Of course there are houses—there is what is called the Edgar House where girls of that kind are taken up and looked after.

7982. Then you have them in that sense?—Oh, yes, in that sense; but we have none under Government.

7983. But if girls from a district were sent to you, and if the amount that they would cost in the workhouse were paid out of the rates to such an institution, do you see any difficulty?—There would be no difficulty whatever.

7984. You were going to pass on to some other subjects about the tramps, I think?—The tramp question I consider a scandal—to see able-bodied men and women tramping about from year to year.

7985. You refer now exclusively to those who are not bona fide seekers for work, but who are professional vagrants?—If there is such a thing as a bona fide seeker for work he is a very rare bird.

7986. We do meet them?—There are exceptions to every case, and that is, I suppose, a case to which there is an exception, but if you happen to have any key to make or potatoes to dig you would find him earnest to be in search of work.

7987. I mean men like tailors and shoemakers going from town to town, and masons' assistants?—Yes.

7988. Who are out of a job and go to another place to look for it?—Yes; but I have often seen them employed about Castletown, and they had got so accustomed with the tramp life that they would only work for a day or two, or perhaps a week. I have seen it again and again during the twenty years I have been here. I believe the tramp question requires to be looked after very carefully; they are a burden to the country and the rates, and the struggling farmers at the present time.

Rev Canon Wilson examined.

Rev. Canon
Wilson.

7989. Mr. Lecky. You are the Protestant Rector of the parish of Mechna?—Yes.

7990. How many workhouses do you think should be retained?—I think there ought to be two—one in the North and one in South Monaghan.

7991. Where do you think the North Monaghan one should be placed?—I suppose in the town of Monaghan.

7992. And where do you think the South Monaghan one should be placed?—Certainly in Castletown.

7993. Suppose the town of Monaghan people had their own way, and there was to be only one workhouse in Monaghan, because anything that is going in the county they must have it there, where do you think the one workhouse should be?—Castletown.

7994. You agree with the other witnesses that Castletown would be in a more central position for a workhouse for this end of the county than Currimacross?—I do.

7995. Are you well satisfied with the temporary arrangements in the workhouse here?—I think they are very good.

7996. Do you think the staff is efficient too?—I think the staff are very careful.

7997. You are aware, of course, that a great many improvements have been carried out in this workhouse?—Yes.

7998. CHAIRMAN.—You, perhaps, have heard the questions I put just now about girls who come in with illegitimate children?—I thoroughly agree with what Mr. Smythe said; I think it is a great pity to have them mixed up with the ordinary inmates here.

7999. Do you think the fact of such women being in the workhouse where there are women sometimes with three or four illegitimate children even in the workhouse, do you think that has anything to do with the great dislike that respectable people have to come into the workhouse—the knowledge that that class is there?—I am very sure it has, because they have often told it to me, and it has a bad effect and a bad tone on the general inmates.

8000. Mr. MURTAGH.—They have a great number of children in this house; do you know the reason why they never adopt the boarding-out system?—I do not; but I think the boarding-out system would be a very good one.

8001. You would approve of it yourself?—Thoroughly.

8002. Do you not think that one workhouse would be sufficient for the needs of Monaghan County?—I think it would be very uncomfortable.

8003. Supposing there was one workhouse and four places for the sick managed on a modest scale, is it not your opinion that that would come up to the needs of the county?—It might; but I think it would be better to have two.

8004. We find, on inquiring into the matter, that the inmates of these institutions stay there for a very lengthened period, and we also find that these aged people have very few friends that ever come to visit them, and it occurs to me, as a man who would like to bring about economy where it could be done without injury, that if one institution was devoted to the infirm of the County Monaghan and a few institutions be the sick of the various localities it perhaps might suit the needs of this county; what do you think of that?—I don't know exactly; a good many of the infirm have got friends, who come to see them, and I am afraid if you had it only in one portion of the county that they would be more desolate than ever.

8005. The general expression of opinion on the part of people who have been a long time in the house is that they are neglected by their friends—the sick are looked after and visited, but the old chronic cases are left to have no person to look after them. Now, if there was a home made for them in some central portion of the county, where there could be proper classification and proper supervision and better treatment of no more expense, do you not think it would be a desirable thing?—Certainly.

Mr. BERNARD FARROW examined.

Nov 26, 1908.

Mr. Bernard
Farrow.

8006. Mr. Lavery.—Are you a member of the Urban Council in Castleblayney?—Yes; Vice-Chairman.

8007. Have you thought over this subject of amalgamation?—Yes. My opinion is that a reduction of workhouses would be very good on the principle of economy and saving the rates.

8008. How many do you think would be sufficient for the County Monaghan?—I believe two would be sufficient.

8009. You don't think one would be enough?—Considering the extent of the county it would be very difficult to bring patients from the south and down to Monaghan if it was established there—for one workhouse very difficult—and it would entail an enormous amount of hardship on the poor and infirm.

8010. And admitting the necessity for two, where do you think three should be placed?—Castleblayney would be a very desirable centre, and I think it would be the most convenient for all parties for one, and Monaghan would be the place that would be suitable for another.

8011. Would you think that Castleblayney would be a more central place for the whole county, if there was only one workhouse, than Monaghan?—I do believe it would.

8012. As a matter of fact there is a bad railway service to Monaghan for the rest of the county?—Yes; very bad.

8013. There is no direct railway communication with this part of the county and Monaghan at all?—There is not; you would have to go round by Clones or go up by Dundalk to Armagh.

8014. And there will be a very effective railway connection with this town before long?—Yes; it is already in construction from Armagh to Castleblayney, and it connects with the Great Northern, so that you can get to any portion of the county.

8015. You took a great interest in the working of the infirmary when you were a Guardian here?—I did.

8016. Were you satisfied with the way the work was done there?—I was perfectly satisfied with the improvements that were carried out.

8017. In the whole establishment?—There was a considerable improvement. I was quite astonished to see the improvements that were carried out since I was here before. The workhouse is in a most efficient state.

8018. What was done in your time when you were a member of the board?—There was introduced a new water scheme—a hot and cold water system—and trained nurses.

8019. Mr. Muldoon.—Monaghan is the Assize town of the county?—It is.

8020. It calls itself the capital of the county?—It may do so; no fault to it.

8021. Nobody calls Castleblayney the capital of the county?—No.

8022. The County Council meet at Monaghan?—They do.

8023. And the Asylum Committee?—Yes; but they were to have met at Castleblayney as well, but by some operation or some process, which we cannot understand—a bit of wirepulling in my opinion—they grabbed up the entire thing—books and system and all—and carried them down to Monaghan to the detriment of this district.

8024. And they have a railway into Monaghan now, but a bad service you tell us?—From Castleblayney they have not, unless you go round by Clones.

8025. You can go by railway from Castleblayney to Monaghan?—You can, and you can go by Armagh too, but the distance is great.

8026. I suppose the railway service is capable of improvement?—Unless you made a direct line I don't see how you can improve it.

8027. Mr. Lavery.—How long does it take you to go from Castleblayney to Monaghan by railway?—If you start from here at eleven o'clock, it would be three o'clock when you were in Monaghan.

8028. It takes you as long to go to Monaghan as it does to Dublin?—It does.

8029. Mr. Muldoon.—If you were coming from Monaghan to the new workhouse at Castleblayney it would take you a long time also?—No; you would come by road. We have an improved ambulance—none better.

8030. Castleblayney is a splendid town to get into, but nobody can get out of it?—I would not say that; it is a splendid town, and when you come to it you would like to stop in it because of the cleanliness—that is one of the things about it.

Mr. JAMES DONAGHY examined.

Mr. James
Donaghy.

8031. Mr. Lavery.—You are a member of the Board of Guardians and also a member of the Crossmaglen Rural Council?—Yes.

8032. Are you the spokesman of the Crossmaglen Rural Council?—You were sent here to-day by the Armagh portion of the Crossmaglen Rural Council?—Yes.

8033. How many years' experience have you as a Guardian?—I suppose I am twelve or fourteen years here.

8034. Is your portion of this union perfectly satisfied with the present arrangements?—Yes.

8035. You would not like to be cut off Castleblayney and added on to another of the adjoining unions?—No; the other unions are too far away.

8036. How far is Nerry?—About twelve Irish miles from the centre of the Crossmaglen Rural District.

8037. How far is Armagh?—About the same.

8038. How far to Dundalk?—About the same, and the same to Carrick.

8039. And this is the most convenient to you?—Yes; it is about six or six and a half miles to the centre of Crossmaglen.

8040. How far is it to Carrick?—It would be about twelve miles, Irish.

8041. You would not like to have to go to Carrick?—I would not; I would go ten miles of a road to avoid it.

8042. Do you think the number of workhouses should be reduced?—I would think two would be sufficient for this county; not to change Armagh from Castleblayney.

8043. Of course you would be in favour of retaining a workhouse in Castleblayney?—Yes; it would be a great disadvantage if our portion was taken from Castleblayney and changed to another place.

8044. Mr. Muldoon.—Do you know what the value of your portion is?—Castleblayney is £86,000 or £88,000.

8045. About half what Monaghan is?—I don't know what Monaghan is.

8046. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Was this question of the boundaries considered, do you know, in the County Armagh, as to the division of the counties?—Yes.

8047. Did the question come up at the County Council?—Not that I am aware of.

8048. You don't speak from a representative position, only just as a member of the community?—It was talked of at the district meeting, and they were satisfied it would not be touched.

8049. Was there any special notice sent out?—No.

8050. Was the matter considered?—There were two men appointed to come here.

8051. I want to know if there was any question as to the desirability or undesirability of the County Armagh being a self-contained county as regards Poor Law as well as other county work?—Not that I know of.

8052. And the expression you have given us to-day is just speaking for yourself?—Yes; I speak for the poor of the district.

8053. You can hardly say you speak for the poor when the matter was not discussed on notice of motion?—I am aware that the poor of the district come to this house, and their friends come here to visit them too.

8054. Are you aware that in other parts of the country there seems to be a desire put forward that the county should be self-contained, that the Poor Law system should be confined to the county itself, and should not extend into other counties?—I have read of that, but it would be very ungrateful if our portion of the county was sent away to Armagh or Nerry.

8055. CHAIRMAN.—How far are you from Armagh?—Crossmaglen is sixteen miles.

8056. Dr. BROWN.—How far from Nerry?—Thirteen or fourteen Irish miles, and it is nine miles to Dundalk.

8057. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—So Dundalk would be the

Nov. 25, 1903.

Mr. James
Donaghy.

nearest place for you?—If you took the centre of the division it would be longer; it would be twelve miles.

8058. The reason I ask you the question is the matter might come up when we get as far as the city of Armagh, and I just wished to know if any public body had given the matter consideration and come to a conclusion on the question?—Not that I am aware of.

8059. Mr. Lowery.—The matter was discussed twice by your board?—Oh, yes.

8060. CHAIRMAN.—But by the District Council of Greenagh?—Oh, certainly.

Mr. OWEN GARAHAN continued.

Mr. Owen
Garahan.

8061. Mr. Lowery.—You are also a member of the Greenagh Rural Council?—Yes.

8062. Is it not so that there were two meetings of the Council at which this question of amalgamation was discussed?—Yes.

8063. And is it not the unanimous opinion of your Council that the County Armagh portion of this union should not be cut off from this union and added to any other union in Armagh?—It is the feeling throughout the whole district from north to south.

8064. And is it not the opinion of the Rural Council?—Yes.

8065. They don't want to be cut off from Castleblaney Union at all?—They do not.

8066. And, as far as that is concerned, they are certainly against the Poor Law system being administered by counties?—Yes; we have the opinions of the District Council from both ends.

8067. You agree with Mr. Donaghy that the inconvenience would be too great if they are put on to 8061. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—And on notice of making seat out?—Oh, yes; certainly. I beg your pardon; I thought it was the County Council you were talking about.

8062. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose you will go to the county meeting at Armagh on the 1st of December. There are two gentlemen from our district that will go.

8063. Mr. James A. Murkaghan.—Were you appointed by the Council to come here?—Yes.

8064. Anybody else?—Yes; he is here.

Armagh?—Certainly; there is no railway communication whatever.

8072. CHAIRMAN.—It is on the way?—It would not be such as; it is not in our way.

8073. You would have to go into Castleblaney to catch the train?—Yes; or go to Dundalk. It is a mile almost to go to Dundalk as to go round by Monaghan.

8074. Mr. Lowery.—How far would you have to walk to Dundalk to catch the train from where you live?—To Coleraine is beyond two Irish miles.

8075. Then you would have to go away round by Dundalk to get to Armagh?—Yes; I very often had to go that way.

8076. How many hours would it take you?—You would leave about eight o'clock in the morning and be there about eleven o'clock.

8078. Not the Guardians?—Not the Guardians.

Mr. JAMES DUFFY continued.

Mr. James
Duffy.

8079. Mr. Lowery.—You are a member of the Poor Law Guardians?—Yes.

8080. And you were a Poor Law Guardian for a great many years?—Twenty years.

8081. Do you think the number of workhouses should be reduced in this county?—I believe two would be sufficient.

8082. Where do you think these two should be placed?—I believe Castleblaney would be the centre for South Monaghan.

Mr. THOMAS MURPHY continued.

Mr. Thomas
Murphy.

8083. Mr. Lowery.—You are a member of the County Council?—Yes.

8084. And the portion you represent is in this union?—Part of it.

8085. And part of it is in Carrick?—Yes.

8086. How many workhouses do you think would be enough for the County Monaghan?—It is the opinion of the County Council that the workhouses should be decreased, from an economic point of view; they have not considered where those workhouses should be placed. Personally, I think at least two should be enough for this county.

8087. Where do you say they should be placed?—I really have not considered that. I should say, from a geographical point of view, that, at any rate, Castleblaney should be retained if there were one for the county, but if there were two for the county I cannot say the effect of having one at Monaghan. I know from experience of the County Infirmary that is there—I am one of the Governors—that the poor and sick from Carrickmacross and round here won't go to Monaghan; it is so difficult to get there; if there was only one workhouse retained for the county it would be a mistake to have it in Monaghan; the infirmary people won't go there.

8088. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—What portion of the county do you live in?—Six miles from here in the Carrickmacross direction.

8089. You have no choice in the matter between Castleblaney and Carrickmacross?—None whatever; what would be the best for the respondents.

8090. Mr. James A. Murkaghan.—That is if there is one; if there are two you would not say it is not central than Carrickmacross?—I really could not say if there were two.

8091. Mr. Muldoon.—A good portion of Castleblaney is in Armagh?—I believe so.

8092. If that was sent into its own county under any reform that now takes place this would be a very small union?—Yes; but there is part of Castleblaney that could be sent in.

8093. There are seven divisions of the County Council Union and four are nearer to Monaghan than to Castleblaney?—I take it for granted that may be so.

CHAIRMAN.—To Clones.

8094. Mr. Muldoon.—Nobody dreams down here of continuing Clones. Did you ever hear of Clones?—Yes; by road it is seventeen or eighteen miles from here. I know we have a great delay there going to Monaghan.

8095. You know it is in a corner of the county?—Yes; I believe so.

Mr. PETER QUINNEMAN continued.

Mr. Peter Quinneman.

8096. Mr. Lowery.—You live on the Cootshill side of the county?—Yes, sir.

8097. Where do you think would be the most convenient to put the County Monaghan portion of the Cootshill Union?—I believe there are three divisions that should go there—Lanny, Omeen, and I don't remember the other; they just lie alongside at the very edge of where I live myself.

8098. Would it not be more convenient to send all the Monaghan divisions of Cootshill to Castleblaney than to Monaghan?—I believe it would, but those three divisions would be more convenient, even if the whole four unions are kept.

8099. CHAIRMAN.—Would Newbliss be more convenient?—Not if Clones was kept.

8100. Mr. Lowery.—But if Clones was closed up would the divisions lying towards Newbliss be more conveniently added to these divisions?—I don't know.

8111. Mr. Muldoon.—Do you know Luncheon and Abley; are not these near Monaghan Road?—Yes; I believe they would be more convenient to Monaghan, but the divisions I mention are on the very verge of where I am living.

8112. Is the event of Castleblayney being broken up, where would you like to go?—There is no fear of that.

8113. CHAIRMAN.—If that terrible catastrophe were to happen what would be your choice?—I would build a new one at Ballybay and knock the whole four; that place is central.

8114. Mr. James J. Murnaghan.—Which would you go to, Monaghan or Carrickmacross?—I would go to neither, and the cost of bringing the poor there would be more than their support here, not to talk of what misfortune might happen there on the way.

8115. CHAIRMAN.—But they would be well taken care of when they got there if they got over the road safely?—I am sure they would at Monaghan, but Carrickmacross is on the verge of Mouth; it is out of the question altogether; it is like Clonsilla.

Mr. James J. Murnaghan.—I appear for the Carrickmacross Board of Guardians, and as you have heard the evidence that has been given in the county already you will have plainly before you the questions that I will have to touch upon. The Carrickmacross Board of Guardians are of the same opinion as the County Council, that fewer workhouses would be sufficient for the county. They are also in favour of leaving apart from the County Monaghan those portions of other counties which are at present included in the county partially in this county. They think that if these portions were cut off and formed for Poor Law purposes part of the county in which they are situated the county could be divided into two portions—one north and one south—and they think one workhouse would be necessary for each portion. From the south of the County Monaghan is Monaghan town would be so far—almost thirty miles—they think it would not be at all meet the wants of the poor in the neighbourhood. They are in favour of having one workhouse situated in South Monaghan, and on the question of where that should be they don't wish to express any opinion. But they think that one workhouse being situated in North Monaghan, Carrickmacross is the natural and suitable position for any workhouse in South Monaghan. If you look at the map you will find that a division of the county made merely for the purpose of dividing the county into two parts—north and south—would cut across Ballybay, and on the same line is Castleblayney. Carrickmacross is situated ten or eleven miles south of Castleblayney, and the county extends for a distance in every direction. The proposed new line of railway from Kingcourt through Carrickmacross to Castleblayney would make effective communication for all parts of South Monaghan to bring them to Carrickmacross. You will have evidence before you that the workhouse in Carrickmacross is quite a model one. I will not touch upon it now, because we will have it all in evidence, but the Carrickmacross Board of Guardians pride themselves that their workhouse is certainly the best in the county, and one of the very first in Ireland; they have a trained nurse and every accommodation necessary, and the workhouse is under the charge of the State. There has never been any complaint that the Guardians have not carried out the duties which were cast upon them. They have given outdoor relief, not extravagantly, but they have taken into due consideration the necessities of people who are suddenly left destitute to go into the workhouse; they have taken that into account, and have given them temporary assistance. They have also boarded out their children, and I think you will find that the experiment has been a great success. A workhouse to serve the southern portion of the County Monaghan should be somewhere near the centre of the southern portion of the county, and if there are to be two workhouses in the County Monaghan it is quite plain that Castleblayney is just on the verge of the two divisions. You will hear further of the advantage of Carrickmacross Workhouse and effective administration, and I need not go into that, but I think you will say that one workhouse would not satisfy the wants of the southern portion of the County Monaghan, the distance is so great to any other place that could be proposed; it would involve so much delay in carrying patients, and it would be at such a distance from persons who might suddenly require to get its assistance that it would be out of the question. But Castleblayney Union comprises a large portion of the County Antrim; we must have some unit; a person might say that the whole county should be involved in the one system and let the whole county pay per rate. The natural division is the county, the county interests, as a whole, go together, the interests of the County Council and the interests of the people of the county go together, and I think when you find in the County Monaghan that the county could be divided so naturally and the parties could be served so well by an institution at Carrickmacross I think it would be the most suitable place for the southern part of the county, and the fact that the Carrickmacross Board of Guardians have maintained such an efficient administration and have so carefully looked after the wants of the poor should be recognised, and I have no doubt that they would be capable of accommodating and carefully looking after any more inmates that may be sent to them.

Nov. 23, 1900.

Mr. Peter Connolly.

Dr. COLLIER examined.

8116. Mr. James J. Murnaghan.—You have known the Carrickmacross Workhouse for a long time?—I have known it for over twenty years, and I have been Medical Officer there for over thirteen.

8117. You know how the workhouse is administered?—I do.

8118. And would you say it is as fine a workhouse as could be?—I don't think it could be better; it is excellent in every way.

8119. The Guardians have taken a great deal of trouble in making the administration as efficient as possible?—The Guardians take the deepest interest in the well-working of the house and the well-caring of the inmates, and any reasonable suggestion that is directed to them they never fail to grant it.

8120. You have a good nursing staff and a trained nurse?—Very good, and a trained nurse.

8121. You have a good water supply?—There is good water in the house—born a pump.

8122. The place is in charge of the nurse?—Yes; there are six nurses there.

8123. And it is carefully looked after?—Most carefully.

8124. The Guardians have gone to some expense in providing apartments for the nurse?—They have gone to very considerable expense to provide suitable apartments for the nurse and also for the trained nurses.

8125. Do you know about the amount?—Really I could not say.

8126. Is fact the institution is a model one?—Yes, I would say so if I might.

8117. And no complaint has ever been made?—I never heard any complaint since I have been connected with it.

Dr. Collier.

8118. You know the number in the infirmary?—The average number for ten years would be about thirty-eight.

8119. What would you say of the diet?—The diet is excellent; the inmates are quite satisfied with it; indeed they are delighted.

8120. And the infirmary is sufficient for the requirements of the Carrickmacross district?—Oh, yes, and much more if we wanted it; we have any amount of space there.

8121. And the institution was built originally to accommodate a large number?—I believe up to 2,000; I am not quite sure.

8122. If the Union of Carrickmacross were enlarged by the dissolution of Castleblayney what means would you suggest for the proper care of the sick poor, having regard to the county infirmary being so distant? It is rather a long distance away?—My view is that there should be an infirmary where all unions are at present; there should be some place where acute cases and accident cases could be taken in and not have to undergo the torture and risk of going long journeys to places where they could be treated.

8123. In case Castleblayney was dissolved; would you be in favour of utilizing it for the purpose of housing and caring for harmless lunatics or cases of that kind?—Yes; it is my idea that a lot of space that is going for nothing at present in the workhouse could be utilized for a purpose such as you mention.

Nov. 29, 1905.

Dr. Callan.

8134. Castleblayney would be convenient to Monaghan?—Yes, of course.

8135. You think epileptic lunatics, and harmless lunatics especially, should not be kept in workhouses?—Decidedly lunatics should not be kept in workhouses, or epileptics either, in my opinion.

8136. You have had some cases in the fever hospital?—I have nothing to do with the fever hospital.

8137. Do you think that two unions would be necessary for the county; that one union would be scarcely sufficient?—It would be wholly insufficient.

8138. The proper care of the poor and sick would require two?—Certainly.

8139. You think Carrickmacross is conveniently situated?—I do.

8140. Mr. Lowry.—You could not give us any idea of how much money has been spent on Carrick Workhouse for repairs?—I could not indeed; I know a lot of money has been spent altogether.

8141. Could you tell us what repairs were effected?—A whole suite of apartments were prepared for the same and apartments were prepared for the trained nurse.

8142. Do you mean by the word "prepared" that brand new buildings were erected?—No; existing buildings were altered.

8143. Do you mean that unoccupied portions of the three buildings were converted into apartments for the same?—By structural changes the existing buildings were made to suit the requirements of these ladies.

8144. Is Carrick Workhouse as large as Castleblayney?—I cannot say.

8145. You have no drainage system in Carrickmacross?—We have a drainage system to be sure.

8146. Is it a pipe drainage system?—It is for a great portion.

8147. But not throughout?—Not throughout.

8148. Does not the workhouse of Carrickmacross lie very much beneath the level of the town?—It is below the town; I would not say very much below; it cannot, because the sewage flows from the workhouse through the back of the town.

8149. Supposing you were standing in the Main-street of Carrickmacross, driving into it, can you not see the workhouse down below?—I don't think so; you might see it, but I think, on account of the buildings, you could not.

8150. Is it not an incontrovertible fact that the site on which the workhouse stands is below the level of the Main-street?—It is undoubtedly lower.

8151. You have no thorough drainage system of the workhouse at Carrick?—We have. I could not call it thorough; there is some drainage going directly into a cistern and tanks we have there and some drainage going into the old river.

8152. Are not these old stone drains, mason's work?—Some of them are and some of them are pipes.

8153. You say you have no water supply?—We have a water supply within the house.

8154. From pumps?—Yes; when I was asked about the water supply I thought Mr. Murraghan meant the water supply of the town, which passes by the workhouse.

8155. And it has not been utilized by the business-like Board of Guardians of Carrickmacross?—Up to the present it has not.

8156. Have you any hot water in the house?—We can have a hot bath, but we have not a high pressure system; that is what I mean.

8157. Have you any hot and cold water baths in the proper sense of the term?—We have not.

8158. Have you taken the trouble of paying a visit to our infirmary?—No.

8159. I wish you did; it would get your eyes open?—I have no notion of it, I may tell you.

8160. How do you say the workhouse or infirmary in Carrick is a model one?—I believe it is a model for good management.

8161. Why do you say it is a model, when it has rotten drains?—I never used the word "rotten."

8162. I do. I say mason-work drains are not good?—I would not say anything of the kind.

8163. I thought it was an accepted sanitary principle that mason-work drains are bad?—There are different views on sanitary matters.

8164. It is open to me to ask you these questions?—Decidedly, but I don't want you to misrepresent me; I did not use the word "rotten."

8165. Don't misunderstand me or misapprehend me; I want to make as good a case for our side as I can, and I cannot do that without putting down your side.

You could not regard a large establishment such as Carrickmacross Workhouse as efficient if it was not properly drained?—It would be more desirable if it would be better drained.

8166. And you would not regard it as a model?—I don't properly framed?—I don't think it is a very model workhouse.

8167. It would be better if there was a good system of drainage?—I grant you that.

8168. And if there was a proper water supply?—Yes.

8169. And hot and cold water baths?—Yes, but if these things could be easily done.

8170. Have you a properly-equipped consumptive ward?—We have two of them.

8171. Is it old or new?—Bed apartments used by the purpose.

8172. Do they stand apart from the rest of the buildings?—They do; the patients are isolated.

8173. What way are you equipped with regard to waterclosets; have you any such thing in the place?—We have privies.

8174. You have not waterclosets in the place; is the infirmary?—No.

8175. You haven't them in the fever hospital?—I don't know anything about the fever hospital; it is outside my jurisdiction; it has a different staff and a different medical officer.

8176. But in any part of the workhouse there are no such things as waterclosets?—No.

8177. What kind of bedding have you in these consumptive wards?—Iron bedsteads, women's mattresses and hair mattresses, and feather pillows.

8178. How many women wear mattresses have you in the consumptive ward?—We have no consumptive at present but we have room for eight or ten.

8179. Have you eight or ten wear mattresses in the consumptive ward?—Yes.

8180. I suppose, of course, that this beautiful workhouse has good ambulances as well?—It has only one.

8181. What kind of an affair is it?—One-horse, with two wheels.

8182. Is it not the case that some patients are brought in in asses' carts?—People do that themselves; they are never brought in by my authority or the authority of the Guardians, but they do come in.

8183. And that is due altogether to defective ambulances?—No; it is due to the prejudice of the people.

8184. What sort of a two-wheeled conveyance is it?—It is very comfortable.

8185. Do you use that for the fever patients and for the ordinary patients?—Indeed we do not; there is an ambulance for the workhouse and an ambulance for the fever hospital.

8186. And the ambulance for the workhouse is only an ordinary ramshackle two-wheeled affair?—No such thing; it is a perfect affair.

8187. Have they given you a nice surgery?—I have a very nice surgery.

8188. Are there any of the buildings themselves?—Yes, part of the infirm ward and part of the infirmary.

8189. Did you see the building we have attached to this workhouse?—No; I don't know anything at all about that.

8190. How many trained nurses have you?—One.

8191. Are you aware we have two or three here to-day?—No, I heard, to-day, you had one.

8192. Have you any such thing as wardmaid?—We have.

8193. Do you make the paupers do the work of the wardmaid?—The paupers do nothing in connection with the patients, but the cleaning up of the establishment and scrubbing the place.

8194. CHAIRMAN.—There is no objection to paper inmates scrubbing?—None whatever.

8195. Mr. Lowry.—You think Carrickmacross is a more central place for a workhouse than Castleblayney for South Monaghan?—I don't think I said that exactly; I don't think I was asked.

8196. Which do you think is most central?—I think Carrickmacross is absolutely essential for the treatment of its own patients.

8197. That is for a hospital; but then if you have a workhouse in full working order, and supposing you had to wipe out one of these establishments at a workhouse, in which place would you think the workhouse should be placed?—I would not be disposed to wipe out Carrickmacross.

8198. Don't you think Castleblayney would be a more convenient place to put it?—I really have not given that attention; I cannot say.

Mr. B. O'BORKE examined.

Nov. 25, 1903.
Mr. B.
O'BORKE.

3139. Mr. James A. Murroughan.—You are Chairman of the Carrickmacross Board of Guardians?—Yes.

3140. You have taken a general interest in poor-house work?—I have.

3141. What is your opinion about the amalgamation of unions?—I would think that two unions in the County Monaghan would be sufficient.

3142. Where would you place those unions?—I would place one in the north and one in the south.

3143. In the south where do you think would be the most suitable place?—I believe Carrickmacross would be the most suitable.

3144. Do you know the general management of the Carrickmacross Workhouse?—I know it fairly well.

3145. Do you know about the expenses you want to in erecting apartments?—We want to considerable expense in regard to the nurse, £400 or £500, and about £20 in equipping apartments for the night nurse.

3146. The workhouse is in charge of the nurse?—The union is in charge of the nurse, and there is a sick master, and school teacher, and nurse in the hospital as nurses.

3147. Would one workhouse being about any economy?—I don't believe it would; in a short time it might become like the asylum, overcrowded; it would be necessary, in a short time, to have two.

3148. Would it be more efficient?—You could make a large workhouse as efficient as a small one, but I believe it would be very awkward to have only one to do the county.

3149. You know Castleblayney Union; there is a large portion in the County Armagh?—There is a large portion in the County Armagh.

3150. And your board is of opinion that it should go to Armagh?—I would leave each portion to itself; that portion might go to Newry Union.

3151. CHAIRMAN.—That would not be its own county?—Must be; Newry Workhouse is in Armagh.

3152. Its workhouse is in Armagh, but Newry is a very large union?—It is.

3153. Mr. Lacey.—If you send Crossmaglen to Armagh it would be a greater hardship than sending Carrickmacross to Monaghan?—I would send Crossmaglen to Newry.

3154. Newry Union is most in doubt?—The workhouse is in the County Armagh; of course, the town of Newry is in a very different union.

3155. Mr. James A. Murroughan.—They say Castleblayney is very central; would it suit the people of Carrickmacross and the people beyond?—It is a good deal out of the way.

3156. Would it involve hardship on the people?—I believe Carrickmacross is much more suitable for the south union. Our union goes about six miles beyond Carrickmacross.

3157. And portion of Castleblayney Union lies in the direction of Monaghan?—Yes.

3158. How far is it from Castleblayney to Monaghan?—About ten miles.

3159. So Monaghan Union comes down to within five or six miles of Castleblayney?—I would think about less than five miles.

3160. CHAIRMAN.—This question of distances and going into measurements is quite useless; we could not bar them in our minds; we will go into them ourselves afterwards; I think it is not necessary to spend much energy on distances. We will take the centre of population and look into it in that way.

3161. Mr. James A. Murroughan.—Would you be in favour of the amalgamation of workhouses or amalgamation of unions?—I would be in favour of having few workhouses undoubtedly, but it makes very little difference whether unions are amalgamated or not. In our case our standard rate is more than that in Castleblayney; therefore, if both were amalgamated we would lose a 10s; so I should think we should get the credit of the old standard rate in Carrickmacross if the unions were amalgamated.

3162. The Agricultural Grant?—That is in connection with the rural districts; I don't think they should be amalgamated; they should remain as they are. We would stand to lose also, as our Agricultural Grant is more than Castleblayney.

3163. You have heard it stated that the average number in your hospital was thirty-eight?—That is the average for the last ten years.

3164. What about your outdoor relief?—We have about 100 on outdoor relief.

3165. How does that number compare; has it decreased or gone up or remained stationary?—It is a slight decrease; it was 105 ten years ago; we spend about the same; we are fairly liberal with applicants; we give any we consider destitute 1s. 6d. a week; there are exceptional cases that we give 2s. 6d. and 3s.

3166. Mr. Bussan.—What do you think 1s. 6d. would do for any person?—It prevents them coming into the house; they are people living out in the country and have few.

3167. Would they come in if you did not give them 1s. 6d.?—Most likely they would.

3168. Have you known cases in which they have come in?—There are cases of people getting relief, who, when they become old, come into the house; if we ceased giving 1s. 6d. they would come in far sooner.

3169. Mr. James A. Murroughan.—You have always had about 100 on outdoor relief?—Yes.

3170. You have not had a sudden rise lately?—No.

3171. What is your opinion about tramps using the workhouse?—I think we should have more power to deal with them; they can come in and go out as they like. We often made an attempt to prosecute them, but we found it was too costly.

3172. CHAIRMAN.—In England they can keep them longer in the workhouse; do you think that is a good plan?—We tried to keep them until later in the day, and it had no effect. If the law was simplified, so that the Master could prosecute the tramps. At the present time we have to employ a solicitor, and get evidence from the neighbouring unions to prove that they were going from workhouse to workhouse, which is very expensive, and we thought it better to leave things as they are. I know there are two tramps at present in our union every week, and I believe they are continually going backwards and forwards from Castleblayney to Carrick. Carrick leaves it to Castleblayney to prosecute and Castleblayney leaves it to Carrick; every week the names are familiar to me on the books.

3173. They don't even change their names?—No; of course there are a number of genuine tramps that it would be a pity to deprive of the shelter of the house. The relieving officer tells me that the encous they have is that they could not get lodgings in the town. Where there would be a genuine case, and the relieving officer would charge them 4d. or 6d. for the night, it would ease the matter.

3174. Making them pay guests?—Yes; the same as former coming in; a number of them would pay, but the other people, the professional tramps, I would prosecute or do something else with them.

3175. Mr. James A. Murroughan.—I think you are in favour of the reduction of the number of Guardians?—If Castleblayney was done away with it might be a hardship bringing the Guardians up there; I think there might be meetings once a month, or, assuming that we were coming down here, the rates might be changed considerably to have the Guardians meet only once a month and appoint a visiting committee with a good deal more power and have few Guardians; that each division should be represented only by one instead of two; if Carrickmacross and Castleblayney were amalgamated you would have 100 Guardians.

3176. You have a number of returned paupers from Scotland in your union?—Yes; every month there are one or two turn up; we consider it a great hardship; it is nearly all from Scotland they come.

3177. Mr. MURROUGHAN.—Notwithstanding Mr. Daly's Act?—Notwithstanding Mr. Daly's Act; it only binds them when they are five years in one place.

3178. No; it is five years in the country and one year in a particular union?—In any case they make a declaration, and the Scotch authorities send them down to us; we tried to appeal against it, but on looking into it found we had no ground; we have to take them; we have a great number of them.

3179. Mr. Lacey.—You say two tramps turn up every week?—I think I would be safe in saying every week.

3180. That is a very extraordinary state of affairs; you don't think that is properly carrying out the Poor Law system. What kind of supervision do you subject the relieving officer to that allows that?—We have gone into the thing.

Yes; we are the pioneers of that movement. We have endeavored to send out the pauper children to thrifty, industrious people, and at the last return we had thirty-five boarded-out children, and I am pleased to state that the children that we have boarded out, as a rule, merge in with the people; they become useful members of society; they are boarded out with small tradesmen or farmers, who send them upon messages; they go to school, and they wear clothes like the country children wear, and the result is they grow up useful, industrious members of society. I have around myself small farmers that I recommended to take out these children, and it is simply wonderful how happy they are and how industrious they are, and if I wanted a servant to-morrow I could not take better than these children turn out. That is altogether due to the attention the Curricumacross Guardians have paid to these poor children. In sending them out to nurse we rescue them from misery.

2257. Have you any views on outdoor relief?—The rule in Curricumacross is that we give outdoor relief in a great many instances to keep them from coming in; we find that by giving a couple of shillings to a person we prevent the house being broken up; it may seem a small sum, but at the same time, when properly expended by the poor people, they can take more out of a couple of shillings in their own way of expending it than, say, a relieving officer would do, because he would have to go strictly according to the House laid down by the medical officer; and the person who gets outdoor relief can make the money stretch much further than if administered in kind.

2258. CHAIRMAN.—Do they get it in cash or by orders on shops?—We give it in cash.

2259. Mr. MURKIN.—It seems that the outdoor relief has not increased in recent years with you, as it has in nearly every union where it exists?—We don't refuse anyone, but we are economical in the way of giving an amount.

2260. It is rather remarkable that whereas it is about the same as it was ten years ago in Curricumacross, in the union in which we are at present it has increased very largely; could you give any explanation for that?—I could not; all I can say is we rarely refuse a case, but we don't give too much. If there is a case that we find is very bad we often give 3s. or 4s., or 5s., but it is not general. We make our relieving officer go round, inspect the applicants, and bring in his report as to the state they are in. Another thing that has brought down the outdoor relief is the purchase out of the Poor estate, which took place about twelve or thirteen years ago. I believe it has largely decreased the amount of outdoor relief in the Curricumacross Union. I only refer to it as a matter for consideration, because it does seem to me in recent years, where outdoor relief prevails, it has grown very largely.

2261. What I wanted to find out from you is how it is that you are able to so to preserve the outdoor relief that you don't follow the example of those about you?—We are very economical; we don't refuse any one; if we find any one wants relief we give them 3s. or 4s. this week, and we say to the relieving officer—"Go and make enquiries, and report to the board next meeting." Then to report whether there is fuel about the house, whether there is milk, whether they have the means of getting anything, and if we find there is a necessity for aid we continue it. Everything connected with the union has come down since the Local Government Act passed and since the people got the management of it. Our rates and the cost of everything have been reduced.

Mr. Leary.—The rates are the worst in the whole county about Carrick.

2262. Mr. James A. MURKIN.—Did you ever hear it suggested that the other unions were too close in the matter of outdoor relief? In Monaghan I think they have only one relieving officer?—I am not going to interfere with Monaghan or Clontarf.

2263. About the matter of tramps, do you agree with Mr. O'Brien?—I do. Now, if you want to prosecute a tramp it is hard to show that that man is a habitual tramp, and it is necessary for you to call officials from other unions to show that that man is a habitual tramp; that law should be modified in such a way that if the Master thinks he is a man that takes advantage of the workhouse and gets a night's lodging, power should be given to the Guardians to prosecute that man without going to extraordinary expense and without taking officials from these other workhouses.

2264. CHAIRMAN.—What would you make sufficient evidence?—I would leave it optional with the Guardians if they thought well to prosecute any man taking shelter in the workhouse.

2265. What do you think ought to be the evidence; there is where the difficulty comes in?—Say a tramp will come to Curricumacross on a Tuesday; he goes out, and if he hears there is going to be a fair on Thursday he goes to Castleblayney or some of the villages round, and he finds himself on Wednesday night or Thursday back again in Curricumacross; that should be sufficient for a prosecution; we have often ordered prosecutions, but the Clerk of the Petty Sessions says it is not sufficient.

2267. CHAIRMAN.—That is the arrangement in a great many workhouses, to make them break a certain quantity of stones before breakfast?—I am informed that as long as they keep working and don't disobey the officers they cannot be prosecuted.

CHAIRMAN.—But the hour of breakfast depends on the time they are broken.

2268. Mr. James A. MURKIN.—What about additional accommodation for lunatics?—I think there should be a workhouse for that purpose; it would be a great relief to have epileptics and harmless lunatics in one central place.

2269. Do you think Castleblayney would be suitable?—According to Mr. Leary, Castleblayney is suitable for anything.

2270. Your workhouse is in charge of the nurse?—It is in charge of nurse, and we have expended something like £400 on buildings for the nurses; we have them as nurses in the hospital and as school teacher, and I attribute the splendid management of that house largely to the nurse, and also the sanitation and comfort it is to the poor. It would be a terrible crime to take the nurses that are in Curricumacross Workhouse, and have had the ministrations of these good sisters for a number of years, and send them to a workhouse that has not got them.

2271. This is the only one in the county?—The only one; we try to treat the poor well.

2272. As regards amalgamation of unions as distinct from amalgamation of workhouses, what would be your view?—That would be a matter of detail.

2273. Mr. Leary.—Don't you know that we are going to have the nurse in Castleblayney?—A prayer before death is worth two afterwards; you may make any promise now, but I never like a death-bed repentance, and your offer now is not good enough. There was a man once possessed by a ghost, and when he got inside the door he said to the ghost: "You are late." I am afraid you are late.

2274. You spent £400 for quarters for the nurse?—Yes.

2275. That is a boast of yours?—It is a fact.

2276. Would you have spent a single farthing as all in Carrick on repairs if the nurse had not come to it?—Oh, yes.

2277. Can you point to any single item of expenditure in Curricumacross but that?—I suppose you mean you have spent a lot of money in Castleblayney.

2278. We have spent £1,500?—I think you are very foolish, considering your duty to the outpatients, if the workhouse is closed.

2279. At all events you have not spent one single item of money except on quarters for the nurse; that you really had to do?—We have kept up our workhouse.

2280. Can you point to a single item of expenditure in repairing the drainage of the place?—Our drainage is excellent.

2281. Old rotten mason-work! Have you introduced ordinary modern lighting? Can you point to a single item expended to improve the house in any way except to provide some premises for the nurse?—We have, as much as possible, carried out all the regulations of the Local Government Board, and what more could we do?

2282. Did not Mr. Agnew tell you you should carry out an improved system of drainage?—He recommended it.

Nov 25, 1903

Mr James
Daly.

Nov. 15, 1903.

Mr. James
Daly.

8293. Do you think the Guardians of the Castleblayney Union have done a foolish thing because they have provided a place that unfortunate paupers can live in; do you think it is a good thing to have unfortunate paupers living in a poisoned atmosphere where gases are coming from defective sewers?—That is only a speech.

8294. It is not; it is a question!—I am after explaining to you that our sewerage system is perfect.

8295. Dr. Cullen said it was not!—He did not say anything of the sort.

8296. He says they are only mason-work drains!—He said there were some pipe-drains and some mason-work.

8297. If your drainage was perfect what is the reason Mr. Agnew recommended an improvement?—A Local Government Inspector must recommend something; he would not be wanted if he did not send in some reports.

8298. Did he ever ask you to supply an ambulance?—Yes; we have a splendid one, with a mattress.

8299. On two wheels?—On two wheels.

8300. Better than ours?—I did not see yours.

CHAIRMAN.—It is worth seeing; it is a beautiful ambulance.

Witness.—Is that the one you had the row about the payment of?

8301. Mr. Lowery.—No; that is not the one. I can tell you it would make you laugh on the other side of your face if you compared it with the Carrick one. Here you spent anything on the consumptive ward!—The doctor said so; I am satisfied with his opinion on that point.

8302. Did you spend anything on the infirmary?—Yes; it is comfortable—wire-woven mattresses, iron bedsteads; in fact everything we are asked to get.

8303. Are the infirm poor in Carrick Workhouse kept in cells?—No; we have them removed; they are in a splendid ward at the present moment.

8304. How long since?—Within the last twelve months.

8305. What sort of cells were they kept in?

CHAIRMAN.—We know the kind of cells; they are in every workhouse, and they are generally diseased now.

8306. Mr. Lowery.—You think the workhouse in Carrick is absolutely essential?—I think it is essential. I have given reasons. If you cut the county across at Castleblayney, let Arraugh keep its portion and Monaghan keep its portion, and draw the line across at Castleblayney, Carrickmacross cannot be done without. That settles the point!

8307. What kind of mattresses have you?—Hair.

8308. They are not sleeping on wire-woven mattresses!—Wire-woven, and hair mattresses over that.

8309. Do you see that map; you don't mean in my Carrickmacross is more central than Castleblayney?—Undoubtedly; the map will prove my case. You think people from Kingscourt should come seventeen miles to Castleblayney!

8310. Mr. Muldoon.—You would not seriously propose, in case one union was recommended for the county, to place it at Clones?—No; I am talking of two unions.

8311. The unexpected sometimes happens, and is the event of only one union being recommended for the County Monaghan, you would not seriously propose to place that one at Clones?—I won't interfere between Clones and Monaghan; they are each friends in other respects, I will let them fight it out.

8312. Dr. Rogers.—It has been mentioned here that there is to be a railway from Carrickmacross to Kesh?—The Bill was passed last session, and I would not be surprised but that at the next meeting of the shareholders of the Midland Great Western Railway Company they will put a scheme forward to get the owners of the shareholders for making the line; they got the Bill, and I think the line must be made within two years.

8313. Is it proposed it should join the Great Northern Railway?—Yes; I am informed it will join at Castleblayney.

Mr. Farnon.—They have running powers over the Great Northern Railway.

8314. Mr. Lowery.—Admitting one workhouse would be enough for this county, where do you think it ought to be placed?—I could not give an opinion.

8315. Suppose you were forced into that position that there was to be only one workhouse in Monaghan, where do you say it ought to be?—I decline to give an opinion; I think one workhouse would not be feasible, and that is the reason I won't answer the question. I am not satisfied; I think two workhouses would be necessary for the county, and I am so economical as any one; if I did not think there would be economy I would rather not see the workhouses closed. I think there should be a fever hospital and a hospital to treat emergency cases in any event. Therefore, I think it would not be right that the poor should have to go to any particular centre.

8316. Don't you think it would be out of the question altogether to put it at Monaghan?—I can't answer; I don't approve of it, and what I don't approve of I won't answer.

8317. Would you approve if it was put in Carrick?—I won't answer.

Dr. McCann examined.

Dr. McCann.

8318. CHAIRMAN. Will you kindly explain how the fever hospital stands?—It is one of the old hospital fever hospitals, and prior to the passing of the Local Government Act it was maintained by private subscriptions and contributions from the grand jury. The contribution from the grand jury corresponded to double the amount of the private subscriptions. After the passing of the Local Government Act the private subscriptions dwindled away altogether, and we have now no private subscriptions at all; what we get is £294, about twice the amount of the subscriptions in the standard year.

8319. Have you enough to work the hospital?—No.

8320. Do you get anything from the union for fever patients treated in the hospital?—Yes, in a day.

8321. Do the Guardians pay for every case that comes from the union?—Practically every case; we have accommodation for about thirty-two cases.

8322. If the hospital could be put on a better financial basis there are a great many things that might be done to improve it?—Oh, yes.

8323. It is not in proper condition for a modern hospital?—It is not.

8324. It would not take much to do it?—It would not. I have got the account book from 1875, and from the start the subscriptions have dwindled down. When it was started about 140 patients were treated in the year.

8325. You are not in as good a position as the hospitals at Clones and Monaghan?—I understand whatever they want they get from the County Council; we get nothing at all; we will have to close up. There is an objection to its being a union fever hospital; patients have an objection to go to it as it is a union hospital.

8326. Mr. James A. Monaghan.—You know the workhouse?—Yes; I occasionally do duty in the workhouse.

8327. About these duties; was there ever a case of illness or any complaint about duties?—I have been doing duty in the workhouse for five or six years, and I never knew a case of illness arising from defective drains.

8328. CHAIRMAN.—No case of typhoid?—Not a case ever arose in the workhouse.

8329. When was the hospital built?—In 1862, by private subscriptions, and handed over to the committee.

8330. Who is in charge of it at present?—At the time of the passing of the Local Government Act these hospitals were in charge of a number of the old committee. The old committee was elected from the county subscribers; it was put in charge of a number of them and a number from the County Council—40% of each. We have lost all our guinea subscribers, and we have only three or four practically to attend meetings.

8331. Do they attend meetings?—They do.

8332. How often have you meetings?—We are supposed to have them every quarter.

8333. When had you a meeting last?—Last month.

8334. To bewail your insolvent condition?—Yes.

8335. Dr. Rogers.—Have you been in arrears with regard to the salary of your officials?—Yes.

8325. CHAIRMAN.—You have not got your own?—I have got some, and the horse is paid up to the last month; we owe for some provisions; if we had a great amount we would be all right.

8327. Dr. BIGGS.—Your hospital would require to be put in order. There are no baths or water supply?—No; but the water passes the door.

8328. Do you take cases merely from the union or outside?—The union always.

8329. From the nearest portion of the Castleblagny Union, would you take them?—We would take them from any place; we have very few cases of fever now; since the introduction of water into Carrickmacross we have no typhoid in the town; before that we had a great many cases.

8340. You think they would go faster into the hospital than into the other hospital?—They always do; we were threatened with an epidemic of scarlatina; we got the cases into hospital and it stopped immediately, although it was rampant in the County Louth, five or six miles away.

Mr. James A. McSwiggan.—We did not think it necessary to bring more witnesses from Carrickmacross.

CHAIRMAN.—I think you have brought very effective testimony.

Dr. T. H. MOOREHEAD EXAMINED.

You wanted my evidence as to the sanatorium in Cootehill.

8341. CHAIRMAN.—It is a sanatorium on most modern lines for treatment of cases of phthisis?—Pulmonary tuberculosis, as far as I could make it. It was opened the 1st of November, 1901; since then twenty-one cases of pulmonary tuberculosis were admitted—ten males and eleven females. Four of these were in the third stage when admitted, and all have since died outside—they went home. Eleven were discharged with the disease arrested, and of these seven have entirely recovered, having no physical signs, and are following their usual occupations; six remain under treatment, in three of whom the disease is arrested.

8342. Considering the general statistics in sanatoria elsewhere do you consider that the results with you are very satisfactory?—I think they are very satisfactory; of course you will understand that patients are sometimes sent in who are not suffering from tuberculosis, but those are all cases in which I have verified the diagnosis by bacteriological examination. Unless medical officers are capable of carrying out bacteriological examinations themselves they have no means of getting it done unless they pay for it. I think a bacteriologist is just as necessary an officer of the union as an analyst, because there are occasionally cases of diphtheria occurring.

8343. Have you ever asked any public department to examine bacteria for you—the Local Government Board?—No, I never asked them. Then with regard to this general question dealing with tuberculosis, I stated in my evidence before that I thought the sanatorium should be local—certainly at first until the people get accustomed to it—Probably afterwards larger institutions might be set up over the country.

8344. What was the out you had to go to to establish that sanatorium at Cootehill?—None, whatever.

8345. Except those shelters?—That was by private subscription.

8346. What would be the cost of those about?—£13 a piece.

8347. That includes couches and everything?—The patients are out in them to-day.

8348. They are on a pivot and swing round so that they can be exposed to the sunlight or sheltered from the wind as desirable?—Yes.

8349. And each holds two patients?—Three; I have only room for eight patients in the sanatorium.

8350. Could you take in far more if you had space; are there people to come?—Oh, yes.

8351. Is there competition for admission?—We have enough for the union, but there are other places outside the union, that would want to come there.

8352. Do you think it would be a good purpose to devote a closed workhouse to it?—I don't think it would be suitable. If I erected a new one I would erect a wooden structure, because by the time the wooden structure had been worn out, I would have stamped out consumption, practically, as fever has been stamped out. But the main point appears to be to get the patients in and teach them, and when they have learned their lesson you can send them home.

8353. Except as regards open air. Will they ever be able to get the same open air treatment at home?—Two of my patients are at present, to my knowledge, sleeping in open sheds at home.

8354. Virtually byres?—One has put up a shed with a zinc roof; another has an open shed.

8355. That is, they have the roof over these three side walls, open in front?—Yes.

8356. Dr. BIGGS.—Do you follow up the patients that are discharged and keep in touch with them?—When patients go out they take with them a thermometer; they have learned the use of a sphygmograph and temperature charts, and I require them to send in their temperature charts every three weeks for examination, and if I think they are relapsing I get them back again, but I have had only one relapsed case.

8357. They are still under your treatment?—Still under my observation; practically the treatment is all; plenty of food and fresh air.

8358. How would you suggest to other unions that they should deal with consumption?—There seems to be no difficulty in the world—at the workhouses. There is another point that I want to call your attention to, that is notification. Until pulmonary tuberculosis is considered a zymotic disease, and notified compulsorily, and the house disinfected, I don't see how any effectual attempt is to be made to stamp it out. Of course the pulmonary form is only a very small portion. Consumption is saturated with tuberculosis and one never came here, but the doctor seems to have any number of cases of tubercular disease from Consumption.

8359. You think that by the stamping out of pulmonary tuberculosis one might hope to see much less of surgical tuberculosis?—If tuberculosis were stamped out ten beds would be sufficient for my union.

8360. What I meant was that the measures taken against pulmonary tuberculosis would also stamp out the surgical disease?—It is the spiritus of the pulmonary patient that produces the disease. There was another matter I wanted to suggest, that is that some of your inspectors should draw out instructions for medical officers showing the simplicity with which they can deal with these cases. I don't think they would be disinclined to adopt measures if they saw how easily they can be carried out; the tuberculous patients give me less trouble than any other.

8361. CHAIRMAN.—It is the only workhouse in Ireland so far that has adopted any active treatment as far as I am aware; we were very anxious to have an explanation from you; was there anything else?—There are the matters that I wish to bring before you: the sanitation—that is the notification of these pulmonary cases, the provision of disinfection for the houses—that is a matter I see to myself. I have the house disinfected with potato sprays and formaline; I always get the people to do that as soon as a pulmonary case is removed. The dispensary medical officer certainly should have the means of having the sputum of patients examined in an early stage, because that is the time you can deal with it successfully.

8362. Dr. BIGGS.—You said that you thought that the site of your building was suitable for the union, or enough?—Yes, I think eight beds would provide accommodation for the number of tubercular cases in my union.

8363. You don't mean to say that pulmonary tuberculosis in the early stage is limited to eight cases or forty-eight cases?—No; but the cases are not all in at once.

Nov. 25, 1902.

Dr. H. Cast.

Dr. T. H. Moorehead.

Jan. 25, 1908.
Dr. T. E.
Moorhead.

8365. CHAIRMAN.—You don't object to having the lower wards occupied by fever patients?—No, and it is well known that pulmonary cases are very refractory to symptomatic disease.

8366. Dr. BROWN.—What charge do you make to cases coming in for treatment?—The average cost is 5s. 6d. or 6s.

8367. That does not cover the cost?—No; it does not cover the food even.

8368. CHAIRMAN.—Because they have to be fed extra well?—Perhaps you would like to know how they are fed. For breakfast they get eggs and bacon, fat bacon especially, toast and tea. At 10 a.m. they get a quart of milk which they are expected to drink; that is given to them hot and they are expected to consume that before dinner. At dinner they get generally mutton, sometimes beef, sometimes fish, potatoes and whatever vegetables we have, and then a pudding. The pudding is a most important thing in these cases; after they have eaten a good dinner they can get down a pudding.

8369. Milk pudding?—Yes; in the afternoon they have tea and bread and butter, and at night porridge and milk.

8370. They make a lot of weight on that?—They generally put up from 2 lb. to 3 lb. a week. I think, else, that is the ordinary sanatorium treatment.

8371. Mr. LIVERY.—Have you been through our workhouse?—I have.

8372. Have you been through the infirmary?—I have.

8373. You have some experience of a number of workhouses in the county. How do you think our infirmary would compare with the other workhouses?—The last time I saw it, it would not compare at all; I must say that there is a great change to-day. Within the last four or five months there have been great changes.

8374. Is it an efficient infirmary at present?—It is very nice.

8375. Would you call a workhouse that was drained with mason-work drains and had not a water supply an efficient workhouse?—An abomination; but we have no drainage in my workhouse; we have no drainage nor water.

The Sitting terminated.

SEVENTEENTH PUBLIC SITTING—THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 26TH, 1903. Dec. 30, 1903

At the Courthouse, Cavan.

Present:—Mr. MICKS, (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. COOT BODGER.

Mr. PATRICK M'MANUS examined.

3376. CHAIRMAN—You are the Chairman of the County Council of Cavan?—Yes.

3377. You are aware that there are three workhouses situated in the county?—Yes.

3378. And there are portions of other unions?—Yes—Enniskillen, Granard, Omeonia, and Cooteshill.

3379. Cooteshill Workhouse is in the county?—It is, but it has a connection with Monaghan.

3380. Have you any feeling in favour of or against amalgamating the existing number of workhouses, there being four in the county?—Well, sir, it is a matter I have given very little thought to; personally, I have not given sufficient thought to it to give a proper answer; I am, in fact, divided as to whether amalgamation on a wholesale scale would suit this county or not—that is to say that I believe it would be difficult to take a patient from the portion that is in the Enniskillen Union to this union.

3381. I was just going to explain that to you. If you found the result of amalgamation might be the closing of workhouses and the reduction of the staffs, while providing at convenient distant centres small hospitals where those who could not be moved easily could be treated, would you see very much objection to the amalgamation of unions if you could secure a very large saving in the rates?—I would go for a saving in the rates, but I am not convinced that there would be a great saving. If my memory is correct, I remember some years ago when the amalgamation of prisons took place, and I am not convinced that there was so much saving to the ratepayers as is asserted of that, and, failing that, I don't see—

3382. The prison had not a very large or expensive staff; you had a governor, who was not a very highly paid official, and a number of warders?—Yes; but those warders when they went out had pensions, and were nearly as expensive to the ratepayers as when they remained in office.

3383. A great many of these have dropped off?—A good many have.

3384. And the pension is a disappearing charge?—It is.

3385. Would your feeling be rather against amalgamation than in favour of it?—On the lines you have pointed out I would be in favour of amalgamation, but not on a wholesale scale.

3386. If cottage hospitals could be substituted for a workhouse, say, on the borders of the county, or here, or wherever found desirable?—I believe that it would be a very good thing to have amalgamation on a limited scale.

3387. For instance, wherever there is a workhouse now you might safely rely on having a hospital?—That is a portion that would be reserved for that purpose.

3388. Supposing that was done, say at Cooteshill, or any place where there was a workhouse; suppose an infirmary hospital was maintained to deal with really cases of sickness?—In that case I think the amalgamation would be of advantage.

3389. You have been connected with Poor Law administration?—No; never.

3390. Was there any question, in addition to those I have put to you, that occurred to you?—There is one point I have a very strong feeling on—that is the sweeps who go, from day to day, and from year to year, round the country; take the tallest-singer class, those who sell hoodies and other little things; they come in here the night before the fair, they go round the town, and spend what they get in drink, and then they go to the workhouse; then the next morning they may have a few pence left, and one portion of the family will be begging, the other will be selling hoodies and other little things of the kind, and the result is that they are either brought to the police barracks or go to the workhouse again. I think some means should and ought to be devised to do away with that class of person.

3391. Do you see a good deal of that in the local courts?—Not so much in the local courts as on the evening before the fair or on the morning of the fair; they don't, as a rule, be brought before the police court, because they are a class you cannot get anything from; the only thing you can do is dismiss them with a caution to leave town before a certain time. I think some means should be devised to punish that class of person. I don't want to convey that they are all of that class, for there are many industrious tradesmen out of work for a time amongst them.

3392. You know there are?—Yes; I know there are from time to time. I don't mean that class of person, but I mean people that I know for the last twenty-five or thirty years coming into the town, and I think they certainly don't contribute to the character of the unions.

3393. Or the welfare of the country?—Or the welfare of the country either.

3394. Have you any opinion about whether children ought to be allowed to remain in workhouses?—I think not; I would rather see them out from the workhouse altogether. I think if I was any way in authority in the matter I would be inclined to pay almost double to have these children brought up outside altogether.

3395. Are you aware that it costs perhaps less than half to have them brought up outside?—I am not aware what it costs, but if it cost double I would be inclined to have these children brought up outside the workhouse altogether as soon as they would be able to leave their mothers.

3396. The law as it exists does not allow Boards of Guardians to separate children from their parent or parents; if the mother of an illegitimate child was, as in some cases they are, not a desirable person to have charge of children, who remains in the workhouse and the children with her; would you be in favour of an amendment of the law which would give to the Board of Guardians discretion to board out such children?—Decidedly.

3397. As regards how to treat women of that class, at present as soon as a poor girl gets in the family way she goes a few months beforehand, as a rule, to the workhouse—as soon as she can no longer remain out with decency she goes to the workhouse—and remains there until her child is born, and for months afterwards, and, unfortunately, experience shows that she very often returns to the workhouse with other children; would you be in favour, instead of receiving these women into the workhouse, of sending them to a religious penitentiary?—I would.

3398. Where efforts could be made for their reclamation?—I would be strongly in favour of it.

3399. And, as a ratepayer and as a county official, you think it would be a prudent expenditure of the rates to pay about the same amount in the penitentiary as these women now cost in the workhouse?—I would be willing to pay more as a ratepayer to have them removed from all source of danger.

3400. Would not that be likely to make the workhouse a hospital?—It would virtually become a hospital, an aged and infirm refuge—which would make it less objectionable to decent people to be in?—I believe so.

Mr. Patrick M'Manus.

Nov. 26, 1902

Mr. Thomas
McGovern,

Mr. THOMAS MCGOVERN, M.P., examined.

8401. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the County Council?—Yes.

8402. And Parliamentary representative?—Of West Cavan; and I am also Deputy Vice-Chairman of Enniskillen Union.

8403. And you are a member of the Bawnboy Board of Guardians?—Yes.

8404. You have heard the questions that I was putting in a general way to the Chairman of your County Council?—Yes; but I did not catch the answers in some cases.

8405. One question that I was speaking to him about was whether some workhouses in the county might not, with advantage, be broken up?—Yes; I consider so; I have a good general knowledge of Fermanagh and Cavan. Can I go into Fermanagh?

8406. So far as it relates to Cavan?—I wanted to give evidence at Enniskillen, but now I would wish to make a general statement. I am in favour of amalgamating a number of workhouses; I think there are far too many workhouses at present in existence, considering the number of inmates in them, and the only thing is that in some cases, although the inmates are very few, owing to the position of the workhouse, it would not be may to do away or amalgamate it with a neighbouring union. I am in favour, generally, of amalgamation; I consider that Bawnboy Workhouse should be turned into an auxiliary lunatic asylum if possible, in order to save the ratespayers of the county much expenditure in building a new asylum, but what I object to is this, that the contribution to the auxiliary asylum is only 2s. per head for each inmate, contributed by the Government, whereas it is 4s. in the ordinary asylum. I think that is very hard upon an auxiliary asylum, and I think that the law should be changed. I don't see the difference in supporting a lunatic in an auxiliary asylum from supporting him in an ordinary asylum, and I think the Government should contribute as much as an auxiliary asylum per head as they contribute at present to the ordinary asylum.

8407. You think that the smaller rate of contribution is likely to prevent people from taking full advantage of the provisions for establishing an auxiliary asylum?—I am quite certain it is, because they look to the cost and what they would lose by transferring these persons from ordinary asylums into auxiliary. But in case Bawnboy could not be converted into an asylum or any useful purpose, it would be a great pity to let the house go to waste; the site is very good, and I would be in favour of extending the bounds of Bawnboy Union and taking in that portion of Lisnaskea to the west of Lough Erne, the barony of Knocknagilly—that is all in Lisnaskea except four townlands—part of Cavan Union, Ardara Electoral Division lies near Bawnboy, and there are some divisions in the County Leitrim in the neighbourhood of Ballinamore that could be easily annexed.

8409. I asked questions in that point of view at Enniskillen to try and find out whether the transport of the sick across the ferries was attended by any risk or discomfort or danger; they did seem to think it was, and they told me it was quite impossible to remove the sick from Derrylin to Bawnboy; do you agree with that view?—No; they have the best of roads from Knocknagilly to Bawnboy.

8410. It is not as bad a road as the Glas Gap?—Not at all; it is quite a different country altogether. As you mention Glas, which is part of Cavan, the Guardians of Bawnboy Union are totally opposed to taking in Glas, and the Glas people are totally opposed to coming to Bawnboy, and I think it would be inconvenient for them to come to Bawnboy; Enniskillen is their proper market town. I think Cooteshill Union could be amalgamated; there is no necessity at all for it; the furthest part of Cooteshill is scarcely more than ten miles from Cavan Union. I am speaking in the presence of local gentlemen who know more than I do about the locality, but as far as I can see on the map there is no necessity for a union in Cooteshill, and there is no difficulty whatever in bringing persons from Cooteshill to Cavan Workhouse. There are five divisions of Granded Union in this county; it is the unanimous wish of the people of those divisions that they should come here; at least they came before the County Council from time to time, and we passed resolutions in favour of amalgamating them. However, I am in favour of one union for the county being set apart for able-bodied people. I think those other unions should not admit able-bodied paupers or tramps; I think the tramps are a great nuisance, and I think the law with regard to them should be changed in Ireland to what it is in England. I have heard it stated, and I believe it to be true, that the tramps in an English workhouse can be detained for forty-eight hours or three days.

8411. According to the number of their previous visits?—I think that would be a very useful reform, because they are certainly a nuisance.

8412. That is, you would have the same law for this country as for England?—Exactly. I would be in favour of amalgamating Bawnboy, but it is a very long stretch of country from this to Enniskillen, and I am afraid, though you might amalgamate it, if it could be converted into a useful purpose it would be better; still, if you cannot, I would be in favour of retaining it and extending the boundaries, as I stated before.

8413. If you did break up the Bawnboy Union would you think it necessary to keep a hospital there?—Absolutely necessary in the interests of the sick poor. Then the question would arise as to where portions of the Bawnboy Union should go if we amalgamate; formerly part of it belonged to Enniskillen.

8414. You have already answered a great deal of that yourself by saying that all the able-bodied should go to one workhouse and a hospital should be kept there for the sick, so you would only have the women with illegitimate children and the lunatics, practically, to consider?—I think the law should be changed with regard to lunatics, and there should be no lunatics at all in the workhouse.

8415. Then about the women with illegitimate children; did you hear the questions I asked?—I heard some of them; I agree with your suggestions. It struck me it would be a very good idea to send them to a religious institution, where they would be reformed, and not to put them in a workhouse with worse characters than themselves.

8416. Then that would practically deal with all the cases you have here, the sick still remaining at Bawnboy; you would have the able-bodied remaining at a central workhouse and the women going to the penitentiaries, from which their children would be boarded out at the expense of the rate?—Yes; I am in favour of boarding out the children; we have followed it in Enniskillen and Bawnboy. I think there are only six or seven in Bawnboy, and I cannot say how many in Enniskillen, but in every case where it was possible to put out the children of late years they have been sent out to Enniskillen, and I think it is a very good idea.

8417. As regards tramps, would you do anything except assimilating the law to that of England?—I think it would be quite sufficient; they make these workhouses their lodging-houses.

Nov. 26, 1902.

Mr. Thomas
McGeer.

9423. It may come indirectly, but not directly?—I think the present dispensary districts should be rearranged in many cases, and as doctors are looking for such high salaries they should get more to do; I have just been looking over a return yesterday and I find it is wonderful the decrease that has been in the business of the doctors; I suppose you have this return yourself.

9424. This would hardly come into our Inquiry; if we let in such evidence as that we would have to let the doctors come up and explain how very insufficiently paid they are, and that is a subject that has been expressly withheld from this Commission, but there are some aspects of medical relief that do properly come in—the provision for curing the sick in hospitals, and perhaps establishing district nursing with a view of taking care of many sick people in their own homes, and so making it unnecessary for them to go to hospitals. That, in the opinion of a great many people, leads to economy. If you had a nurse in every dispensary district, as you have a doctor, she would go round and attend to the sick in their own homes, parlours and passages, or anything of the sort that has to be done under the doctor's direction, and that would often render it unnecessary for the outpatients to go to the expense of removing a patient and treating him in a hospital.—Yes, if we had such institutions in existence; but I thought it was your province to inquire into relief under the Medical Charities Act, and what I wish to call your attention to is the great decrease in the number of poor people attended by doctors as compared with what it was fifty years ago. I find it is 50 per cent. less, and they are looking for nearly 100 per cent. more in salaries. I would be in favour of giving the doctor a good salary, but I would be in favour of making him work for it.

9425. You don't want to have more people sick?—No; but it would be only natural to think that they should do more work if they want more pay.

9426. Dr. BURNER.—Don't you think there is a decrease in private patients and fewer people in the country?—I don't think so; I think the private practice of every doctor has increased instead of decreasing.

9427. Do you know that many of them don't get £50 a year from private practice?—I would be surprised to hear that.

9428. CHAIRMAN.—I could give you a long string of men who don't get £10, but that is in the extreme western districts—I would be in favour of paying a doctor what he could live on, but he should do more work.

9429. Dr. BURNER.—You would give him the same remuneration as he received twenty years ago?—I would give him more—what would enable him to live—but I would expect he would have a larger district to attend to.

9430. Do you know that many of the country doctors now have practically nothing except what they receive from their appointments?—I would not say that—not in the part of the country I am acquainted with; it may be in other parts.

9431. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose a doctor in a remote district like Glen would not pick up very much in the way of private practice?—It would depend upon what the people thought of him; if he had the name of being a clever man plenty of people would call him in; they are as well off in Glen, comparatively speaking, as in Glasgow; a good deal of that is in the hands of the country. I think they should be made pay something—just a guinea a visit. We made a state of fees in Burnside that was very moderate, and any poor man could comply with it without injustice to the doctors, and the doctors made in and agreed to it. I don't know how it is working.

9432. Dr. BURNER.—It is not working at present; it is given up!—The board agreed to it, and the parties and the doctors agreed to it, and I thought it was very reasonable; that was my idea.

9433. I don't know for what reason it dropped through, but it dropped through for some cause; the arrangement was a very good one—I think so; there are very few farmers but ought to pay less or more.

9434. And that would, at the same time, relieve the rates?—Exactly; I think it should be insisted upon, but I think the system of red tickets should be changed altogether, and there should be a small fee upon each ticket, where the person issuing the ticket considered that the man who was getting it was able to pay he should make on the ticket the amount of the fee.

9435. CHAIRMAN.—That is rather an invidious job?—I don't think so.

9436. Would you object to do it yourself?—I would not, but I am different from other people, you know.

9437. I would feel a little shy in doing that?—If you did it this way—make a certain scale for a certain valuation.

9438. You might know that a man had a big family?—You would have to leave it to the person issuing the ticket to say whether he should pay, and how much. You might meet a man with £10 valuation poorer than a man with £5; I admit that, but after all property has its duties, and you must make some rule.

9439. Mr. MURRAY.—Is your principal objection to an auxiliary system that it is more costly than a lunatic asylum proper?—Yes, that is my objection; that the asylum grant is reduced from 4s. to 2s., although it takes the same amount, practically, to support them and keep them there the Government only gives 2s.

9440. For instance, if the asylum was full, do you not think it would be as much in the interests of the ratepayers to take up one of these diseased workhouses and put the chronic cases and the harmless lunatics there as it would be to put new buildings to the existing asylums, even though the contribution from the Government is only half?—I went into the matter very carefully with regard to the very hot question at present before the ratepayers of Green and Monaghan, and when I made a calculation I found it would be as cheap, in my opinion, to put up new buildings as to take over the harmless lunatics and have the asylum grant reduced from 4s. to 2s.

9441. But you must take into consideration that some of these chronic cases won't be as costly—that they can be supervised at a lower cost—the number of attendances won't need to be so many, and, in addition to that, the advantages to these people to be separated from what you would call the more violent cases—that is a very great advantage on the ground of humanity?—Yes; but if you had proper asylums there should be a better classification like, and you forget that if you establish an auxiliary asylum you will have to pay medical officers, and the cost of attendance will be very little difference in the end, and when you are only allowed 2s. instead of 4s., the 2s. expended would more than pay for the expense of putting up the buildings, and I think that until the Government gives the same grant to auxiliary that it does at present to the ordinary asylums the advantages of establishing sanatoriums will not be availed of; that is my idea.

9442. CHAIRMAN.—You prefer building a little at the parent house?—It would be cheaper in the end; you would find it would. I have gone into the thing pretty extensively as far as I could; in my opinion it would be cheaper to build.

9443. Mr. MURRAY.—While it might be a little cheaper, do you not think it would be much better to have these poor people separated from the violent cases and kept somewhere by themselves, where they would not be disturbed by the noise and violence of the inmates who are really dangerous?—I think if the inmates are properly classified, even in the present asylum, they should not have them mixed up the way they are in Monaghan—they have not the place to classify them properly. But take it this way: supposing you have 300 patients in the asylum, that you could transfer to the auxiliary—that is £10 a week, that is £300 a year—you get less for those 300 patients than you would in the ordinary asylum, and when you look at it that way you see the cost overcomes the profit.

9444. Still with all, do you think it is a good thing to gather together a large congregation of these people?—No; I am totally opposed to that.

9445. CHAIRMAN.—You are nearly in favour of getting 4s. instead of 2s.?—That is my objection.

9446. Mr. MURRAY.—Perhaps you yourself might be able to make some impression on the Treasury and get them to change the system?—I am glad to see you on the Commission; you will be able, I hope, to convert Mr. Wyndham or some of the Lords of the Treasury to your view.

Nov. 16, 1902,
Mr. Thomas
M. O'Brien.

8445. You think in the Poor Law the electoral division is too small?—I do; it was most unjust to have a man on one side of the district paying 2s. in the 2 and a man on the other side paying 1s.

8446. Perhaps the man paying 1s. in the 2 was in a better division, with better land, and better-off people, than the man paying 1s.—I think union rating is the proper thing.

8447. Perhaps the man paying 1s. in the 2 was in a union amalgamation of unions that will mean the wiping out of unions in certain localities; how are those localities to be represented in the amalgamated unions; would you still continue electoral division representation or would a change to dispensary representation be more suitable?

8448. CHAIRMAN.—So as to have fewer Guardians?—I would have fewer Guardians; I would reduce them by one-half.

8449. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—It has been stated there would be great difficulty to get Guardians to go a distance to look after the interests of their particular place, and the suggestion has been made that instead of electoral divisions as a representative area it should be changed to the dispensary area, and have a certain number of Guardians; for instance, if you had three or five from that dispensary area looking after the interests of the poor, in the case of an amalgamation of unions, if there was only one in Caran, it would be very difficult to get a representative of each electoral division to come to Caran, and we want to get over the difficulty; and, from a man of your great experience, we would like to have some advice—I think there are far too many Guardians, and one, at least, would be quite sufficient for an electoral division; there are some of the electoral divisions under a certain valuation that should be amalgamated with another division; that is the way you would reduce them; but I would not go in for giving representation to dispensary districts.

8450. CHAIRMAN.—Dispensary districts are made up of a group of electoral divisions—I know they are; it is a very good idea.

8451. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—The suggestion has been made, and we would like to get opinions from men like you—I would approve of it, because it would be impossible to get men from Bawnboy or Ballyconnell to come up here regularly to Caran, as they should come; the idea is a good one to have representation by dispensary districts.

8452. It is only by sifting the corn we will get at the kernel—I have never thought over the subject before; what I thought over was to reduce the present representation and have only one Guardian for each division, and with very small divisions to amalgamate them; I would have no division less than £1,000 of a rating.

8453. Would you go on the question of rating more than of population, or would you take both together?—They generally go together in our union, because they are all small holdings of a uniform nature in Caran.

8454. And for rating purposes you would prefer union instead of dispensary or electoral divisions—that is for Poor Law purposes?—Oh, yes.

8455. How would it strike you to have a county rate for Poor Law purposes?—I think that is too wide; there ought to be some supervision. The great difficulty in the Local Government Act is that the County Council are the fiscal authority in the county; they have to strike a rate and make it, and they have no supervision, or they have no control, over the Board of Guardians in spending the money, as they cannot object to any money the Board of Guardians spend.

8456. Would you like to see the County Council having a control?—Yes; there should be some controlling power in its hands over the expenditure of the rates it strikes and levies.

8457. Then if a county rate was adopted the County Council would have it all in their own hands?—Yes; but I would not charge the poor rate to a county rate unless the County Council had power to supervise the expenditure of it.

8458. If there was any change the assessing body would be bound to have the supervision?—The County Council is the assessing body at present, and have no power.

8459. No; the Guardians are the people to make the demand; the County Council are simply purveyors; they give the money that is asked for?—They have to give it.

8460. It is the Guardians really who levy the rate; of course, the County Council collect it; but it occurred to me to ask you would you go as far as a county rate for Poor Law purposes?—Not unless the County Council had some control over the expenditure.

8461. As it would be bound to have in some one change was made, would you then go for a county rate instead of an electoral division, dispensary, or union rate?—I think we would have more economical expenditure by having union rating. Now, for instance, what would a man at Swinburn know about what they were doing at Rathfriland?—It is further of Swinburn in one way than Dublin, because there is no direct communication with it. I think the people who strike the rate or assess it should know what it was for.

8462. CHAIRMAN.—Before you leave just that question you say you would leave the union rate to be administered by the union. We are hearing in mind your suggestion that there should be practically only one union for the county?—For shill-bodied inmates, I said.

8463. You would not have a Board of Guardians except for the management of small hospitals; would you enlarge the unions?—I don't see how you can do without some local management.

8464. A Board of Guardians?—Who would manage the hospital if the local board did not?

8465. That is exactly what I was wanting to come to.

Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Something like a dispensary committee?—Exactly.

8466. CHAIRMAN.—What I was coming to was committees under the County Council; if you had a county rate and had committees of the County Council, as you have now for the infirmaries, with power, as is suggested by section 90 of the Act of 1893 to have district hospitals with committees partly nominated by the representative bodies, say the County Council, and partly consisting of persons from the locally co-opted, would you approve of such management so that I would prefer to leave it in the hands of the elected bodies?

8467. Altogether?—No. I think there ought to be power to co-opt or appoint persons outside the elected body—representative people in the locality that would extend to the thing. I think it would be a great mistake to leave it altogether. I think these people co-opted are often the very best men on a body like that.

8468. Quite so; they are selected for their special fitness?—Yes.

8469. In the case of a county committee for an infirmary, is it your experience that that works well?—I have never been on the County Infirmary Committee; I believe it does. As far as I have heard I believe it works well in this county.

8470. You don't, from a democratic or other point of view, see any objection to such a committee composed of representative ratepayers with power to that committee to co-opt others?—I see no objection to that course; some of the very best people in the locality are often left out at elections.

8471. As regards the county rate, you are rather afraid that it would lead to expensive management, are you?—Yes; that is what I am afraid of; that it would lead to expensive expenditure in some places, because they would say, "What signifies it; it won't come on our district; it will come on the whole county."

8472. Take the far ends of Caran—the two distant ends—they know nothing of each other?—Well, generally, when the Guardians meet they are able to explain to other members that don't know the reasons for the course they are adopting in asking for relief or the like of that.

8473. Take the County Council, which deals with the whole of the county; the requirements of the employers or people who want public works done in one end of the county are not known by the County Council from the other end of the county?—What we do in this county is this: we leave that question to the councillors of the district.

8474. Could you not do that with the Poor Law?—Enough where there comes up some person to oppose the work, we pass that as a matter of course, but if there is a strong opposition or feeling against the work we hear the people from the locality at the County Council.

8475. Could you not do that with the Poor Law expenditure, being guided very largely by the views of the persons from the locality concerned?—You see the district Councils have to bear the cost of the works in their district, and that is the reason we leave it to them.

6476. Would you think it would be a safeguard against profuse or careless expenditure if part of the expenditure, say half, were levied locally, and some-what in the same way that the old tithes and county-charge changes used to be done?—You would find that a rather complicated system; we are not enough as we are without adding still further complications to the system of county accounts.

6477. You would prefer the union rate. There is another matter. We have a large number of grants from the Government in aid of local taxation; do you approve of the present system of distribution of those grants; for instance, would you approve of a very large and wealthy union receiving a very large and heavy grant in aid, while a poor district in the extreme west of the country, with a valuation, say of £10,000 a year, maintained a workhouse and establishment on that sum, and got hardly any contribution from the Government; do you think that is a proper system of distribution—to give a good deal to the rich and very little to the poor?—I think the present system of contributions from the Treasury should be revised; I think there is a good deal in that very point; I have been thinking of it; some of the unions that want most get least; I think the law should be changed in that respect, but under the present law you cannot do it.

6478. It is a case of change of law, of course—a more equitable distribution of Government grants should be made?—That is my idea. For instance, unions in Meath and Kildare that require very little get far more than unions in the west of Connaught and in the mountains, and I believe it is worse in Mayo and Donegal.

6479. It is worse there; a union rate in Belmullet of 1d. in the £ produces less than 250 a year?—Oh, yes!

Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Whereas 1d. in an average union would produce £200; so that Board of Guardians has to pay 10d. for every 1d. the average union has to pay when it does anything.

6480. CHAIRMAN.—An increase in the doctor's salary of £50 would mean 1d. over the entire union; would you not think that some assistance to unions in that position, some more equitable apportionment of grants, should be made?—I am in favour of changing the present system; I think it is very unfair the way the Treasury is acting in regard even to the doctors' salary at the present time.

6481. I don't think the Treasury have been approached in that matter; they give a lump sum, and there was never any question of the distribution.—There was a question in the House of Commons, and they know very well that they are doing an injustice to the people of Ireland, as far as the medical charities are concerned.

6482. I am speaking of the grants in aid of Poor Law expenditure; it does not matter to the Treasury, they would never give a penny more; it would merely mean a shifting of the apportionment?—I think the Treasury ought to contribute under the Medical Charities Act what the law lays down, and not be standing to what the doctors got fifty years ago.

6483. Is it what they got in the year 1828—that is only a year ago?—Even so, a great many unions since that period have given more, and it is a great hardship on those unions if the Guardians think they are only doing justice to say they will get no recompense more than they have got hitherto. I think the Poor Law Commissioners are far more anxious to please the interests of the English Treasury than those of the Irish magistrates.

6484. You have not had the pleasure of meeting us very often?—I have had the experience of talking to you at a distance by letter, and I thought you were far more anxious to save the English Treasury than the Irish magistrates.

6485. You don't do us half justice?—I may be prejudiced against you, but I am only giving my views.

6486. You suggest one workhouse for the able-bodied; did you think at all of carrying that separation of workhouses according to classes; did you think of carrying that any further; did you think it would be possible; it has been suggested it might be possible to have in a county one workhouse for able-bodied, another workhouse for children, another workhouse for aged and infirm, and another workhouse, we will say, for lunatics; did you think of any such further extension of the principle?—I would be in favour of having separate workhouses for lunatics and children, but I am in favour of boarding out the children, and I don't think there is any necessity for a workhouse for children. I am in favour of having those epileptics and harmless lunatics in one place if possible.

6487. If you get 4s. 1—Oh, certainly, if we get 4s. by all means; but I am also in favour of putting able-bodied inmates in one workhouse—there are very few at present in any workhouse. I think there would be no difficulty in a central institution charging the districts which those able-bodied inmates came from with the cost of them, and sending down a demand.

6488. If there was a county rate it would be simple?—It would be a different thing, but as I am not in favour of a county rate I am only talking from my own point of view; I think they could send down a demand to the union that these able-bodied paupers came from and make them pay the cost of their maintenance in a central establishment.

6489. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—"Able-bodied" seems to be a misnomer, because, really, as far as we have gone there are hardly any able-bodied inmates in houses except mothers of children; when we speak about able-bodied it is really old and infirm?—I would not be in favour of changing the old and infirm from the locality in which they were reared, or broken down in, because it would be very hard on them.

6490. If you did that you could not bring about any reform or any improvement without additional cost. How is that going to be managed unless you concentrate these people into one locality and get rid of the upkeep of the boarding?—I don't mean the aged and infirm; I made a mistake; the sick poor; I would not remove them, but the people who could bear the journey to Connaught, let them be removed.

6493. You don't see any danger in those people going into outhouses or sleeping on the way and frightening children?—Not a bit; the people in the country won't allow them to stop about their places, and the law is well able to deal with any crime or delinquency.

6494. You think that the fact that the tramps know they can be detained there for some time will prevent them coming?—Quite enough; they will avoid it.

6495. How do you administer outdoor relief in your union?—On the application of the party who requires it and the report of the relieving officer.

6496. Do you find it is a growing charge?—They have been giving, practically, the same amount in Barnaby for the last ten years. In Enniskillen it is growing a little, but they don't give relief there as much as they do in Barnaby, taking the size of the union and the number of inhabitants into consideration.

6497. Do you think it is a useful form of assistance?—In some cases, and in many cases it is abused.

6498. Would you like to see it done away with?—No; but the Board of Guardians should exercise some supervision, and not give relief in such an indiscriminate manner as is now done.

6499. How do they act in your union?—If there is a poor man in a certain district he will go to the Guardian before the board-day and speak to him to get him outdoor relief, or he will get up a memorial signed by the responsible inhabitants of the locality and send it into the board, asking for relief; then the relieving officer goes and makes a report; there may be temporary relief given, but the relieving officer is bound in every case to see the party and report at the next board meeting.

6500. And the Guardians next day decide whether the relieving officer's report should be adopted or not?

Mr. Thomas
McGowan.

—Yes. In Enniskillen there was a rule that some of the dispensary doctors or some medical doctor should give a certificate that the person was unable to be removed to the workhouse, but that has not been adhered to of late years in Enniskillen.

8501. Would you approve of offering strictly to that? —Well, really, I think the Guardians should have a free hand, although they go astray in some cases and don't exercise proper supervision; these people come at the Guardians and put local pressure on them to give outdoor relief.

8502. Do you know the amount in your union?—It is about £200 a year.

CHAIRMAN.—It was £206 for the last audited year I have—for the year ended 31st of March, 1901.

8503. Mr. MCKENNAHAN.—That is not a large sum?—But our union is a very small one; they give small sums.

8504. Do you board out all the children you can?—Certainly.

8505. Do you find it a satisfactory system?—Yes; the children are much better; they become useful members of society, and if they are reared in the workhouse they are good for nothing; that is my experience of them.

8506. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose it would be very difficult to get any perfect system for administering outdoor relief under the present law—I mean if Boards of Guardians are to give outdoor relief?—If the Boards of Guardians are to give outdoor relief at all they should mean the power in their own hands. The question of whether the applicant is fit to be removed should be in the hands of the doctor.

8507. Would you think at all of the Boards of Guardians placing the responsibility of the law would so enable them—placing the responsibility on the paid officer—the relieving officer—of the Guardians, and leaving it on him: would not the result be that the members of the Boards of Guardians would then be put in the position rather of critics and scoundrels of the action he might adopt, and that they would censure either too profuse or too niggardly an administration?—I would not be in favour of giving any relieving officer full power to give relief as he thought proper; you would be going from a bad state of things to a worse one.

8508. He would do it with a full knowledge that wrong administration would mean the loss of his situation and a surcharge from a gentleman called the auditor?—That might have a deterrent effect on him; otherwise I don't see how you could control him at all when he would be master of the situation.

8509. He would be master of the situation just the same way as an engine has power to go ahead as long as it keeps on the lines?—Yes; but you would find that an auditor might have a difficulty in surcharging him where there were great abuses. I don't think the Guardians would wish or should wish to part with the power of spending their own money; they are very jealous of their powers.

8510. Unless they felt that owing to their only coming in once a week or once a fortnight, as the case might be, that they would not be in a position to consider and sift as thoroughly as applications for outdoor relief should be sifted, then they might say, "We cannot do this work ourselves, and we will put it on the shoulders of the man paid to do it, and see that he does it as far as our knowledge goes?"—But at present the relieving officer is bound to visit every case of outdoor relief.

8511. The responsibility is his, but the present system, as you have explained it, makes his position very little more than that of a paymaster?—I would not like to give authority to the relieving officer exclusively.

8512. Mr. MCKENNAHAN.—I suppose when the relieving officer reports the person is not destitute the Guardians refuse the grant?—Certainly; there is always a majority that will be swayed, less or more, by the report of the officer.

8513. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think he would like to go against a large section of the Guardians?—He is supposed to give a fair report; any Guardian can ask him about the means of the person, and the Guardians present will consider whether he is a fit subject for relief.

8514. Do you mean a Guardian who brought forward an application for relief and was interested in it because he would rather receive an unfavourable report from the officer?—Quite so; but there is a good deal of independence among Guardians when there is a question of money; it touches all their pockets now.

8515. But still outdoor relief is going up—I do not think outdoor relief was increasing.

8516. It is increasing enormously?—There were some unions gave no relief until the passing of the Local Government Act, and the constitution of the Board have been so changed a good deal, and that would account for the increase in outdoor relief.

8517. I don't think that is so; really, we have been very much struck with the fact that in some of the workhouses we have raised in Ulster the relief was a little down?—I would not be surprised at all in Ulster, for heretofore they gave very little outdoor relief; there is a new social class of Guardians.

8518. There is one union in Ulster in which they give more than £5,000 a year in outdoor relief, and I don't suppose the house management would cost more than £1,500 a year?—These Guardians must be full of the milk of human kindness to give the money away that way.

8519. And it is one of the best manufacturing districts in Ireland?—I am surprised to hear it. I don't think it has increased so much in Enniskillen or Banbury; I don't think there has been any material increase; there has been some increase in Enniskillen, but not so much after all that you would wonder at it.

8520. Dr. BROWNE.—You mentioned you thought it was a desirable arrangement to have the County Infirmary managed by the County Council and a few co-opted members?—Yes; they have co-opted a number of members outside the County Council; there are only a certain number of the County Council on it; in fact I think they are in a minority upon the infirmary committee in Cavan.

8521. But still it was an elected body?—Oh, yes. 8522. Now, supposing Banbury and Oxted Infirmary were dissolved or amalgamated, and there were hospitals left there, would you think it would be a desirable arrangement to have these under the same body so that there might be an interchange of nursing staff, and so on?—I never went into details that way; I would be in favour of having an elected body and co-opted members joined with them; the County Council could do it.

8523. Mr. MCKENNAHAN.—You would want local bodies for these?—Yes.

8524. Dr. BROWNE.—Yes; two or three councils along with two or three others—I would keep them as far as possible county charges.

8525. There is portion of the County Council near Enniskillen, and at present those divisions are served by the Enniskillen Union.

8527. For the very same reason that they go to the union hospital, but for some other cases it might be better they should go to the County Infirmary; would not the same reason hold good for payment to the County Infirmary?—The County Infirmary is a higher class institution than the union hospital, and I think that Cavan should contribute something to the expense of those patients in the County Infirmary; I think it would be unfair to make the Fermanagh people support them, because that is a county charge, and not a union charge.

8528. At present you are aware they cannot pay?—I know.

8529. But you would think it a desirable thing that they should be able to pay?—Yes; not only in Cavan but in every county in Ireland.

Dr. BEAN examined.

Nov. 26 1907.

Dr. Ryan

8531. CHAIRMAN.—You are anxious to give your evidence in order to get away?—Yes; I come all the way from Belfast, and we have to drive all the way; and, in the first place, I must beg a patient hearing, as my views on this question run more or less counter to the evidence you have already had. The general objections to amalgamation are that within the last ten years we have improved the condition of things in the workhouses very much, and, personally, I think it is rather a misfortune that the local bodies should be called upon to face so soon a fresh turning up of the arrangements that have been entered into.

8532. Sixty-five years ago?—I beg your pardon, no; I mean since the introduction of the Local Government Act; we have had new bodies and new administrations.

8533. We have nothing to do with that?—With the Poor Law portion of that.

8534. We are merely here in connection with the Board of Guardians which was established sixty-five years ago, and we don't propose, and have no power, in any way to revise or pull up or look at the arrangements made under the Local Government Act of 1888?—I think you misunderstand the scope of my observations. I simply say that the Board of Guardians, though you still call them a Board of Guardians, are quite a different lot of men under the Local Government Act, that they have done a good deal to improve the condition of the workhouses, and I think, personally, that it is a pity that the question of amalgamation should be started on them so soon; that is all I refer to on that subject.

8535. And as regards the County Council?—In particular.

8536. You don't think any workhouses in the County Council should be closed?—That is my opinion; the reason I advance in favour of that is that if you diminish the number of hospitals at all, no matter how well intentioned the result is, it will eventually in loss to the ratepayers or hardship to the poor—almost probably in both. It is quite possible that if we were building workhouses and hospitals now we might have a better arrangement and do with fewer of them, but if you are going to amalgamate the burden of poor law on those who say, given the hospitals and workhouses there are now, that any benefit either to the poor or the ratepayers will result from amalgamation. It is very easy to call the workhouses "dens of immorality" and "boarding-houses for the idle and dissolute," and "hotels for tramps and death-traps for inmates," and all that, but in my opinion you may as well abolish fever hospitals, because fever accumulates therein. In both cases I believe what you do is you spread the disease. Surely, if there is immorality it is better that half a dozen immoral people should be in the workhouse than scattered over the district. Then, with regard to the interests of the ratepayers, I think myself the idle and dissolute are very much better confined in a workhouse, where they are under official and even under police supervision, than that they should be wandering up and down the country. I was reading up the literature of this question, and I find that in 1842, reading the reports of the Poor Law Commissioners, that workhouses were actually built not for the poor but for beggars and tramps principally, and to get them confined in workhouses, and now after sixty-five years, having got them into workhouses, we are asked to keep them out of them; that is progress in a circle. In Kilmaleck Union the people were so infested with beggars and tramps that when the workhouses were opened they got all their poor to go into it by compulsion or persuasion, then the neighbouring poor or tramps came pouring in on them, and they found their last condition was worse than the first, because they had two sets of poor to support—one inside and the other black-balling outside—and they came to Kilmaleck Union and carried off their own poor in triumph to protect them from the inroads of the tramps from the surrounding country. And to such an extent did this nuisance of tramps exist at that time that in the various divisions—this is taken from the Blue Book—made and gave badges to the poor, authorizing certain poor people to beg in certain districts. The question really for the ratepayers is whether they are to support these classes inside or outside—the poor you always have with you, and the idle and the dissolute. To seek to get rid of the poor and idle by closing the workhouses is, to me, as rational as to seek to get rid of criminals by closing the jails. It is very curious that whilst all manner and classes of people with the most philanthropic views are suggesting things for the material comfort of the sick and poor they have never asked the opinion of the poor inmates—the idea seems to be that if you feed and clothe a man better you have done everything for him; I don't think that is true. The people you have in workhouses are the very poor who are failures in life; life to them, no matter under what feeding or housing, is a better life, and it is my opinion that we have really gone in most unions far enough to meet the material wants of these people, and that if you really wish to make them more happy and contented the last thing you will do is to remove them from the unions and from the acres and the surroundings in which they have been reared, and in which they have lived for forty, fifty, or sixty years. And the most extraordinary thing to me is that this is urged in the guise of philanthropy. Take a poor man—he has fallen into the union—he thinks the world has treated him badly, and you take and say "I will give you a better coat in a union twenty miles away, and you will have more for your breakfast and more things for your dinner." You forget altogether that you take him from his surroundings; he will never hear a familiar voice or see a familiar face or a familiar scene; you may as well transport him, and not that alone, but when you have done with him you consign him to a pauper's grave in a foreign land. His friends will never come for his corpse. Now, as to the question of Irish workhouses being death-traps, I may tell you I take the credit of being one of the first workhouse reformers myself, and I take the credit for Curran that with Dr. Moorehead and a couple of doctors we were the first in 1895 to inaugurate an improvement in workhouse infirmaries by inviting the Local Commissioner, Miss Woods, to look at the Irish workhouses. At that time a number of very influential men proved that the death-rate in the Irish workhouses amounted to 250 per thousand, and they were denominated death-traps. Having a little taste for statistics I thought I would ask the clerk of my union to give the average age of death of people who died in Belfastborough Union outside the workhouse and also the average age at death of people who die within the workhouse, and I found that the average age of death of people who died in the workhouse was nearly twenty years over those who died outside. I invite anyone who wishes to live twenty years longer than anyone outside to come into my workhouse. No worth for statistics.

8537. Mr. MURKIN.—It might prove that more children are born outside and not many inside, and the death-rate is always higher among them?—Quite right; I assure you I was not as ridiculous as to draw such a conclusion from it, but the other conclusion was quite as ridiculous, because the sick, the sick, and infirm were in to die, and one conclusion was as ridiculous as the other. The general cry is there must be something done; granted, if the something is going to be better than what is, then we talk about the tramp nuisance. I would like to know from any gentleman what the tramp costs his union in the year. I have gone to the trouble of ascertaining what the tramps cost my union in the year; the average number of tramps in the union is about three per night; they cost about 4d. per night, that is 1s.; that is something less than £30 a year. Now one of those 300 or 1,000 tramps that would be out at night and accidentally or out of malice light a haystack in trying to get the shelter denied him in the workhouse, would cost the ratepayers of the union two, or three, or four times that amount. Or, again, let us take the same tramp, and let him steal a chicken, or a stone of potatoes, or a loaf of bread, and he would cost that individual ratepayer more than that individual ratepayer pays for tramps in ten years. That is the tramp nuisance. The workhouses being built to get rid of the tramp nuisance; now the workhouses are credited with the production of the tramp nuisance. Talking about the material benefit to the poor, my idea would be that we might turn a little more attention to their spiritual needs. After all, as I said a while ago, a workhouse life to the ordinary man is always hard, and unless you can impress on that man that there is another life in which the infelicitous that he either believes, or did actually occur to him in this life, will be redressed, and try to induce him to look forward to that, you will leave him still a hopeless man, even if you feed him better and clothe him better you do little for his happiness here, and nothing for him hereafter. I think the best guide to the future is the past. My advice would be that for the happiness, and contentment, and material and general comfort also of those people that, as far as possible, they should be placed under the control of religious orders.

Dec. 25, 1900.

Dr. Ryan.

8537. CHAIRMAN.—You have been in the neighbouring workhouse of Carrickmacross?—I have. And, talking about Religious Orders, it is a curious thing that that Local Commissioner, Miss Woods, who came over here in 1895 or 1896 and went over nearly all the workhouses of Ireland—a great many of them, anyhow—

8538. About twenty out of 350?—I thought she did a good deal more; but the only workhouse of which she spoke with unreserved praise was the workhouse—

8539. Ballisborough?—No; on the contrary, she gave us as the second dirtiest place in Ireland. She came to me and let me know, but I let nobody know she was coming. I said, "I want you to paint us as we are, and enough extenuate or sugar coat down in malice." And she painted us as the second worst in Ireland, and we have got into the front rank since. No it was a workhouse near Dundora.

8540. Mr. MURPHY.—Ballisborough?—You are quite right. I made it my business to see that once when I was spending a short holiday at Dundora, and I think it deserved everything she said of it. It is under the care of the Sisters of Mercy—not only the sick, but the administration portion of it. Another argument against amalgamation is it must necessarily produce an increase in outdoor relief, and outdoor relief, whilst theoretically a most economical form, because you only pay one officer to distribute it all, is in practice, in my opinion, the most extravagant and demoralising manner in which the poor can be helped. And it also tends more to pauperism and the destruction of self-respect than any other system. The argument is made that it only costs 1s. 6d. for each pauper outside, but that if you bring him into the workhouse it will cost 4s. or 5s.; that argument is worthless. I would engage to support all the people on outdoor relief in my union or most unions—I would engage to support all above 10 per cent, who would come into the workhouse; I don't believe above 10 per cent of those on outdoor relief would come into the workhouse, even with the altered and improved conditions. Now, of course, all the arguments I state in regard to amalgamation in general apply a hundred-fold to any amalgamation or diminution of the number of hospitals in Ireland. In my opinion the number of hospitals in Ireland is not one too many, and I think it is a most retrograde step to contemplate in any way at all a diminution in the number of hospitals. By an increased expenditure on the material comfort of the patients, and in the nursing and medical and surgical appliances, we have got over, in a great measure, the objection of the poor, at least in a great many unions—I can say it for my own—of entering the workhouse hospitals, and when we have done that I think it is a most retrograde step to consider for a moment the abolition of any of these hospitals.

8541. CHAIRMAN.—Are all the parts of the country in your neighbourhood sufficiently served by hospitals, or do you think any additional hospitals would be desirable?—I have been thinking that matter over, but I think the question scarcely arises at this stage in my part of the country; we are surrounded by a number of small towns; we have Shercock, and Kingscourt, and Mullagh around us in our union, and I think the question may arise when we have settled this question and brought our present hospital up to the waste and demands on it, which I may say it is not because I have to refuse admission to patients at present. We had all the plans and specifications ready to go on with it four or five months ago, and the Local Government Board, in their wisdom, said "Wait until this Commission is over." So I hope the Commission will report soon. Now, with regard to the County Infirmary, I think it is a gross injustice to the taxpayers of the outlying portions of the county, which are generally the poor portions; I think it is a gross injustice that they should be obliged not only to support their own local poor and sick in their own hospitals, but at the same time contribute in the general county charge to the support of the County Infirmary. Now there are only two ways of removing that inequality—either level it up or level it down. I would be for levelling up; I would be for making all hospitals a county-at-large charge.

8542. The treatment of the sick?—Yes; a county-at-large charge.

8543. The tendency of that would be to bring into the infirmary as many of the aged and infirm as you could reasonably manage, so as to get them off the local roads and put them on the county-at-large?—I think you may take it from me, as a doctor, that there is a very strong under-current and feeling in the part of medical men against having the infirm and old people in their hospitals, and I think that is a danger you can practically disregard.

8544. Not to have? Medical men object to have them?—Object to have them in the hospitals.

8545. But still the fact that they would be supported out of the rates of the county at large would operate, at all events, on some minds?—Of course I don't say that it is an absolutely groundless argument, but I think it is one of those arguments that, as they say in law, de minimis non curat lex, you can disregard as a small thing.

8547. How many have you in your hospital at present?—I think I have about forty in my beds.

8548. How many have you in Cootanhill?—Really, I don't think it is fair to ask me that.

Mr. MURPHY.—Twelve was the number last week.

8549. CHAIRMAN.—You see that it is due to the view of the medical men as to the qualification or as to the condition of the people whom he would admit into his sick wards?—No; I beg your pardon, I don't agree with you exactly. It may be one reason, but to say it is due to it altogether, or mainly, is in my opinion not so.

8550. Well, I would say the chief reason, I would fancy; but there are some wards actually with no beds in them that are used as day wards. You can understand that some unions would be getting a very big pall out of the county grant and others a very small one—I will tell you with regard to that too. I know it would take a very long time to right the injustice, because I have not met for twenty years ten patients from Ballisborough Union who have been treated in the Queen County Infirmary, and during my time I calculate that Ballisborough has contributed to the Queen County Infirmary a sum of £2,800.

8552. CHAIRMAN.—Would you not be afraid there would be an undue rush to the dietary scale we saw the other day at Cootanhill—bacon and eggs for breakfast, and all that?—I am talking now of the sick poor; I don't think with the sick men coming in the important question—it is nursing, and medical and surgical treatment.

8553. Dr. BROOKS.—Do you think that would be desirable rivalry?—Yes.

8554. You don't think patients would go a long distance to their hospital unless there were good grounds for it?—That is my view. I don't think they would go for a good meal of roast and eggs.

8555. Their tendency would be to go to the nearest hospital where their friends could visit them, unless they want to get special advice?—Precisely.

8556. You mentioned something about keeping the infirm in workhouses?—I don't exactly mean that, but there they are, and it is much better you should keep them there than scatter them.

8557. Perhaps you did not hear the question the Chairman asked about allowing a woman with her first illegitimate child to go into some religious institution of the same denomination as herself?—I think it very desirable; in fact that is a better way of working out the idea in my mind that it is better not to scatter them.

8558. It is the same thing?—Yes; but does in what I consider a better way.

8592. CHAIRMAN.—Is there anything else you have a case of?—Having said so much against amalgamation in general, and as it is quite probable that my views against amalgamation in general will not prevail, I would be in favour of having these places that you close up converted into asylums for what are called harmless lunatics for the epileptic lunatics of our district, and for the schools. I am altogether in favour of the boarding out of children; I would even extend the boarding out of children to the children of persons in the workhouse, such as these unmarried mothers and others who are regular delinquents of the workhouse.

8593. Dr. BROOKS.—Under what safeguards?—I have not thought that out; I think it is very difficult to get the safeguard. Now, with regard to the boarding out of the aged and infirm, I am not in favour of that view. An old man is five, ten, or fifteen years in the workhouse; it is the only home he has; you put him out with strangers; I don't think his bodily comfort will be as well attended to. If you make a short residence in the workhouse a qualification for being boarded out it is quite possible that a number of people who are living with their friends now and assisting in their own support will be sent in to qualify and come out again with the qualification, and still assist their friends outside. In fact I regard this boarding-out question as a sort of side wind to get rid of the Old Age Pension and get on the local rates what we were told some time ago would be made an Imperial charge, and in fact it is simply outdoor relief with a tinge of Chamberlain in it. Now there are just two things that show the advisability of not changing merely for the purpose of change. There are two matters that have been changed by the Local Government Act in Poor Law administration that, I think, had much better been left as they were. The first of these is the chargeability of outdoor relief. At present—and the thing has not had time to develop to its fullest extent—you have an increase in the outdoor relief, that increase is bound to go on, because at present there is a rivalry between the various Guardians as to which district will have the most outdoor relief, and this rivalry, unfortunately, has been accentuated by the doubling of the number of Guardians under the Local Government Act, so that we have at present a system of outdoor relief which puts a premium on extravagance, and that comes with the other change that was made in Poor Law representation by the Local Government Act, and that is the doubling of the number of Guardians. This was done with some beneficent idea that the lion and the lamb would lie down together, but they did not; it is what you have got—a double dose of lamb and a double dose of lion in each electoral division.

8594. Mr. MURKHAM.—That is a mistake; the representation in the same as it was before the Act was passed—I quite agree with you; the representation is nominally the same, but it is really doubled, because out of the ex-officio not two in ten attended; you have the same number, but although they are nominally the same, what you have at present is you have a Board of Guardians composed of anything from thirty to nearly 100 individuals crammed into a room less than half the size of this, and if those men can economically or regularly and orderly discharge their business they must be a very superior lot of people.

8595. But, as a rule, the attendance is not one-fourth of the whole body?—Quite right; an extra reason for getting them down. There is no responsibility attaching to the position; one-fourth won't attend an ordinary meeting, but they will all crowd in next day if things are not done to their liking and undo it; there is no responsibility or dignity attached to the position. I am a democrat, and I have been going for local government all my life. I say for proper representation it is necessary you should cut down the number.

8596. The original idea was that there should be only one representative, and it was altered in the House of Lords?—Yes; I am quite aware of that. We have been going to a great deal of expense to improve the hospitals and make them attractive to the poor; all these improvements and attractions have cost money; there is one improvement and attraction that will cost no money—that will save money. I wrote five years ago about it, and got a question asked in the House of Commons about it, and what I wrote five years ago I could not do better than repeat—it is against making sick people wear the poorhouse garb. This was not in the original Act of Parliament; it was a general order of the Poor Law Commissioners; and by a stroke of the pen it could at any time have been done away with. You may make Poor Law infirmaries into little palaces, you may give a nurse to every patient in them, you may diet them with champagne and chicken, but if, as soon as a patient gets his foot out of bed, he has to get into a pauper's dress he will not frequent the union hospital, and I sympathise with him, and think it most shameful that the one thing that stands between us and the pauperism of the people, self-respect, should be tried to be broken down, when they go with a festering leg or inflammation of the lungs into the workhouse hospital, and as soon as they are able to get about they must get into a pauper uniform.

8597. CHAIRMAN.—You are aware of the power of the Guardians to adopt a hospital suit?—I am, and it is just one of the remedies that people that know nothing about a thing adopt, just as if it was the quality of the cloth, and not the uniform to which objection is made.

8598. But it would be a very good thing that hospital patients should not have, as patients too often have, their own ragged and dirty clothes?—Could you not trust the medical officer to see that the clothes are clean?

8599. Perhaps we might, but when a workhouse is considered the second dirtiest in all Ireland it might be considered difficult, even in your own case!—That is a good ad hominem argument, and I don't mind if we discuss it that way for the next two hours. I think the very fact that I made that admission is proof of my sincerity when I go for the other. The officers of the workhouses are mostly at present the Consulting Sanitary or Medical Superintending Officers of Health; the Local Government Board have approved of our appointment, and they turn round and, through the mouth of their President in the House of Commons, say it cannot be done on account of infection.

8600. Do you see any objection to the people wearing a suit of serge different from the pauper uniform?—It is a pauper uniform.

8602. Well, we have your opinion, and we have a note of it—I beg your pardon, if I spoke hastily; it means an increase of trouble to me, for whenever you have this reform you will have more people coming into the hospital, and I cannot say we are always remunerated in proportion to our work. But I really have felt it; it is five years since I drew attention to it, but the reform seems as far off as ever. This has been in existence sixty years, and I suppose it will be in existence when we are all in heaven, at the rate we are going on. With regard to paying patients, I think myself that so far as infectious cases are concerned no patient should be charged except he wishes to pay. When I got typhus fever in 1872 I went into hospital, and paid for it, but it should be perfectly optional. I regard the expense of treating an infectious case as being as much in the interest of the general taxpayer as of the individual himself; the general taxpayer may suffer by the spread of the disease, or getting it himself. Then with regard to who ought not to be charged in the infirmaries, my view would be that any person who outside gets medical attendance gratis should get it inside—the class of people who get dispensary tickets outside should not be charged for their maintenance inside. But those who would wish separate wards, if you adopt such a system, should pay the whole cost of maintenance, including nursing and medicine, and they should also pay an additional sum, such as would be calculated to recompense the Guardians for what, I hope, would be the increased salary that the influx of such people would necessitate in order to be fair to the doctor. I dealt with the tramp nuisance. I consider it is altogether an exaggeration, and it is a matter of insurance to the ratepayers that they should give these people a night's lodging. With regard to the nursing, I think our nursing has immensely improved, but I don't at all agree with those who exalt trained nurses above nursing orders. I really think the technical and manual dexterity of the nurse is only a small portion of her requirements as a nurse, and it is quite absurd to exalt a girl into a position of superiority because she spends two years learning a trade, and to contrast her unfavourably with the ladies who devote their whole life to the care of the poor, and who, though, technically, called untrained, are really very much better trained, because they have sympathy and charity and the spirit of devotion and self-sacrifice, which are so rare, and they can very easily acquire, and have acquired already, the manual dexterity and the technical skill which we boast of in trained nurses.

Nov. 26, 1903.

Mr. Patrick
Crumley.

Mr. PATRICK CRUMLEY EXAMINED.

3870. CHAIRMAN.—You were not able to give evidence in Enniskillen?—No.

3871. You have attended as a member of the Enniskillen Board of Guardians with reference to part of the Enniskillen Union which is in Cavan?—Yes.

3872. You think that part should remain with the Enniskillen Union?—I think it would be a great injury to the people of that part of the country if those divisions were taken away from the Enniskillen Union. I have been requested, on the part of the people of that district of the country, to come here to say to you that if possible these divisions should be retained in the Enniskillen Union. Some five years ago, after the Local Government Act was passed, there were one or two memorials signed by all the people of the whole district of all denominations asking that those eight divisions should still remain part of the Enniskillen Union, and I think the Local Government Board at that time assented to that course by allowing them to remain part of the Enniskillen Union.

3873. You think even if a hospital were put at Blacklins or some place in that portion of the County Cavan, even then you think it ought to remain as part of the union?—I think it should still remain part of the union.

3874. Some people from Down and that part of the union have to go twenty miles to Enniskillen?—Then it is twenty miles to Bessborough.

3875. Supposing a hospital were built in their own division at the expense of the Enniskillen Union at large, do you think that would be a good plan for dealing with the sick of the district?—Yes, for sudden cases, but in regard to the fever cases I don't think a hospital should be built there; it is very likely the Enniskillen Workhouse will be retained, because there have been a great deal of improvements carried out there.

3876. You don't think a fever hospital ought to be built at Blacklins?—I don't think so.

3877. But a cottage hospital, in which urgent cases might be dealt with—cases of diseased lungs and matters that make it rather difficult to take people long distances?—Yes; it would be very useful. There are not, I think, more than two or three fever cases at Blacklins come from that part of the country to Enniskillen.

3878. You have had a very large number of fever cases lately from Derryl?—There are more cases from Derryl district; there were two or three families that the disease set in amongst in those divisions; I think there were eight or nine people.

3879. Was there anything else you wished to mention?—Yes. If such a thing as amalgamation takes place, I have been thinking that all the imbeciles and harmless lunatics should be transferred to the asylum, for I look upon the mode of treatment in the workhouse of these poor people as simply barbarous. For instance, there is the pauper attendant—I am speaking of the Enniskillen Union, that I have done my best within the last twenty years trying to reform. It is a pauper attendant, who has had the misfortune of losing everything he had himself, that is attending the male patients. It is a woman, who has fallen by some misfortune or another, that is attending the female patients; those people have no regard for the patients, for their cleanliness or cure; if they wish they may lie in bed all day, and they are not taken out to the pure fresh air for exercise. I think that the Government should be thanked for the manner in which they have handed the asylums over to the County Councils, as a member of the asylum board I now speak—that it is a credit to the Government for having put these patients in the position in which they are; they are treated well, everything is cheerful and comfortable, the attendants take good care of them, they are well fed. The paupers are not well fed; these harmless lunatics and imbeciles are not well fed in the workhouse, nor are the aged and infirm poor.

3880. What would you suggest as regards the aged and infirm poor?—I would suggest that there should be classification, and that these aged and infirm poor who have lost respectable lives, and whose poverty has compelled to seek refuge in these homes, that they should be dealt with in a manner even better than the ordinary run of paupers. As regards the food, I have tried on several occasions to improve the dietary scale. On one occasion I lost the resolution by one vote, which I was sorry for. I intended, if the resolution had been carried, to give them meat, at least, three days a week, which they don't get now. The idea of giving these poor people soup off a cow's head and eight or ten pounds of bacon boiled with that cow's head for two or three days a week, and stout for the other three days, I don't think is a proper treatment.

3881. You think there ought to be a better dietary?—I do.

3883. It has not been adopted to the full?—It has not; the Guardians sometimes say these people are well treated, better than some of the ratepayers, but that, I think, does not follow because these people have been compelled to seek this place as a refuge or home in their old days. I think I would go in for an improved dietary scale, and, if possible, I would change the appearance of the workhouse wherever it exists, because they seem to me now to be nothing better than the inside of a jail—not as happy-looking as the inside of a jail. They should be placed on the same principle, if possible I would say by State aid, as the present asylums.

3884. A capitation grant?—If these imbeciles and harmless lunatics were transferred to an asylum you would receive the capitation grant, and it would cost a mere trifle more to keep these people in the asylums than it does in the unions; you get about £16 of a capitation grant, and about £20 odd is the average price, not including the buildings, of the cost of lunatics; the total amount per head would be about £33 odd; but taking the cost of buildings, the average cost in the lunatic asylum generally is something under £19, or £20 10s., and you get 4s. per head per week of a capitation grant, which amounts to £19 8s. in the year. And the average cost of aged and infirm, you may say three for hospital treatment, is, with 6s., 2s. 6d. a week, which amounts to 28 5s., and with £20 it would be £28, so that the country would sustain no loss by sending these people to the asylums. Then, in regard to workhouses, I think some of the workhouses should be done away with, but at the same time I think the Government should give the power to County Councils to raise money to start industries in some of the disused workhouses; that would do the country a service.

3885. By way of loan?—By way of loan or gift, if the Government thought proper; I think they owe us a good deal. Then, with regard to children, I have always advocated the sending out of children to be nursed from a very early age—even from six weeks old.

3886. As soon as the doctor says they may be safely let out?—Yes. I find girls, in particular, that are nursed in the workhouses, when they come to be free from the control of the Board of Guardians, go out on hire, and before twelve or eighteen months expire they return back into the house accompanied by more than themselves. I have known some of these young girls in the Enniskillen Workhouse to have had two or three children, and these only mere girls; they are in contact with those that have been unfortunate in the house; there is nothing good imbedded into these little girls' minds, but what is bad, and when they go out they have been educated up to the full standard of immorality. Then with regard to boys, too, I have never seen one leaving the house yet, that was retained in the house until fifteen or sixteen years of age, but was useless to those in the country. The Local Government Board have some stringent rules, which are useful, I am sure, for an orphan—that an orphan must be retained under the control of the Guardians, a boy until fifteen and a girl until sixteen. If a boy is hired out under fourteen years of age there is generally the condition made that the person who hires him shall pay a certain amount, which is to go for clothing him; also that he should get a certain number of hours at school each day, which is very useful, but very few farmers are willing to take them on those conditions; therefore they remain in the house, and when they come to be fifteen years of age they are no use; they are nothing but the walls of the workhouse. Then there is another question. I think that dispensary committees should be reformed so as to have supervision over the medical officers; formerly they met weekly in most places, and they had a great deal of supervision over the doctors; there are a great many kind and sympathetic doctors, but a great many dispensary doctors are sometimes rough, careless, and negligent in their duties. Very often people may complain to the Guardian, but that Guardian, in all probability, does not wish to bring it before the Board of Guardians at their next meeting to discuss the conduct of this doctor last he would be called before a Local Government Inspector to render an account of what he had done. But in dispensary committees, as a rule, the tickets are examined each week, that is where the committee met, as in Kinnikillan; they examined all the tickets, the Guardians knew exactly where relief should be extended, and it kept the doctor in his place, but, at the same time, I don't say that you should return to the system of giving that power into the hands of a committee for the election of a medical officer.

3597. Would you prefer it should be in the hands of the whole Board?—I would prefer that of the whole Board.

3598. Just the power of supervision and examining the books?—Yes.

3599. That is a matter that is outside our reference; we could not make a recommendation of that kind; but a great many Guardians here, just as you have done, expressed in a few words that opinion; it will appear on the notes of the evidence, but we have no power!—Then, sir, with regard to outdoor relief, and then I am done. I have never agreed with the way outdoor relief was given with us, for this reason, that it was given with a very stingy hand. If a father of a family died and his widow was left with five or six children, who depended on him, and the relieving officer made an application, which I know has occurred in Kinnikillan, that this poor woman should get some weekly outdoor relief—some of these children were very young; I knew an instance where the last baby was only eight months old—a Guardian will rise up in his place in the board-room and say "Why should not this woman and her children come into the house; giving outdoor relief is a bad system." It may be a bad system, but the idea of a Guardian saying that these five or six children should come in at an average cost of 25s. a week to support them, whereas 5s. or 6s. a week given to these people would enable this poor woman to keep her children and her little home together instead of breaking it up. I think the Local Government Board should give more power to relieving officers or Guardians.

3600. They have the fullest power!—I know they have, but they are constrained very often by the Board of Guardians. Another thing, I don't think—it is possible that this Commission could recommend it—that outdoor relief should disfranchise the people who receive it; I think it is a grievance that prevents many persons who are in utter destitution from applying for outdoor relief, because they would be disfranchised. It may look simple in Carron where the people are divided, as in Fermanagh, politically, it is a great thing to us; we don't want to lose any power.

3601. Mr. MURKIN.—Still you do think that outdoor relief, when judiciously administered, and on a liberal scale, is a good thing?—It saves many a home and saves the people from the cry of pauperism.

3602. You think it would be a crime to compel that woman to come into the house?—That woman would not do it. I happen to be connected with a charitable society, and I have known cases where it was necessary to relieve them, and I know them to be in utter destitution, and when the society I belong to could not give sufficient to enable these people to live the women would go out and beg for the little children sooner than enter the workhouse, and then the police come down on these poor people and summon them for begging.

3603. CHAIRMAN.—You have experience as a member of a charitable organisation?—I have. I wish you could give the outdoor relief into our hands too.

3604. You do administer a good deal of money in that way?—Sometimes up to £100 a year.

3605. Are you also the means of putting charitable people in contact with those who are suffering?—Yes, sir; very often. I make that statement at the board that I know of my own knowledge that these people are suffering from destitution.

3606. Yes; but I mean your charitable organisation, in addition to the money it spends, will be the means of introducing deserving cases to the notice of people who have money to spend?—When a case like this is mentioned by the relieving officer I can assist that case of my own personal knowledge.

3608. Is it your opinion that in Kinnikillan and the neighbourhood around you a great deal of the money is thus spent in charity?—A great deal.

3609. And, no matter what outdoor relief was given, charitable expenditure would, naturally, go on on the part of the charitably disposed?—Yes; and they are receiving it irrespective of religion. Then there is just one thing more, and that is in regard to tramps. I myself proposed a resolution at the Board of Guardians which has never been acted upon; it was carried unanimously. That is that each tramp coming there should be compelled to break a cart, of stones each morning before he got his discharge, and their wives should be compelled to go into the laundry and work a certain time, say, in scrubbing the floors. The Master has never put that into operation; everything is depending on this Commission; everything is adjourned until this Commission is finished.

3610. Mr. MURKIN.—Is it their custom to go in couples?—Oh, yes; they never go without their women.

Mr. THOMAS JOSEPH SMITH examined.

Mr. Thomas Joseph Smith.

3611. CHAIRMAN.—You are the Chairman of the Carron Board of Guardians?—Yes.

3612. What is your view as to the amalgamation of workhouses in the County Carron?—Well, I could hardly tell you whether it would be beneficial or not, but I think there are a great many alterations that are necessary to be made; that is, we have portions of our county going to Glasgow and there is portion of Cotehill Union in closer proximity to Carron than it is to Cotehill.

3613. Do you think it would be proper a question for the amalgamation of boundaries?—Yes.

3614. Have you any scheme or map prepared showing what boundaries you suggest?—I have not.

3615. Perhaps you would kindly undertake to prepare such a map?—Our clerk, Mr. Green, may be able to explain that.

3616. If you did send in such a map the Commission would be very glad to receive it?—The board were in favour of amalgamation, but I, personally, would not think it much benefit.

3617. You would not be in favour of closing up any workhouse?—I think it would not be any saving to the rates, because in the closing up of the jail here I don't think it saved any money. We had a jail here, and it was closed up, and I don't think the ratepayers gained any benefit by it.

3618. And I suppose it was a certain loss to the town?—Yes.

3620. We have seen them ourselves?—They all get sufficient food, and all seem to be happy, and I would like to hear testimony to the great eating and the great attention that has been paid not only to the lunatics since the Sisters came to the union, but to the whole house; they have created a saving in clothing and improved the general appearance and the general aspect of the whole house, and with regard to the infirmary—I have been in several hospitals in Dublin—and I think there is no greater attention paid to any patient in any Dublin hospital than there is in our own greater cleanliness, and any person who has gone through these speaks in the highest terms of it.

3621. Are you in favour of boarding out children here?—Yes; we have a number of them boarded out in our union; any that we can.

3622. Would you be in favour of having additional?

Nov. 25, 1903.
Mr. Thomas
Joseph Smith.

powers given to the Guardians, such as taking away children from unworthy parents and boarding them out?—Yes; in any case we could.

8612. You would, as far as possible, exclude all children from workhouses?—Some of them would be better cared; in every case it is not easy to get a proper person to take proper care of the children. The children are taken care of by the Sisters, who see that they are properly clad and fed, and we have a school teacher there that pays every attention to them.

8614. Have you found any difficulty so far?—In some cases we have ordered in children we had out on that account.

8615. And boarded them out with other people?—The parties that had them we gave them another chance, and made the relieving officer keep a closer supervision over them, and they have improved.

8616. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—You seem to have a large number of children in Cloran Workhouse; can you estimate that?—Not so very large.

8617. According to the last report it was thirty-seven?—That is not a very large number considering the extent of the union; our union is valued to £117,600, and I think you would not count that a large number of children.

8618. It is comparatively large, because it is as much as all the other three—Ballisodare, Barnaby, and Coochill?—But our union is one-third of the county, and 1d. in the £2 on the rates produces £460 7s. 6d. We often had twice as many children in the house as at the present time.

8619. Still, you do approve of boarding out children?—Yes; every case that the Guardians think judicious, and we have applications for more children.

8620. You would like to see the inmates and epileptics taken out of the workhouses and placed somewhere else where they could get a better treatment?—Yes.

8621. Does the question of tramps bother you very much?—Not very much; the cost of their supper and breakfast is only about 3d. or 3½d., and we get them to do a quantity of work in the way of sacking graves, clearing the house, and breaking stones, and I think it would be better, at the expense of 3d. a night, to have them there than to perhaps have them staying in a hazyard or perhaps burning it, and then a malicious injury claim coming on the district; it would be better to give them a night's lodging at that small expense.

8622. You would not believe in adopting any other methods in regard to tramps?—Keeping them working would be quite sufficient; having a certain amount of work allotted to them each morning before they leave.

8623. A power to the Guardians to keep them a few days?—No; I would not keep them only a few hours; we consider a few hours long enough; we generally keep them working in the morning until eleven o'clock; if you retain them any longer you would be compelled to give them their dinner.

8624. As a deterrent, would it not be well to have the Guardians so empowered that they could detain them for two or three days if they so desired, if they thought it would prevent them going to a neighbouring fair or having some festive enjoyment?—Some of them would be inclined to stop with you entirely after being there two or three days; they would get so used to the place they would not like to leave at all. Then the question would arise, when you once admit them and they tell you they are destitute, how could you remove them.

8625. Give them their discharge, as you do now; you would be in the same position, with larger powers; you might use them or not use them if you like; that did not strike you before?—Well, no. I think it would be well in the case of those able-bodied tramps who never do any work, but with the helpless women and children it would be a very hard thing.

8626. We don't consider women and children as tramps?—They are generally the majority on that list.

8627. As a rule, when people speak of tramps they mean men who are strolling round; vagrants round the country?—When the men come they generally have a woman and two or three children, so I don't see how you can exclude women and children from the list. Of course it is seldom the men would go in and leave the women and children outside; it would be well if you could admit the women and children and exclude the men.

8628. Would it not be well for the local body to have some control over these children who are being raised as professional vagrants and take them away from their parents—the children of habitual tramps?—I think the cost would be very serious; if you take and send them to an institution and have to pay for them I would not approve of it.

8629. But, still, you would stamp out the occupation of vagrancy by that means, and as the long run it might become a saving instead of a cost?—I think if the Government would take other steps and prevent the thing of belied-singing and games on the streets, I think it would prevent the tramps from accumulating or going through the country.

8630. CHAIRMAN.—You think we have too much amusement in this country?—Too much of that class of amusement. I think it would stamp out tramps more than anything else. If they had not something to do at these fairs and races they would have no occupation in those places, and would turn their hand to something else more industrious.

8631. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Your house does not seem to be afflicted with tramps very much; perhaps you have a stalwart Master?—We have a Master second in none.

8632. How does he treat them?—Do you give them a bath?—No; they break stones.

8633. Dr. BARNES.—Do you believe that the sick poor in your workhouses are treated as well as they should be?—Could not be better treated in any hospital in Ireland.

8634. Are the arrangements all that you could desire?—Yes.

8635. What sort of an ambulance have you?—We have a new four-wheeled ambulance ordered.

8636. Have you any special treatment for consumptives?—Yes; we have a large fever hospital built to accommodate 124 patients, and when there come any consumptive patients we put them in portion of the fever hospital.

8637. Have you recommended it in any way?—It is not long built; it is one of the best in all Ireland for the fever hospital.

8638. Have you good ventilation?—We have good windows and good ventilation, and a splendid steam—yes of the best.

8639. CHAIRMAN.—You have recently improved the drainage of the fever hospital?—Yes.

8640. Dr. BARNES.—How short the infirmary?—The only thing we have recommended for the infirmary is a few additional iron beds with hair mattresses, which we intend to get under the late report of the Inspector.

8641. You are getting them now?—Yes.

8642. But the straw beds are still there?—Yes; but we have only just got the report.

8643. Have you baths and waterclosets?—There are no baths, certainly, all over the house.

8644. Hot and cold water?—No.

8645. Laid on to the baths?—No.

Mr. Robert H.
Jennison.

Mr. ROBERT H. JENNISON, A.P., examined.

8646. CHAIRMAN.—You wish to make some statement of your views about the amalgamation of unions in this country?—I may say I am in favour of amalgamation of unions; certainly so far as the County Council is concerned. I have been twenty years associated with the Barnaby Board of Guardians. I believe it would tend to reduce the rates of the county by amalgamation.

8647. Do you think any hardship would be imposed on the sick?—Of course in amalgamating the unions I take it the District Councils would remain. Then, of course, I don't think there would be any hardship to the sick poor so far as our workhouse is concerned; it is built to accommodate over 500 poor, and at present they number about sixty-two; and I would approve of making some use of these workhouses that it would be considered advisable to discontinue, and I think the best use they could be possibly put to would be to use them as auxiliary asylums for harmless lunatics.

8648. How many would you break up in the County Council?—I would break up Coochill, Ballisodare, and Barnaby. I approve of one workhouse for the county, and that all the aged and infirm and general paupers would be accommodated there; I would remove the children entirely out of the workhouse and have them nursed out and cared out. I think that is the best system that could possibly be adopted. We adopt it in Barnaby as far as we possibly can, and find it is a great saving; it only costs half the money to keep with, and the children are much better looked after and are cleared out of an atmosphere which we know is not very conducive to the children's education.

8640. Mr. MURKIN.—What would you suggest with regard to the children of tramps?—I think if it ultimately would result, as I think it would after a considerable time, in getting rid of this horrible tramp nuisance, I think it would be very well worth the expense to the ratepayers to put upon themselves the extra burden of looking after these children. One needs these tramps on the road with their children grazing after them, and it is a terrible disgrace to a civilised country to see these ragged children—brought up to the worst type of thieving and robbing, and it would certainly be a great move for the better caring of these tramp children. I know the objection to it will be raised that it will add to the rates; but, as a very large ratepayer, probably about the largest in the Bawby Union, I would willingly contribute whatever addition it would be to get rid of the tramp nuisance, and also have these children brought up on a proper system, which they are not at present.

8650. Is the class a numerous one?—I think it is fairly numerous; they are constantly brought before me; they are kept in the workhouse usually a night before the fair in Bawby; they come out to the fair; they have money enough in their pocket, wherever they get it, and they generally wind up by getting drunk in the fair, and they are brought up by the police to be discharged, as there is no advantage in summarising them. The Bawby Union is a very central place between Kinnickullen, Omea, and Melish, and they tramp that way.

8651. You would approve of a change in the law to enable Guardians to deal with them?—I would. Mr. McGovern gave a very good suggestion, that power should be given to the Master to retain them for three days if he thought necessary, and make them work during those three days. I think it would tend greatly to deter them from coming there.

8653. You think the distances between the workhouses and the fact that they would be detained for several days would be a deterrent to the tramp?—I believe it would; they make a convenience of it for one night before attending a fair or something of that sort; they make use of it. I am almost certain the Master of our workhouse does not make them work, and I very often have spoken of that at the board, and said he should do it. If they were detained for two or three days and made work I don't think they would come back again.

8654. In some places they do adopt that present?—Yes; in Omea I think they do; but Mr. Smith said they only kept them a few hours, and they cannot do very much work when they are detained for that time. They are a very great nuisance, there is no doubt of it. It has been suggested that if the workhouses were not designated the boundaries should be enlarged. I think that would be a very good idea too; but my view is that amalgamation is the proper system to work on if it can be carried out by turning these present workhouses to some useful purpose. The first thing should be that there should be district hospitals, and, where it could be practicable, to turn these into auxiliary asylums. The drawback, as Mr. McGovern has said, and quite rightly, in the ratepayers have an objection because the Government grant allowed for auxiliary asylums is only 2s. instead of 4s. for the regularity-occupied asylum. I think that is a great drawback, and if it was properly represented to the Government I don't see why they should not grant the same sum to auxiliary asylums, but if that was absolutely impossible to carry out I would still be of opinion that it would be advisable to turn these into auxiliary asylums.

8655. CHAIRMAN.—What would you do with the aged and infirm?—I would let them go to the county workhouse. I don't think there is that great sympathetic wave of sentiment amongst those aged and infirm that Dr. Ryan very laudably described. I never heard it expressed in our union that they would have any objection to go to Omea. I don't think that feeling would enter into the question at all.

8656. Dr. BROWN.—Do you think after they are in a workhouse for a few years that their friends visit them at all?—I don't think so; I don't think they bother their heads about it.

8657. So that they don't see the familiar faces and hear the familiar voices?—I don't think they do at all. I see that the Ballisborough Workhouse is probably worked on the most expensive lines of any of the workhouses in this county; the average cost is something like 5s. 2d., and Bawby is only 2s. 10d.; I think the Ballisborough ratepayers ought to be more inclined for amalgamation than even we are, judging from what they have to pay.

8658. Mr. MURKIN.—Is that the county rate you are giving us?—No; the weekly charge per head.

8659. CHAIRMAN.—Their rate is 1s. 4d., and yours is 10d. for Poor Law purposes, and there is not much difference in the valuation?—If the valuations were enlarged—I know a great deal about that Glen district; I was agent over a large property in Dowers for years; I know it very well, and I know the feeling of the people that they would not like to come to Bawby; we have discussed it often, and, geographically, they are perfectly right; they have to cross that very heavy mountain, over 2,000 feet above sea-level, Omea Mountain.

8660. You don't mean to say the road goes right over the top?—Not exactly; there is a gap; there is very often snow there up to the middle of May, and in winter time it is impossible to go through it. I have gone there myself and had to turn back. I think the people themselves would be very much opposed to going to Bawby on that ground. To Kinnickullen they have a railway at Belcoo, and a very good road from Dowers there. I think it would be a very good move to have a cottage hospital at Dowers or between Dowers and Blacklion. People that meet with accidents there or get sick suffer very much being brought to Kinnickullen. With regard to the women that frequent workhouses, I think it would be a great matter if they could be sent to some home; it is a very difficult matter, and very hard to know how to work out anything feasible.

8661. Mr. MURKIN.—You don't see any insurmountable difficulty?—I don't see it.

8662. The question has been raised in other places, and gentlemen connected with charitable institutions of the kind suggested don't seem to see any difficulty?—I don't think there would be any great difficulty myself, and it would be a very good idea if it can be worked out. Of course their children ought to be sent out with the others, and nursed and cared for. We suffer a good deal in Bawby from that kind of thing.

8663. There would be a difficulty about these girls going out afterwards and claiming their children?—I would say the present law should be altered; I don't think they ought to be able to claim a child again.

8664. Dr. BROWN.—Do you know of any cases that go from Bawby to the County Omea, Infirmary?—Yes; there are.

8665. Do you know what means there are for giving orders of admission?—I don't know really how they get orders of admission except from the committee of management.

8666. Are there any of Omea in the neighbourhood of Bawby who can give these orders?—No; I don't think so.

8667. Taking the last few years, do you know how many cases have gone from that neighbourhood?—I cannot say.

8668. Do you know of any?—I know of one or two.

8669. Why did they go when they could get into the workhouse?—There is a great objection to going into the workhouse.

8670. How could the workhouse be improved?—In the first place you would have to do away with the name of workhouse altogether.

8671. Separate the hospital from the workhouse?—Yes. Of course if you establish a hospital it would, I presume, be called some other name, such as district hospital; that would get over the great difficulty at once, but I know there is a great feeling of objection. I myself had a case of it where a servant in my house—I am only 100 yards from the workhouse—got scurvy fever, and the doctor ordered her to be removed to the workhouse infirmary, and had it not been that she was a good while in our service I don't think she would have gone there. She objected to go simply because she thought it was going into the workhouse.

8672. If there was a district hospital would the small farmers pay to go in there?—Oh, yes; they would pay.

8673. Mr. MURKHAM.—Have you any views on the question of rating; have you any preference for a large area or a small one? the question has been raised that the dispensary district should be the area for the Poor Law purposes; have you any views on that matter?—I think that would be a very good area to take.

8674. It is considered the electoral division is rather small and the union is rather big?—Yes; and really there is great congestion on those boards. I think the business would be much better managed and much quicker got through if the representation was smaller, and, of course, it could be done by extending the district for representation—that the dispensary district should return representatives. I think the ratepayers would be fairly represented by dispensary areas; that would be my view.

would be the proper thing to do; it would relieve you a great deal of the cost of deciding whether a person was to get 1s. or 1s. 6d. in outdoor relief, or not get it at all. I did succeed on two occasions in having all the names struck out on the outdoor relief list, and I tried to have it carried out that they should only be put on a doctor's certificate that they were unfit to be removed to the house. It worked for a while, but fell back again. The Guardians are placed in an awkward position. Nowadays it is not the thing to take away the control of the expenditure from the man who is paying the rates, and that is the only objection to it; but certainly, I think, something ought to be done; outdoor relief is increasing very much.

8676. CHAIRMAN.—You are not absolutely opposed to outdoor relief in certain cases; for instance, if a widow were left with a few children, would you think she ought to have any outdoor relief?—I would rather give her outdoor relief. I am not absolutely against outdoor relief. I think there are cases where it is much more judicious to give outdoor relief, but it is terribly abused. I have been a Guardian for twenty years, and I don't think I have put the names of three people on the outdoor relief list during that time. I know that no person is left out who really is entitled to it, and I would support the applications of bona fide people entitled to outdoor relief. But I am very much opposed to giving outdoor relief to those who are not qualified for it, and ought to be able to work, and have got some land.

8677. Mr. MURKHAM.—They don't give it to people who have land?—I am afraid they do. I have known cases where it is being done. I think we have got some on our list at the present time where, if it was investigated, they have got land.

8678. CHAIRMAN.—It is given to a member of the family I suppose?—It may be worked in that way, but I don't know.

8679. CHAIRMAN.—You are the doctor of the Bawnboy Workhouse?—Yes.

8680. If the Bawnboy Workhouse was broken up, in your opinion would it be necessary to retain some place for the treatment of the sick?—It would.

8681. How many sick have you in your hospital at present?—Twenty-six, and that is the average.

8682. That is in addition to the fever?—Yes; we have no fever at present.

8683. Dr. BROGAN.—Do you get many paying patients into the workhouse hospital?—We do; a few fever patients principally.

8684. But non-infectious cases?—No; I don't think we do.

8685. Have you any cases in your mind that you think would have been improved by hospital treatment that were not sent in?—No; I have not.

8686. You are the dispensary doctor?—No; I am not.

8687. If the hospital was separated from the workhouse would it be availed of by a larger class?—I think so; I find that they have an objection, and the only objection they have to going to hospital is the name of the workhouse.

8688. How could it be dissociated from the workhouse?—Except by doing away with the workhouse. If the aged and infirm were taken out of the Bawnboy Workhouse we would have none at all—no inmates at all. They are all infirm and old except the idiots and imbeciles and children.

8689. Regarding the cases that are in the workhouse—the old and infirm—do you find that their friends visit them?—No, I do not; it is only worse cases that the friends visit.

8690. It would not matter then whether they were a Bawnboy or ten miles away?—I don't think they would mind at all; they don't, as a rule, receive any visits—those that are a long time in the house. It is only patients that come in—acute cases—that their friends visit. I think they would have very little objection to leaving it.

8691. Mr. MURKHAM.—Is there much consumption in your neighbourhood?—There is not.

8692. You have no cases at the present time?—I have one. We have no consumption ward, and in case this would be retained for a hospital we would require to have a fever hospital built; as at present we have no fever hospital, practically speaking; there are only two wards for all the fever cases we get, and we have no closets or water supply and no lavatories, so that the present fever accommodation is really only temporary.

8693. Dr. BROGAN.—But supposing the workhouse was done away with, would you not have plenty of buildings that could be converted into a hospital?—Even then it would require lots of alteration.

8694. CHAIRMAN.—Leaving the present infirmary for a fever hospital and removing the present sick to one of the front blocks?—Yes, the middle block, and turning the infirmary into a fever hospital. I think that would be a very good change.

8695. Dr. BROGAN.—More useful than having a workhouse in the district?—Yes.

Mr. John
Masterson.

Mr. JOHN MASTERSON examined.

8696. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of Grenada No. 2?—No; No. 1.

8697. That is in the County Longford?—But I come to represent the three districts.

8698. It is No. 2 we have before us to-day; what are the views of the people of No. 2 as regards the amalgamation of unions or the separation of portions of the union?—If you take away the five divisions it would mean 2d. in the 2 upon the remaining divisions.

8699. You are representing the views now of Grenada No. 2. They are in favour of coming to Owen Union?—They are in favour of retaining the five divisions.

8700. Of the five divisions coming to the Owen Union?—No; in favour of keeping them with Grenada No. 1.

8701. Are not the views of No. 1 and No. 2 in conflict?—I was sent to represent the union, meaning 1, 2, and 3.

8702. You were sent to say that in the opinion of the Guardians, as a body, No. 2 ought not to be allowed to come to Owen?—Yes.

8703. Is that the view of No. 2 itself?—It is.

8704. They recently applied to be joined to Owen?—They have changed their mind?—No, sir; five of the Guardians of No. 2 signed to be allowed to remain in Gesard, and their reasons are that it would be a great inconvenience to the poor of Gesard that they should have to travel a great distance.

8705. If the hospital were left at Gesard?—If the hospital were taken away.

8707. When the Guardians who asked to be transferred to Cavan are now in favour of remaining with Gesard?—I mean that five of them signed to be allowed to remain in Gesard. Lord Longford came into the union broken up, and after an inquiry it was found it would be more useful and more convenient to the general number of ratepayers to have it remain where it is. These Guardians, of course, being so far away from Cavan would find it difficult to attend, but being so near Gesard they find it quite easy to come in, and, consequently, if our union was taken away it would mean disfranchisement to these Guardians who would have to travel so far.

Mr. Brady.—I will answer for Cavan when my turn comes.

8708. CHAIRMAN.—I thought there was some difference of opinion?—Then it would be a great inconvenience to the sick poor to have to travel so far. A very large majority of our board in 1891 forwarded you a petition asking you to retain the union in Gesard, and the Catholic clergy of the Cavan divisions are in favour, and, of course, they should know the requirements of the poor, and they are in favour of leaving the union where it is. We don't like to lose the Cavan people or the Cavan Guardians.

8709. Mr. MURKIN.—Good people in Cavan?—They are.

8710. Good payers; high valuation?—The valuation is very good, too. Then I want to say this, that recently a Local Government inquiry was held in Gesard at the instance of the Cavan County Council to see if it would be desirable to take the Cavan divisions from Gesard Union and transfer them to Cavan, and the Local Government Board refused to do so on several grounds, and the same question was raised by Lord Longford lately, and with the same result.

8711. CHAIRMAN.—Not lately; surely there was no other inquiry?—No, sir; Lord Longford's was formerly. I must say for myself I was always in favour of amalgamation.

8712. With some other union?—With some other union, until one of our best financiers, Secretary of the County Council, and one of our largest ratepayers, Mr. Thomas Edgeworth, represented to us, when examined upon his oath, that our rates would be something like 6d. in the £ higher if we joined with any other union.

Mr. THOMAS MICHAEL FAIRBANKS CONTINUED.

8714. You are one of the Board of Guardians; what is your view of amalgamation?—Dr. Ryan has so fully and exhaustively stated his views on the question, with which I am in substantial agreement, that I have hardly anything to add to that; but the feelings of the people and of the Council are most decidedly against amalgamation.

8715. On what ground; they prefer things left as they are?—They believe it would lead to increased expense, and they have already expended a considerable amount on improvements on the workhouse, and they don't like to see that going for nothing. In addition to that there would be considerable difficulty and expense in conveying patients from Ballisborough to Cavan, if Cavan were made the centre, and a certain amount of hardship inflicted upon the poor and infirm that would be conveyed there.

8716. Mr. MURKIN.—On the head of expenses, it seems that the rate in Ballisborough Union is 50 per cent. higher than in the neighbouring union of Bawnboy; if you were united with Bawnboy would not your rate decrease instead of increasing?—The consideration of amalgamating Ballisborough with Bawnboy is rather heated.

These figures to myself, as a ratepayer, hardly frightened me. I should not like to be paying 6d. in the £ more and travelling a greater distance to some other union.

8717. If you found it was the other way about, and you would save 6d., what would be your opinion?—If I found the rates were lower I would be very pleased to amalgamate, but I believe the rates would be higher.

8718. If the Commission here were able to make a scheme, having now the whole of Ireland to deal with, not one or two unions; if they were able to submit a scheme that would make a big saving rather than a loss, would that change your view?—If you give me figures that showed that I would go in for it, but Mr. Edgeworth went into it very fully.

8719. But he was only dealing with one union, not with a great scheme of change in the Poor Law system?—You know he is a higher ratepayer than I am, and when he is so anxious to keep away amalgamation I thought I should be, and then a number of ratepayers of value of £450 or £500 spoke to me and asked me to do my best to retain the union; they did not like the idea of changing it over when the ratepayers would suffer.

8720. Mr. MURKIN.—You did not examine the figures put forth by this gentleman?—No, sir.

8721. You don't know on what basis he made his calculations?—He went so clearly into them; I was completely myself for amalgamation until I saw how reasonable his figures were and how clearly he proved his case, and then I was turned against amalgamation. We have a little friction in our union, but when that is done away with it will be all right.

8722. It is, I hope, in a fair way of settlement?—It remains in your hands to settle it, if you can; it is quite easily settled.

8723. You would be an amalgamator if you were certain some economy would be brought about?—That word "if" makes a great difference.

8724. The recommendation would be hardly made by this Commission if there was not an absolute certainty that there was going to be economy; that is the essence of our anxiety?—I cannot possibly go beyond Mr. Edgeworth's figures.

8725. CHAIRMAN.—We hope to see him when we go down to your county?—Then, again, there was Mr. Telford, who came down there and clearly proved that the rates of Gesard would be far and away higher if we joined with any other union.

8726. Mr. MURKIN.—Is that due to the fact that Gesard is a rich neighbourhood and the rest of the county is poor?—I would not like to say the rest of the county is poor, but Gesard is a rich locality. I cannot speak for the rest of the county.

8727. Do you not think it would be a reasonable thing for the Cavan people to get their own county to themselves?—I would like to see them go if it would not be a sacrifice to the rest of the county, but I would like to see them remain if it was an advantage to the rest of the county and themselves.

8728. Amalgamating the unions in the county, I am taking a neighbouring union?—I am not able to offer an opinion on the subject; I have not gone into it.

8729. On the question of expense it is clear that if there was an amalgamation of Ballisborough with Bawnboy the rate in Ballisborough would be considerably reduced?—The increased rate in Ballisborough is largely due to the improvements we have carried out in the workhouse and infirmary, and also to the number of labourers' cottages we have built.

8730. CHAIRMAN.—That has nothing to do with it; this is the Poor Law rate merely; that has nothing to do with labourers' cottages. Any work you carried out in the workhouse did you get a loan for it?—Yes.

CHAIRMAN.—Then it would not come into the rate at all.

8731. Mr. MURKIN.—Besides the labourers' cottages, instead of being a cost in any county in Ulster, are an advantage, because so far as built that you are getting them for nothing, the grant is so much greater?—There are eighty-one in Ballisborough Union, so you think it is to our advantage and profit to build so many cottages?

CHAIRMAN.—You get them very cheap; you get a good many for nothing out of the grant.

Mr. MURKIN.—Up to a certain number it is profitable.

8733. CHAIRMAN.—That that does not come out of the Poor Law expenditure. Your rate for Poor Law purposes only amounted to 1s. 4½d. for the year ending 31st March, 1861; that is a good deal the highest in the county. Barnaby is 10½d., Carran 12d., Cooteshill 8½d.—That is due to an improved scale of districtry.

8733. That was all sound—it did not seem to be carried out in Barnaby. I have not gone very fully into the matter myself.

8734. But you are clear the people of the neighbourhood are opposed?—Yes; that is what I am chiefly here for; besides, Dr. Ryan has pretty fully gone into the question.

8735. Dr. BROOK.—One of your objections to amalgamation was the amount of money you expended on the workhouse?—Yes.

8736. Was not most of it, or all of it, spent on the hospital?—Nearly all.

8737. Supposing the hospital was retained, would not that objection disappear?—It would.

Mr. Edward
Smith.

8738. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Cooteshill Board?—Vice-Chairman, and I have been a Guardian for fourteen years.

8739. Are you a County Monaghan man or a County Carran?—County Carran.

8740. What is your view about the continuance of the Cooteshill Union as it exists?—We had a meeting some fortnight or three weeks ago, and by a large majority the Guardians decided against amalgamation; they decided we ought to remain separate as we were. The only people who opposed it were the members from Monaghan—one district, Roscrea—they would rather go to Monaghan. I think the idea of Monaghan is only to have two workhouses—one in Monaghan and the other in Charlestown—and they would have sooner gone to one of those, I understand.

8741. What were the figures; did it virtually mean a division between Carran and Monaghan some?—I think all the Carran men were in favour of keeping up the workhouse and the Monaghan men were in favour of breaking it up; I forget the exact number—I think it was something like nineteen to nine.

8742. Your hospital has been greatly improved lately?—Yes; and we have a sanatorium now—these outdoor homes for consumptives.

8743. That is doing a great deal of good?—I believe in it.

8744. We had the figures yesterday?—And we have done many other things in the hospital. I think it is as much up to date as any local hospital.

8745. But with very few patients?—We have twenty-three now.

8746. That is counting consumptive people; but in the hospital proper?—There are eight consumptives at present. But on the question of infirmaries, it was suggested here that it should be a county-at-large charge; that would meet with the approval of the Cooteshill Guardians. And as regards the infirmary, I have had a book of admission tickets now for over five years, but I have only given two for the County Carran infirmary, and I think at the rate we are paying, and everything, they are very expensive patients for us to send.

8747. Dr. BROOK.—Is the reason for that because you have got a good hospital of your own?—No; I don't think that has anything to do with it; people don't seem to care to go such a distance from home to charity. I have asked the local doctors about it, and they said they have often asked the people if they would not like to go into the county infirmary, and they have always answered "no." These are the only two cases I know of—one was a man in the workhouse and the other a farmer just outside of Cooteshill, who paid for himself, I believe.

8748. Is there any person in the neighbourhood to give lines for the county infirmary besides yourself?—I don't think so; I am not certain whether the parish priest does.

8749. CHAIRMAN.—Would Dr. Moorhead likely have got some people in?—I don't know; the two patients I sent came to me from the dispensary doctor, Dr. McQuaid.

8750. Are you at home the whole year?—I am eight or nine months of the year.

8751. Dr. BROOK.—Is it not possible that other patients might have gone in?—I think I would have heard of them, because I am a governor of the infirmary.

8752. Have you made any inquiries about it?—Not lately; but before that I did; and I found it did not average one a year.

8753. CHAIRMAN.—You would make the sick a county charge?—Yes, the sick; and, if necessary, call it by a different name—district hospital.

8754. If all the able-bodied and other classes of destitute were taken away it would cease to be a workhouse, and become a hospital, pure and simple?—Yes; but we don't consider it would be advantageous to the ratepayers of our district to send them to one workhouse, as was suggested at the beginning of the inquiry; we consider that if there must be amalgamation there ought to be at least one workhouse for each electoral division of the county.

8755. Mr. MURPHY.—That is a parliamentary division?—Yes; that is my own private opinion.

8756. CHAIRMAN.—Carran is pretty central for the whole county?—So would Cooteshill be for the east end, soon. Of course we have a good many County Monaghan people already in our union, and if Carran were cut up it would be very easy for us to take more of the County Monaghan people on account of the railway facilities.

8757. Mr. MURPHY.—There seems a desire on the part of some of the Guardians that the county should be self-contained; now Carran, Monaghan might want to take some of Carran?—If it could be done it would be a better system.

8758. It would be a better system to have each county an authority in itself?—Yes, I think so; that is my private opinion. I think it is very objectionable having a body of men on your councils who are opposed to all your financial arrangements.

8759. What were the grounds on which the Guardians decided there should not be amalgamation?—One thing was on account of the distance, and then they considered, on account of the size of our workhouse, it would be better to keep it going for that end of the county than to go to Carran. It is twelve miles by road to Carran. I don't know how many miles it is by train.

8760. The number of destitute poor in the County Carran is only something like 425 or 430; of that 65 there are a number of children; how would you receive the proposition to board out these children?—We do board out as many as we can.

8761. Still you have thirteen in your house?—I don't think we have more than five or six now, unless it went up the last week or two.

8762. You do board out as many as you can?—Yes; I think it is the best principle.

8763. What about the lunatics?—We have sent, I think, all our lunatics to Monaghan. I certainly would not keep lunatics in the workhouse; I don't think they are properly treated.

8765. These people are chronic cases that remain in the house for years?—I think there is a fair percentage that go out in the summer and come back in the winter; I think we have always a little chronic every year. Our chronic, I think, are all back again now.

8766. What about changing the area for raising ad-representative purposes from a small electoral division to a larger one?—I did not go into that question.

8767. You know if there is amalgamation there will be some difficulty in getting the Guardians to attend. Supposing there was a question of amalgamation, one thing would have to be done—that the meetings of the boards would have to be held less often than at present. Do you think that would meet the requirements of the case?—If you reduce the numbers on the amalgamated boards to reach the same numbers as you have on the separate boards, I don't think you could go on with the same number of Guardians; supposing you amalgamated two unions with the numbers you have at present you would have ninety or a hundred Guardians to meet, and you would have to build a special hall for them almost to meet.

Mr. EDWARD SMITH continued.

8765. If you enlarge the area of representation you will get out of that difficulty; if the dispensary districts was taken as the area, and four or five representatives elected for that?—That would be the only way to do it.

8766. Do you think that would be fairer than leaving it in the hands of the County Council to appoint members? Do you think that would get at local feeling better?—Certainly.

8767. The suggestion is that the County Council should appoint committees, similar to those for the sanitary and county infirmaries?—I would not like to see the County Council having the power. I have noticed it in the case of the asylum; it is the County Council here select the representatives to go to Monaghan, and I have seen growth in the paper from other divisions, complaining that they have no representation.

8768. We, in Omagh, who are shrewd suspicious, are blamed for monopolising all the positions on the local boards, so I thought we could get rid of that objection by having a larger area from which to elect?—I suppose that would do; I did not go into that particularly.

8769. Would you have a county rate for Poor Law purposes?—I think the union rate is working all right.

8770. You would see no objection to that?—I do think there ought to be more uniformity in the administration of the Poor Law; for instance, I think there ought to be a uniform dietary in all the unions of Ireland, and not have one union spending more than another. I think there ought to be a uniformity given to the inmates, and there should be a uniform dietary through the country; you get one place giving a splendid dietary to the other.

8771. Are you bothered much with tramps?—We get about a thousand a year; we don't give them any work, but keep them in until one o'clock in the day, which prevents them trampng on to the nearest union; Ballinborough and Monaghan are twelve miles each, Castleblagney is seventeen or eighteen. I don't think the ratepayers would care for keeping the tramps for two or three days.

8772. Don't you think the tramps themselves would object to being kept confined; it would keep them from the house again?—It would depend on the weather; they might not mind it in this sort of weather.

8773. Would you adopt some other method, such as sending them over to the police?—Yes, if they become chronic visitors; if the same person comes back inside of two months I should treat him as a vagrant.

8774. And have him presented?—Yes.

8775. Do you not think that Cooteshill would be a very suitable place for an auxiliary asylum for Carran?—I have had that opinion, but the people of Carran do not seem to see it in the same light as I do; I think it would be a very good place for an auxiliary asylum.

8776. The treatment of patients is very good?—Yes; and our doctor takes a lot of care with them; the dietary in Cooteshill, I think, is much better than in most; we are always changing it whenever he suggests anything.

8777. It is a little monotonous, but very liberal?—We are changing it to a dietary of fish. A certain amount of sanitation will have to be done if it is decided to keep Cooteshill on; we ought to have done it before, but in consequence of the inquiry we are keeping it hanging on. The Guardians are quite prepared if it is retained in its present situation to go to some expense in improvements.

Mr. BERNARD McMAHON, Banboy, examined.

8781. CHAIRMAN.—Is the feeling of your Guardians in favor of an amalgamation?—They are in favor of amalgamation, supposing the union was enlarged, or that the workhouse would be made an auxiliary asylum, but if the workhouse, as a workhouse, were closed they are not in favor of that, owing to the way the rate is this year compared with rates in other unions, and the average cost in other unions.

8782. You find yourselves lost?—Yes.

8783. And you think you could not save anything by amalgamation?—Yes; that is the feeling of the board.

8784. But you would like to get some portions of other unions added to your union?—Yes; we considered the Lismashan part, owing to their having so close the lake, and its being nearer to Banboy than to Lismashan, and the Ardara part of Carran; we considered it would benefit by going to Banboy.

8785. Would the Ardara people themselves object?—I don't know.

8786. Is that mainly what you wish to tell us?—That is mainly what I wish. But there is another point with regard to representation; I don't agree entirely with some of the gentlemen here. Formerly, the Guardians had only the poor to look after; now they are generally District Commissioners as well, and they have a great deal of the money of the county to deal with for roads and works, and they are more in touch with the people than even the County Council, and I would certainly say to make the area very large, and the representation small would not meet the views of the people in general, for I believe they were very thankful to England for giving them that much Home Rule to let them make their own laws and spend their own money.

8787. You would rather have the matter managed by District Councils than by committees?—Yes; because they are the chosen representatives of the people, and committees often are not.

8788. Mr. McMAHON.—If the houses are done away with there will be great difficulty in getting Guardians to go a long distance—often or twenty miles—I know that; where two are appointed, when one could not get perhaps the other would go, and if I could see they are doing any harm I would be opposed to them, but they are not, so far as I see.

8789. Nobody suggests they are doing harm, but the convenience of representative men must be considered, and what the Commission wants to know is the best way to outline a scheme to give satisfaction to the public at large, and not to be a burden on the ratepayers—I know that is true; but with regard to outdoor relief, when it is a union charge it is rather abused; one man will say "I will put such a person on outdoor relief," knowing it won't come much on the district he represents.

8790. Would you wish to revert to electoral division rating for outdoor relief purposes?—I would.

Mr. THOMAS SHANNON, Banboy, examined.

8791. To cut matters short, I quite agree with the evidence Mr. McGovern and Mr. McMAHON give you, except that there was one part of Mr. McGovern's evidence I did not agree with. I would approve of the rateable area being a dispensary area of charge instead of a union or electoral division charge; I would think it would be better and more suitable, being a minimum area. Then somebody mentioned about the County Council having some controlling power over the Guardians' expenditure.

8792. CHAIRMAN.—No; but supposing the Guardians of the union were swept away, and the hospital remaining, that that hospital should be managed by a committee composed partly of County Councils and partly co-opted people?—Then would it become a union charge or a rural district charge?

8793. It is recommended by some it should be a union and by some a district charge; what would be your opinion?—I would rather it would be a rural district charge and managed by the rural district. Then there is another matter about children. I would certainly approve of sending out children from workhouses; sending them to some industrial institution, where they would be made of some benefit hereafter.

8794. You think that is the best way to make them of benefit hereafter?—I do.

8795. Do you not think they would be more likely to be a benefit if reared in the homes of people in the country?—If sent to some industrial institution they would get a trade.

8796. Do you think that is the best way of making good citizens of children to send them into an institution?—Yes; an institution that is properly controlled.

8797. Do you think that would make them every-day citizens?—I do; living in an industrial institution.

8798. Do you think they would get into the ways of life far better boarded out in a small farmer's family?—They would learn, of course, rural life and agricultural labour.

8798. Is not that what they ought to come to eventually?—If they got some kind of a trade it would be more beneficial to them.

8799. Is there not a great dearth of labourers in the country?—There is in places, but labour is not very well paid in this country at the present time, or any time.

8800. Mr. MURPHY.—Do you think it would be right that the children of the poorhouse should be put above the children of farmers?—I would not.

8801. That is what you propose when you propose to make tradesmen at the expense of the farmers?—The rates will be paying for them in any case.

8802. But can the farmers afford to make tradesmen of their children?—In some instances they can.

8803. But still you would ask these farmers to put the Poor Law children in a better position in life than their own children?—I don't think the extra tax on the rates would be very much.

8804. Do you not think it would be better to put these children out with farmers to learn how the work on fields is performed?—In some instances it would be, but they are not very well treated.

8805. CHAIRMAN.—We are not speaking of hiring out, but boarding out?—I would board them out to nine or ten years of age.

8806. But you would not bring a child who had been out in a farmer's family until eight or nine; you would not, after that age, bring them into the institution?

Mr. James
McGovern.

I am the Clerk of the Bowney Union; I have merely to hand in a resolution (produced); I may state that the Ballinamore District Council expressed strong views on Monday last against the amalgamation; they would rather extend in the direction of Mehill, but they could not see their way at all to break up the hospital accommodation.

Mr. JAMES MCGOVERN examined.

Mr. R. W.
Strathmann.

8812. CHAIRMAN.—You are from Enniskillen?—I am Vice-Chairman of the Rural District Council of Enniskillen—the Fermanagh part.

8813. Is your evidence in favour of amalgamation?

—Yes.

8814. What would you do as regards Enniskillen No. 2?—We would prefer for the county to have its own—our workhouse in our county, and have all the county.

8815. You would prefer to give it to Cavan?—Yes.

8816. It never was with Cavan?—No.

8817. You would wish now to make it a county board?

—Yes.

8818. That is not the opinion of the Board of Guardians of Enniskillen as a whole?—It is the opinion of the minority of the Board of Guardians and of the majority of the Rural District Council—we are very poorly an even body. We think our workhouse would do our county; it is built to accommodate almost double the number of the paupers of the whole county.

8819. But the Cavan people wish to remain with you?—I believe they do; we are very cheap; our union is worked cheaply; I think that would be about the reason.

8820. Enniskillen is their market town?—It is their market town, although it is farther away from them.

8821. Mr. MURPHY.—Did you hear what Mr. Johnson said on that account?—I did.

8822. With regard to the impracticability of the roads?—I did not agree with him; I rode a bicycle over every inch of the road; I would call it a good road.

8823. He was very strong on the point that that portion of Cavan should still continue in Fermanagh?—He is the majority of the people of the district.

8824. CHAIRMAN.—It would be too bad if none of the unions wanted Glenties?—It would have to be a little union of itself, for Enniskillen does not want it.

8825. Mr. MURPHY.—You heard what Mr. Johnson said about the condition of the road in winter time?—It is not as bad as Mr. Johnson would lead you to believe; I would call it a good road in a mountainous district.

—I would bring them into the institution, because paupers sent out that way don't do very well in the locality; they are known; they would come all the way to the army or Scotland, and perhaps turn out badly, and seem to be inmates of the workhouse again.

8827. Mr. MURPHY.—We have had evidence to the contrary, no later than yesterday, that when these children are sent out to the farmers they mingle with the population and become respectable members of society?—They may, in a way, but still they don't get the same respect, and are looked down upon, and that situation has a bad effect on them; whereas if they got some kind of trade or calling it would be quite different, and in any locality they could get a portion.

8828. Do you not think the locality would be doing its full duty by providing for these children a home when they are small, and then when they get a proper age sending them out amongst the farmers, and when they get thoroughly grounded in them shift for themselves?—I would approve of giving them some kind of trade, and would think that was providing for them hereafter.

8829. Don't you know that by doing that you would be taking away from the country the labour it needs—the labour of the agricultural hand so much necessary?—From my knowledge of any paupers that have been sent out on hire they will stop on hire until they are fifteen or sixteen, and then leave the country altogether, and either go to England or Scotland.

8830. They will do so still more if you make tradesmen of them?—They need not; they have a way of living.

8831. CHAIRMAN.—Do they wish to keep on the union?—Yes; they say they prefer coming to Bessborough to going to Mehill, where they must go, of course, 2 Bessborough is broken up; it would be too far for them to go to Carrick-on-Shannon.

8832. Still these large mountains intervene?—The road is made in a valley between the mountains; I would call it a good road in a mountainous district. With regard to the outdoor relief system, a great number of the Guardians in Enniskillen think there should be a test—the test of a certificate from the doctor that the pauper is not able to be removed to the workhouse. We think the system of outdoor relief is very much abused.

8833. CHAIRMAN.—It has not very much in your own union?—There is about four times as much outdoor relief as there was.

8834. Mr. MURPHY.—What do you think is the reason of that?—The Guardians apply for outdoor relief for people without a certificate from the doctor, and it is got in cases in which it should not be got.

8835. Did you hear the statement of Mr. Crumple?—I did; I did not agree with it.

8836. He instanced one or two cases?—If I went into particulars I could instance a case in which it was abused.

8837. CHAIRMAN.—In what way?—I have known a party getting outdoor relief—a tradesman, with four children hired earning from 4s. to 2s. the half year, and only four children with him, and he was able to earn 15s. a week at his trade.

8838. Was he earning at the time he was getting the relief?—He was able to be earning; I saw him in Enniskillen the day he had for a week granted to him; he appeared in as good health as I was.

8839. You called the attention of the Guardians to that?—I opposed it, but the Guardians of the district went for it, and it was got.

8840. Mr. MURPHY.—If you had drawn the attention of the auditor to that there would be some further questions?—I did not do that.

8841. Every Guardian, and in fact every reliever, has the right to draw the attention of the auditor to everything that is illegal?—I think the auditor has a right to draw the attention of the auditor to everything that is illegal?—I think the auditor has a right to draw the attention of the auditor to everything that is illegal.

Nov. 28, 1909.

Mr. R. W. Stansbury.

3336. CHAIRMAN.—On what ground was the outdoor relief given?—On the ground that the man had a large family and his trade was gone down.

3337. That he was permanently or temporarily disabled?—It was that he was not able to earn enough to support his family.

3338. It was not that he was prevented from earning by infirmity?—It was said he was in delicate health; they could not have a certificate from the doctor, because he was not exactly sick.

3339. How long did that relief continue?—For about four months; it was reduced from 6s. to 4s., and then it was dropped after a bit.

3340. About how long ago is that?—It is about six months ago—last winter.

3341. Is that an altogether isolated case; is that the only case you know?—There were other cases of people in the town of Elmkill, that I thought were well able to be removed to the workhouse, where they got outdoor relief.

3342. This other man was in a country district?—Yes.

3343. How far was he from home when he came into Elmkill?—Thirteen statute miles.

3344. Did he walk it?—I should think not; I should think he came by train; he was a cooper by trade in the country.

3345. In Elmkill there is some laxity you think?—I think in Elmkill, as the people have an objection to go to the workhouse, there is outdoor relief given to them where it should not be given—where they are able to be removed to the workhouse.

3346. Do you think if they were offered the workhouse they would go?—They would prefer not to go if they could get outdoor relief.

3347. Do you think it was a case in which they were so really destitute that they would have to get outdoor relief or go to the workhouse?—I don't think so; I think they got outdoor relief when, if they did not get it, they would manage without it. They were old people, and some of the family would have given them help if they did not get outdoor relief.

3348. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Take the case Mr. CHAIRMAN instanced, a widow with four or five children; do you think it would be proper to reduce outdoor relief to her?—I think that was an exceptional case; I would give her outdoor relief.

3349. Might it not be in the case you instance that on closer examination it would be found, on the relieving officer's inquiries, that she was in absolute need, and a little temporary aid would tide him over?—I don't think he was.

3350. Does not the relieving officer inquire into all these applications?—He is supposed to do so.

3351. Does he not make a report?—He makes a report.

3352. How do the Guardians treat that report?—Sometimes they give money and sometimes not, according to the vote of the Guardians. Up to lately it was a rule not to give outdoor relief without a certificate of the doctor, and after that was dropped it increased immensely, and giving that reliever other charitable applications. I think they don't give as much as they would give if there was not outdoor relief.

3353. You think that is a sort of grant in aid in place of charitable donations from those associations?—I think it is a thing that is allowed in giving it where it can be done without; there should be a test of some sort for outdoor relief.

3354. That may apply in towns, but would that apply in the country; these charitable organizations don't exist in the country?—No; they don't come so much to the country.

3355. CHAIRMAN.—But in Fermanagh there generally would be a section of the community, whether landowners, or wealthy merchants, or clergymen of various denominations; in most parts of Fermanagh there would be people of a charitable disposition, and who do give a great deal in charity?—Certainly; but there are very few papers from the country in Fermanagh.

3356. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—It principally comes from the towns?—Yes.

3357. CHAIRMAN.—It is in towns the poor people find it hardest to get along?—Yes.

3358. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—These poor people in the towns have come from the country in most instances?—Most of the people in the workhouse have been reared in the workhouse; if they are reared in the workhouse as children they will come back to it, both male and female; if they are reared in the workhouse they are little or no use when they are sent into the country.

3359. That is a sermon in favour of boarding out; is it not a fact that the poor in town are largely composed of people who have had to leave the country in consequence of want of employment?—There is no such thing as want of employment in the country.

3360. When a man gets aged a farmer does not want his services?—I find it is not the old people that go to the towns; it is the young people.

3361. Don't you know the farmers, as a rule, won't employ men advanced in years to do farm work?—They employ them as caretakers principally.

3362. CHAIRMAN.—You think the old people remain in the country?—They do; I think the children should be boarded out—every one. I would not go so far as to take the children from their parents.

3363. Even illegitimate children?—I don't think so.

3364. If the law were amended to give the Guardians a discretion to take away children from unworthy parents, would you approve of such a law?—I would not approve of it, for this reason—I think it would only give an inducement for immorality and to get rid of the children too early.

3365. Is there not a difficulty, on the other hand, that if the children were allowed to remain with them the children would most probably grow up evil members of the community?—Well, generally, the younger people get rid of the children by hiring them out.

3366. And then run regularly every day to collect their wages?—To get a share of it at any rate.

3367. Is that a good system?—No; but I don't think you could take the children from them forcibly.

3368. Unless by a change in the law you could not?—I don't think it would be a good thing to do, because it would give an inducement to get rid of children.

3369. There is that difficulty, undoubtedly, but the other difficulty is obvious too—the difficulty of having them with bad parents?—I think if there was amalgamation and the workhouses were turned into local hospitals a great many people, not paupers, who would be able to pay a little for their keep, would go to the local hospital, because I think there are a lot of people that are thoroughly well attended by a doctor but not properly nursed; they would go to the local hospital and pay a little.

MR. JAMES HANFORD EXAMINED.

3370. CHAIRMAN.—You are CHAIRMAN of the Cootskill Board of Guardians?—Yes.

3371. What is your view about the continuance or breaking up of your union?—We had a vote taken of the Guardians about three weeks or a month ago, and they were in favour of maintaining Cootskill Union, by two to one of a majority.

3372. The Monaghan men wish to leave you and you wish to keep them?—Quite so.

3373. If the workhouse were broken up, do you think it would be quite necessary to keep the hospital for the sick?—Oh, yes; I think so; that would be a great thing for the sick and infirm to be kept there.

3374. Dr. BROOKS.—It is well thought of in the district?—Oh, yes; the doctor is very well thought of; in fact I think it should be a county-at-large charge.

3375. CHAIRMAN.—Especially when you are taking up Mr. JAMES the treatment of consumption in the way you are?—Monaghan. Yes; and we treat our patients very well.

3376. Dr. BROOKS.—Did the Guardians discuss that matter at all?—Yes.

3377. Was that their opinion that it should be a county hospital?—Yes.

3378. That is one of the matters that you have to bring before the Commission?—Yes.

3379. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—What did they say about amalgamation?—There would be some in favour of it if they thought it would lessen the rates.

3380. It was only a question of cost they considered?—Quite so.

3381. And if it could be shown it was an economy to do away with some of the workhouses without hurting the service to the sick you think the Cootchill people would not raise any objection?—I think they would be in favour of cheapening the rates.

8882. Your rate is not very high at present in Cootchill?—No, sir.

8883. Are the Guardians willing to do anything the doctor asks them?—Oh, yes, quite willing; they are most attentive to the doctor; he is a general favourite with the sick.

8884. He is of a very sympathetic nature?—Yes; the sick think it a great boon to get under his care. There was one time that paying patients were disallowed there owing to a resolution of a certain gentleman on the board; everybody got annoyed, and there was a resolution rescinding it, and they were allowed to go back as paying patients.

8885. No such over-arc as regards the consumptive cases?—No, sir; nothing publicly about them, yet.

8886. Chairman.—It is doing very good work there?—It is. I know myself that the parties who have got in under the care of the doctor are getting on splendidly there; I generally see them every Friday; people that come there almost dying; they are getting strong there.

Mr. James J. HENNESSY examined.

Mr James J.
Hennessy.

I am the relieving officer for Cootchill, and I was appointed to come here to give evidence.

8887. Chairman.—What is the amount of outdoor relief in your union?—The weekly amount at present is £12.

8888. Is there only one relieving officer?—Only one, but before the passing of the Local Government Act the weekly amount was £20. Then there is no corresponding increase in the number of the recipients.

8889. Is the amount that has been increased?—It is the amount that has been increased, but not the number on the relief list—it is 99 to 120—and I believe that is altogether due to the change in chargeability from divisional to union ratings.

8890. Mr. MURKIN.—You think the widening of the area diminished the scrutiny of the Guardians?—I do. I believe there was far more caution exercised by members of the board when we had divisional ratings.

8891. Does that apply to any other thing in the service except outdoor relief?—I think it does; there is a general increase in the expenditure of that union all over under the several heads.

8892. Chairman.—In maintenance would be largely increased by the adoption of the new dietary scale and the improved treatment in the infirmary?—Yes, sir.

8893. That has been all over Ireland you may say?—But the increase is not altogether due to that.

8894. What is about the average amount that you give to people on outdoor relief?—The average amount would be £2 weekly to a single individual.

8895. Where you would have two or three in the same house?—From 2s. 6d. to 3s. or 4s.

8896. That is where the bread-winner is incapacitated; how many have you on outdoor relief?—120 cases and 156 persons. Before the passing of the Local Government Act there were ninety-nine cases and 128 persons.

8897. Two shillings is not too large a grant in aid to any person unfit to work?—No, sir; but there should be some uniformity in giving relief; take two cases in a particular division in similar circumstances—one gets 2s. a week and the other receives double the amount.

8898. Is that owing to the vote of the member?—To influence brought to bear on the member representing the division in which that person lives.

8899. Mr. MURKIN.—What is the method in regard to the granting of outdoor relief; is the application first made to the Guardian of the division and then referred to you?—In some cases it is made by the Guardian of the division, except where I have a medical certificate.

8900. And then you inquire into the matter?—Yes.

8901. And you report?—Yes; and they act on my report, but in a great many cases they are influenced by the medical certificate.

8902. Do you ever report in an opposite direction to the medical certificate?—Yes, sir; and the Guardians are more inclined to favour the opinion of the medical officer than of the relieving officer.

8903. The medical officer asks for the relief, and you think it is not necessary?—He recommends it, and some of the certificates are faulty in my opinion; they go on to state that the bearer is not able to earn a livelihood. I think that is a thing for the medical officer.

8904. When you come to deal with such an application, what would be the nature of your report?—In a great many cases I would report that the person would not be entitled to it.

8905. Was not that said?—I won't say that, but I would say they were not permanently disabled from labour. A person might be able to work two or three days in the week.

8907. What condition of things do you consider necessary to recommend outdoor relief?—I think the medical officer should be instructed not to give a certificate except he is called in to a dispensary patient. At present I know persons in Cootchill; they apply for a dispensary ticket for the purpose of procuring a certificate from the medical officer that they are not able to earn a livelihood, and then when they are strengthened with this certificate they have no day in getting relief from the Guardians.

8908. Chairman.—The certificate you are complaining of is not one certifying that the person cannot be removed, but a certificate as to the want of means?—Yes.

8909. You consider that your business and the condition of health be business?—Yes; and I hold this in interference with me unduly in the carrying out of my duties. For instance, a great many cases have occurred in Cootchill where tramps coming into town was to get into the workhouse, and they are told to go to the medical officer and to get a ticket to me, to place them in the workhouse, instead of coming to me in the first instance. I think that most objectionable.

8910. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you live in Cootchill?—Yes; and these people know that. As regards the boarding out of the aged and infirm, I cannot see how that would work in our union.

8911. Chairman.—You think it would be unobjectionable under another name?—Quite so; but there would be no accommodation for boarding out the aged and infirm; I know of no houses in the district.

8912. I suppose a great many of the aged and infirm that do come into the workhouse have some relatives outside?—Yes; the greater portion of them.

8913. Would not their relatives be very glad to have them for the outdoor relief amount?—Yes; but all the relatives are then as well as they are cared for in the workhouse; the first consideration with the union would be the weekly allowance more than the comfort of the old people; the old people are far more comfortable inside than outside.

8914. Which would they prefer?—There was a change in our dietary scale in 1887; at that time there were only thirty-two aged and infirm in the house, and since the change the number has gone up to sixty-three; it is due to the change in the dietary.

8915. Mr. MURKIN.—Do these old people at all feel the restraint of the house?—I don't think so; there was a resolution I was asked to hand in as regards workhouse amalgamation (proposed); the clerk was not able to come over.

Mr. PATRICK O'REILLY, Cootchill, examined.

Mr Patrick
O'Reilly.

8916. Chairman.—You have heard the evidence of the relieving officer?—Yes.

8917. Do you think there is a good deal in it?—I may say I quite agree with it, and more particularly with regard to the latter portion about those old and infirm people. I don't believe they could be boarded out as comfortably as in the workhouse, even at an additional cost.

8918. You say that altogether in the interests of the old people themselves, because if they were boarded out they would cost far less?—I speak from a knowledge of the district I come from; I don't know anyone who would take one.

8923. Their own relatives would be the only persons.—Yes I know three old people between seventy and eighty years; I don't know a relative at all that would keep them.

8924. Dr. BRONER.—Have they relatives at all?—No near relatives—distant relatives.

8925. Is that your experience, generally?—Yes; I speak of those I have a thorough knowledge of.

8926. CHAIRMAN.—They are the last of the generation?—Yes; they have no one near them; besides they are such a length of time in that workhouse—two of them, at least—that they would prefer ending their days there.

8927. Mr. MURKHAM.—There are others not so long; if in a week was given to their relatives to take care of them, do you think they would not be kept comfortably for that?—The first consideration, I am afraid, is to secure the money, and, besides, in the ordinary run of farmers' houses there is no accommodation except what is sufficient for the families.

8928. These people would know that as much was given to their relatives, and if they did not like their treatment they could get changed to some other place?—It is to the relieving officer they would complain, and he would be increasing his duty, and, probably, you would have to increase his salary.

8929. Your relieving officer does not mind work?—He does it efficiently to the satisfaction of the board.

Mr. MICHAEL BRADY examined.

8930. CHAIRMAN.—Now we would like to have your views on what ought to be done with the Owen part of the Granard Union?—My views are known twenty years ago before this great man, Balfour, wanted to have this dissolution. I think it is the brightest act of his life—that and the Land Act.

8931. What is your opinion about the Granard Union being broken up?—I don't interfere with the Granard or Longford people, though at the Inquiry it came out that I wanted dissolution there. I did not want that; I only wanted the five divisions to come to their rightful place.

8932. You wanted them taken away from the Granard Union and put with Owen?—Yes.

8933. Is Owen your natural market, or Granard?—Granard has no market; this is the great market town.

8934. You have no big village in your parish?—None at all; Killybeg is all—a little village.

8935. How far is that from Owen?—About nine and a half miles.

8936. And about five from Granard?—Not so far from Granard; a mile less.

8937. Do you think there would be very much hardship in moving the sick; they have to go further from other parts of the Owen Union?—I think there is a great advantage for the sick, unless infectious cases, because we have a train in the centre and of the division and a station at the upper end—Ballywillan and Brumlowa. You can get down two days in the week for 1s. and 10d. any other day in the week, and ever since I was on the County Infirmary committee I never was asked to get any one into Granard; all come to me to get into the county infirmary.

8938. You have a great number of applications?—Oh, a great number; and they all come down accompanied to us. There was a man beyond at Granard that he had all as one as killed him, and in place of going into Granard they brought him to Brumlowa, put him on the train, and brought him here, and he was dead next day; that shows the faith they have in this place. We had a meeting last Wednesday week—one from Warranstown, and a man from Longford, and one from the five divisions, and the three were unanimous for dissolving the Granard house.

8939. Mr. MURKHAM.—You don't think it would be too far to come to Owen?—Indeed I don't; they showed that they thought the hospital should be kept in Granard.

8940. That would be sufficient?—Oh, quite sufficient, they allowed. I don't be after them; I have no wish to go there from the way I see things going on there.

8941. CHAIRMAN.—You don't care for comfort?—Well, indeed, you would not like to be there; I think everything is managed very bad there. I know men; I will give you the names—you will not find me and a and credit to himself. With regard to the boarding out of children, I would be in favour, as far as possible, of having them boarded with the farmers.

8942. You would not agree with the witness from Brumlowa?—To give them trades? I would not; it is country people who are required, and probably they would become farmers themselves some day, or farm labourers.

8943. CHAIRMAN.—That is the only position for them to occupy in an agricultural country like this?—There are no other members of the community so much required at the present time. Considering the position of Cootehill, I don't believe it would be to the benefit of anyone to have it cut up into three or four aliquots and take it to other unions; there is no railway communication except one line of railway into Monaghan.

8944. You would rather remain as you are?—Unless there was proof of a pretty large saving effected.

8945. Without hardship to the sick or poor?—Yes; you could neither reach Ballyborough nor Carran except by road—no train accommodation at all.

8946. Mr. MURKHAM.—Now far is it from here to Cootehill by road?—Twelve miles. I presume it is much the same to Ballyborough; some parts of Cootehill Union are much further.

8947. Dr. BRONER.—What is the nearest portion of Cootehill to Carran?—There is one electoral division that is nearest as is near as Cootehill—Brumlowa. It might be five miles; that would be adjoining Red-hill.

He together—a man of the name of Maguire; he is dead now; he was getting outdoor relief, and having 230 in the bank.

8948. The relieving officer did not know that?—I don't know whether he did or not; he could not but know it. We had a man of the name of Brady in the workhouse that had 230 in the bank. I proposed in Granard that the union part be put on him, or, if not, the board, because he would go out each day into the town and enjoy himself, and he left at once. About outdoor relief, that is considerably abused; people get it that should not get it; there are plenty of deserving cases.

8949. Mr. MURKHAM.—You think the deserving should get it?—Oh, indeed I do.

8950. CHAIRMAN.—How is it that the people who don't deserve it manage to get it?—Last Saturday week when I was there I asked was there a person of the name of Mrs. Brady wanting to get outdoor relief?—I heard she had six names there—and the clerk said no, she did not get it. But next day I heard she got into the house. She was down here the week previous to that—herself and her nephew—with Mr. Kennedy. This nephew offered her 25s for a plot of land she held; she had as good a house as any farm of land in the parish I am living in; she was to have that house free; she took in her son, and now she is in the poor-house.

8951. Did the son turn her out?—I cannot tell you that.

8952. The son is in and she is out?—She is in the poor-house and the son is in the house. I don't think that is a good way of going on with the business.

8953. Mr. MURKHAM.—What about the children; you would like to see them all boarded out?—There are not many of them there, but I don't see the need they are in the house, because there is a girl there thirty-three years, that was born there, and last May I proposed to send this girl down to the town of Carran the hiring day; no, she would not leave where she was; she was at home there, and she has her three children there.

8954. CHAIRMAN.—A married woman?—Oh, no. She was put out in a few weeks after to service at 25 or 27 for the half year; she was in the house again in a couple of months.

8955. Mr. MURKHAM.—Is she an exception?—Indeed she is not; there are children there with their fathers living outside the town with severity of the best acres that ever a crow flew over, maintained at our expense. If you want names I will get them.

8956. Where are those children?—In the house.

8957. Can the Guardians not do anything to stop that?—They don't stop it anyway.

Dec 25, 1901.

Mr. Patrick O'Reilly.

Mr. Michael Brady.

Nov. 28, 1902.

Mr. Michael
Brady.

8954. Dr. BRODER.—How was she hired out if she had three children in the house?

CHAIRMAN.—Did she take the children with her?—
Oh, no.

Mr. Patrick
Sheridan.

Our union is in favour of amalgamation.

8955. CHAIRMAN.—Are you in favour of breaking up your own union?—I think not; the lower end would be very far from my union—fifteen or sixteen miles from Kells and sixteen from Owen.

8956. How far does your opinion in favour of amalgamation go; what unions ought to be broken up?—I would not like to say that.

8957. Would you think that the idea of having four workhouses in the county is a good one?—Very good.

8958. But owing to the particular circumstances and position of Oldcastle it could easily be broken up?—It would be very hard on us; we are very far away from Kells and Owen.

8959. What is the nearest workhouse to Oldcastle?—Kells. Of course, if it would be broken up, they are in favour of retaining a cottage hospital and sending the infirm or aged to some place where they could be maintained at the cost of the district. They are in favour of boarding out children as far as possible.

8960. Have you many boarded out in Oldcastle at present?—I think something over twenty.

8961. Are you satisfied with the way they are managed?—Well satisfied.

8962. As regards the area of rating for Poor Law purposes, are you in favour of the continuance of union rating?—I think dispensary rating would be better; it would be looked into better—more close inspection.

Mr. Thomas J
Naght.

8971. CHAIRMAN.—You are also a Guardian of Oldcastle?—Yes; Vice-Chairman of the Board from the Owen part.

8972. You have heard the evidence of the last witness?—Yes.

8973. Do you agree with him generally?—Certainly.

8974. Is there anything you would like to add that he has not mentioned, or anything in which you differ from him slightly?—I don't differ with him in any-

Mr. John
Gilligan.

8975. CHAIRMAN.—I think you are Chairman of the Urban Council of Owen?—Yes.

8976. What is the opinion of the Urban Council?—The opinion of the council is in favour of amalgamation.

8977. How many workhouses would do for the county?—One, I think.

8978. What would be the proper situation for the workhouse?—I would say Owen.

8979. How much of the county would you put into the new union of Owen; would it be the whole county?—Yes; I would put in Basenby and Ooteshill.

8980. Would you put in the part that goes to Kinnihilan?—Down?—I did not come to a decision on those portions; they are very far away; I did not know whether it would not be more economical to send them to other unions.

8981. Speaking generally, you would take all the rest of the county; would you take in that part of Oldcastle?—I think so, and part of Granard.

8982. And you would close up Ooteshill and Ballyborough and Ballyboy?—Yes, except the hospital accommodation.

8983. What would you do with the workhouses you closed?—I would turn them into technical schools or places for harmless lunatics—some useful purposes—or perhaps hospitals if there was not a sufficient hospital.

8984. Is there anything else you would like to mention?—I am in favour of boarding out children, and I would be also in favour of boarding out men who could do a little—old people that could supplement the outdoor relief they get with work for the farmers.

8985. You would not be afraid that would spread too much and make younger people anxious to get the Guardians to enter into that sort of an arrangement for all the old people of the county?—I would not be afraid of that.

8986. Or for a good many of the old people?—There are a good many of the old people would be very useful for farm work about the yards.

Mr. PATRICK SHERIDAN, Oldcastle, examined.

In fact divisional rating would be a closer inspection still, but it would be more complicated. I think dispensary rating is the better of the two.

8964. Would you care for that for all purposes, or only for a few purposes?—A few purposes.

8965. Would you care for it for anything else except outdoor relief?—For the maintenance of the cottage hospital.

8966. What would you gain by having that area of charge; the sick are bound to come in, no matter when they come from?—Some of the sick might go to the county infirmary.

8967. You would have to pay for them then?—Yes.

8968. Do you see any way by which you would be able by making in maintenance a dispensary rating?—I don't see any way of gaining by it, but you would get by outdoor relief.

8969. Yes; you would have a closer inspection of every case, but for the sick it is a case of sending them as a matter of course, so that the Guardians exercise no discretion as regards the number of sick?—No.

8970. You would be in favour of changing some little sum to anyone able to pay, giving the Guardians no reason to make that charge if you thought people were able to pay even a little?—Yes; but it is hard to get the people to come in as long as you maintain it in the form of a workhouse; there is a prejudice against it.

Mr. THOMAS NUGENT examined.

Our reasons for amalgamation was with regard to the payment of officials. The committee of the Guardians met three or four months ago, and reported by the audited accounts of the union that the average cost of each inmate was £15 some shillings, and we found then that when the item of salaries was added to that it amounted to over £25.

8975. That was a very accurate and proper way of making the calculation?—That is all I wish to add.

Mr. JOHN GILLIGAN examined.

8988. The old women to mind children?—Yes; I know some in the Owen Union for twenty years, and they are active and well able to work, and in work a good deal about the house—very handy people. I asked some of those boys why did they not live with farmers; they said they had better times in the house, and no slavery.

8989. Are you on the county infirmary committee?—Yes.

8990. That does a good deal of the hospital work?—It works well; we have twenty governors—some nominated by the County Council—and then there are a certain number of life governors.

8991. A number of these are elected on the committee?—Yes.

8992. Is there anything you would suggest about that?—There is no suggestion I could make, the thing is working so well.

8993. You have spent a good deal of money on it lately?—We did; it is in fine working order and well equipped.

8994. There are a few things to be done yet?—We are going bit by bit.

8995. According as the money is handy?—Yes; we have made great improvements in the last three years; you would not know the house; I live in the town and have a good deal of communication with the patients and seeing tickets for those deserving, and I make inquiries of the patients leaving, and they all give the report that they are well treated, and have no complaints.

8996. Dr. BRODER.—Are you limited in the way of income?—I think we get about £200 a year from the County Council.

8997. Is that sufficient?—There is some paid in by the life governors.

8998. Some of the county infirmaries have as much as £1,500?—I don't think we have as much.

The sitting terminated.

EIGHTEENTH PUBLIC SITTING—TUESDAY, DECEMBER 167, 1903.

Dec. 1, 1903.

At the Court-house, Armagh.

Present.—Mr. MICEE, (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. E. COBY BIGGER.

Mr. Guach (instructed by Mr. Gardien) appeared for the Nerry Board of Guardians and District Council.

Mr. Charles Lanerty appeared for the Castleblagney Board of Guardians and Crossmaglen District Council.

Mr. JOHN FERRIS examined.

9088. CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the Lurgan Guardians?—I am.

9089. Has your Board of Guardians considered whether it would be desirable to make any changes in the number of Poor Law unions in the County Armagh?—Well, I think it is the general impression that it would not.

9090. Your Board of Guardians would be against breaking up the Lurgan Union?—Certainly.

9091. There are a large number of inmates there?—Yes; including the hospital, we have nearly 400.

9092. What are the reasons why you think Lurgan ought to be allowed to remain?—Owing to only two workhouses being in the county, I think it would be very inconvenient if one was done away with. I think it would be almost an impossibility to suit the convenience of patients, for instance, if the Lurgan hospital were done away with.

9093. If any change were made about the able-bodied, or inmates, or children you think it would be absolutely necessary to have a hospital in the town of Lurgan?—It would be a matter of very great necessity.

9094. Do you think it would be essential?—I think so.

9096. Either to the lunatic asylum, if it was able to receive them, or an auxiliary asylum?—I think it would be a great advantage.

9097. Then, as regards the children in the house, you have a considerable number of children in Lurgan?

9098. We have not, taking into consideration the population, such a large number, because the boarding-out system is adopted.

9099. Do you board out nearly all you can?—Yes; in fact all orphans are boarded out.

9100. Would you be in favour of an extension of the law enabling Guardians to take the place of parents of illegitimate children in the house and deprive the mother of the custody of those whom you thought it advantageous to the child and the community?—In many cases it would be of considerable advantage, for sometimes the mothers are not fit to have charge of those children.

9101. Then you would be in favour of an extension of the law giving Poor Law Guardians a discretion to take away a child from a parent?—I certainly would under certain circumstances.

9102. A discretion, I say, then they could exercise it or not, as they thought fit?—I think it would be a matter of very great importance if the Guardians were so empowered.

9103. You have been for a long time a Poor Law Guardian?—I have been for many years.

9104. You have noticed, I dare say, that the same woman comes back with additional children—that a woman has one, two, or even more than three illegitimate children?—It often occurs that when once a woman falls there is a repetition.

9105. Have you thought of any plan for trying to fight against that?—It is a very difficult matter.

9106. It has been suggested to the Commission in other places that it might be well that a woman, when she was about to have a child, should be sent to some religious penitentiary according to the religion she professed—to some institution managed by the same religious body to which she belonged. That if she was sent there with a view to reclamation, that some arrangement could be made for the boarding out of the child, and receiving some contribution from the mother?—I think the system would be a good one, because when a girl is unfortunate in that way and comes in and is confined in the workhouse, her self-respect that should be encouraged—

9107. She loses that when she gets among women of bad character?—That is so, and I think it is a pity to see young women, when they have a misfortune of that sort, when they go into the workhouse they cease to have friends; they are cut off entirely, and become reckless of consequences; if there could be a helping hand given to that class there could not be a greater charity.

9108. At the start on the downward grade?—Yes.

9109. The obvious objection to that is that it might possibly act as an immoral incentive if the woman felt the children could be got rid of easily and her own shame could be staked in a way?—I think if there was an institution that would receive them and try and raise that self-respect which has gone down, and place them where they could get a trial for some time in a house of that sort, and could then be placed in a respectable position, it would be a great advantage.

9111. After her first lapse she feels the sorrow and the terrible position in which she has brought herself, and would be glad of a chance of pulling up?—So she would if she got the opportunity, I think, in many cases. I have a great deal of experience of the workhouse myself, and coming in contact with women of that class, and I don't know more pitiable objects; there is no one to give them a helping hand; when they go in there they look upon themselves as in for life almost.

9113. If the discretion of the Guardians were enlarged the children would be excluded from the workhouse?—I think it would be a great advantage; in fact it is a considerable loss to keep them in it.

9114. They come back again?—The Guardians of Lurgan have adopted a system of sending children out to school, except the orphans, and they have not made the clothing uniform, so that when you went into a school you would not know a workhouse child from any other.

9115. That is done in both the workhouses in the County Armagh, but don't you think it would be a greater advantage still to have no children at all in the workhouse?—I think so.

9116. If you take away those three classes—the inmates, and children, and mothers who come in with illegitimate children—you have practically the only classes

Mr. John Ferris.

Dec. 1, 1904
Mr. John

left the aged and infirm and the sick, with the exception of a very rare case of a handy able-bodied man who would seek relief or a tramp?—The fact is in Lurgan Workhouse we have no able-bodied men; it is entirely confined to the patients in the infirmary and aged and infirm in the workhouse.

9027. Then the Poor Law system for infirm would come to two classes—the sick and aged and infirm. You would have, you may say, the inmates of an almshouse and the inmates of a hospital only to deal with. That would make workhouse administration much more simple; you would not have that difficulty of classification that exists now?—It would be a considerable advantage if carried out, at least that is my opinion.

9028. Now, as regards the question of hospital accommodation in your union, how many hospitals have you in your union?—Only two—Armagh and Lurgan.

9029. In your union?—Only one.

9030. What towns have you in your union?—Portadown and Lurgan and several villages.

9031. Portadown is a large town, now increasing rapidly. It has no hospital?—It has none at present.

9032. It used to have a hospital some years ago of some sort?—I am under the impression it was built in 1847, but it has never been in use much.

9033. Is there any demand now for hospital accommodation in the town of Portadown?—No doubt there is.

9034. I mean there is a claim being made for it?—I understand the Portadown people are anxious there should be one.

9035. What do you think of the claim?—I don't know; the working expenses would entail a good deal, but I have been thinking that if such a thing was established in Portadown as a hospital the nursing staff could be supplied from Lurgan at times when it was necessary.

9036. Lurgan or Armagh; supposing later on it was seen to be economical to have a county system of nursing, say with headquarters at the County Armagh Infirmary, and that all the hospitals in the county should get their nurses from the County Infirmary?—At present we have a training system at Lurgan that they have not in Armagh; it is splendid, and working well; we have at present somewhere about thirteen nurses in Lurgan.

9037. Do they stay with you when they become qualified?—Some of them do; but I don't know of any that have been trained in Lurgan that have not got into good situations after they have left.

9038. Where do they go?—Some are in England and some in Ireland, the greater portion in Ireland, but any that have been trained in Lurgan Hospital have been most successful in getting situations, and, I believe, have turned out very satisfactory.

9039. And you have no difficulty in getting a sufficient number of probationers?—Not the slightest; there are more applicants than are wanted.

9040. Coming back to the Portadown claim, do you think it would be a fair and proper thing that there should be a hospital in Portadown?—Taking into consideration the population of Portadown at present, and the number of patients that generally come from Portadown to Lurgan, I would not say but it would be advisable.

9041. A very large proportion of your cases do come from Portadown?—A great many do.

9042. A great many accident cases?—I don't know that there are such a large number of accidents, but there are some.

9043. And they have to be brought a distance off?—Five miles.

9044. I suppose they have to telegraph for your ambulance?—They do.

9045. They have to wait until an ambulance goes to them and then takes them back?—That is so.

9046. I suppose if a hospital were started at Portadown you consider the area of charge should be the union-at-large?—I am not just prepared to give an answer to that; some one of more experience than I should answer that; it requires some consideration.

9047. Now, as regards paying patients, you do get into the Lurgan Workhouse paying patients?—We do.

9048. And about what rate do they pay?—It depends entirely on their circumstances.

9049. You take, really, what payments you think they can afford to give?—Yes; it is discretionary.

9050. Do you happen to remember what is the lowest payment you take?—I think 3s. 6d. a week.

9051. Going up to 5s. or 10s.?—Yes; a tradesman who has to support his wife and family outside is charged the lowest rate.

9052. Take the case that often happens in fever hospitals—Derry and elsewhere—where people in good circumstances go into an infectious hospital to be treated, what arrangement do you make about a day of that kind?—Dr. Darling will be able to answer that question.

9053. Do you think it would be a good thing to take even much smaller payments than 3s. 6d. a week; now, for instance, to go as low as, I think, they do in the Keshmille County Infirmary; I am not sure whether it is 7d. a week or 1s. a week; Dr. Kidd, the surgeon of the infirmary there, thought it a very good plan, and it has brought them in a good deal of money; where they get nothing but outside they have managed to get about £500 a year towards the cost of the hospital by taking as small payments as people could afford. Supposing the child of a working man is brought in, that child would cost at home, at all events, a penny a day, and the father could pay that without any hardship, for that would be paid to the parent by the child's earnings?—I do believe it would be an advantage, and not only that, but it would keep up self-respect, and they would feel they were not going in as paupers to the hospital.

9054. But you would do that all round with all classes of sick as far as you could?—I certainly would; we have not adopted that system, but I think it would be a good one.

9055. Now, the only other question I have to ask you about is the tramp question?—The tramp question is a difficult one to solve. My impression about tramps is that the word "tramp" includes many respectable men; I myself know cases; I sometimes go to the casual wards at night and get into conversation with the tramps, finding out where they are from and their circumstances, and I find in many cases respectable tradesmen that for want of work are driven sometimes to go to look for employment; a man of that class would be ashamed to beg. It is only the week before last I was up in the casual ward and I met with a painter—a respectable, decent man; he and his wife had come in for lodgings; they had walked from Belfast, and had not a farthing on the way; they would not beg; they were in a most deplorable state; it is very difficult to know how to deal with these people. There is another class who deserve no encouragement; if they can steal on the way they are quite prepared to do almost any act to get money. But there is one class I look on with great pity, that would starve before they would beg, and they are forced to come to the workhouse for their supper, bed, and breakfast.

9056. Then you would not be disposed to draw the line much more tightly than at present; if the Master knew a man was really a tramp, who spent his life in going about the country begging and not in search, really, of employment—what we know as an ordinary tramp—would you be in favour of keeping him, so the English system allows, in the workhouse for one, two, or three days as a sort of punishment?—I don't think it would do any harm, but it is a matter of indifference to that class where they are. Being a magistrate, I have them brought before me from time to time, and I find they would just as soon go to the jail as to a workhouse.

9057. They have not that impulse for moving on that we associate with a tramp?—No; when they come into a town of an evening they go round to every house almost, where they can obtain anything, and the result is they get drunk before night and go up to the workhouse for a night's lodging; their chief object seems to be to obtain money to spend in drink.

9058. The amount of outdoor relief in your union is about £1,000 a year?—I think it is about that.

9059. £991 for the last audited year, and chiefly in the towns?—There is a good deal given to the country.

9060. Is there anything you would wish to tell us about the administration of outdoor relief; do you think it is on satisfactory lines or that some change might be made either with regard to the area of charge or any other way?—I am not in a position to give an answer to that question, but I believe it is a system that does immense good.

9061. What classes chiefly get outdoor relief from you—the class that you have in your mind chiefly now where hardship is avoided?—The class that generally gets outdoor relief is where the father comes into hospital and the mother is left with a family of small children; in every case they get outdoor relief unless such cases where the parent recovers.

Dec 1, 1904.
Mr. John Fleming.

9052. Do you ever give outdoor relief to a house out of which considerable weekly earnings are coming?—Oh, no.

9053. You would not approve of that case?—I would not.

9055. You would not think that a deserving object?—No. It is through the relieving officer the application is generally made, and he is supposed to make all inquiries as to the position of the family and their earnings, and he informs the Guardians as to the amount of the earnings going into the house, and if the Guardians come to the conclusion it is not necessary they don't get it.

9056. I don't suppose you have compared your expenditure on workhouse inmates with the expenditure here in Armagh?—I think not.

9057. I see Armagh spent £6,000 on her workhouse on Poor Law purposes, and you have spent £7,740; you have spent £1,600 more than they did; you seem to have nearly double the number, yet you are only £1,600 in advance?—It seems we are working on a more economical scale.

9058. You are not keeping them short in food in any way?—Not at all. I think, as far as the dietary scale is concerned, there is no objection to be made to it. I think Mr. Agnew would bear me out in that.

9059. I have got the dietary scale here?—It has been considerably improved.

9060. This is the dietary scale of 31st December, 1903; I am afraid this cost refers to the old dietary scale; was this a new dietary scale in December, 1903?—Yes.

9061. Then the cost I have is the cost under the old scale; that would explain it. No; I see this scale was adopted in February, 1903?—That is since the new was introduced.

9062. Yes?—It entailed a little more expense, but there is no doubt it is a great improvement, so far as diet is concerned.

9063. Do you think that your officers' rations are adequate?—I don't hear any complaints; the only thing is, I think, they complain of the want of variety.

9064. Great monotony?—Yes.

9065. Did you ever consider the question of giving an allowance in lieu of rations to those officers specially who need greater variety in food; nurses, for instance?—I believe it would be a great advantage to the officers of the house if they got money in place of rations.

9066. There is an objection, which you can understand, in giving it all round, but to those officers who are not in charge of stores, in the case of nurses for instance, from the nature of their employment their appetite is such as requires to be tempted very often?—That is so.

9067. And giving the same little lump of beef or mutton every day without variation is not stimulating to the appetite?—It is not; I think it is a disadvantage; and it is not fair to the nurses to be left that way. I think it should be left discretionary on their part to purchase whatever food they require.

9068. You have a resident medical officer, too?—Yes.

9069. This heading "Officers' rations"—apparently under that they all would get the same rations?—I think the resident medical officer is treated the same as the nurses.

9070. Would she be treated the same way as the man who takes charge of the kitchen boiler?—I don't know that.

9071. They are all here on the same scale apparently?—The man who has charge of the kitchen boiler is an inmate.

9072. Well, the man who has charge of the steam arrangements?—He boards out.

9073. Take the paid wardmaids?—We have no paid wardmaids.

9074. What is your lowest class of paid officer?—Porter.

9075. Would the medical officer have the same dietary as the porter?—I don't think so.

Dr. Darling.—She has.

9076. Don't you think that is distinctly a matter?—I think it is a matter that requires reformation. I think it is a shame.

9077. It is an oversight very likely?—I don't know that it is, but perhaps too much economy prevailed. I don't think it is a thing that should be.

9078. Mr. MURKIN.—The Resident Medical Officer is rather a novelty in workhouses in Ireland?—I don't know whether we have been the first departure.

CHAMBERLAIN.—I think you have been the most gallant—the first to appoint a lady, but there are resident medical officers elsewhere.

9079. Mr. MURKIN.—Have you considered at your Board of Guardians the question of the amalgamation of unions for the County Armagh as a whole, or simply with reference to your own particular union?—I don't think so; as far as any conversation that I had with the Guardians, they seemed to be under the impression it would be almost an impossibility.

9080. It was merely a conversation; you never had the matter discussed?—No.

9081. Then you don't speak as a representative of the body but simply as a member expressing your own views on the subject?—That is so.

9082. Considering the size of Armagh and the railway facilities in it, and the number of inmates, do you not think that one workhouse in this county would be sufficient for the infirm destitute of the county?—I think that if there were only one workhouse in the county there would be a greater amount of inconvenience.

9083. Your union is on the very edge of Armagh County?—Partly so.

9084. You know the object of this Commission is to bring about a reform for the benefit of the ratepayers and the benefit of the sick, and our desire is to get from the local men some knowledge not of their own facilities but of the county as a whole for the interest of the ratepayers, and what I would like to know from you, as a man of business, is would it not be possible to have one workhouse for the infirm of the county, which would number about 300 or 400 people altogether, where you accustom the children, when you exclude the females, and the mothers of illegitimate children, and the sick, it would leave you only about 200 that you might class as eligible candidates for the workhouse; do you not think that any house in the county would be sufficient to accommodate these 200?—That might be so.

9085. Which workhouse now in the county is most central?—I don't think I can surmise that question, because I am more or less selfish, and I might not be correct in the statement.

9086. CHAMBERLAIN.—You might think Lurgan was the centre?—I am not going to say so.

9087. Mr. MURKIN.—Have you ever considered the question, for instance, if any of these houses are amalgamated and abolished, have you ever considered the question of rating or representation; would you have the present union rating, or would you desire to extend it a little wider and make it a county rate for Poor Law purposes?—I think it is more satisfactory as it is.

9088. It certainly would be more satisfactory to the pockets of the people of Lurgan to have it extended to a county rate, because your rate is 11d., whereas the Armagh rate is only 6d. If that was thrown into the common purse you would make 2d. in the £ by the change; would not that appeal to you as a man of business?—I don't know. As far as my own selfish interests are concerned I would be guided more or less by it, but I think as it is it is in a more satisfactory way.

9089. You think the workhouse system of Ireland is so satisfactory that no change could be made of a beneficial character?—I would not say that.

9090. But suppose now there was left at Lurgan a hospital—a hospital better than the one you have got—an up-to-date hospital that would satisfy all the requirements of the locality, with an annex for emergency cases—for instance, of some poor people that were suddenly left destitute—supposing that was left there, do you not think that these chronic inmates of the house could be sent as far as Armagh without any detriment?—I have no doubt that they could.

9091. That question of tramps does not seem to be a subject that troubles you in Lurgan; there are none now on this sheet before me?—We have always a large number of tramps; we would have as many as twelve or fourteen of a night.

Dec. 1, 1905]
Mr. John
Fleming.

9102. Do you make them do anything in the house?—They are always occupied in the morning before breakfast either cleaning windows or some other occupation. Stone-baking was tried, but the regular tramps would not break stones; they always broke the hammer-shafts.

9103. Do you think if the Guardians' power was enlarged to detain them from three days to a week, do you think that would have a deterrent effect on them?—It might have; they don't like the confinement. I think it would have a good effect if they are kept for three days before they are liberated.

9104. Some people think that by shutting the workhouse to these tramps that perhaps damage would be done to the furnishings of the locality?—I have no doubt but it would; I think a great many cottages would take place that do not at present. I would be very much afraid of it.

9105. Still, would you believe in giving the Guardians a little more power to try the detention policy if they thought it desirable?—I certainly would.

9106. CHAIRMAN.—With reference to the tramp matter, I see you have a little more than four times as many workhouses in Lurgan as in Armagh; can you give any explanation of that; do they make things particularly pleasant for them in Lurgan and unpleasant for them in Armagh?—It is the direct line from Belfast to the south; they very often call at Lurgan and go on in the direction of Dublin.

9107. All round Lurgan there are high figures; for instance, the collective number of days for tramps are: Lurgan, 1,775; Dungannon, 2,447; Monaghan, 1,322; Castleblayney, 1,601; Newry, 6,997; Banbridge, 2,469; and Armagh, 4,307.—They come from Belfast to Lurgan, and then to Dungannon, and right to Derry; they don't touch Armagh.

9108. Would it not be on the direct road from Belfast to Monaghan where there are such very large numbers?—I don't think so.

9109. How would they go to Monaghan from Belfast?—I find very few tramps go in the Monaghan direction.

9110. Loughrea is a great centre for tramps?—So it is.

9111. And Banbridge and Newry; they seem to avoid Armagh for some reason or other?—It is not on the direct road to any particular place.

9112. It is on the direct line between Lurgan and Monaghan; it almost looks as if they were able to make a day's march from Lurgan to Monaghan?

Mr. MURKIN.—It is a point in favour of continuing Armagh that it is out of the way of tramps?—So it is.

9113. Supposing one workhouse in this union was closed, how far any profitable use to turn the disused workhouse to?—I think it would get into a state of ruin.

CHAIRMAN.—A doctor in Fermanagh recommended that they should be turned into quarters as long as they lasted.

9114. Mr. MURKIN.—Could they not be used for some educational or industrial purpose?—No.

9115. CHAIRMAN.—It would not suit for a factory or spinning place?—No.

9116. Mr. MURKIN.—It would not do for an auxiliary asylum?—No; the formation they are in at present is so different from what asylums are.

9117. They generally have exceedingly good sites and spacious grounds?—The site is right but the construction is bad.

9118. Do you not think that some good public purpose could be accomplished with them?—I don't think so; the only thing that the Lurgan Workhouse would be likely to be used for would be a factory, which it would not suit at all; it might, with alterations, be made an auxiliary asylum for lunatics.

9119. Did it ever occur to you to adopt the policy of boarding out inmates?—I don't think it would do; one thing would be very objectionable—the want of cleanliness. I think an old man or old woman sent out, for instance, to be boarded with their relatives would not get the attention in the way of cleanliness that they would get in the workhouse.

9120. We see people of sixty and sixty-five years of age who sigh for freedom; do you think it ought not to be made possible to let these old people get out and have fresh air and a chat with their neighbours if it could be done without any detriment to the public interest?—I believe it would meet their own wishes, but whether it is—

9121. It is one of the matters we have to inquire into, and it is a matter worthy of consideration by the Guardians to see if there could not be some system of the kind adopted?—Any party that is in the habit of visiting the houses of the poor and seeing the state they are lying in and comparing that with the beds of the indoor people in the workhouse, there is no comparison.

9122. Do you not think it would have a beneficial effect for the relieving officer to go round and inspect these houses where these people would be boarded out?—I think it would be almost an impossibility to get a great many women to have that beds and desire for cleanliness they should have; no law could have the desired effect.

9123. You will never spread the idea by keeping these people in an institution like the workhouse?—As far as I can see the indoor people in the Lurgan Workhouse are very comfortable. I was one of the Guardians who went through to inquire how many of them would be inclined to go out if they got this in a week; a large number of them preferred stopping in the house to going out.

9124. Dr. BROWN.—You mentioned you had a very good system of training nurses in Lurgan?—I think so.

9125. You have a staff of how many?—Fourteen.

9126. Did the Guardians ever consider the desirability of putting their hospital in a proper state?—I don't think they would object if it was not for the expense. There is no doubt whatever that the hospital requires some change.

9127. Did you ever think of boarding the floors and plastering the walls?—So far as I am personally concerned I think it would be most necessary.

9128. And connecting the infirmary to make it one institution with the hospital; would not that tend to economy in the staff?—I think it would.

9129. Are those matters the Guardians have ever discussed or taken into consideration?—I think not.

9130. Has it not been before them?—Yes; but a great number are country Guardians, and object to any outlay.

9131. Is it not a large manufacturing town?—Yes; there is another thing very much wanted—that is a convalescent ward.

9132. But these other things are more or less absolutely necessary; would it not be better to do absolutely necessary things before going to some of the other desirable things but not so urgently required?—I don't think there is anything in connection with the hospital wanted more than a convalescent ward.

9133. You would want a consumption ward?—There is a ward got up specially for consumption.

9134. It has not modern ventilation; is it not at the third story; patients cannot get up and down?—No doubt there are many requirements in connection with it.

Mr. CURR.—I should like to ask a few questions on behalf of Newry Union. Before asking the questions I should say that I appear for the Newry Guardians and also one of the rural divisions in the County Armagh. The Guardians are of opinion that three workhouses are necessary, and the Rural Council are of opinion that two are necessary.

CHAIRMAN.—Newry Workhouse is actually in the County Armagh.

Mr. CURR.—It is.

CHAIRMAN.—That is under the recent order?—Mr. CURR.—Always was.

CHAIRMAN.—It never has been counted in the County Armagh in the statistical returns.

9135. Mr. CURR.—Three Lurgan Union, to which you belong, is, I believe, situated in three counties?—Yes—Down, Antrim, and Armagh.

9136. Is the Armagh portion the biggest portion of the union?—Oh, yes.

9137. From the map here it does not appear very extensive; do you mean in area or population it is the biggest portion?—Population.

9138. That is on account of Lurgan and Portadown being both in Armagh?—Yes; and the country districts are very thickly populated about Lurgan.

9139. Is the proportion of inmates of the workhouse from Armagh proper very high?—I am not in a position to answer that question.

9140. Would there be any possible objection to sending the infirm sick of Lurgan to the Armagh Union?—I think there would be.

9141. What possible objection would there be?—I think the distance itself—thirteen miles—for a sick person would be most unreasonable.

9142. You think there would be no advantage in amalgamating the Armagh portion of Lurgan with Armagh Union?—I don't think so.

9133. Does any large proportion come from Antrim or Lurgan Union?—There is a small portion of the County Antrim in the Lurgan Union.

9134. How far is the Lurgan Union Workhouse?—Thirteen miles.

9135. How many miles is Armagh on the other side?—About the same distance.

9136. On the Down side, what is the nearest union?—Banbridge.

9137. So Lurgan is at the junction of three counties and surrounded by three workhouses at about a radius of thirteen miles from it?—Quite so.

9138. I believe you do charge some small sum for paying patients?—We do.

9139. Has it ever happened with you, as with us in Newry, that the paying patient has refused to pay?—There have been cases, and proceedings were taken, but it was found to be unworkable.

9140. Mr. Cusack.—We took proceedings against some of these paying patients, but Judge Orr held we could not make them accountable for more than the average cost. CHAIRMAN.—What is advocated now is a change in the laws.

9141. Witness.—Yes; they get it, and some of them refuse to pay, and it is unworkable.

CHAIRMAN.—In Enniskillen they get them to sign a document, and not being a lawyer, I don't know whether that is legal.

9142. Mr. Cusack.—We have done that in Newry now after the decision of Judge Orr, and we hold them to it.

9143. Mr. Lavery.—You are opposed to amalgamation?—Under certain circumstances.

9144. Are you opposed to the theory of amalgamation because you think it will not be a saving to the ratepayers?—I am not opposed altogether to the theory. I say under certain circumstances there are unions in which amalgamation would be a great saving, but I believe in Armagh it would not.

9145. Don't you think even in Armagh if one of the workhouses was done away with there would be additional expenditure necessary. Supposing you abolished Lurgan, you would have to pension off some of the others?—We would.

9146. Would that be a desirable thing?—I don't think so. I think if everything was taken into consideration it would make no change in Armagh.

9147. Would you not also have to contribute increased salaries to the selected centres?—There would be considerable increases both in salaries and accommodation, I believe.

9148. And would there not be increased expenditure on the conveyance of the infirm and sick and pauper inmates from one part of the county to the selected centres?—No doubt that is another objection; the conveyance of the infirm from the extremity of the union would entail considerable expense.

9149. And in any of these selected centres, when enlarged to the extent of meeting the requirements of the county, would there not be increased expenditure also necessary for lighting and heating?—There would be no need to increase expenditure.

9150. Suppose these philanthropic notions of establishing auxiliary asylums and penitentiaries for unfortunate women, and all that sort of thing, were carried out, would not that mean increased expenditure?—I would not think of establishing penitentiaries, for I think there is sufficient accommodation already.

9151. Would you think it a desirable thing to send them out of the workhouse?—I would.

9152. Would you select a particular centre for them?—No; but any place where there was a vacancy in the asylum to receive these unfortunate women, where they could be treated as they should be to have their character restored; there would be no difficulty in finding places for them to meet the requirements.

9153. Would you not have all the same class of women concentrated in these establishments, and would not the reputation of these establishments become as unsavoury as the workhouse?—I don't think so.

9154. Who is it does all the working and cleaning in the workhouse?—There are paid hands.

9155. Does not this unfortunate class do that kind of work?—Yes.

9156. And is not that a saving to the ratepayers?—I don't think their interests should be sacrificed for the ratepayers.

9157. If these women were concentrated together perhaps the last state of affairs might be worse than the first?—I don't think so. I have been in some of these establishments, and found where a reformation has taken place, and they are sent out to respectable situations; I look upon it as one of the greatest advantages; the reformation of a woman should be a matter of some importance to us all.

9158. Would you not have to contribute largely to these penitentiaries?—No; because they work for themselves.

9159. And you think the penitentiaries would throw open their doors to all the women who are now relieved in the unions of the country?—I know institutions in Belfast where the work of these unfortunate women maintains them. I know of many that went to the Good Shepherd Convent, Belfast, and came out as good servants.

9160. When you put all the unfortunate women of the country into penitentiaries, what kind of congested condition will these penitentiaries be in; would you not have to build new ones; could the present penitentiaries possibly accommodate all that would be sent into them?—I don't know.

9161. My point is that it would mean an additional expense?—It may not.

9162. Then this theory of amalgamation is one that is founded on financial saving?—That is the intention.

9163. If all these women are thrown out of workhouses and put into penitentiaries, must it not follow that there must be some penitentiaries erected?—I would look upon it as only temporary.

9164. You would admit that there would be a great additional expense necessary for the establishment of auxiliary asylums if this reformation is desirable; if you want auxiliary asylums, you will have to pay for them, and it will mean additional expense?—They have to be supported where they are.

9165. Mr. Cusack.—Which do you think would be better for the ratepayers—three half empty houses, with staffs attached to each, or one full house with one staff, or two full houses with two staffs—now, for the ratepayers?—I cannot speak of other unions.

9166. I am asking you that simple question; do you think it is better for the ratepayers to have three half-empty houses with full staffs or one full house with one staff?—Common sense would lead anyone to know that it is a considerable and unnecessary expense to have a house and support a staff of officers half employed.

9167. What was Lurgan Workhouse built to contain?—I don't know.

9168. How many does it hold at present?—There are about 400 in it.

9169. I suppose it would hold three times as many?—I don't think so; if there were three times as many it would not have the necessary accommodation.

9170. Would it hold twice as many?—I don't think so; I think it is taxed every winter.

9171. Mr. Lavery.—How much could you save in Lurgan if it was shut up?—I don't know.

9172. Nothing is paid for them, but their families bring them tea and sugar.

9173. Do they often visit them?—They do; some pretty regularly; but I believe that class would be kept at home to a large extent—many of their families would support them—if they had to send them to a distance, I would provide the greatest comfort possible for the really friendless and needy ones.

9174. You would put the aged and infirm in Armagh?—Wherever was wanted the most convenient centre.

9175. There soon will be railway communication right through the lower half of Armagh from Keady?—Yes, of course, I think there might be a good deal done

Dec. 1, 1900.

Mr. John Fleming.

Dr. DARLING examined.

Dr. Darling.

9176. CHAIRMAN.—What is your view about the number of workhouses in Armagh; do you think any reduction could be made in the number?—I think so.

9177. How would you propose to carry it out?—I would do away with all the workhouses in Armagh as workhouses except one, and have that a comfortable refuge for the friendless aged and infirm. I believe that as things are at present there are a great many—too many—of that class who might be properly maintained by their families; for instance, I know in Lurgan there are a great many of them who could be quite well supported by their families.

9178. And still they are friendless as far as their help goes?—Nothing is paid for them, but their families bring them tea and sugar.

9179. Do they often visit them?—They do; some pretty regularly; but I believe that class would be kept at home to a large extent—many of their families would support them—if they had to send them to a distance, I would provide the greatest comfort possible for the really friendless and needy ones.

9180. You would put the aged and infirm in Armagh?—Wherever was wanted the most convenient centre.

9181. There soon will be railway communication right through the lower half of Armagh from Keady?—Yes, of course, I think there might be a good deal done in reducing the numbers in the workhouse altogether. I would like to see in every place—Postdown and Lurgan—a little row of almshouses in which decent couples or decent folk that would be looked after a bit—would be housed. I would give them the house and a ton of coals and 5s. a week from the rates on condition that the church they belonged to, or friends or ladies interested in them, would find another 2s. 6d. a week.

Dec 1, 1868.
Dr. Darling

9185. That would be a very heavy expenditure!—For two people?

9186. You would have a row of houses!—I would only have half a dozen; there would be very few of them.

9187. Do you think there would be very few applicants?—There would be many applicants, but very few suitable cases. I am sure the ladies who look after the boarded-out orphans would quite willingly take the supervision of such, and it would do away with a considerable number of those who at present have to seek refuge in the workhouse.

9188. Is that proposal in order to provide for the destitute of good character and antecedents?—Exactly; the decent folk that it would be a real hardship to treat as paupers.

9189. There is some such arrangement in England!—There is, I understand.

9190. It is a wealthy country!—I don't think my idea would really increase the rates; it is only 5s. a week.

9191. There would be the cost of building the houses!—If it was done on the labourers' cottage system it ought not to cost more than 30s. or 40s. a week—the interest on the money spent. I would have a two-room house and just enough garden to enable them to employ themselves a bit. And where there were old couples or couples that had not such a direct claim on the family I would give a small money allowance rather than bring them into the house. I would do very little to enable sons and daughters to get rid of the support of their parents.

9192. Do you think the remainder would be a large number of aged and infirm?—No; you would reduce the number, I believe, by one-third by the way you would filter them out.

9193. But two-thirds would be mainly composed of those you would board out!—Yes; I don't think there would be many in Lurgan Union with a dozen of almshouses.

9194. As soon as the men die what would you do with the women?—I am afraid if she had no friends you would have to put her in a home; I would rather call it a home than a workhouse.

9195. As regards the lunatics!—I would certainly get rid of them.

9196. And the children!—We have no children in Lurgan except the children of sick people who are in the infirmary at the time, and the illegitimates.

9197. What do you think about what we were discussing with Mr. Fleming?—I would extend the law as far as taking away from the mothers as far as possible the custody of the children. After the birth, not before the birth, I think, of the children, I would send the mothers, or give them the offer of going, and even one penny if the law allowed it.

9198. You would not send the women away before the child was born!—No; because I believe the hospital is the proper place for them.

9199. Don't these women, as a rule, come to the workhouse one, two, or three, and even four months before their confinement?—Not in Lurgan; a month or six weeks.

9200. They come in for a considerable time, and during that time would they not be associating with obnoxious classes?—Not in Lurgan, because in the case of a girl who has made her first slip I keep her in the infirmary always.

9201. In the infirmary do you ever happen to have a case of specific disease in the ordinary ward?—We have no lock ward, if that is what you mean, but we have a skin ward.

9202. You have a case of specific disease!—Yes; in what we call the skin ward.

9203. In which there are children and unmarried?—No; there are no children.

9204. Sifting them, at all events?—They mix a bit about; that is all.

9205. Do you think it is desirable that a woman coming in to have a baby should be there?—They are never in that ward.

9206. Is there not in that ward a woman awaiting her confinement?—I know the case you refer to, that woman is quite a respectable woman; we do not put the obnoxious class there at all; that is where the personal factor comes in. I always make a distinction between a girl who has made her first slip and a woman who has come in for the third or fourth time.

9207. What I really doubted was whether you could put her among suffering surroundings in the workhouse!—They are certainly better than she has been accustomed to in many cases.

9208. She may have been a servant girl!—I think she is in as good surroundings as she had been in.

9209. But not elevating?—The contents and elsewhere won't take them except under a heavy capitulation.

9210. When I was asking Mr. Fleming if he had the idea that they would take them free; I had the idea they would take them for the average cost of maintenance!—A very heavy capitulation if you sent them in to the hospital. In Dublin, the practice is to send them to the lying-in hospitals.

9212. On the whole, would you think it better to send these women before, as well as after, the birth of their child to be under good influences?—I do. There is another difficulty that comes in. If you send all these away to one place you will have an outcry in that place if they are sent to the hospital there. There would have to be a payment; I don't think it would be an economy, but I don't think it would be a very distant expense.

9213. Would you not look forward to seeing that class very greatly reduced?—I would; to see it reduced.

9214. You have women who come with three or four or five, and I have known women with six children!—Yes; but the great difficulty is that more than half of these are imbeciles—that is of the members coming in again and again; they are a hopeless class.

9215. But some of them are really lusty, vigorous women!—Yes; and I don't know what you could do with them.

9217. Another class, I don't know whether you would be glad to see them out, would be those suffering from pulmonary phthisis; would you be in favour of having a special institution for a certain county or counties?—I certainly would have that, but you will always receive a very considerable number of cases unwilling to go away a distance from their friends, and we ought to have in every hospital proper consumptive wards, and we have no pretence of any in our hospitals.

9218. You would have some central institution!—I would.

9219. Possibly some diseased workhouse might be adapted for the purpose?—With a very large expenditure many of them would; they would have to be gutted.

9220. Some little saving might be effected; there would be the site free?—Yes; a nice suburban site, as a rule, and enough ground with it.

9221. You think even if such an institution were started consumptive wards would be necessary in general hospitals, such as yours?—I do; to that that consumptives would go in large numbers to those resorts is a mistake.

9222. We had interesting evidence from Dr. Moorhead that the Guardians of Cheshill have started a little sanatorium adjacent to the workhouse; where the people come eagerly, and there is always competition for admission; a great number of people even try to get away to Newcastle, County Wicklow; he does not find any unwillingness to go a considerable distance when he assures them that a cure is possible!—I have had great difficulty in persuading intelligent young men and women to go to Newcastle, even when I could get them selected. I believe a nice proper consumptive ward in our hospital would act as a feeder for that.

when they find themselves improving, and we would not then there, and not send out felicitous cases or cases of hemorrhage, but they will not do it at all.

9222. Dr. Moorhead suggested that any buildings that should be put up should be of wood on the ground that if consumption were finally grappled with we might expect its entire disappearance from the country in a short time, and it would be useless going to any expense in permanent structures?—In new structures I would make these of a temporary nature.

9223. He has very sanguine views about the stamping out of consumption?—We all have, more or less; but is a big anyway you cannot have it all wood, or you would have Colney Hatch over again.

9224. I suppose you meet with a great deal of consumption in your practice?—A great lot.

9225. Surgical as well?—Yes.

9226. Do you think it is really one of the most urgent and pressing reforms that could be carried out?—I do, sir.

9227. It is now two times as bad as fever?—Oh, yes; of course, I believe a great deal can be done either by little hospitals, such as that you spoke of, or if the Guardians won't do it I hope it will be done from another source altogether, but I believe hospitals could, at the expense of a few hundred pounds, have nice little isolated wards for them; we could treat a large number of cases in our hospitals.

9229. With open air and revealing shutters?—No; but a big open verandah, with jalousies that could screen the sides.

9230. These revolving things cost only about £13?—We have no ground that we could easily use for that; my idea would be to use this as a feeder for the central place.

9231. If only sick and fever cases were left at any workhouse that might be closed; what would you propose should be done with the rest of the buildings; do you think they ought to be knocked down or that they could be converted to any other purpose?—I don't see what you could do with our buildings; perhaps they could be used for technical purposes, and I don't see why they should not.

9232. You would use the entrance block as your hospital?—Yes, taking the whole thing right across; that would give us enough for a long time to come.

9233. But you would continue the fever hospital?—Yes.

9234. There are a great many buildings in between that would be useless?—If they were found necessary, as technical schools, they could be used.

9235. It would not be a very good arrangement to have technical schools going on between a fever hospital and another hospital?—I would build them off absolutely—completely—as could be done with us.

9236. So that if there was a demand for any institution of that sort you think the Lurgan building could be used?—It is not central for an auxiliary asylum or any such purpose.

9237. Would you be in favour of giving Guardians and their medical officers powers to make discretionary charges for patients?—In practice we do it; we get about £2000 last year from patients.

9238. Was that largely in the fever hospital?—Quite half of it; we have small wards; I use them in practice as pay wards, and we charge up to 10s. a week in them quite regularly, and find people very willing to pay it.

9239. They understand they will get good nursing and good medical attendance?—In the town of Lurgan there are a great many clerks and apprentices that it would be an awful shame to put into a pauper ward, and they are quite willing to pay from 5s. to 10s.; we never treat them as paying patients unless they pay it.

9240. Or 5s. 6d., Mr. Fleming mentioned?—Oh, no; we allow those to wear their own clothes if they pay 5s. up, and in other cases they get the ordinary treatment and are charged the average cost.

9241. Have you got any different clothing for the inmates of the hospital?—No.

9242. That you could have; the Guardians would not object to that; it is merely a question of blue serge instead of grey frieze?—We have bed jackets, but when they are up they have to wear the ordinary clothes of the house.

9243. I suppose a good many people when they come in have not suitable wear?—I don't think you could let any but the paying class wear their own clothes.

9244. Would you like to have a hospital uniform?—I would; I would like to separate the workhouse absolutely from the sick, and not have any workhouse taint on the hospital.

9245. Are the medical officer's notions, as a matter of fact, the same as the porter's?—Absolutely the same, and the Guardians on two occasions have, by resolution, refused to improve them.

9246. I was hoping it was an oversight?—No, sir. These officers' notions are most unsatisfactory; there is enough given to feed them, but the Guardians won't consider any change, and they are so monotonous that some of them are absolutely wasted; that could be changed without any cost; it is a disgrace. About this whole question of hospital accommodation I think that you want one uniform scheme to take in all the hospitals of the whole country; I would embrace in that cottage hospitals and little endowed hospitals; I would take them in as far as I could. In the West of Ireland, where I spend my holidays, I am constantly struck with places thirty or forty miles from anywhere—Faldarna, for instance. I would begin at the lowest rung of the ladder and have a district nurse there with a residence and a couple of rooms that could be used for a serious accident case, bad maternity case, or some such emergency. Then I would grade up from that according to the population and requirements to a large central hospital; but I would not bludge down to a county area at all; I think it would be the greatest mistake to make county infirmaries the summit of the scale; many of them are in most inaccessible places, and many of them too small.

9249. You don't see any reason why there should be two hospitals in a place like Armagh?—In any one town. I believe Portadown ought to have its own hospital, but it ought to be subsidiary to Lurgan, which is only five miles from it, and nursed from it.

9250. Named as part of the common system?—But then I would not expect that all those smaller hospitals would have high class surgeons and all that kind of thing; it is too much to expect. I would grade up to one or two in each county that ought to be kept up to a high standard, they being a training school for nurses, and ought to have the very best nursing staff, and I would make the superintendent nurse of the hospital have a general superintendence over all hospitals nursed by her nurses.

9251. You don't mean that she should be a travelling inspector of nurses?—Only for her own staff.

9252. Don't you think that would be certain to lead to friction?—I don't think so if she is supplying the preceptors. My idea would be to make the staff as simple and inexpensive as possible, and instead of having a big staff of clerks in these hospitals I would have them under their hand nurses, who would be also matron if it was small enough, and have a very inexpensive and simple staff.

9253. Then the dispensary doctor in the smallest hospital would be the doctor in charge of it?—Yes.

9254. And when you have got it to the higher scale than the medical officer would be appointed by the governing body?—Yes; and then I would get to the highest hospital of all, where there ought to be some special restrictions to ensure a first-class man being appointed to it.

9255. Are you looking to a hospital at a centre like Belfast?—To what I think Lurgan ought to be made or Armagh ought to be.

9256. You don't look to some larger hospital occupying a position in the shambles?—No; I think the county unit is large enough. To compel the sick from Lurgan to go off a long distance would be very cruel. My idea is that these central hospitals ought to be largely in dependent of geographical boundaries; it ought to be freed to suit the population and convenience of the area to be served.

9252. Some doctors think that with the existing motor ambulances there are some countries quite a revolution?—We have a nice good ambulance, but ask a man with a broken thigh or pneumonia what it means even to come six miles in it and they will all say it is a very painful experience.

9253. Do you think such a case would object to go from Lurgan or Newry to Armagh?—Oh, it would be cruel; a great many could do it. I think about the nursing there ought to be a great change in the Local Government classification. Personally, I would do away with wardmaids; do what you will, they will be an inferior grade of nurses.

9254. Are you speaking of the hospital of the future, where there will be no class such as women with illegitimate children to do services for you; where there would have to be paid servants; would you object to a paid servant in your new hospital?—Certainly not; but wardmaids are a permanent appointment under the Local Government Board.

9255. There was a special reason for that?—Well, except by a sworn inquiry, she could not be got rid of.

9256. There would not be much difficulty in changing that name, but at the time there was an absolute reason for it?—I would like to see these paid servants in it instead of wardmaids. I think the distinction between qualified and trained nurses should be absolutely done away with.

9257. You are aware of the reason why the two grades were appointed; it was for the purpose of the Parliamentary grant, and that there never would have been a two-fold distinction if it had not been for that purpose?—I am aware of that. A girl trained for two years has not experience to take up a high charge post—the maternity of a hospital. What I would do here would be, I would insist on a uniform and good standard of training, then I would give to every class at the end of two years—

9258. They would not all have the same experience. In a hospital like the Royal Hospital, Belfast, she would necessarily receive more experience—I think not; I would only recognise those better class hospitals as training schools. All the trained nurses from the North of Ireland come from Belfast Workhouse, and all the other trained nurses in Ireland from St. Steven's Hospital.

9259. I cannot confirm you in that?—Well, to meet the difficulty of a higher class for an important post, I would at the end of two years allow every class to go in for an extra certificate, partly by examination and partly by inspection of her work, the manner in which she kept her wards, and the ability she had shown in the meantime, and when she got her higher certificate I would enter her on your register.

9260. As eligible for recruitment?—I would make all the higher posts.

9261. A sort of post-graduate course?—Yes; and enter her on your register that she might be appointed to any post that was vacant. In Lurgan we train qualified nurses, but no matter how clever, able, or industrious that girl may be she can never rise to a better standard, whereas the most indifferent trained nurse must always have a status higher than her's, because no one would deny that the trained nurse may turn out inefficient, but she is always of a superior status to the best her; give them a chance of rising.

9262. After inspection of their own work?—Yes, and a further examination to show that she is studying and keeping up to her work.

9263. You have no suggestion of the sort about the doctors?—I think that is a very difficult question to answer; you ought to make a standard for the doctors of these superior hospitals. I have had a talk with Dr. Thompson, of Omagh, about it, and I think we were pretty much of the one opinion that some method ought to be taken of selecting a high-class man; I would give him a high salary and insist on his only taking consulting practice.

9264. You think it would be unfortunate if in a hospital that had been brought up to a high pitch of efficiency, such as Dr. Thompson's hospital, an appointment was made on the ordinary lines of the gentleman who had most influence?—I think the whole thing would have to be changed; the appointment of a man because of his religion or politics or anything except his qualifications, is an anachronism altogether; there ought to be some change. I would like to see the County Councils have charge of the whole thing; it would greatly do away with it. No one man can have sufficient votes and seats over a whole county to influence it.

9271. Mr. MURKIN.—Have the appointments made lately been of such a class that you think the Guardians are not trustworthy of making selections?—That is perhaps hardly a fair way of putting it; a man is not chosen if he is not influenced by religious and religious and politics, and if you have an area so small that that will tell to a very large extent, it is inevitable that it must, especially as Guardians, in my opinion, are the worst governors of a hospital that could be; they are really elected to manage the work, and not for any reason that makes them capable managers of a hospital.

9272. Still they have been doing the work for half a century?—Have they done it well?

9273. I would like to know that from you?—No.

9274. I would like to know where have they done it all; take your own case; did they make a bad selection in Lurgan?—Every improvement that has been made has been made in the face of the greatest amount of odium to me, personally, and at a very heavy cost to my pocket. I was told when I began the work for the improvement of the hospital, and told by one Guardian after another, "If you do this, and put us to expense, your pocket will suffer for it."

9275. Really this and on the part of the profession to take the appointments out of the hands of representative men seems to be open to very considerable inquiry. I would like to know if the Guardians, as far as you know, have made any improper appointments from a professional point of view?—I know appointments that I believe were made purely on the question of religion or politics.

9276. Were they not made so before under the old system?—But I am speaking of the whole system.

9277. Won't they be always made so as long as men is man?—I would say, raise the class of representative. Perhaps I ought not to say raise the class. We have in a small union sixty-six men out of a very small area, whereas out of the same area there are eight County Councilors; they will be a bit superior in education, and probably better business men and more capable, and from the fact that they will be more evenly balanced as regards religion and politics will make the appointments better appointments.

9278. Still the Guardians are the representatives of the people who pay the doctor his salary?—That is where the question comes in; they are all too subject to pressure by the small ratepayer, and have gone in pledged to resist all expenditure.

9280. Are these Guardians not rather to be viewed in the light of watchful Guardians over the interests of the ratepayers than as trying to do the opposite?—I know that every proposal that has ever come up for the improvement of nursing, for the improvement of the dietary—I need not speak of structural improvements, because they have all been successfully resisted—has every other improvement has only been brought about as the result of the most persistent strife; the nursing was only improved by bringing deputations from all the respectable people all over the place into the Board of Guardians and forcing their hand.

9281. The Lurgan dietary is very liberal; they get a quart of sweet milk every day; does every house of a farmer's house get a quart of sweet milk?—I am not speaking of our dietary.

9282. I thought you were making an attack on the general administration of the Poor Law by the Guardians?—I say it would be better to have the appointments in the hands of a body that would not be so subject to outside influence.

9283. A smaller circle?—No; a wider circle. My system would be that each of these hospitals would be governed by a joint committee—something the way the county infirmaries are done now—by a joint committee composed of the local people and half of the County Council, and that would give, I believe, quite sufficient representation of local interests to make sure that no appointment would be made hostile to local interests.

9284. How could that small committee of from eight to ten to twenty-two men look after the whole work of the county as regards medical officers?—By being combined in each place with an equal number of local persons.

Dec. 3, 1904.
Dr. Delling.

5235. Then you would want to re-establish dispensary committees?—Perhaps in a measure, if you like. I would have five or six County Councils and a corresponding number of local persons in the area to be served, and let them recommend the appointments to the County Council and have them confirm, and in that way do away with any idea of jobbery.

5236. In the county there are a large number of dispensary areas, and the County Council would be representative perhaps of only two, so he could hardly look after the interests of the dispensary areas—I believe that could be met by the appointment of a certain number of local men.

5237. Do you mean appointments or elections, which? Do you mean the ratepayers should select the men?—These local committees, composed partly of County Councils and partly of local representatives, would select and pass on the recommendation to the County Council for appointment.

5238. Are you not aware that these county committees meet only twice a year and that the Guardians meet fifty-two times in the year?—Four times too often.

5239. Not for supervision; of course, if you want to leave the medical officer and the officials of the Poor Law system entirely to manage the business you need have no meetings at all?—Oh, no.

5240. But is there any better way of getting the work properly done than by careful and frequent supervision?—My difficulty is the Guardians don't supervise; there is not half a dozen Guardians out of sixty in my board, except they have a ploughman that they want to award, or put a foot in the workhouse.

5241. Your Guardians are very liberal in Lurgan; the rate is high?—Our cost is 3s. 11d., and in Armagh it is 4s. 10d.

5242. The Armagh rate is 6d., yours is 11d.; that is due to the large valuation of Armagh and the small number in the workhouse, whereas you have a large number in your workhouse—twice as many—and your valuation is not as high?—Lurgan has a large manufacturing population, and there must be a large number coming into it on account of that; but I am fully of opinion that these hospitals, if they are to be a success and made really good hospitals, ought to be separated from the workhouses and separated from the management of the same body.

5243. That is quite right, but do you think the ratepayers of Ireland could establish any fancy system, such as you outline, without a very great increase of their present burdens?—I don't think it would cost as much. I believe if you separate the hospitals from the workhouses you will distinctly diminish the cost. At present we must take every corner boy that gets a cut head, and we must take in all sorts of undesirable people. If they were separated there are a great many of those we would not touch, and there would not be the drift from the workhouse into the infirmary that there is. I believe we could considerably diminish our numbers of the chronic and undesirable class if we had hospitals under a different system.

5244. You say the number of females with illegitimate children is largely recruited from the imbecile class; if these people were removed to the auxiliary system would it not do away with that danger?—Most of these are hardly imbecile enough to be certifiable.

5245. CHAIRMAN.—They were never in the workhouse?—No; they are those girls that are just "thick." What Mr. Murnaghan asked me about was those that keep coming back and back; those are largely of the "thick" class.

5246. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—But there are women in the imbecile or imbecile class that do have children in the house?—Yes; but they are not certifiable, as a rule, for an asylum. There is one matter that I believe is the crux, except the Government will give a large free grant for structural alterations to these different hospitals to put them into proper order it is out of the question; they won't be done. It would cost a very considerable sum to put the Lurgan Workhouse into a fit state structurally; it could be made very decent indeed with £5,000 or £6,000.

5247. CHAIRMAN.—Armagh Infirmary cost £10,000; don't you think it would be better to build one than try to patch the existing one?—Not unless they could dispose of that to advantage; I think the front part could be improved.

5248. You could never make it into a modern-looking hospital?—I think you could; it is well situated as regards light.

5249. Would the structure admit of good walling?—I think so; take the ceiling out of that square ward and throw it into the attic above. If you take those stone mullions out and put good windows in it you would make that a good ward.

5250. You would have a great deal of waste room in it?—There is a ward upstairs above that. Throwing these two into one and knocking the masonry out between the narrow windows, you would have a fine surgical ward.

5251. As regards the closets and bath-rooms, and other appliances?—There are the places there for them; we have modern closets in them, but they are susceptible of a great deal of improvement, and we could put baths in. If somebody gave me £5,000 I think I could improve it.

CHAIRMAN.—What did it cost at Newry?

Mr. CROCK.—£5,000; but the walls were there. If I was—I think we could, by the expenditure of £5,000, take in the clerks' office and the master's office, and put in bath-rooms and proper appliances.

5252. In your opinion, special terms would be desirable from Government?—I think the Government ought to give half the money necessary on a proper estimation, and give the other at a small rate of interest; I think they ought to give a more liberal subsidy than they do at present; reequipment for one nurse is a very small thing; we are a very poor country.

5253. Dr. BROWNE.—You mentioned about the three in coming severe cases of accident; would it be desirable to have a hospital at Portadown which has a large population?—I think so, distinctly; a small hospital.

5254. Enough for the needs of Portadown?—I would certainly make it subsidiary; to establish a new hospital with a large staff would be very costly.

5255. Which would be the larger one?—Lurgan. The exact acreage of the whole union is 30,000 acres; of that there is 40,000 acres in the County Armagh and the rest in the other two counties.

5256. Would you make the charge a county charge or a union charge?—I have thought over it a lot; I think you would have to have a charge over the area that was to be covered by the hospital.

5257. CHAIRMAN.—Would you not make it a union charge?—Yes; but I think it would have to be assessed on the county; I think a great deal of Banbridge Union ought to be taken into Lurgan.

5258. Dr. BROWNE.—Supposing it was assessed on the union at large, would you allow patients from any portion of the union to go to either hospital they wished?—I would certainly. What I think would result in practice would be that the ordinary sick people in Portadown would go into the hospital there, and if there was a serious case they would either get help or send it to the larger hospital.

5259. Would you have the doctor at Portadown on a fixed salary so that he could assist at Lurgan, or the Lurgan doctor assist at Portadown?—My idea would be that the men in any of these central hospitals ought to be paid good salaries, and then on a settled fee become the consultant for any hospital over a certain area. A man could be made consulting officer of a number of them at a salary.

5260. Mr. CROCK.—Would your theory of one workhouse for one county be applicable to all Ireland, or only for the County Armagh?—I think it would be applicable to most of Ireland; there might be more needed in some large county.

5261. Taking this one central workhouse, did you take into consideration South Armagh, Jonesboro', and Forkhill, where there is no railway communication?—There will be railway communication; the classes I speak of are those that can be quite easily moved.

5262. You think the particular circumstances of Armagh would be suited by one central workhouse? For the greatly reduced class that I believe would only need it.

5263. You are an advocate of the boarding out theory, but your boarding out is confined to almshouses; did you enter into any calculation of the cost of building these almshouses; take Newry, how many almshouses would you want with 12,000 people?—Six or eight.

5264. Do you think six or eight would be quite sufficient for all the deserving poor of the town of Newry?—No; but the deserving couples that it would be undesirable to separate; I am fourteen years in the workhouse, and I know how few they are.

5265. You think they would be confined to five or six?—You could shoot others when the vacancy occurred.

Dec. 1, 1903.

Dr. Darling.

9316. Mr. Lavery tells me there are twenty in Castleknock—I don't know where they come from.

9317. Have you ever found any trouble with paying patients after they had been treated in receiving the payments?—There has been trouble; there was one man with twenty-seven acres of land that the Judge of Assize decided need not pay because the man went into a large calculation of how much it cost him to keep his farm.

9318. You would advocate that people who can pay should be made to pay?—Certainly.

9319. How many acres of the Lagan Union that are in Armagh are covered by Lough Neagh?—That I cannot answer.

9320. Mr. Lavery.—You want to put these unfortunate women into penitentiaries?—After the first fall.

9321. When they would get it to move you would put them into penitentiaries?—As long as you don't expect the penitentiaries to get up a great hospital.

9322. After they get out of the union hospital you put them into the penitentiary; would you suggest they should be reeducated there; in your opinion is the word penitentiary an equivalent for jail?—I don't think the law will ever sanction their being forcibly confined.

9323. CHAIRMAN.—Supposing they had no place else to go, and were not admitted into the district hospitals?—In Austria they compel them to stay in these places for nine months until they have done nursing their child, and get what work they can out of them, and then they go out and come back in twelve months with another child.

9324. That is a sort of State prison?—It is under the best management.

9325. Is it under religious influence?—The few months I was in Vienna the number of illegitimate cases for the second time coming into the maternity wards was very great, but then the great poverty of the people accounts for it. The illegitimate births in Vienna when I was there were 43, 44, and up to 45 per cent. of the total births.

9326. That is not instructive for this country?—It is the mere matter of these great institutions for putting the women into.

9327. Did you ever see the inside of any of these institutions?—No.

9328. You don't know under what management they were?—I was told they were under very nice management, the very best they could get for them.

9329. Mr. MURPHY.—But they have got in the States a community known as the Good Shepherd, who take care of such a class as this, and where the women are kept under restraint; you are not aware of how that system works?—The difficulty of doing anything in this country that is regarded as interfering with the liberty of the subject is so great I doubt that Parliament could be got to pass such an Act, but some might be obtained to pay for them if they would go.

9330. CHAIRMAN.—Are most of the midwifery cases you have in the workhouse illegitimate?—Perhaps as much more than half; since the hospital has been improved quite a number of poor married women do come in.

9331. Then if you had a district hospital there ought certainly to be a lying-in ward?—Oh, most important.

9332. You think that would be used very largely if that ward were not attended by the objectionable women coming in and using it?—It would be used by the poor married women, and with great advantage.

9333. It is very difficult for these women to be confined in their own houses with any regard for decency?—The number of infants that are lost is very great; we must always keep our training material.

9334. You would not object to let the mothers of illegitimate children go away as training material if you thought you would get in the more respectable class to take their place?—Quite so.

Mr. GUSSE.—Mr. Ball tells me they were giving in Newry relief to upwards of 200 old married couples.

Dr. Samuel Agnew.

Dr. SAMUEL AGNEW examined.

9337. Some counties would be too small?—Well, so far as this county is concerned, I expect everything would be modified more or less by circumstances, and you could not lay exact lines down for each county, but on an average there should be one for each county, and in the control and charge of the County Council, whether governed by committee itself or by a committee the same as the asylum. I would not go in for altering materially or making consumptive sanatoria in connection with the new district hospitals. I would suggest—

9338. You would have just observation wards?—It is quite right that there should be an isolation ward and ward for the reception of consumptives, and I think there is really more in the treatment of consumption than open air; it requires constant supervision and a resident medical officer on the premises, and all that that they would not get in a district hospital; they require supervision in their food and feeding, so that it would be rather disadvantageous that they should be encouraged to stay in district hospitals when their time would be spent more profitably in properly equipped sanatoria where there would be a resident physician. In district hospitals if cases come in it would be the duty of the doctor in charge to see that they did not mix with the other patients and communicate the disease; there should be a ward apart for such cases. With regard to the fever hospitals, I think they should be done away with, and fever hospitals in charge of the sanitary authorities provided as intended by the Local Government Act.

9339. Would you take away the fever hospitals from the Poor Law administration?—From the Poor Law administration.

9340. But if you took away the ordinary medical and surgical hospitals from the Poor Law administration and transferred them to a county committee, what would you do with the fever hospitals?—I would do the same. If the county authority was made the sanitary authority, I think the County Council should be the sanitary authority for the whole county, and if that was done I would have no objection to their remaining under the supervision of the committee of the County Council, but if not, isolation hospitals for infectious diseases should be in charge of the sanitary authorities as intended by the Public Health Act.

9341. Dr. FISHER.—Would it not be more economical to have all the hospitals under one administration?—You could do that, and it would agree with my opinion with regard to County Councils, for I hold a strong opinion that the County Council in Ireland should be the sanitary authority, as in England.

9342. A good many of these fever hospitals are empty; could not the nursing and be used in the infirmaries and interchanged more readily?—They could, but at the present time, with the enforcement of the provisions of the Public Health Act with regard to isolation, the hospitals are quite unsuited; with regard to patients the Lurgan hospital is tolerably so. As far as the nursing or officers are concerned, I don't think any much could be said, but the building is quite unsuitable for the reception of patients, and especially patients who are able to contribute, and who, at the same time, are forced to seek admission for the purpose of infirmary.

8343. You are speaking more as the sanitary authority?—I am here as the representative of our sanitary authority.

8344. Mr. MURKIN.—Would you do away with the Guardians altogether?—Almost.

8345. What work would you give them?—To look after the restricted workhouses.

8346. What would they have to do with the restricted workhouses; do you put that forward as a joke?—I do not; I am serious, and can give you reasons for being serious. So far as our Langan Guardians are concerned, I suppose they are as intelligent as most Guardians, and there never has been a single improvement yet; we have nothing that has not been forced out of them—dragged out of them.

8347. No improvement in connection with the fever hospital?—It is not two years since they were absolutely forced to provide disinfecting apparatus, after years and years of pressure.

8348. They have done so, I think?—Yes; after years and years of pressure.

8349. When people have done so, even after years of pressure, are there not some people who do not advance at all?—There are, and should be done away with.

8350. Who would look after the doctor of the dispensary district if the work of the Guardians was not done?—You might leave it to the county committee.

8351. The doctor is not such an immovable character that he does not need supervision?—He is well supervised; especially when he looks for an increase of salary.

8352. Since the dispensary committee were done away with he has nobody to look after him?—Oh, yes.

8353. The Local Government Board?—Yes; and the Local Government Board Inspector. As far as our duties are concerned in relieving the sick, no Board of Guardians or the others could look after them any more than they have done, because if there is any complaint regarding the action of the doctor he has plenty of crimes on every board to hunt it up.

8354. If these boards were done away with the doctor would have no one to look after him?—As far as the Guardians are concerned these would not be, but I don't mean to say that the dispensary medical officer should not be supervised; he certainly should; I would not return the Guardians for the sake of looking after the doctor alone.

8355. Is not the Poor Law system an improving system?—Very slightly; I have said that the Langan hospital is tolerably fair. I have been in connection with that hospital as house surgeon for thirty-two years. I know it as intimately as my own house. Up to the last eight or ten years I invariably did better than there, sometimes for months at a time, and I know what fighting we had to do between Dr. Darling's predecessor and the Guardians to get anything done, and the condition in which it is in now it would have been in twenty years ago if the Guardians had been doing their duty. It has only been brought up to date a few years ago.

8356. CHAIRMAN.—Do you consider it to be up-to-date now?—I do not; it is twenty-five years behind time yet. To give you another example of how the Guardians do their duty, I got my Council unanimously to pass a resolution pleading with the Guardians to provide a suitable ambulance; the other was something like the remains of an old bread cart. The Periodical Council joined with the Langan Council in the appeal, but it was scouted; that was within the last three years. Another thing they did a short time ago—to give you an example of how our intelligent Guardians act—they hailed up Dr. Darling for using too much soap and disinfectants in the fever hospital.

8357. Mr. MURKIN.—They seem to be fairly liberal; they are spending a good deal of money?—They were asked to spend a good deal of money twenty-eight or thirty years ago.

8358. Why did the doctors not make an assault on them then as they are doing to-day; was it because they were then half ex-officio and half elected?—It was not; if it were not for the ex-officio we would have got very little at all.

8359. And you are sighing for the ex-officio again. I doubt if that sentiment on the part of the doctors will do them much good?—And now we could not get anything but for the labour representatives. There were some cottages provided in part of the Langan Rural District; there was a demand made to get a second batch for another part of the district; the Guardians who had got the first lot in their own district voted against the labourers in my district, and voted against the scheme to a man; that is the way the Guardians do their work.

8360. Under your new scheme, what method of management would you have; would you leave it all in the hands of a committee of the County Council?—Leave it in the hands of the County Council, because I suspect the committee would be revised every two or three years.

8361. Don't you think these outside areas would require some one to look after their interests?—I don't think it is impossible to look after the interests of outside areas, as far as I have looked into the matter.

8362. How would you manage these district hospitals?—The district hospitals would be governed by a committee consisting of local men and a number of County Councillors.

8363. Partly nominated and partly elected?—The County Councils would nominate, say half, and if the Government are very lavish about the amount of money I think the Local Government Board should nominate a certain number of local representatives, as are done on school committees.

8364. What do you mean about the Government being lavish or liberal; do you think the Government ever give anything?—Oh, yes; they pay two-thirds of some expenses.

8365. They take it out of one Irish pocket and put it into the other?—If you wish to go into the Financial Relations question.

8366. This is an Irish question solely?—I hold that in these cases the Government are entitled to deal with local boards very lavishly, and in one respect I will mention—the question of the Labourers Acts the time for repaying the loan should be greatly extended, so that the cottages can be put up at a cheaper rate.

8367. What I would like to keep you to is the management of these hospitals; you say it would be well that this Treasury, that is so generous and gives money out of the British chest; I suppose that is the way you look at it?—Oh, no.

8368. Don't you know that if you get money for your new district hospitals in order to enable the central body to have some voice in it, don't you think you will be taking it from some other source equally deserving?—Leaving the ultimate source out of the question, if a certain sum of money is provided from the Local Government Board for local purposes.

8369. There is no fund that they can touch?—The Customs and Excise.

8370. That is an Imperial fund; you won't get at that?—We have got at it.

8371. I don't think so; what you have got at is simply an Irish fund alone that is applied to Irish purposes, and what would happen if you got a grant from the Treasury would be that you would take it from some other Irish purpose?—I think our local representatives have more influence than that.

8373. Don't you think the local men would want to see what was being done with the local money?—I was going to add—it was about the construction of the committee we were—I think if a very considerable contribution is made from the Exchequer it would be no harm for the Local Government Board to have the power to nominate a certain number of the committee from among the local residents.

8374. That is supposing the British Treasury would, out of the Imperial funds, give a contribution?—Yes; or even so as they are going now.

8375. They are giving nothing Imperial, but simply shifting round from one Irish fund to another?—That is the fruit of our local representatives in Parliament. I think we should be treated on a similar basis to what they are in England; a very large amount of money goes to local sources out of the exchequer, and we should get our proper proportion for similar local purposes in Ireland.

Dec. 1, 1908
Dr. Samuel Agnew.

Dec. 1, 1903.

Dr. Samuel
Agnew.

9376. And, failing that, you still leave the management in the hands of the local men who had to pay?—If they were not able I would not leave it, and, so far as I know, they are not able.

9377. In what respect?—I have given you several instances. To move at all you have to move at the rate of twenty-five years behind the times.

MR. JOHN F. SMALL EXAMINED.

Mr. John F.
Small.

9380. Mr. Cusack.—On this amalgamation question, have you formed any views at all with reference to the County Armagh?—The alterations we propose in Newry principally refer to the County Down.

9381. You have formed no idea about the alterations in the Armagh Union?—The Board of Guardians have formed an opinion; they propose to amalgamate that part of Castledilany—the Armagh portion—with Newry.

9382. Is that portion in your Coroner's district?—Yes; the greater portion of it is.

9383. And you know the needs of that district fairly well?—I know the country very well.

9384. You think it would be advantageous to get that portion added into Newry, if there is a dissolution of Castledilany?—My personal opinion is that it would be rather inconvenient; but it is the opinion of the Board of Guardians.

9385. You had better give your own opinion?—My own opinion is that the Armagh portion of Castledilany Union is rather far from Newry, and there is no railway communication with it.

9386. Then you think it is better to let it remain as it is?—If Castledilany be retained I think the Armagh portion of Castledilany should remain with it, but if Castledilany were dissolved then I think the Armagh portion of Castledilany should come to Newry.

9387. There is a very important matter in which you have taken some interest, that of paying patients?—

Yes. There was one particular instance which we looked upon as a great scandal; there were several other cases that were quite bad enough. There is a hospital in Newry called the Newry Fever and General Hospital; it retains the name of fever simply as a matter of continuity, for it does not admit any fever cases; all fever cases must either come to our hospital or be sent away to Armagh or Downpatrick; under these circumstances we have not seen our way to refuse admission to people who otherwise would not be entitled to relief.

9388. CHAIRMAN.—In the interests of the public health?—In the interests of the public health we don't see our way to refuse admission to people who would not be entitled to the benefit of the Medical Charities Act, and therefore we admit people of a superior class on many occasions to the fever hospital, and we have not got a very good return from some of them.

9389. Such admissions are done all over Ireland?—I don't know on what terms they are admitted in other places. There were several cases in which we received very bad returns from the friends of people who were able to pay.

9390. Mr. Cusack.—In a superior class of life?—Yes; people who, if pressure had been brought to bear on them before their friends were admitted, would have paid any amount of money—perhaps £5 a week—and afterwards the same people offered to pay 3s. 6d. a week.

9391. There were contagious cases?—Typhoid fever. 9392. You went so far as to sue these people, and were beaten at Quarter Sessions?—In one case, perhaps the worst case, we sued a gentleman in Newry for the maintenance of his daughter; he offered 3s. 6d. a week; the case was defeated before the County Court Judge on the ground that we made no contract with him. Since that we have drawn up an agreement and have asked that some responsible person should sign the agreement before the admission of the patient, but even that has not worked out well.

9393. CHAIRMAN.—But you get of better now?—Not very much better yet; there is a great deal of evasion practised; it has surprised me how people who at first were very anxious to get their friends in afterwards showed no gratitude or interest.

9394. Mr. Cusack.—Do you know the Local Government Board have warned the Guardians they had no power to charge these fees?—There was a letter saying we had no authority to charge more than the cost of 9395. Have you not been moving right along?—No, no.

9396. In Lurgan you have a good ambulance and disinfecting apparatus that cost £250, and a liberal dietary; you certainly are moving in Lurgan?—Unfortunately, since we commenced to operate for that two doctors have died, and Dr. Darling is the third practitioner.

maintenance; then the question arose, what was the cost of maintenance; was it merely the patients' food, or did it include part of the establishment charges for keeping the hospital up. Mr. Bell said he thought that if we did that it would come up to about £1 a week. There were two points of view presented—was that we could not admit these people on any terms, another point of view was that if we did admit them we could not make them pay more than 3s. 6d. a week.

9397. CHAIRMAN.—That was not with respect to any particular class, such as soldiers and policemen?—No; in the case of policemen there is a statutory obligation on us, but in the case of soldiers there is not; but we never refuse admission. The cases in which this question arose was a respectable merchant in town and people to whom it was a great consideration to get their friends removed out of the house. There are some people whose food would cost far more than the sum they were asked to pay us, not to say anything of the medical attendance, nursing, washing, removal from the house, and prevention of contagion.

9398. Mr. Cusack.—Mr. Bell tells me some of these patients require the attendance of two special nurses. Yes. We have passed a general resolution that paying patients, except where otherwise ordered by the board, should pay £1 a week, but since that some patients have been admitted at 10s. a week—patients that, I think, should not have been admitted at that figure at all.

9399. Have you formed any opinion about this theory about boarding out?—What particular class of cases do you refer to?

9400. Old married couples in almshouses; would you advocate that from your knowledge of Newry?—We have not many married couples there, but I would be in favour of removing all classes from the workhouse that could be removed. We have adopted the boarding out system as far as possible for children, and it has worked favourably; of the children boarded out very few returned to the workhouse. I have only known of one case that has not turned out well, and as far as I am concerned I would be very willing to extend it to a good many classes—married couples and harmless lunatics.

9401. CHAIRMAN.—And you would extend the law to enable you to board out illegitimate children?—Yes, there was an Act passed in 1899 very much extending the powers of Guardians, but that has remained a dead letter.

9402. It is adopted in a good many cases?—It seems to be unknown in Newry, or ignored. I would extend the boarding out principle to married couples and harmless lunatics.

9403. Mr. Cusack.—Would you advocate the building of almshouses?—I think there are too many buildings at present. I would utilize the existing buildings as far as I could. I would board out harmless lunatics and married couples.

9404. About the tramp question, I believe you take a particular interest in that?—I do; we are on the main road from Dublin to Belfast, and we are greatly favoured by the presence of tramps.

9405. From Banbridge to Newry is a nice day's walk?—Yes; and then to Dundalk; in the summer time they go by Kilnab.

9406. Have you formed any idea as to how that nuisance could be diminished?—I considered that question very frequently. I have seen the objects of that very few of the tramps are bona fide objects of Poor Law relief; there are very few tramps of persons on the look out for work on the road. I think tramps should be divided into two classes—the very few deserving objects of charity, that is tramps in search of work, and the undeserving ones, whom I would turn over to the police.

9407. Do you think detaining them in the workhouse would be worth much?—I would desire to get rid of them as soon as possible.

9406. CHATELAIN.—Mercy with a view of seeing less of them in future, would you keep them a little longer over?—I don't know that. If you keep them in a sort of lock-up place or in charge, but I would not have them in the workhouse.

9407. Mr. Cusack.—I believe you do give them some work to do in Newry?—There is a rule that they should break a certain quantity of stones before leaving, and I believe they do break stones, and it keeps them until eleven o'clock; they don't get as early on the road as they wish.

Mr. Bell.—We find the numbers have increased during the last two months; Newry is too well situated for them to avoid. What I suggested was that if we made that place not so very comfortable they probably would come round by Armagh.

9408. CHATELAIN.—Armagh seems to have the best of the deal so far?—Yes; because we are on the main road from Dublin to Belfast. You meet a man and ask him where he is going, "I am going to Belfast." You see him again in a fortnight and he is going to Dublin. It is a promenade up and down. If the workhouses were further from each other they could not walk from one to another in a day. I don't wish to be considered inhuman, and I would not be hard on these fide travellers.

9409. Men really looking for work?—Yes; but I have come to the conclusion that they are very few in number. They always give you creative notions when you ask questions.

9410. If Rathfriland were removed, would it not be an advantage to Newry?—It would; they would have to go as to Lurgan.

9411. Newry Workhouse was burnt recently?—Yes; three and a half years ago; the greater portion of the front of the house was burnt down, and in rebuilding it we took into consideration that the character of inmates of Irish workhouses has changed very much since workhouses were built, that they are now almost entirely infirmaries and hospitals, so we turned the front of the house, which had formerly been the able-bodied portion, into an infirmary, and built the house with large wards the whole depth of the house. I am not able to make a comparison, because I am not a medical man, but I have heard people who could make the comparison say they considered the wards compared favourably with some of the metropolitan hospitals. We have practically no able-bodied inmates, but I think some portion of our infirm ward buildings will require considerable improvement in the back portion of the house.

9412. The house is by no means full?—It would accommodate a much larger number than we have at present; I should think the space given to each bed is far greater than would be required even in a metropolitan hospital.

9413. And the present staff could attend to a much increased number?—I think it could attend to an increased number. I would not wish to see it very much increased. I wish to say that I think the Board of Guardians are too large in number.

9414. That is an opinion we have got before?—I formed that opinion before I saw it expressed in print anywhere; it would conduce very much to the proper management of the Poor Law business if the number were reduced. A clause was inserted in the House of Lords with the altered idea that the ratepayers when they were electing members would return one man to nullify the vote of another, with the result that the boards are unnecessarily large; we have fifty-nine elected Guardians in Newry, and they might have occupied six, which would make sixty-three. There are fifty-eight in Banbridge; I think either the number should be reduced or the power of the house committee should be very largely increased so that a good part of the work could be done by the committee. I think weekly meetings are too numerous.

9415. The committee might meet weekly?—Yes.

9416. And the full board?—Monthly would be quite often enough.

9417. If you halve the number of the board?—I think even one-third would do better. It would be very desirable if the duty of looking after the roads and the poor were a little more separated than they are; there is an affinity between the two things.

9418. Do you think it would be better to have the Rural Guardians and the Guardians entirely divorced from each other?—I think so.

9419. Would you go so far as to say that some of the witnesses said to-day, of leaving the roads and county work with the Rural District Councils; would you transfer the Poor Law to committees of the County Council?—I would not agree to that at all. In my opinion the Poor Law work could be very well done by a reduced number—a Board of Guardians reduced in numbers, reduced proportionately, or by a committee or a board appointed by secondary elections, but on the same franchise as the present Guardians.

9420. Mr. MURPHY.—How would the dispensary divisions for the purpose of representation strike you instead of electoral divisions?—That is a question I did not consider; as far as I go it would be almost the same, to my mind, if the present divisions were retained with a reduced representation, but I daresay it would be an improvement to take the dispensary district as the electoral unit.

9421. Sometimes the electoral divisions are very disproportionate; would you like to equalise the electoral divisions with regard to population and valuation?—I would; there is a provision in the Local Government Act that each division should return two members; that did not take into account that some divisions already returned two; the result was that those who had only one got two and those who had two before returned the same number only. Cumberagh only returns two, as it did before.

9422. Mr. Cusack.—And it has the village of Bensbrook?—Bensbrook is not a unit for Poor Law purposes; it is contained in three townlands. And I also wish to say that we have no investigation of dispensary books in our union.

9423. CHATELAIN.—The Guardians neglect their duty in that respect?—They do so deliberately for that reason, they could exercise no supervision over the books. It is absurd that the Newry Guardians should be expected to understand about Rathfriland or Poynters. I don't say the doctors require any supervision, but, assuming they do require supervision, it should be exercised in some different manner. We say there is no use bringing the books in, because we could know nothing about them.

9424. Mr. Cusack.—Would you be in favour of removing the workhouse tenant from the hospital—the workhouse hospital?—The hospital that stands apart is the fever hospital.

9425. Would you have it removed altogether from the workhouse and not known as a workhouse building?—That would raise the question of paying patients in another form.

9426. CHATELAIN.—The idea is that it should be called the district hospital instead of the infirmary?—In our place the infirmary is the house.

9427. I thought you were particularly favourably situated for that purpose, because there is your district hospital with direct access from the county road?—I would be in favour of making it a district hospital, but you would have to build a workhouse somewhere else. The fever hospital could be separated in any way you wish by building a wall round it. What is called the infirmary is really the hospital, and what is called the hospital is the fever hospital; there is a confusion of the terms. We could separate the fever hospital, but our infirmary is our house; I don't see what we could do there. I did suggest some time after the new board came into existence that we should turn it into a district hospital, and they did not receive the suggestion favourably, because, as well as I remember, they said it would bring in confusion as part of the governing body, and they did not wish to have any confusion brought in.

9428. Mr. Cusack.—Personally, you don't regard that as any objection?—No; but I would certainly object to have any interference with the rights of the people.

9429. Mr. LEWIS.—You are distinctly of opinion that it would not be convenient to add the portion of Castleblaney Union that is in Armagh to Newry?—Assuming Castleblaney Workhouse is retained, I think the people of the Armagh portion would be more conveniently served there than in Newry.

9430. I don't think you gave us your views on the question of amalgamation generally; are you in favour of reducing the number of workhouses, even at a loss to the ratepayers?—I am in favour of it.

9431. Even if it resulted in a loss to the ratepayers?—The first consideration is the administration of the Poor Law for the benefit of the sick poor; I don't think the interest of the ratepayers the first consideration; I consider it an important question, but not the first question.

9432. For the proper and efficient administration of the Poor Law system, do you think the number of workhouses should be reduced?—I do. I am not in favour of throwing the present workhouses into disuse; my opinion is that they should form a union of unions, and specialise the different buildings contained within that area. Kilsheel is a most beautiful site for an industrial school or consumption hospital.

Dec. 1, 1905.

Mr. John P.
Small.

9433. Would it not be more convenient to retain the workhouses we have in the County Armagh for the administration of the Poor Law than to do away with any?—There are only three in the County Armagh.

9434. Would it not be better from the point of view of the comfort and welfare of the poor to retain these three workhouses, even if it were necessary to reduce them in extent?—I have not proposed the abolition of either Armagh or Lurgan.

9435. Did you propose the abolition of any in this county?—I don't suggest that; I don't think Armagh, being the county town, could be abolished, but the Rural District Council No. 2 in Newry passed a resolution that Lurgan should be abolished, but I thought they were travelling rather far afield, because Lurgan is twenty miles from us, and part of Banbridge inter-views.

9436. Supposing there was an saving to the rate-payers, don't you think the Poor Law system could be very well and efficiently administered by retaining the present number of workhouses throughout the whole country?—I don't think so; I think there is a waste of force in it.

9437. Don't you think there could hardly be any waste of money in it, having regard to the increased expenditure on pensions and gratuities, increased expenditure in salaries at the workhouse kept on, increased expenditure in the conveyance of the sick and aged, and increased expenditure on buildings; if you equip auxiliary asylums the present buildings would not suit, and then increased expenditure on heating and lighting these contracts—I have not considered this matter primarily on the ground of economy; I don't belong to the school of economists; I prefer the proper administration of the Poor Law. I have already stated that I think the present buildings ought not to be retained; I don't approve of erecting new buildings in one place and throwing large buildings at another place into disuse; the existing buildings should be utilised; and I am not in favour of the system on a charge of superannuating and pensioning all the officials and appointing a new staff with fresh salaries. I think the services of the old officials should be utilised for the new system. As regards the other points, I have not considered them. I wish to mention, with regard to consumption patients, that I don't think they should be kept in our hospitals at all; they should be kept in a different place; we have very good consumption work in Newry, but I don't think they should be kept there at all.

9438. Mr. Cunneen.—That is the reason you advocate Kilsheel being utilised?—It would form a beautiful sanatorium.

Mr. M. P.
Rice

Mr. M. P. Rice examined.

9439. Mr. Cunneen.—You are a representative from Newry No. 2 District Council?—Yes.

9440. Have you formed any view on this amalgamation question of the different unions in Armagh?—No, I have not.

9441. Have you formed any idea about the alteration of the boundaries of the different unions?—No, I have not.

9442. Has your council formed any opinion about either one or other of these questions?—Yes; they have.

9443. Are those the replies they have sent in already to the Poor Law Commission?—Yes.

9444. If Castleblayney Union be abolished what would be the most convenient place for the Armagh section of Castleblayney to be added to?—Carrickmacross.

9445. There is a portion of Castleblayney Union in Armagh; where would you add that—the district of Greenanaglan and Oulshanna; would it be more natural to add it to Newry than any other place?—Yes, if Castleblayney were dissolved. If Banbridge were dissolved there is portion of it in Armagh.

9446. Would you add any portion of that to Newry?—Yes.

9447. Have you formed any opinion about the tramp question?—It would be hard to devise a means to abolish the tramp nuisance. If you would adhere to the stringent rule—there may be weak and invalid persons who would not be able to perform the necessary work—in these cases I would not like—

9448. CHAIRMAN.—You would leave it discretionary with the master?—Yes; but in some cases you might find the master negligent in doing his duty or you might find a master of a naturally harsh temperament.

9449. Mr. Cunneen.—Would you make any rule at all in the matter?—I would leave it to the discretion of the resident doctor.

9450. CHAIRMAN.—Whether he was fit to work or not?—Yes.

9451. Mr. Cunneen.—Do you think the suggestion that these men should be detained two or three days in the workhouse would have any deterrent effect?—I cannot say.

9452. Do you think confinement in the workhouse would be any punishment to a tramp?—I don't think so.

9453. I suppose confinement in the county jail would have a greater effect on him?—I think so; then confining him in the union.

9454. Your District Council has passed resolutions in favour of expenditure being a divisional instead of a union charge?—Yes.

9455. While the Guardians are of a contrary opinion?—I don't think they are, for I am a member of the Board of Guardians, and I got no notification of the meeting at which the resolution was passed.

9456. CHAIRMAN.—You think it was done at some small meeting?—Yes; without a special notice. I am a rural Guardian, and there have been resolutions thrown on the rural Guardians for not doing their duty, but I think the town Guardians are rather too quick in doing what they consider their duty.

9457. Mr. Cunneen.—Mr. Small is a town Guardian?—Yes.

9458. What are your reasons for having this a divisional charge?—The rate has gone up in the union since it has been a union charge as regards outdoor relief, though I know that in my division it has decreased, and, of course, if there is a deserving person in my division I am satisfied at a special meeting that I am summoned to attend by these town Guardians.

9459. CHAIRMAN.—You think they have too much of their own way?—After their dinner they can go up to the boardroom, and in the electoral divisions of the town all their poor friends are on the outdoor relief.

9460. Mr. Cunneen.—You think the town expenses are thrown on you unjustly?—As long as they are enormous charges.

9461. CHAIRMAN.—What is your division?—Jansboro'.

9462. Mr. Cunneen.—Have you formed any idea about this boarding out question?—Yes; I am in favour of boarding out children.

9463. Are you in favour of boarding out old and infirm people?—I am not.

9464. Would you be in favour of almshouses for old married couples?—I would not; it would increase the expenditure, and the gentlemen who gave me evidence with regard to that question said nothing detrimental to the interests of his profession. With regard to the nursing question, it has been mentioned that they should be under the control of the dispensary doctor, but I am inclined to think that the dispensary doctors would be applying for an increase of salary, and if these almshouses were taken into consideration it might be more expensive than any friend who gave evidence to that effect might imagine, though he seemed to be of a liberal frame of mind and wished to see the work of the district carried out in a judicious and economical manner, but I don't think it would work that way.

9465. Mr. Cunneen.—Don't you think economy can be carried out by abolishing some of these unions and amalgamating them with others?—I believe so; I would like the greatest comfort to be given to the aged and infirm at the least possible expense.

Mr. R. MONTAGNA examined.

Dec. 1, 1903.

Mr. R.
Montagna.

9406. Mr. Cusack.—You are a representative of No. 2 Rural District Council?—Yes.

9407. And you are a member from the County Armagh as well?—Yes.

9408. You want to confine your remarks altogether to the outdoor relief system?—I have been a member of the Nerry Board of Guardians for about three years. When I entered that Board of Guardians three years ago, so far as my memory serves me, the amount which was expended per week on outdoor relief was, at the most, £37 a week; that was when it was confined to what we would call electoral charges; at the present time it is £47 a week, and I might say that very recently it was about £55 a week, and I would say that if it was made what we need to call electoral divisional charges that it would bring down this outdoor relief business. While I say that, I am not opposed to outdoor relief as the least, because I believe it is the proper manner in which to distribute relief to the deserving poor; I only speak as a farmer, as a rural Guardian—a much maligned man. Take a labourer on a farm, the most that he can really have on that one is about 5s. a week; say that man goes and marries, he keeps a wife and family, and, no matter what economy he can have used, his ultimate cost must be either the workhouse or outdoor relief. And I think in a case of that kind if, when he comes to about sixty-five or seventy years of age, that man is unable to work or derive any salary for his work, he should get 2s. or 3s. a week. But since these things went from electoral divisional to union charges, although we have been getting nothing more for the country districts, the outdoor relief has gone up.

9409. CHAIRMAN.—In the town?—I don't wish to say anything in the absence of parties who represent the town, but I believe outdoor relief has gone up in the town.

9410. Mr. Cusack.—You would advocate going back to the old system of divisional rating instead of union charges?—Quite so.

9411. CHAIRMAN.—For outdoor relief only?—Outdoor relief only. It leaves it to the elected representative of the electoral division to recommend the party who gets the outdoor relief, and I can say that any elected Guardian knows the party whom he recommends to get outdoor relief.

9412. Mr. Cusack.—It would cause better supervision?—I believe so.

9413. CHAIRMAN.—You are an elected Guardian, and have your voice in the giving of outdoor relief to the town rates; do you dissent from any?—Often.

9414. In what class of cases do you dissent?—I might say there is another aspect of the question in the town; it is nothing for the Nerry Guardians to come up there and stay at the Board of Guardians almost every day; it is a very important matter for a man who has to travel, say twenty-eight miles, and leave his own business; and if a case in the town comes up they are almost always there; the rural Guardians may not be always there; they can carry their case, whereas the rural Guardians have to voice at all.

9415. I am speaking about the cases that are ruled upon when you are present; what class of cases get outdoor relief which in your opinion ought not?—I always, when I am there, take the recommendation of the relieving officer.

9416. Do the Board of Guardians, as a body, sometimes act in opposition to the advice of the relieving officer?—Well, the Nerry Board of Guardians I say up, in general, do not.

9417. What class of cases do you differ from the Guardians and relieving officer in thinking are not subjects for outdoor relief?—The point comes up in this way—if I would have a case I considered deserving of relief I would go up there—

9418. I understand that, but I am speaking of a case that somebody else has; if a town Guardian has a case, and you are there; you say there are some cases in which relief is given where you don't think it ought to be given; what class of cases are those?—I would always go on this supposition that if a town Guardian recommends that that party should have relief—I know nothing about the case at all; this gentleman recommends it, so it is only a recommendation of divisional relief after all.

9419. And you are not acquainted with the circumstances of any of those cases that come forward?—Exactly.

9420. Mr. Cusack.—I believe you particularly object to outdoor relief being given to a house where there are people bringing in money?—Most decidedly.

9421. In some of the town cases do you know that has been done?—Very often; I have always objected to it.

9422. You don't object to outdoor relief as a whole?—No; I think it is the best way of giving it.

9423. And you think some of the Guardians vote on rural relief that don't know anything about it?—I am afraid so.

9424. Have you formed any opinion about the tramp question or the boarding out of paupers?—In connection with the children, I have formed an opinion that I believe all children in the workhouse, that are born in the workhouse, should be removed from the tent of that place; they should not even have it sent up to them in later days that they were born in the workhouse; they should be boarded out.

9425. Would you apply that to the old people?—There is a difference between old people, who are resident in the workhouse; there are some old people who have worked very hard all their days, and at the latter end of their days are there in no respect for them only the workhouse; it is very hard in classification to have these classed with the tramps, or the casuals, or the outcasts of society; there should be classification at the very least.

9426. You would separate the old decent people from the other class?—That is my opinion.

9427. Could you not have that classification itself in the workhouse without boarding out?—Yes.

9428. Mr. MONTAGNA.—In regard to outdoor relief did you ever adopt the system of having one special day in the month, for instance the day that the finance business of the Guardians is earned on; if you adopted one day in the month for the consideration of the outdoor relief cases, would you not give the rural Guardians an opportunity of considering all the cases?—During the time I have been a member of the Nerry Board of Guardians that has never been adopted.

9429. But it could be?—Yes; and would be a very wise arrangement.

9430. Suppose you get up at the next meeting of the Board of Guardians and give notice that the question of giving outdoor relief should be only considered on one day in the month—means a day, and that would bring in a large concourse of people; would not that do away with the difficulty you refer to with regard to the country portion of the board?—I never heard the suggestion thrown out before.

9431. I may tell you it is in existence in a union in the North of Ireland, and is found to work satisfactorily?—I will consider the advisability of giving a notice of motion to that effect.

9432. Have you ever considered, in the event of one union being chosen for Armagh, where that union should be?—Well, sir, I have.

9433. From a broad point of view, not from any narrow local view?—I have; but I am afraid, considering Armagh geographically, that Armagh is cut out for two unions—that is for Nerry in the south and Armagh in the north. Now Nerry is a very important union; it is about the third or fourth most important union in Ireland, and we have splendid buildings, most recently erected, and Armagh is a very important union, of course. But it would be utterly impossible to bring Guardians, supposing there was only one union in Armagh, it would be utterly impossible to bring Guardians to represent Forkhill and Jonesboro' to Armagh.

9435. Supposing the meetings were monthly, or a visiting committee had the duty of attending to minor matters and the Guardians had only to attend once a month, could they not come to Armagh as well as they do to the County Council?—If you limited the number to thirty.

9436. How would that strike you as a feasible proposal?—It would not strike me that they could represent the poor; the paramount duty of a Guardian is to represent the poor, and he could not know the poor if he took in the district of a dispensary doctor.

Dec. 1, 1905.
Mr. S.
Monaghan.

9497. Could not these dispensary members regulate the work of the poor in their own dispensary district?—If you put it in that way, perhaps they could.

9498. That is one way of getting round this trouble of representation. It is quite plain that to expect all the Guardians of this county to come to Armagh once a week would be out of all reason, but if some system like that was adopted do you not think it would get over a good deal of the difficulty?—Considering the buildings we have at Navry and the expense we have gone to these last two or three years—some £3,000—it would seem preposterous that these buildings would not be utilized in connection with the poor.

9499. Suppose there were two unions in Armagh, would not the system I have tried to outline recommend itself to you?—Yes; I really think there are too many Guardians.

9500. Have you many tramps in your house?

Mr. Bell.—About 115 in the week on an average.

9501. Mr. Monaghan.—Don't you think if power was given to the local bodies to detain those tramps for three days it would have a restrictive effect on them; usually they come for a lodging in the house the night before a fair or market, and if they were detained three days they would lose their fair or market?—As long as human nature is as it is we will always have tramps; we have endeavored to bring in the stone-breaking business in Navry, and it has no effect in making them a lesser number.

9502. You have heard what the doctors said with regard to Guardians, with regard to their unwillingness to do what is necessary to bring comfort to the poor; do you agree with them?—I entirely disagree with the whole statement.

9503. You think the doctors overdid the subject—so far as our union is concerned, we are in complete accord with our medical officers, and I don't think they stretch much, so far as has been said in this witness box.

9504. And any reasonable reform asked for?—The Guardians consider it on its merits, and have almost always concurred with the recommendation of the medical officers.

9505. You have no friction in your union?—No.

9506. Mr. Cusack.—If there was one central workhouse do you think the expense of the Guardians travelling from the extremity of Armagh to that central workhouse would prevent them going?—They could not attend at all.

9507. You are a County Councillor?—Yes.

9508. And you know the expense you are put to attending Armagh; do you know that the Councillors from the southern end of the county hardly ever attend?—That is so.

9509. You think that those two unions would be sufficient for Armagh?—That is my opinion.

Mr. Cusack.—That closes my case for Navry.

Mr. P. MCCONVILLE EXAMINED.

Mr. P.
McConville.

9510. Mr. Lavery.—You are Chairman of the Crossmaglen Board District Council?—Yes.

9511. And your Council is decidedly against this idea of amalgamating workhouses?—Yes.

9512. And is it not the fact that Castleblayney Workhouse has been recently extensively repaired?—Yes.

9513. And how £1,100 have spent upon it?—Yes.

9514. Could you give us some idea of what proportion of that was contributed by you?

Chairman.—We had that already.

Mr. Lavery.—Crossmaglen contributed about 3d. in the £ of that; are you of opinion that if this idea of amalgamation was carried out it would be rather a loss to the ratepayers than a gain?—Certainly.

9515. Is that on account of increased expenditure?—Yes.

9516. Do you think there would be increased expenditure in superannuating the officers, for instance?—Yes.

9517. And increased salaries also at the selected centres?—Yes.

9518. You think if two or one workhouse was done away with the salaries in the selected centre would be increased?—Yes, I think it would overbalance any gain.

9519. Are you also of opinion that there would be heavily increased expenditure over the conveyance of the sick, infirm, and pauper inmates to the selected centres?—Certainly, and a great hardship to the poor, too.

9520. We have heard a great deal at this inquiry and in Monaghan about auxiliary asylums and orphanages; do you think it would be possible to equip these auxiliary asylums and orphanages without enormous expense?—I think a greater expense than the present system.

9521. And when they would have all these pauper asylums constructed don't you think the amount to be incurred for upkeep would far and away exceed of the apparent saving by abolishing the asylums?—I believe the rates would be higher than at present.

9522. The District Council you represent is overwhelmingly Catholic in religion?—Yes.

9523. It has been suggested you should be tacked on to Armagh or Navry?

Mr. Cusack.—Navry.

An Armagh Guardian.—We would not take you.

Mr. PATRICK McSHANE EXAMINED.

Mr. Patrick
McShane.

9537. Mr. Lavery.—You are a District Councillor for Crossmaglen?—Yes.

9538. You have heard what Mr. McConville said?—Yes.

9539. Do you agree with his views?—I do.

9524. Mr. Lavery.—You don't want to be parted from Castleblayney?—No, it is the unanimous feeling of the whole district.

9525. Suppose some unfortunate train of circumstances brought you to Navry, how far would you have to travel?—Almost eighteen miles.

9526. Would you not also have to go over an impassable mountain barrier as well?—The worst road in Ireland.

9527. Are not some of the hills between Crossmaglen and Navry as high as 1,800 feet—Crossmaglen?—It is up to 2,000 feet.

Chairman.—And the road goes right over the top of it?

9528. Mr. Lavery.—Yes don't want to go to Navry, and think it would be highly inconvenient for the administration of the Poor Law system—I think so; a poor person brought in an ambulance from the farthest part of our district to Navry I don't believe would be alive when they got there.

9529. Mr. Cusack.—Don't you go four times a year to Judge Richey in Navry?—The sick people don't go there.

9530. Mr. Lavery.—Of course, this idea of amalgamation could not be carried out without interfering very considerably with the principles of the Local Government Act of 1898; it would have to be repealed—I think so.

9531. Mr. Cusack.—If you must go to any place, where would you go to in the County Armagh?—We could not go to any place only to Navry, in the County Armagh.

9532. Mr. Lavery.—Is your district a very poor district?—Very poor.

9533. If there was an ambulance sent to take all the sick and infirm people there who now go to Castleblayney it would almost add half the present rate again?—They go in carts and conveyances of their own.

9534. And the workhouse at Castleblayney is filled very largely by the poor inhabitants of your district?—Yes.

9535. Don't some of the farmers go into the hospital there?—Yes.

9536. Mr. Cusack.—Navry is your County Court town?—Yes.

9540. Do you think it would be a definite disadvantage to be sent to Navry?—I am sure it would.

9541. Having regard to the nature of your district and the poverty of it, are you of opinion it would be impossible to administer the Poor Law system properly if it was tacked on to Newry—I think it would be hard on them.

9542. Do you think Armagh completely out of the question—I would not like to hear about it at all; it is too far away from us, twenty miles; Newry is still worse, it is a worse road.

9543. What about the people of Crommagscross?—I would not agree with them at all.

9544. Mr. Cusack.—Have you ever been to see Judge Kirby in Newry?—Never.

9545. A lot of Crommagscross people do come to see him. If the Commission does shut up Candelbryne Workhouse where should the Armagh portion go to?—I don't know; it would be a very great hardship.

9546. Where should it go to; would not Newry be the most reasonable place?—I don't know; Newry has a bad road.

9547. Would you go to Armagh in preference?—Indeed I would not go to Armagh at all.

9548. Where would you go?—I think it would be better to have it remain as it is.

9549. Mr. Lowry.—Tuberculosis is very common in your district?—It is.

9550. You are a member of the Poor Law Guardians; have they not equipped two new consumptive wards?—They have, and spent about £1,000 lately, and it cost our part of the union about £700.

Mr. JAMES ORR examined.

Mr. James Orr

9551. CHAIRMAN.—What are you desirous of saying?—There are just four points I want to call your attention to. First of all, with regard to the harmless lunatics in workhouse, I am strongly in favour of asking the Government to apply the capitation grant, and if they did so, I believe, the Guardians could provide better accommodation for them. I don't think the harmless lunatics ought to be taken out of the workhouse; there would be a most enormous expense in adding to the existing asylums, and there would be greater economy if they were kept in the workhouse, and better accommodation could be provided. But I don't think you can persuade the Guardians to do that unless the Government can see their way to give a capitation grant.

9552. CHAIRMAN.—Would you approve of taking a deserted workhouse as an auxiliary asylum?—I would, but at the same time I think the Government ought to be pressed to give this capitation grant, the same as to asylums.

9553. For all lunatics, no matter where they are?—Yes. Another point is divisional rating. I am strongly in favour of returning to the old divisional rating. I think this union rating has been a great mistake. Take any Guardian belonging to a division. It is that Guardian's interest to look after the welfare of the division, and see that there is no waste, and that the pauper in his charge is properly looked after. But see a Guardian, when he knows that there is union rating, has not the same interest in the division that he would have otherwise. I don't believe these divisions looked after by Guardians are looked after in the same way as when there was divisional rating; the interests are the other way.

9554. Do you mean both as regards attendance at the workhouse and interest in incurring expenses?—I won't say so much about attendance at the workhouse; but take a Guardian who has a number of applications for outdoor relief; he knows it comes out of the union, and it is not chargeable to his own division at all; and some Guardians look upon it as their interest to get as much out of the union as they can. I am in favour of outdoor relief, but don't approve of the abuse of it; and I think the cause of the abuse is this union rating.

9555. Can you tell us in what way exactly the abuse comes about; what class of cases are they lax about? I think it altogether hinges upon union rating. A Guardian of the division naturally will say: "This is charged on the union, not on my division; therefore, it is a mere hospital on me."

9556. You think that leads them to give relief in cases in which relief ought not to be given out of the workhouse?—Yes; and in cases where relief ought to be given I don't think it gets proper attention; it cuts both ways.

9557. Mr. MURKHAM.—It may deprive some divisions that really do need relief from getting relief?—I don't say that.

9559. The burden, therefore, is unfairly borne, and by enlarging the area you distribute the burden?—I have thought of that, too, and as I say there are arguments on both sides; I have come to the conclusion that it is a mistake to have union rating. The next point I wish to call your attention to is with regard to hospitals, not workhouses. I think the abolition of hospitals, not workhouses, would be a great mistake. The hospitals have been greatly improved in all the union workhouses, and I think there is a difficulty about admitting paying patients. A great many patients are admitted to the hospitals in the workhouses, and they don't pay according to their means. There is some difficulty, I believe, about admitting these patients. It is done to prevent infectious diseases spreading; although I understand it is not a recognised thing, but at the same time the guardians look upon it as a case of necessity; infectious diseases must be stamped out; they cannot be allowed to spread over the country. In the infirmary here in Armagh they don't admit infectious cases at all; they have no wards for it; and if an infectious case turns up, there is no other place to send it to except the workhouse hospital, and the workhouse hospitals, I believe, are very well managed at the present time, greatly improved in the management, and any interference with the workhouse hospitals, I think, would be a very serious mistake.

9561. You think enough has been spent on them?—I think there has been a very great deal of money spent; I know there has in Armagh; in the last three years there has been more money spent than in twenty years before, so that at the rate we have been advancing we have not been losing any time in spending money. I don't say that proper accommodation ought not to be provided, but at the same time you must consider the ratespayers, and they have so much to bear at the present time as they possibly can. My experience of the Armagh Guardians is that they are quite willing to provide proper accommodation, but not any waste.

9562. Mr. MURKHAM.—There is no unwillingness on the part of the present-day guardians to give what is considered comfort and all due attention to the requirements of the sick poor?—I don't believe there is.

9563. You heard what the doctors said this morning?—No; I was not present.

9564. CHAIRMAN.—What is the next point?—There is one other point I want to refer to, and that is the amalgamation of workhouses. This matter has been very carefully considered by the County Council, and we have come to the decision that it would not be wise to amalgamate any workhouses in this county; because we have carefully considered every workhouse in the county, and have come to the conclusion that it would be very unwise to amalgamate any workhouses in this county.

9565. Owing to the hardship to the sick?—Yes, and the position of the workhouses.

9566. Mr. Cusack.—Geographical position?—Yes. Armagh Union in point of area is the largest in the union. I don't think it is the largest in point of accommodation. I don't think anyone would imagine you could do away with Armagh Workhouse. It is in the most central position, and Lurgan is a most excellent institution, and they have a very fine hospital there, and I don't think from the evidence I have heard that it would be wise to interfere with Castleblayney.

5557. Mr. MURKHAUGH.—Suppose the workhouse for the future would be only a place for the destitute and infirm, who are not ill, do you not think that one house of that description would be large enough for the 400 of such a class in this county, provided that in the various localities suitable hospital accommodation was provided for the sick?—I want to explain it in this way, that that is a matter that has not been brought before the attention of the County Council or of the Board of Guardians, and I don't think it is a matter that any witness that has come here, or will come here, has considered sufficiently—that is one of the very things that ought to be brought before us.

5558. That is the very first query that local bodies are asked on the chest of queries. "Whether any Poor Law unions could be dissolved with advantage to the ratepayers, and without hardship to the sick and destitute poor; and if any such dissolution be deemed desirable, what arrangements, by amalgamation of unions or otherwise, should be substituted therefor?"—The question you ask does not come in there at all. The question you asked me was this: "Provided that they were retained for the sole purpose of the poor and infirm. Now, no one under that query could imagine for a moment that he was going to be asked a question of that kind."

5559. That is the question I would like to put to you now. If there were in the various localities—Lurgan, Portadown, and Newry—hospitals for the accommodation of the sick, do you not think that one workhouse in the county would be sufficient to accommodate 300 or 400 of the old and unfit for work class which the county has at present?—In answering that question I might say the accommodation would be sufficient, but it would not be expedient. I don't think it would be a wise thing to follow a course of that kind owing to the geographical position of the workhouses.

5561. Do you think it is well to keep up three or four of these houses when one could fulfil all the necessary functions of the county?—I don't understand your question in that way. That is a very broad question, that would need to be considered from all sides. You put it to me in this way: Do I think that one workhouse would accommodate the poor and infirm, and that class alone. There might be sufficient accommodation for that class in one workhouse, but I don't think it would be a wise thing to do. You would have to go further, and say what are you going to do with the harmless lunatics and old people.

5562. Supposing the lunatics were put into an auxiliary asylum and the children boarded out, and the mothers of illegitimate children sent to some reformatory institution, you would have nothing left but the sick and infirm?—That is another point I could not agree with you in. I would be heartily glad to see all the children boarded out, and I think Mr. Agnew will remember that I was the means of getting a resolution passed boarding out the orphan children in the Armagh Workhouse. But, would you take away the illegitimate children from the mothers, and allow the mothers to go out and, perhaps, bring in another batch of illegitimate children in a year or two.

5563. That would be a question for the legislature; it is for us to consider the desirability of such an arrangement?—You put a question to me that would have to be answered half-a-dozen ways. You would have to begin and take the different classes in the workhouse, and see how you would deal with them.

5574. What would you do with the lunatic?—I think the workhouse would be a suitable place, but the guardians should get the capitation grant.

5575. Don't you think they ought to be put into an institution apart from the ordinary class and give them special treatment?—I do; but I think you must be very careful; you can go too far. The ratepayers have been paying a lot of rates, and you can go too far in taxing them in the future. My experience of the board of guardians has been that they are willing to do everything necessary for the comfort of the inmates.

5576. The question I put supposes that it would be for cheapness, on the side of economy, if such a change was made, supposing it would not increase the cost, do you not think it would be better for those afflicted people to be in an auxiliary asylum than to remain as they are in the workhouses, where they are only half looked after?—I do; provided there could be a saving in some other way that could make up for the additional cost. If there was any, I would be in favour of that.

5577. Do you not think the upkeep of these large institutions in the amount for repairs and fuel is a large item?—Yes; but I don't see how you could clean any workhouse in Armagh. In some counties, where any workhouse could be done without, by all means amalgamate them, and use them for the purposes you suggest.

5578. Why should a principle that is good elsewhere not apply to Armagh?—I considered the question carefully, and so did the County Council, and we have come to the deliberate conclusion that no workhouse could be done without in the County Armagh.

5579. Dr. Broome.—Was it the unanimous opinion of the County Council?—I believe it was.

5580. Mr. W. Shaw.—I think the County Council of Armagh have passed a resolution recommending that an infirmary or hospital should be allowed for Portadown?—Yes, that is so; I raised the question several weeks ago. I asked the chairman's ruling, supposing that this auxiliary hospital or infirmary were built in Portadown would it be a union ruling, and the chairman was of opinion that it would, and, under the circumstances, I voted for this resolution.

5581. Mr. Lowry.—With regard to union ruling, has the expenditure on outdoor relief increased in Armagh?—I have not the figures before me.

5582. Would you be surprised to hear that in Castleblayney Union they have reduced outdoor relief by £240 a year?—I would not be surprised.

5583. Mr. Ousack.—Do you think if you had one workhouse in Armagh, had the lunatics in one place, the mothers of illegitimate children in another, the aged and infirm in another, the sick in another and boarded out in another, would that bring economy?—I would not be for that at all. I don't think you could do with fewer workhouses in Armagh.

5584. Mr. MURKHAUGH.—My question was simply this: That if we leave in the county hospitals in different localities, a hospital that will meet all the requirements of the locality for the sick; if we take away the mothers of illegitimate children, very few in number, only eight or ten in Armagh, get them sent to a reformatory institution of some description, which has been strongly advocated; if we take away the children and board them out, a thing that everybody advocates; if we take the lunatics and put them into auxiliary asylums, which everybody approves in theory, then you have nothing left but the infirm and destitute; would not, in that case, one house for the county supply the needs for that particular class, that is the point?

Mr. Ousack.—Do you think that would mean increased economy?—I don't think so.

5585. CHATELAIN.—You are a member of the County Council?—I am, and also of the Board of Guardians, and I was asked to attend on behalf of both bodies to state their views generally on these queries. As to the idea of suppressing one or more of the workhouses in the county, the County Council was unanimously against it, and it was, I think, on my proposition they voted against it. The reasons I gave there were that the Union of Armagh, which is the one of which I know most, is really a large union, and it does not follow that because in other counties small unions could be amalgamated, a large union like Armagh should be dissolved; fir, in my opinion, the affairs of a union are better looked after when it is of the size that the union of Armagh is; and if we had any more districts added to us the distance from these district might be too great, and there would be less economy, because the broader the back of which the rates are levied the less attention the guardians pay to it. If we had a larger board it would not at all diminish the passage of business—there probably would be a good deal more talk and less work done. And I think that a union of the size of the Union of Armagh is probably quite large enough for the despatch of business that comes before it. Since I have been in the court, partly from what Mr. MURTAGHAN said, I see it as intended we should read into this query a number of things that were not on the face of it. We are supposed to express an opinion as to whether unions might be suppressed, supposing that this and that various other things were taken away from them, the business that they at present administer; these questions never came either before the Board of Guardians or the County Council, and I have no power of forming the least judgment of what the view of those bodies would be on a question of that sort. But, personally, I must say it has come upon me more or less by surprise; but if I were asked my own opinion I think we are better as we are. Better give the Guardians something to administer or do when they come together. When they have plenty to do it is more likely they would attend regularly, and do their work well; and I very much doubt whether the poor or anybody would benefit by taking away a large number of their functions from them, and summoning them together merely to consider the remaining questions. I am not inclined to think that on the first blush it would be an advantage, and I think economy is, perhaps, not the most important thing. I very much doubt whether there would be any great economy in establishing all these different branch establishments and restricting the Board of Guardians to the mere administration of the relief of the poor. As to whether the question was considered by the Board of Guardians, there was a committee considered a few, and they were of opinion that it would be better that part of the Banbridge Union that is in Armagh should be added to the Armagh Union, but when the board met there was a division on the subject, and the majority of the Guardians were against taking in the Banbridge portion, and at the County Council the representatives of that district were again being included in Armagh. As to the second question, the Board of Guardians thought that if the first was answered in the negative there was not very much to be said in answer to the second.

5636. Not.—When they came to No. 3 (d) both the County Council and the Board of Guardians were decidedly of opinion that the existing powers of boarding out children should be extended, but at the Board of Guardians the question was raised that there might be difficulties. Supposing parents came to the house to remove with children, and you boarded the children out, and the parents got employment and went out again, were you to withdraw the children at once from the place where they were boarded out? That struck them as a difficulty, but still their opinion was that it would be advisable, to some extent at all events, to extend the power of the Guardians in the matter of boarding out. Where there was something against the character of the parents there must be some cases in which it might be advisable to board the children out.

5637. Giving the Guardians additional discretion?—Yes, it would be an advantage, but they did think there was some little difficulty, and it would require further consideration whether that discretion might be limited. Then, as to No. 4, both the County Council and the Board of Guardians were in favour of returning to electoral division rating instead of union rating.

5638. For what purpose?—They thought it was better looked after for all purposes.

5639. Induce as well as outdoor?—Yes; they thought generally cases were better investigated, but, of course, at the Board of Guardians it was not unanimous, although a considerable majority were in favour of returning to the old system, they were not absolutely unanimous about it. I personally, do see that it is rather hard on poor districts that they should have to bear the whole burden. I don't know whether there might not be some compromise; some proportion of the cost might be spread over the whole union. I mainly do think that there was more careful scrutiny of each case when the area, which it was charged upon was limited. The really deserving cases were attended to; there was less chance of imposition. I never saw it proved that cases were admitted which ought not to have been, but there were suspicions of it, but outdoor relief increased, and your board called our attention to the increase when the new system came in. And now the Guardians have reverted to the old, stringent test, and require a doctor's certificate that the applicant is unfit for removal before they give outdoor relief. They have been obliged to return to that somewhat severe test by the fact that outdoor relief had increased, but I have never seen it proved it was absurd.

5640. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Have they returned to that test?—They have, for the present.

5641. Do you know that test is illegal?—So I have heard it said, but I have never seen a legal decision on the subject; but I know the Local Government Board told us that if anyone who refused to come in died we should be held responsible for the death. I was Chairman of the Board of Guardians at that time, and owing to that decision we relaxed the rule immediately, and there was a very large increase, until the Local Government Board took the other side of the question, and called our attention to the large increase of outdoor relief. Now we have reverted to the old rule, and I suppose in a short time they will again call our attention to the fact that we will be responsible for the death of someone, and I suppose we shall go on fluctuating from one extreme to another—perhaps some medium may be found, but it is very hard to hit it. With regard to No. 5, there was a decided opinion at the County Council that there was a want of some hospital at Portadown, especially for passing surgical cases; and there was a question as to how it was to be supported, and what it would be charged upon. I don't know that we went very deeply into that. Mr. Orr gave some evidence on the subject; my own idea was that it should be more like the county infirmary, quite apart from the Poor Law, having nothing to do with the workhouse, and be more a branch of the county infirmary. It was in my mind that possibly the people of the County Down would subscribe to some extent, like to the county infirmary, and that it should partly be supported by a grant from the rates, and be more on the lines of the county infirmary than a union infirmary, the distance between Armagh and Portadown being easily enough managed. As to No. 6, both bodies thought there should be the same capitation for lunatics in workhouses as in asylums; and if that were done the Government might insist on Boards of Guardians making their accommodation for lunatics thoroughly up-to-date, and there seems to be an idea that they could get everything that would be required more economically in the workhouse, if the Boards of Guardians were encouraged to supply them, than they would in the county asylum. Whether that is the case or not, I am not presently in a position to say. One thing I should like to say on the subject: I think the reason why our accommodation for the nursing has not been improved farther than it has is, it has always been thrown out that something would be done in the way of providing a central place, and we thought it not wise to go in for a large expenditure of money when the whole thing might be abolished next day. I think the Government ought to make up their minds as soon as possible what should be done about the lunatics. That has always been our answer—we are waiting to see what is going to be done. I understood the Inspector of Lunatics was not dissatisfied with the accommodation provided, except in minor particulars, that could be very easily remedied, and probably will be remedied now. As to No. 7, about paying patients, we are distinctly of opinion it ought to be encouraged, and, in fact, it has been done. We manage to do it to some extent in Armagh, but we should like to be put on a regular system, and given more power to do it. I have not heard of our having lost by doing it; but it is evident there is danger of the money not being recoverable. Then, as to the vagrant post, the County Council said they ought to be made to work, and, no doubt, that is right; but I understand that has not always been very easy to do; but in Armagh we are not much troubled with tramps, and I understand it is, because wherever we have the opportunity of prosecuting them as vagrants we prosecute them. It is not always easy to do that, but I cannot help thinking it might be done sometimes.

Dec. 1, 1908.

Mr. William Wilson.

The Portadown Urban District Council appears before you in a different capacity to the witnesses who have already given evidence. We are not so much interested in the union workhouses.

9592. CHAIRMAN.—You are merely confining yourself to the hospital accommodation in Portadown?—Yes; at a meeting held last week, it was proposed by Mr. John Acheson, J.P., seconded by Mr. David B. Bell, and unanimously resolved:—"That we are of opinion that the town of Portadown, with a population of over 10,000 people, should have a hospital or infirmary. Portadown is ten miles from Armagh and five from Lurgan. Serious accidents are of frequent occurrence, and the removal of patients such a long distance is very painful, and often has serious results." With regard to the sheet of queries forwarded to us—

9593. I don't think you need mind going into the query sheet. I am sure you could give us much better what the Portadown people feel and think about this hospital accommodation?—This matter has been fully considered by the Council, and they have come to the conclusion that it is an absolute necessity that Portadown should have some kind of an infirmary or hospital.

9594. There used to be an hospital there in old days?—There was one built in 1847, but it was never used; it is being used now as a technical school.

9595. Who owns that at present?—It is vested in the Town Council as trustees.

9596. Will they give that as a hospital for the future?—I could not really say.

9597. They have not added that to their resolution?—No, they have not.

9598. That they will place at the disposal of the proper authority this hospital which they now own?—No, they have not added that to the resolution.

9599. You don't know who it was built by?—By public subscription.

Mr. William Wilson examined.

9600. And it was vested in the Town Council?—At that time trustees, four or five.

9601. Dr. Hancock.—For hospital purposes?—Yes, I believe it was built for a fever hospital. The Town Council only got it into their hands about ten or eleven years ago; by pressure brought to bear on them from the Local Government Board, they spent £20 in putting it into order for an auxiliary hospital.

9602. CHAIRMAN.—Told us how it came to be used for a technical school?—It was lying there, a white elephant on the Town Council's hands, and when the Technical Grant Act came into existence, they thought the best thing to use it for was a technical school.

9603. Did they spend money on it?—No.

9604. They are merely allowing classes to be held in it?—Yes.

9605. Did they submit it?—They did not.

9606. The people could be turned out on reasonable notice?—They could, if thought desirable. Portadown has a working population of over 10,000 inhabitants; serious accidents occur from time to time at the mills and factories there, and they have to be taken on to Lurgan; at the present time they have a very good ambulance, not like the old breed out, but in case of serious accidents it is a considerable time before they can get there.

9607. In some cases have people to stay in Portadown and not be taken; have any accidents occurred that made it impossible for the people to be removed?—I don't know of any; there is a witness following me who does know.

9608. At all events, having a population of 11,000 people, you naturally think you ought to have a hospital?—Yes, we do.

9609. You might mention to the Town Council that you were asked here whether they would put the hospital at the disposal of whatever body would support an hospital?—With pleasure I will do that.

Mr. John Acheson.

I have no evidence further than Mr. Wilson has given. The urgent need we have for a hospital we see it every week. During the last few weeks we had two serious accidents, one in which a lady died in the Lurgan Hospital after being removed from Portadown. And there was a case that happened in my own place in one of the sheds. Two doctors took an arm and a head off a girl. We really should have a hospital and infirmary, no matter who puts it there.

Mr. Wilson.—Mr. Acheson is the head of a large factory.

Mr. John Acheson examined.

9610. CHAIRMAN.—I think, Mr. Acheson, a member of the Council brought it forward there?—Yes.

9611. Did they pass a resolution about what the area of charge ought to be?—No, we left that entirely for the Commission.

9612. What is the view of the townspeople?—We want an infirmary or hospital.

9613. What about the area of charge?—That is a varied question; let us get the hospital first.

Mr. Joseph O'Leary examined.

Mr. Joseph O'Leary.

I have been sent to represent the Urban District Council of Portadown; we are greatly in need of this hospital accommodation. It is a long way to either Armagh or Lurgan when an accident requires treatment. We have grown up in recent years into a considerable area of a place, and we find very much the want of this, and the people think it ought to be supported from some fund, as a county hospital. We pay our levy of the rates demanded off us, and we are placed at the disadvantage of not having the use of these institutions.

9614. CHAIRMAN.—It will be a difficult question?—We did not like to suggest that we would have this met by taking away institutions from other places, although one of the witnesses to-day suggested that one hospital would be sufficient for Armagh; we did not wish to take up that position, although it would be a reasonable one, because we have a larger population than Armagh, and have no hospital, while they have two. That would be one thing the Commission might think of. That is simply all we have to say in the matter, that we would be glad your Commission would take our position into account.

9615. You may rely on our doing that?—We thank you; and before this Commission was appointed, we put our case before the Local Government Board, and, therefore, when we noticed the Commission was appointed, we thought ours was a fit case to be considered. With regard to the present hospital there, I am afraid the local authorities would hardly think it would be suitable for what was required. We would like an institution on more modern lines. As regards the area of charge, it is a question for your Commission to do what is equitable, but if it was made one of a county institution, Portadown is well situated for railway accommodation; and the question is, might it not be a county-at-large charge, and let the county-at-large send cases for special treatment.

9616. Please like Crossmaglen and over at Clontarf would not like to have to pay for your hospital?—If they had a special case that required special treatment where are they going to get it treated? We contribute towards the Armagh Infirmary, and don't get much benefit of it.

9617. There is not an instance, as far as I am aware, of a second county infirmary?—Well, we find ourselves without accommodation, that is the difficulty.

9618. Whereas you do find three or four hospitals in a union sometimes, and then they become union-at-large charges?—The people of Portadown will be satisfied with whatever line of charges the Commission think equitable for the situation. The only other suggestion I have is—I am not a member of the Board of Guardians, but I have carefully kept an eye on what is going on generally, and I think the Poor Law institution is splendidly managed all over, taking it as a whole; and the only matter that strikes me, as a business man, is that either the clerk or the master ought to have such an interest that he would act in the capacity of managing director, so as to bring matters before the Guardians that require attention.

9628. For the hospital you would consider the managing director ought to be a doctor?—The two would not work satisfactorily.

9629. You could not make a master who was a man with no more acquaintance with a hospital than with the Royal Mint—you could not make him the managing director of a hospital?—Possibly not in the medical aspect, but in the aspect of the general utility and carrying on the whole place. I am afraid one of the difficulties in public elected boards is that there is no person who takes a special interest in the management of the institution as a whole. Some doctors complained to-day that the Guardians did not take a sufficient interest; the Guardians do very well, but they are elected, and liable to change. That is only my view on the matter.

9630. Dr. DISNEY.—Have you known cases of accidents to come to the county infirmary here?—Yes.

Dec. 1, 1903.

Mr. Joseph Collier.

Mr. THOMAS COLLIER examined.

I am a member of Tandragee Rural Council, and I happen to be one of these unfortunate Guardians we have heard so much about of Banbridge. I am on my own responsibility, as far as the Guardians go. I was put on a committee to consider this question, and we never met. I was sent here by the Rural Council. I would not be in favour of doing away with any of these unions at all. I don't think it would work well; but if there were any of them to be done away with I would see them for the lunatics or imbeciles.

9632. CHAIRMAN.—You would like to break up some of the unions?—I would not; I am more interested in Banbridge. Every workhouse should be dealt with on its own ground. We give outdoor relief to everybody.

9633. Not to the Guardians?—No; we give £2,500 outdoor relief.

9634. I think it is over £5,000 now?—I think it is, and there are over 500 receive it. What I was proposing to do—

9635. We would rather not go into the Banbridge outdoor relief just now; we will have a sitting at Banbridge for that purpose?—Then I am done. I would like to see the rest of the people getting outdoor relief, and about the place up only for a hospital. It is a great waste to be keeping the institution up and nobody in the house.

9636. You would not cut down the outdoor relief?—No, I would give all those in it outdoor relief, and it would be better than sending them to any workhouse.

9637. Would you like the Tandragee portion to be thrown into Armagh Union?—If Banbridge is done away with I would.

9638. Mr. M'CALLAN.—The rates are very low in Armagh, 6½d.—They don't give so much outdoor relief.

9639. Don't you think the Poor Law system of the county should be confined to the county where it can be done without any great hardship to the poor and sick?—I think so; it is a natural thing.

9640. It is a good ideal if it could be properly carried out?—It is.

Mr. Thomas Collier.

Mr. J. R. MAGNAN examined.

I am Vice-Chairman of the Tandragee Urban Council, and I am come here fully prepared with all the force I can convey to you that we wish to be attached to the Union of Armagh.

9642. CHAIRMAN.—To break up Banbridge?—Yes; I believe there will be no difficulty in dissolving Banbridge, because, as already intimated here, if there is a central place for the destitute poor there will be no expense entailed or inconvenience, as far as I can understand. The Banbridge people give outdoor relief to that extent that there is very little work for the officials, and we have probably half the rates devoted to officials. We, as a district, would rather go to Armagh, and if there is any necessity, we will use every effort in our power to get that accomplished. Because, in the first place, the Government four years ago gave to Ireland 600,000 pounds towards helping to pay half the poor rates. Very good; but our division benefited nothing whatever by that, because our own poor rates were in some cases 2s. and in some cases 6d., an average of 3s. Probably in the last twenty years the Poor Law expenses of Tandragee did not exceed 500, now it is 11d. and is, consequently we are punished by the Government allowing this money. We believe that divisional rating is by far the better way to do it, because, as already stated by some of the witnesses, when it is a union charge *I will get as much as I can for my own," whereas if it was a divisional charge, every man will not give it, because he is giving it out of his own pocket.

9643. Are you a Guardian?—I am an Urban Councillor, not a Guardian.

9644. Do you know whether there is much outdoor relief given in Tandragee?—There is a good share; a good many people are receiving it that have not the slightest chance to get it. There are probably set of the family servant girls getting large wages, and their fathers and mothers are getting outdoor relief, and they themselves can ride on cars, and probably be better dressed than those who have a stated income. That is the reason why, if it is made a divisional charge, every person will feel their own pinch. If we get transferred to Armagh we are satisfied; and if we cannot get that done, we seek in the second place divisional charges, and we would be satisfied with both.

9645. That is, you would like to go to Armagh and have a divisional charge afterwards?—There is a very large giving out of dispensary tickets.

9646. We have nothing to do with the Medical Charities Act?—If the Commission would wish to have any additional influence or help we are quite ready to call a public meeting of the Urban Council to sign a petition.

Mr. J. R. Magnan.

Mr. W. J. M'NEELY examined.

9648. CHAIRMAN.—You are also a member of the Urban Council?—Yes.

9649. You have heard Mr. Magnan's evidence?—Yes.

9650. Do you agree thoroughly with what he states?—I do.

9651. You prefer going to Armagh?—Yes, from a financial and a geographical point of view.

9652. You would rather have divisional rating than union rating?—Yes.

9653. And you think outdoor relief is excessively given at present?—It is.

9654. In the way he describes?—Yes.

Mr. W. J. M'Neely.

Mr. JAMES M'CALLAN examined.

9655. CHAIRMAN.—You have been in one of the chairs of the Armagh Union for a long time?—Yes; I am Vice-Chairman.

9656. And you have heard the queries that have been asked by this Commission discussed?—Yes.

9657. What is your opinion as to whether any union should be broken up in the County Armagh?—I speak now on behalf of the majority of the Guardians, that we prefer remaining as we are.

9658. You don't want to enlarge your union in any way, not even by taking in Tandragee?—No; I have a personal objection to take in Tandragee for this reason: We are giving no outdoor relief, and the two witnesses who have been examined wish to get into Armagh—

Mr. James M'Callan.

Mr. James

9547. So as to stop it?—Exactly, in my opinion. I am always in favour of outdoor relief when judiciously administered. We had outdoor relief for some time after union relief was established, but some of the Guardians in the heavy divisions attending our board objected, simply because they had very few poor in the division in the house or seeking outdoor relief, and they objected to pay for the poor of other divisions, so I am for divisional relief for this reason, that the poor people at present in the divisions are being supported by the charitable poor farmers, who don't like to see them starving when they refuse to come to the workhouse, and, therefore, they are a burden to charitable people.

9548. You don't think the poor rate ought ever to make charity unnecessary?—I would not go that length.

9549. How far would you go in that direction? Where do you think poor rate ought to stop and charity come in?—I think where there is an old man and woman living thirty or forty years together. Last week an application was made before our board for outdoor relief for them. The hands of the Guardians should not be tied up by any resolution of the board not to give relief in a case of the kind.

9550. They cannot tie your hands?—We have a resolution on the books by which our hands are tied; a resolution that no outdoor relief shall be given except on a medical certificate from the doctor. That (passed) is the form on which outdoor relief was granted in our place. These queries had to be answered, and it had to be signed by two of the Guardians representing the division, the medical officer of the division, and five of the largest ratepayers, and it then had to come before the board, and the whole matter was discussed. We took every precaution, and met every quarter, and revised the whole of the outdoor relief list, and where there was any information that the person's circumstances had altered the relief ceased.

9551. This seems to be a very good form?—Yes; it was got up by a committee of our board.

9552. You have the circumstances on record that led to the Guardians giving the relief whenever challenged?—Yes.

9553. Mr. MURKHAHAN.—And notwithstanding all these precautions the Armagh Board of Guardians thought fit to pass a resolution that they would give no outdoor relief except in the case of a doctor's certificate that the patient could not be removed?—The majority of the board. We had a case last week where a letter was written to us by a gentleman in Dublin, a Mr. Mullin, who wrote to us about the case of an old man and woman between seventy and eighty years of age. He was formerly a respectable farmer, who had gone down in the world, and had to sell his farm, but they retained the right to themselves in a house and garden to live in. The few pounds they had left after they had paid their debts gradually dwindled away, and these gentlemen, knowing their poverty, wrote to our board, saying it was a good case in which we should give outdoor relief, but owing to this resolution on our books it could not be granted. The case was adjourned for a week that the Guardians in the division should inquire whether this letter stated the facts of the case. The two Guardians for the division both were there, and both confirmed the letter in every particular, saying that everything stated in the letter was true, and still our hands were tied, and we could not relieve these people. The consequence will be that they are thrown on the charity of their friends, and I think that is unfair.

9554. CHAIRMAN.—One of the Guardians of the Armagh Union seemed to say that that resolution was adopted in consequence of some letter?—He is perfectly correct.—Mr. Orr—we had several letters.

9555. Merely calling your attention to it with a view to your overhauling it, but it never was suggested for a moment that outdoor relief should cease?—There must have been some error in writing the letter, because had the Local Government Board known the precautions we took they would not have written it.

9556. Can you not understand that it would have been a reasonable thing to call your attention to any sudden increase in a head of expenditure. Calling your attention to it does not mean that the expenditure is excessive, but that they would like it to be looked into. Was it taken as more than that?—It was that we should be even more exact and particular than we were.

9557. Has your Board of Guardians been always so very ready to listen to suggestions from the Local Government Board?—You have personal experience, sir. Once or twice we did not act as suggested, or obey even a Scaled Order.

9558. Mr. MURKHAHAN.—Was there any great sudden increase that would call for such a letter?—Not to my knowledge. I heard it stated by some of the Newry people that it was in consequence of their town being in the way of troops coming from Belfast that they had so many of them, and Armagh being out of that time we had so few. To my own personal knowledge the numbers have decreased lately, because we have a very efficient master, who had been a head constable in his time and knows most of these people, and they have got afraid to come to us; really deserving people who want a night's lodging have no fear, and consequently they come.

9559. What does he do to make them avoid the place, does he persecute them?—Sometimes he does.

9560. Is it the result of conversations he has with them?—Exactly, that is it. I think, sir, that is all I wish to say. I cordially agree with what Mr. Orr and Sir James Stronge said.

Mr. T. H. HARDY examined.

Mr. T. H.
Hardy.

9561. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Armagh Board of Guardians?—Yes; I have been asked to come here by the board. I was on the committee appointed to consider the questions sent down by the Commission, and the committee decided that they could very well take over the Armagh portion of Banbridge Union provided the Commission thought it was necessary to shelve Banbridge. They went into the matter carefully, and they came to that conclusion, but the Board of Guardians reversed that.

9562. So that there is a good minority on your board in favour of taking the Banbridge part?—Yes, there is. As a matter of fact, I think before the opinion of the Board of Guardians was expressed that the Armagh portion of Banbridge Union did not want to come to Armagh, but now they appear to wish to come. I was surprised to hear the evidence here to-day, in the face of what had taken place before the County Council.

9563. Is there any other change you think might be made; do you think the Crossmaglen part is too far from you?—It would be rather far away. As a matter of fact, our part of the union lying up in that direction is far away at the present time.

9564. What is your most distant point in the union?—It would be nine miles.

9565. NEWTOWNHAMILLION, I think, is in Crossmaglen?—It is.

9566. I believe it would be about half-way between Keady and Newtownhamilton?—Yes; the Armagh portion of Banbridge Union is much more convenient.

9567. Is it a thickly populated country between Keady and Newtownhamilton?—I don't think it is.

9568. Then, as regards the Newry part, you don't contemplate any breaking up of Newry?—No; Newry would be rather out of the way from us. We are not particularly anxious to get the Banbridge portion, but we could take it and work it advantageously with Armagh. Of course, I am speaking now generally.

9569. Could you take in the County Armagh part of the Lurgan Union; it only goes probably to Lurgan?—That would be very far away from us, twenty miles. We are all of opinion that we could not do away with either Lurgan or Armagh. Lurgan is sixteen English miles from here, and it goes ten or three miles on the other side.

9570. Mr. MURKHAHAN.—But the facilities for travel are very good?—Yes; but our experience is that no way accommodation is very little use for removing sick or infirm people; they have to be removed by ambulance.

9571. This question does not apply to the sick?

Even take the infirm people; the railway accommodation is not very good for removing the infirm people.

0672. The class of men up at your house, 55, 60, and 70 years of age, could they not very well travel on a train?—Some I think not.

0673. CHAIRMAN.—There are very few that could not. If you go up to your own wards to-day there are very few of your aged and infirm, except those who are in bed, that could not take a railway journey to Lurgan?—As a rule they must come in when they are in a very low state of health, and they recruit a good deal when they do come in, and get stronger. With reference to the outdoor relief, I am strongly in favour of outdoor relief, but I cannot agree with Mr. McMahon that there was no sudden increase. I drew the attention of the Local Government Board to it, because immediately after union rating there was a sudden increase; it troubled in a few years. I am strongly in favour of outdoor relief myself, and did all that I could against the resolution being passed.

0674. Mr. MURPHY.—The amount of outdoor relief at no time was very large in Armagh Union, considering the valuation?—I think it runs to £700 or £800.

0675. £700 is not a very large sum on a valuation of £240,000?—There was at one time practically none at all.

0676. You may evade the thing in the way of economy?—I think if there was divisional rating it would not be so great. There is a tendency in the different divisions to try and get on as many poor people as they can.

0677. You see, this question of outdoor relief in the Armagh Union never reached 1d. in the £ to the rate-payers, only a little over 1d. A penny in the £ would bring £2,000; it never reached £700; it was barely 1d. in the £ at any time?—That is quite true; but, all the same, it increased a good deal all at once.

0678. It may have been properly increased?—I did not say it did not; I am strongly in favour of it. My own opinion is that it is abused when it is union rating.

0679. CHAIRMAN.—And you think if it was divisional rating there would be less difficulty in the way of deserving people in the electoral division getting it; the Board of Guardians as a body would not interfere with a representation of the work of the Guardians of that division?—Exactly so; because they would come to the conclusion that unless it was a deserving case the Guardian of the division would not bring it forward.

0680. Mr. MURPHY.—Divisional rating would strike the towns very hard?—I don't know that.

0681. Because it is in the towns, especially the large towns, where there is a great amount of poverty?—I think divisional rating, as a rule, strikes the poorer districts.

Dec. 1, 1905.
Mr. T. M. Hardy.

Mr. JAMES McMAHON further examined.

The applications that we receive from the City of Armagh for outdoor relief are very few, and that is in consequence of the several charitable societies of different denominations in the town who relieve the deserving poor themselves of their own charity; but from the country, where they have not societies of that kind to relieve them, we have a large number of applications, but, unfortunately, as we are situated now, we cannot do anything for them, except they come into the house. With regard to old married couples, I think it is a great hardship they should be separated, and if there should be such a thing as any workhouse that would not be required after your decision in the county, I think it would be well to keep it for that purpose; not alone for the poor that would be in any one workhouse, but to accommodate old married couples that would be all over the whole county.

0682. CHAIRMAN.—I don't know whether you are aware that that has been tried in England, and the married couples, as a rule, prefer the general society rather than the society of their partners for life?—That is not my experience here; the English people may differ from us.

Mr. James McMahon.

Mr. R. LEWIS examined.

0683. CHAIRMAN. You are a member of the Armagh Board?—Yes.

0684. What is your view about breaking up any of the workhouses in or adjoining this county?—My view is what has been expressed already—that it would not be an advantage from the situation of these workhouses to break them up, but we could amalgamate portion of Tandragee with Armagh, though at our board, when a vote was taken, there was a majority of two against amalgamation. And, as regards the site of Armagh Union, it would not make it any larger than it was previous to the Local Government Act being passed. At that time we had a portion of the County Tyrone, Colinton, that was connected with Armagh; we lost that, and it has gone to Dungannon, so that adding Tandragee to this district would not make it any more unwieldy than it was before the Local Government Act; and I think it is even more the market town for the Guardians of the district comprised in the Banbridge Union.

0685. Do you think the other districts are too far away, such as Crossmaglen and Newry?—Yes; there is no connection with Crossmaglen except by road or very roundabout by train by Clones.

0686. And you think the County Armagh in the Lurgan Union is too remote?—I think it is from our time; and I don't think the Armagh Guardians would like to be bothered by the doctors after the evidence I heard to-day. We would prefer to keep by ourselves.

0687. In Armagh you would rather have the doctors?—If the doctors are right the Guardians must be very timid about their duties; it seems the Guardians know nothing about hospitals. Here in Armagh every Guardian knows the state of the house; every Guardian is taken by the master to every portion of the house; five of a committee are summoned in their turn alphabetically.

0688. Do these five Guardians attend regularly?—

They may not all attend every day. I have been at a committee where the whole five were there, but sometimes there might not be more than two or three.

0689. Is there always a committee formed?—A committee formed for every Tuesday.

0690. Is there always a quorum of that committee attending?—There is no quorum; but if two attend or one it goes round.

0691. You have often been round; where do you go first?—Into the stores, and examine the food, the milk and the bread and the beef. We then go through the kitchen, and we see the cookery as it is in progress; we then are taken through the old women's ward and the nursery, and on through the infirmary and through the lunatic department, right round the house, and finish up with the old men, and we examine all the wards, and are taken to see all the beds and everything, and that is gone over every week.

0692. How long do you take at that?—About an hour, or almost an hour.

0693. Dr. ROBERT.—Always on a Tuesday?—Always on a Tuesday morning, from 11 to 12.

0694. CHAIRMAN.—That gives the Guardians an opportunity of seeing things very clearly. Do you have the doctor round with you then?—No; the doctor and nurses are in the infirmary; we see them as they pass occasionally.

0695. Do they make any suggestions to you?—Any suggestions are brought forward by the master. I presume they are suggested to him.

0696. The master has nothing to do with the infirmary?—He has not anything to do with medical treatment, but with any alterations that would be made.

0697. He has nothing to do with the infirmary at all. He is just responsible in a general way for any discipline, if he knows anything is going on wrong. Do you mean to say the doctor would make his views known through the master?—

Mr. R. Lewis.

Dec. 1, 1903.

Mr. E. Lyons.

9700. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—He does, if he wants blinds for his windows, the master enters it on his report.—Yes; and if the nurses wanted anything for their department.

9701. CHAIRMAN.—Yes, that is a little thing, or blue or starch or soap, but I mean any serious reform; does the doctor consult with you about that as you are going round?—No, he does not; he would write it on a report, and send it into the Guardians, and perhaps on that day week's committee it would be referred to them.

9702. And then you would see the doctor, and talk it over with him?—Yes. And also the question that arises here to-day. The Guardians are unanimous that we have accommodation in the Arnoagh Workhouse for three times the number of people that are in it at present, and they could fit up wards if they got this capitation grant for the lunatics, and keep them a good deal cheaper and as well as they could do at the asylum, because they would be kept at work and associated with sane people more or less; it helps a little.

9704. Sleeping accommodation good?—I don't know whether that can be improved; the sleeping accommodation seems to be better through the general part of the house than it is with them; some of them.

9705. Did the committee ever think of improving it?—They have been talking about it, but they did not want to spend money on this department until they would know whether this scheme would be carried out or this would be taken away from the workhouse. Is that matter of outdoor relief it rose from 1880 30s. a week to £15 a week, now it is £20; it certainly seemed a big rise.

9706. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Is it possible in this extensive union it was only 30s. a week.—Yes, in 1880; and the Local Government Board and the auditor drew attention to the increase, and the Guardians brought on this rule that Mr. Murtaghan and we all more or less complain about, and it has kept it at a stand since then.

9707. No matter how deserving the case, they must either come into the house or do without relief.—Well, the question of deserving—if they are not completely bedridden they have to do without relief.

The Sitting adjourned.

NINETEENTH PUBLIC SITTING—WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 16TH, 1903. Dec 16, 1903

At the Courthouse, Belfast.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. COFF BIGGEE.

Mr. T. J. Campbell (instructed by Messrs. P. and J. Boyle) appeared for the Ballycastle Board of Guardians.

Mr. E. M. Greer appeared for the Ballymoney Rural District Council.

Mr. Murphy (instructed by Mr. P. McGinn) appeared for ratepayers.

Mr. J. S. F. McCANER examined.

9706. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the County Council?—Yes, sir.

9707. Now what resolution did the County Council come to on the question of amalgamation of workhouses and unions?—We answered your queries categorically. The position in which the matter stands with regard to the Antrim County Council is that about a year and a half ago a committee was appointed to take the question of the amalgamation of workhouses into consideration, and they presented a report. That report was adopted by the County Council by a very large majority, and that report I can hand you a copy of. That report was sent up to the Local Government Board, and nothing was done upon it pending your inquiry, which they told us was to be held at an early date, and that report was practically reaffirmed in answer to your questions the other day. The answers we gave were, with regard to the first question, that we recommend the dissolution of the Ballycastle and Antrim Unions wholly. Owing to the seaboard situation of Ballycastle and the small claim at present upon its resources, and the proximity and means of access of the outlying districts of the union to the Unions of Ballymena and Ballymoney, we recommend Ballycastle and Antrim Unions should be abolished, and that part of the Union of Belfast outside the county borough of Belfast and in the County of Antrim should be amalgamated with the Unions of Larne and Lisburn for union purposes. Of course, those are two rather small rural districts lying contiguous to those two unions.

9708. Do you know what the view of the county borough of Belfast is on that?—No; not of the county borough of Belfast. The rural districts, I believe, is in favour of it, but the city of Belfast I don't know whether they have ever taken it into consideration. It is a very small question for them—the valuation is trifling for them.

9709. What is it, do you happen to remember?—£20,000. It is quite a small thing, and it lies touching on Lisburn and Larne, and, of course, to those two unions it would be most suitably attached. The answer to the second question, whether in the event of any union or unions being dissolved and the workhouses thereof being no longer required, such could be taken advantage of for an auxiliary asylum or other purpose, we do not recommend, but we consider it would be worth consideration the utilisation of Larne as a branch asylum to the existing asylum, which is situated about a mile from that. We think it could be worked as a branch asylum in connection with Antrim, and as we think that probably additional accommodation is now required at Antrim, it might be more economically obtained by that method; but we have no plans prepared for the purpose, and, therefore, could not say how it would work out. With regard to the Ballycastle Union Workhouse, there was a resolution passed by the Council at their meeting as an amendment to the report of the committee that it would be a very suitable situation for a school for poorer children.

9711. They would prefer to keep the children in an institution instead of boarding them out?—They would prefer to keep those children that have to be kept in the institution; they would prefer them gathered away from existing workhouses.

9712. Did they consider the question whether the law might not be amended?—No; they did not touch on that question as to the advisability of boarding out.

9713. What do you think would their view be if they were empowered to board out all the children in the workhouse?—I think they would be in favour of it.

9714. As against putting them into an institution?—I think they would.

9715. There is a railway direct to Ballycastle?—There is a railway direct from Ballycastle; to Ballycastle it is a single gauge line, there is no railway communication from Ballycastle to Cashendall.

9716. That is in their own union?—Yes; except that there is railway communication all over the county.

9717. Did you consider the question of making a sanatorium for consumptive patients?—It was not considered by the County Council at all. Personally, I have very strong views in favour of it.

9718. That would be your personal view?—Yes.

9719. Now question three. Whether with or without a dissolution of any union it would be possible?—Our answer is, we are not in favour of any arrangement which would transfer inmates from their present districts to another district. The committee of the County Council had a feeling that they would prefer as far as possible that the aged and infirm should remain in the district where they had been born and bred up.

9720. There is no question about it, the sick would have to remain?—The sick would have to remain, but the able-bodied and aged people who had friends in different districts, the Council would object to any classification of them which would remove all the respectable old people into one establishment.

9721. Say into Ballymena?—Say into Ballymena. That they would object to that because their friends could not go to see them, and they would feel further from home, and other reasons.

9722. Have you made any inquiries as to the extent to which these old people receive visits from their friends in workhouses?—I have not.

9724. Now as regards chargeability, query No. 4, whether in the event of an amalgamation or combination of unions being carried out or any other arrangements being made for the relief of the destitute poor any changes in the law procedure as to administration and in the chargeability of relief would be desirable?—The Council think that outdoor relief should be charged to the electoral division in which the person relieved resides, and not to the whole union.

9725. Is that with a view of making the responsibility more keenly felt?—I think so; bringing back the old state of affairs, that more responsibility would be upon the district in which the people were to be relieved.

F. M. CANER.

Mr. J. S.
F. McCann.

9726. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—That would hit the towns very hard?—It would unquestionably; but at the same time it is a very strong feeling that it has led to a great increase in outdoor relief, the recent change in county unions.

9727. CHAIRMAN.—With what part of the country are you immediately connected?—I reside between Belfast No. 1 Rural District and Lisburn Rural District; I am in both.

9728. Well, outdoor relief in Lisburn is pretty high? Is it, very?

9729. And in Belfast practically nil?—Practically nil; and in Lisburn rural district it is very high, and increasing, as far as I know.

9730. Do you see anything of the actual administration of outdoor relief in Castlereagh district and in Lisburn?—No, sir, not personally.

9731. You cannot speak with any knowledge as to the way in which it is done?—No, sir; I am a member of the Lisburn Board of Guardians, and I have every reason to believe that it is most carefully examined into, but I am not a member of the committee, and cannot tell you.

9732. Is the outdoor relief worked by a committee?—I believe all the work of the Lisburn Union is done by committees before coming before the board, but, of course, it is always examined afterwards.

9733. And notified by the board?—Yes, always notified.

9734. The practical outdoor relief is in the hands of the committee?—I believe so.

9735. And you don't think that in this county there is any further hospital accommodation necessary?—No, sir; we have a very fair County Antrim infirmary situated in Lisburn, and a good deal of money has been spent on it recently in bringing it up to date. A bazaar was held, which realised a considerable amount of money, and new operating arrangements were put in, and everything. It has been brought up to date. A certain part of the county has an idea that it is too much in one place. Of course, that will always be with a county infirmary—it cannot be everywhere.

9736. I suppose the people of Ballycastle feel that it is a little bit of a hardship to have to pay for a hospital that they don't derive much benefit from?—Yes; although we have serious cases sent to the infirmary from all the districts of the county.

9737. Would you be in favour of making the maintenance of the sick a county rate all over the County Antrim outside the county borough of Belfast?—Do you mean putting all the union hospitals on one rate?

9738. Yes. Here you have the Lisburn Hospital getting its contribution from Ballycastle; would you be in favour of Ballycastle getting its contribution from Antrim?—As far as the County Antrim is concerned the amount granted to the county infirmary is £600 per annum. It is a comparatively small amount compared with the cost of the maintenance of the Lisburn Infirmary; and the argument of the southern end of the county against those who say that Ballycastle does not get sufficient benefit, is that the difference that the local subscriptions to the infirmary contribute makes up any extra advantage that the locality receives.

9739. I am not saying anything at all hostile to the position of the infirmary?—I know. I am not speaking as a Lisburn man, but giving you the position of both sides. One side say the benefit derived is not in proportion to their payment, the other side say that their personal subscriptions and the local assistance they give to the hospital more than counterbalance any extra advantage they receive from its proximity.

9740. Taking the main fact that the county infirmary at Lisburn is a county charge, established from times before the Poor Law was started; now, having regard to the possibility of a change in chargeability and rating, do you think it would be a fair thing to put the sick, and make the payment for the sick, a county charge all over Ireland, not merely in Antrim?—I would personally prefer that they should be kept on their own areas, and I think it would be a great deal for the benefit of the outlying districts that they should be; but I would be afraid there would be an increase in the rates against the poorer districts.

9741. Do you know what the rates are now for Poor Law purposes in the various unions of the county?—I can give them to you in a moment.

9742. Antrim is 8d.; Ballycastle, 9d.; Ballymena, 1s. 0d.; Ballymoney, 9d.; Belfast, 9d.; Larne, 7d.; Lisburn, 8d. This is for Poor Law purposes only. In this county, with the exception of Ballymena, there is not very much between them?—No.

9743. It would not really in this county make very much of a difference if it was made a county charge?—It would not in this county affect it very materially.

9744. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—That is, provided the management would be the same in the future as it is now?—Yes; but, of course, there is always a tendency where the spending authority is not the taxing authority to increase the cost.

9745. CHAIRMAN.—The Lisburn valuation goes up to £200,000 nearly, Ballycastle is only £40,000; it is rather difficult for a place valued at £40,000 to keep up an infirmary with only that much to pay for it as compared with a place with a £200,000 valuation?—That is so; but, on the other hand, the requirements of the district are not as large as the requirements of the other district.

9746. No, they are not, but they must have a certain staff, that costs about the same amount—the nurses and doctors?—That is so, in proportion you must have a larger cost to the smaller area; that is, solely for hospital purposes.

9747. Did you consider that question of a county rate for the sick at all?—No, sir, not in public. I have personally considered it.

9748. And your personal opinion would be against it?—It would; for the reason that I always prefer chargeability and responsibility to go together.

9749. Then, what would you do about all the county-at-large expenses you have got. Take the county infirmary?—Well, the entire county is represented on the County Council equally, and they are the responsible party.

9750. If the hospitals had the same sort of an arrangement like that would you object?—If the management of the hospitals as put in the hands of the County Council, through committees or any way you choose, that would affect my view of the matter certainly.

9751. Then, would you be in favour of their being made a county charge?—I think it is possible that I would. My opinion would be altered then; I think I would have no objection to its being a county-at-large charge.

9752. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—But, then, don't you think that these outlying districts, whose requirements would be few in comparison to places where the population is large, would have to pay an undue proportion of the upkeep?—I still think it would be against the interest of the outlying districts, as far as taxability goes; but so far as efficiency goes, I think it would increase the efficiency if it was all under one control, provided that control was a responsible control and taxing.

9753. CHAIRMAN.—Don't you think Ballycastle would have to pay less as a union charge?—I do not; because I think that Ballycastle people managing their own hospital would be far more likely to keep down the cost than the county-at-large would.

9754. If with the county-at-large for each hospital there was a local committee?—We have the same position in a great many other things in the county at present. Take, for instance, the School Education grant, which is managed by committees, and the tendency of those committees is to be far more extravagant than elected Guardians, for the reason that they have not the direct responsibility. Whenever you go the direct responsibility.

9755. Whenever they have to face their constituents and explain?—They are more careful.

9756. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—And wherever the field is large there is less care in the cultivation?—That is so.

9757. CHAIRMAN.—Now, as regards paying patients?—No. 6. No, I don't think we touched on that.

9758. The County Council does not answer that very judiciously. We have been discussing it under the head of the sick already?—The orders are to take the insane out of the workhouses and put them into the asylums. My personal view is that that has been a very great additional cost to the ratepayers. A great many of the asylums are overcrowded, and it means additional buildings being built in the asylums; and our asylum, although a new asylum, built for 400, has a population of 470 in it, and we still have a great number of workhouse patients to take to the asylum under the orders; that will mean additional buildings at the asylum, and leave our workhouses empty.

9758. In calculating the cost per head at the asylum you take in, of course, the instalment for repaying the loan?—Certainly.

9759. Are you aware what a lunatic costs per annum in the Asylum Asylum?—Cost over all, including loans and everything, I believe, from memory, about £31.

9760. What do they cost in the workhouse—take Ballymena Workhouse, for instance?—The maintenance costs—

9761. That is the smallest part of it?—Of course it is. The Asylum Asylum has a certain number and the Belfast Asylum, of patients in the Ballymena Workhouse.

9762. Take the cost of a lunatic in an ordinary workhouse?—The cost of there is 7s a week, and the Ballymena Guardians certainly cover all cost on that.

9763. Mr. MURPHY.—That means £19 a year?—Yes; board, maintenance, and everything else.

9764. CHAIRMAN.—Take the cost of an average inmate at Lisburn, what is it?—I could not tell you.

9765. Do you think it would be much less than £25 a year?—I would be greatly astonished if it was £25, unless you include in it—

9766. I would include everything that the lunatic asylum people include—interest on borrowed money and everything?—Are you including the charge for the establishment of the workhouse?

9768. I don't think you can say that a workhouse patient costs only 7s a week; that is not the case?—The Ballymena Guardians at the present moment making money on the 7s a week. I have a table here before me. The actual cost, including establishment charges, in the Lisburn Union, is returned by them as 5s 9d.

9769. Per week?—Yes.

9770. Mr. MURPHY.—That is about £16 a year?—That includes everything. Ballymena is 5s 4d, and we are paying 7s, which we are fully aware is more than sufficient to cover all the cost of the lunatics, and, of course, they are differently looked after.

9771. CHAIRMAN.—Then, from the £31 a year, you have to take 4s a week capitation grant?—Certainly. The average cost of our lunatics in the asylum is, without the capitation grant, somewhere about £31 15s between £22 and £33.

9772. So, you see, there is not really such a very big margin between the two, and if legislation were to enable you to get the same capitation grant for an auxiliary lunatic asylum that you do for the head lunatic asylum do you think there would not be an advantage in getting them out of the workhouse?—I would most certainly wish to see them personally collected into one workhouse or one place under one supervision with a little more comfort than they have at present in the workhouses, but not with the expense of the really dangerous insane lunatics. These cases are more imbecile, infirm intellects than lunatics, and they should be made comfortable, and well clothed and properly fed, but they should not require the expensive caretaking of the others; should not require the same proportion of wardens and the same expense of doctors and so forth to look after them. Therefore, I would have them in a separate institution, with a very much reduced item for establishment charges.

9773. You would like to see a good capitation grant going for that?—But we must get the capitation grant first.

9774. At present you have a capitation grant of 2s a week only?—Yes.

9775. Mr. MURPHY.—Even if the capitation grant remained as it is, do you not think that, considering you have the buildings already prepared, and considering that the attendance wouldn't be so expensive for an auxiliary asylum it would be still advantageous to adopt the auxiliary asylum plan?—It entirely depends on the requirements that would be laid down by the Board, which sits in secret and sends down inspectors in public.

9776. The Lunacy Board or the Local Government Board?—It is the Local Government Board.

9777. CHAIRMAN.—You are not sure which?—It is both; I will give them both the credit. They send down inspectors to examine the buildings, and tell you that you are to lay out £10,000 or £12,000 to put it into order before you put a lunatic into it.

9778. Or sometimes not to lay out £10,000?—As a rule it is to lay it out; our experience is the other way.

9779. In Belfast?—Yes, and Antrim; they are always urging additional expenditure.

9780. Now, as regards the children in workhouses, what do you think?—I think the general feeling in the County Antrim, as far as I am aware, is to board them out if possible; we would like to see the workhouse lately removed from them.

9781. I don't know whether, in considering this question, the County Council tried to see how far workhouses could be relieved of classes with advantage?—No, they did not.

9782. The classes in the workhouse at present are the sick, the infirm, the lunatic, the children, and the able-bodied. The sick must remain locally to be treated, then you have the aged and infirm, which you have dealt with already. If you can send away the children and the lunatics, that makes it almost an infirmary and almshouse, with one exception—than is the case of women who go in to be confined?—Yes.

9783. If you could get rid of the children and the lunatics, and the women who go in for that purpose, then you would have none to deal with except the sick and the infirm?—What are you going to do with the most serious graveyards of all, the numerous gentlemen who walk round?

9784. We will come to that; it is the very last question?—Of course the sick must be attended to locally; there is no question.

9785. The children?—We would board out if we could, but if we could not we would prefer that they were gathered into some one place where they would be away from the taint of the workhouse, and trained almost as in an industrial school.

9786. As regards the women who go in there with illegitimate children, have you thought of that matter at all?—No, sir; that matter was not considered; I have not taken that into consideration.

9787. In question No. 7 you are asked how far a system of payments might be adopted. In some instances, for instance in Fermanagh, a considerable revenue has recently been raised by accepting payments of very small sums weekly, as low as 1s and upwards?

9788. In the County Antrim Infirmary a similar provision has been established, and when a governor issues an admission order or a line to the medical superintendent, there is on the bottom of the line whether the patient can pay, and, if so, how much, and he is supposed to put upon it from 1s. to 10s., according as he thinks the patient can pay; we are getting a certain amount of revenue, but I cannot tell you how much; the doctor will be able to tell you to-morrow, but the system has been adopted, and I think will work.

9789. And you would be in favour of giving Boards of Guardians the same power to charge people for their infirmities—discretionary powers?—I would; because I think a great number of the patients would prefer to pay a trifle.

9790. It would be better for them?—Yes; I believe a great number of the independent Irishmen prefer not to receive alms if they can help it.

9791. They would feel more independent paying even a little?—Yes; they would feel they had some right.

9792. Now, as regards tramps, what do you wish to say on that subject?—Well, sir, the County Council think a change is greatly needed, but we are not in a position to say what; that is the furthest they are prepared to go.

9793. There would be a good deal of pro and con in it?—Yes; but, of course, it is particularly bad in districts near large towns, such as Belfast, where they start out on their regular round on Monday.

9794. A weekly circuit is it?—Yes, I think so; and they have very good accommodation, as they go. Personally, I would be greatly in favour of some power to compel them to do some work.

9795. There is that power?—Yes, in England.

9796. There is that power here?—Not nearly to the same extent as in England.

Jan. 16, 1903

Mr. J. H.
F. McCance.

Dec. 16, 1905.

Mr. J. E.
F. McGeen.

9977. They can detain them longer in England!—They can detain them for thirty-six hours.

9978. Would you wish to see the law extended in that respect?—Personally, I would.

9979. And you think that would be enough to begin with at all events?—It would be a start to deter them; I think also that there should be some method of reporting from the different unions that such a man was there and had travelled on.

9980. They change their names, and do things of that sort?—Of course they do; but they get to be known pretty well.

9981. Mr. MURKIN.—Would you not extend the thing a little further, and with these people who make a profession of going around the country seeking the accommodation of the workhouse, after the second or third visit, hand them over to the police and have them dealt with by the authorities there; would you go that far?—I would give the Guardians the power on the constant return of the same man to the same workhouse to deal with and keep him for a longer period than thirty-six hours; if he returned again I would give them power to deal with him for a week, but I don't know that in the meantime I would be prepared to recommend handing any of them over to the police. I think you can get sufficient power without that by giving the Guardians additional powers on the continued return of the same man without any cause.

9982. Do you think a visit to the police station would not have a deterrent effect on these gentlemen?—I dunno some of them had been there before, but the ones that had not been there before I would not like to send them there for detention alone.

9983. This would be in the case of habitual tramps and strollers?—In nine cases out of ten the habitual tramp and stroller is liable to the police for other reasons, and if the police were carrying out their duties they could get him for something else.

9984. Considering that the police do not seem to be paying any attention to these gentlemen now?—I think it would be well to get the police to do their duty and look after the gentlemen. The real objection to make it an offence to apply to the workhouse to get in that way is the fact that you may shut out one deserving case, thereby causing injury to his life or health. I think the proper course is to take the man in in the meantime, but if he is discovered to be able to do his work and to be imposing on you for the purpose of simply getting a night's lodging, to make it so uncomfortable for him that he won't try it again.

9985. There is also the danger that if you shut him out of the house he may go to a farmyard and do further mischief?—Therefore I would take them in, but make it so unpleasant for them that they won't come unless they need to come.

9986. Have you ever considered the question of boarding out workhouse inmates?—No; my Council did not consider that at all.

9987. Or harmless lunatics; sending them into the country instead of housing them in an institution?—No.

9988. You say outdoor relief is very little given in Belfast Union?—In Belfast Union; but in the County Antrim there is a good deal of it.

9989. But in Belfast Union?—I don't think there is much given.

9990. Have you any idea of how much?—I could not give you the figures.

9991. I believe the sum is infinitesimal; would that have anything to do with the number of inmates in the houses at present?—You would get that better from some of the Belfast witnesses.

9992. Dr. BROWN.—You mentioned that the County Council are in favour of separating the outside districts from the Belfast Union?—Yes.

9993. Did they consider that question?—They did; their reason for it is that they are separated from Belfast for all other purposes—for all other taxation now—and why should they be left for that purpose where it means an additional grievance to them of rates.

9994. Did that meet with the approval of the County Council for the division or the representative from the District Council?—I believe it meets with the approval of the Rural District Council; the reply we got from the Rural District Council was in favour of it.

9995. You also mentioned that the Ballymena Guardians make money out of the boarding out of the inmates from the County Antrim?—Yes.

9996. Have you any idea of how much they make?—I could not tell you, but they cover all expenses, and are quite willing to take more at the same price.

9997. Therefore you infer from that that they make a profit out of it, but you have not any figures to put you?—I could not tell you the actual cost.

9998. Supposing they make a profit, do you think it a fair and reasonable thing that one Board of Guardians should make a profit out of the inmates from the county generally?—I don't object to one Board of Guardians making a profit out of the inmates provided the county thereby is a saver as well.

9999. How does the county save. They get the capitulation grant and board these inmates out at 7s. 6d.; they would have to pay out a considerable further sum on buildings which they avoid; they have had out very well already—about £120,000 in the last four years—and to house the additional fifty at Ballymena would require further building accommodation at Antrim.

10000. The County Council pay 7s. a week for a lunatic; the inmates in the asylum cost about £31 a year?

—£32, I think, is the figure; that includes the Ballymena patients.

10001. But they go to reduce that cost; they only cost you 7s. 6d.—Yes.

10002. Therefore the County Council are making money out of the Ballymena patients as well as the Ballymena Guardians by getting the capitulation grant of 4s. for these inmates?—They are. Mr. McGeen was appointed by the County Council with me.

Mr. Campbell.—I appear on behalf of the Ballymena Board of Guardians, instructed by Messrs. P. & J. Boyle; I am not quite familiar with the course of the proceedings, but certain evidence has been given by Mr. McGeen affecting our district, and I would like to question him on one or two points.

CHAIRMAN.—Certainly.

10003. Mr. Campbell.—You reside at the very lowest end of the county?—Yes; between Belfast and Lismore.

10004. And Ballymena is at the very head of the county?—It is.

10005. Have you any experience of the locality at all?—Yes; I know the district very well indeed.

10006. Do you mean by visiting it?—Yes.

10007. Is it not a fact that that district is about as mountainous a district as you find in any part of Ulster?—There are some very fair hills in it.

10008. What would your definition of a very fair hill be?—I think Knockadea is a very fair hill.

10009. In any case you will agree it is a mountainous district?—I would; it includes parts of the Glens of Antrim.

10010. You would go as far as to say it is one of the most mountainous districts in the entire county?—Yes.

10011. Do you know anything about the roads in the district?—I do.

10012. Does the main road of the district run between Ballycastle and Cushendall?—It depends on what you call the main road. The main roads run towards Bushmills and Ballymena.

10013. You propose to amalgamate Ballymena with some other union?—Yes; that is the proposal of the County Council.

10014. What unions do you suggest?—Ballymena and Ballymena.

10015. What is the main ground on which the County Council make that recommendation?—On the ground that the Ballymena Workhouse is not nearly used to the capacity that we think it can be economically worked for, and that the train facilities from Ballymena to Ballymena are such that nobody would be injuriously affected by the change.

10016. The two points then are that Ballymena is not used to the extent you would like to see it used?—No, I did not say that; not to the extent I would like to see it used; I would not like to see it used at all; I said to the extent of its capacity for usefulness.

10017. In what direction?—Ballymena to Cushendall to accommodate 650 persons, and the present number is about sixty, and the staff would look after at least 320; therefore, in my opinion, it is not doing work for the expense it is incurring.

10018. There is a decrease, I take it, in the number of cases in every workhouse in the county?—There it.

10019. You speak of the railway facilities between Ballymena and Ballymena; do you know anything about the railway facilities in other parts of the district?—There is from Parkmore to Ballymena.

10020. What are the railway facilities between Cushendall and Ballymena?—Might I answer that question by asking you what are the railway facilities between Cushendall and Ballymena?

10021. What are they?—Equally good as between Cushendall and Ballymena.

9323. Take Ballymoney for instance?—We don't propose for a moment that the Cushendall people are to go to Ballymoney; they are to go to Ballycastle, but if they go to Ballymoney they have to go to Ballycastle in any case.

9324. Your evidence is that in respect of railway facilities the change you recommend makes no difference?—Remember we recommend that hospital accommodation should be left in Ballycastle as well—the person to be taken to the workhouse; the existing class of workhouse patients is not inconvenienced when they get to Ballycastle by having to put their feet in the train and be taken up to Ballymoney.

9325. Another ground is the seaboard position of Ballycastle; would not that also apply to Larne?—It would equally, except that the union does not lie in the position of Larne.

9326. Is not Larne, as regards the seaboard, in the same fix as Ballycastle?—Certainly, but not as regards other matters.

9327. And Larne is much nearer to other unions than is Ballycastle?—Certainly, but not as regards other matters.

9328. Have you any idea of the relative distances between Larne and Ballymoney, and Ballycastle and Ballymoney?—Yes; Larne is twenty-three miles from Ballymoney, and Ballycastle is about twenty-six, but we don't for a moment propose that Ballycastle and Ballymoney are to have any connection whatever.

9329. What would you propose to do with the inmates?—They are to go to Ballymoney.

9330. The other parts of the union should go to Ballymoney?—Yes.

9331. Was there a resolution passed on this subject by the County Council before this Commission was moved at all?—So I stated this morning.

9332. And did that recommend the abolition of Ballycastle as a separate district?—Yes.

9333. That was without any inquiry at all?—No; that was after a committee had sat and held a great deal of inquiry.

9334. Did you figure out in any way the distance between the nearest point of Ballycastle Union to Ballymoney?—No; I could not tell you that from memory; I did know it at one time.

9335. Would you be surprised to learn that the average distance is twenty-one and a half miles?—How could the nearest point have an average distance.

9336. Would you be surprised to hear the average distance is twenty-one and a half miles?—It may, but I don't think it would be, from my recollection. The average distance of—9337. Of the districts of Ballycastle?—Of the districts of Ballycastle that we would propose to put into Ballymoney Union; I would be greatly surprised.

9338. Would you be surprised to learn that the average distance is about twenty-one miles?—I would be greatly surprised to know that the average distance of the districts we propose to put into Ballymoney is twenty-one miles.

9339. That is not exactly what I ask you?—You are asking me a question that I cannot answer in fairness.

9340. You cannot say yes or no to it? I say you are asking two questions at once that I cannot answer with yes or no.

CHAIRMAN.—Mr. McOrne proposes that the union should be divided into two; therefore he could not answer the question.

9341. Mr. Campbell.—Would you be surprised to learn that the average distance of the districts now included in Ballycastle from Ballymoney is about twenty-one miles?—It does not affect my position at all.

CHAIRMAN.—It really has no reference to the case. Mr. Campbell.—We say it has, and is a very important matter.

CHAIRMAN.—If you take it up separately and ask him how he proposes to divide the union, and then take the distances of one part from Ballymoney and another part from Ballymoney it would be relevant.

9342. Mr. Campbell.—Will you tell us how exactly you do propose to divide the union?—We propose to divide it down at the Cushendall end; all the Larne and Glenora and that district to go to Ballymoney, and the other portion to go to Ballycastle, which, naturally, lies into it.

9343. Have you any idea how that would increase the distance, having regard to the present distances people have to travel to get to Ballycastle?—It entirely depends on the person you take; if you take a man in Cushendall it will not increase his distance materially.

9344. To get to Ballymoney?—No.

9345. Do you think he would have the same facilities to get to Ballymoney as to Ballycastle?—I think he would have more; he is within five and a half miles of Parkmore station in one district, and in the other case he has sixteen and a half miles to drive.

9346. CHAIRMAN.—Does not the railway go beyond Parkmore?—No; it is within seven miles of Cushendall village.

9347. Mr. Campbell.—Ballylin is included in Ballycastle; do you propose to take the people from there to Ballymoney?

CHAIRMAN.—I think we may leave them out; they won't embarrass the arrangement.

9348.—When they are landed in Ballycastle, Mr. Boyle will admit the railway station will then be at their service to take them to Ballymoney, and the hospital for the sick will be at Ballycastle.

9349. Mr. Campbell.—You propose to leave the hospital in Ballycastle?—We propose to leave a hospital.

9350. Is the hospital accommodation sufficient for the district?—I could not tell you.

9351. Do you know that recently a hospital was erected privately at Cushendall?—Perfectly aware of that, and a very nice little hospital it is.

9352. Mr. MINNAMARAN.—Have you considered the question of what you would do in the case of these two dissolved unions, what representation they would have; how would their affairs be looked after?—We don't recommend, of course, that it should be in any way altered for rural district purposes.

9353. But for Poor Law purposes what representation would you give them?—I would give them the same number of representatives on the other two boards that they have at present.

9354. And do you think the representatives would come all the way from Ballycastle to attend meetings of the Board in Ballymoney and Ballymena?—The view is, as far as we can ascertain, that they would, a great many of them, get to Ballymoney quite as easily as to Ballycastle; it is a driving district entirely from the outlying districts on both sides of the railway line, and once they get to the railway line they are within, comparatively, an easy distance of Ballymoney or Ballycastle; I don't think it would affect the position except perhaps with regard to the two representatives of Rathlin; they are at the extreme end of the triber; the bulk of them would not be affected very materially.

9355. You would consider the present representation should be continued?—I would; the County Council passed a resolution to the effect that they would like to see the work of the Guardians as much decentralised as possible—done by committees; that is more of the old dispensary committee work done by committees than there is at present done; that would necessitate less frequent attendances of large boards, which are always untidy.

9356. Have you ever considered the question of dispensary management as against the question of union management?—Do you mean the entire management of all the dispensary affairs?

9357. The Poor Law system over the entire union, instead of having it a union administration have it a dispensary administration?—It would lead to great complications, except in the shape of committees that would report to their boards at intervals and have their acts sanctioned by their boards; it would greatly increase the cost of working such small areas with officials.

9358. It would not necessarily mean officials; it would mean committees to look after dispensary areas?—I think the County Council would be in favour of that, of delegating large portions of the powers that at present exist in the Guardians to dispensary area committees.

9359. Would it not mean closer supervision?—Yes; the resolution of the Council to that effect is before you.

9360. You still think there would be four unions needed for the County Antrim?—Personally, I think one would be quite sufficient almost.

9361. If you take out the sick in the County Antrim, they number about 2,000, according to the latest report we have before us, you have about 600 children in the workhouse and 800 boarded out; then, if you take the lunatics and mothers of children, you bring down the number to about 2,000 in the county?—Are you including in that Belfast Workhouse?

9362. Belfast Workhouse?—If you have out Belfast Workhouse you will have the number reduced to about twenty-five, or somewhere down about that. If you have out Belfast Workhouse and take out those classes, except the tramps who are in for the night, it will be very much reduced.

Dec. 16, 1902.

Mr J. B. P.
22 Cases.

9831. CHAIRMAN.—The sick and aged and infirm are very large classes—I thought you were mistaking the aged and infirm in that class.

9833. Do you think they would require four workhouses for those 500 or 600; I think the number is a great deal larger—You are including Belfast. I personally think a less number would do. I am personally in favour of a reduction of the number, but the County Council's recommendation is what I tell you, in favour of the abolition of only two; of course, Lisburn takes in a large area of the County Down as well as the County Antrim. Lisburn is not a purely County Antrim Workhouse; its area in Down is larger than in Antrim.

9834. Have you any view as regards county boundaries; would you like to see every county self-contained, an administrative unit; did you consider that question?—No.

9835. You are interlocked pretty largely with other counties?—Only County Down and the city of Belfast.

9836. County Antrim?—We have a trifle of it in Lurgan Union.

9837. You did not consider that question?—At one time Antrim was in favour of being amalgamated with Lisburn, but I think they have dropped that question.

9838. Mr. Campbell.—Before you go I would like you to answer this. The case that the Ballycastle Board of Guardians intend to make is this, that the Antrim County Council, in suggesting the abolition of the Ballycastle Union, are not actuated by any desire for economy or the good of the poor, but solely through political motives; what is your opinion with regard to that?—I have been a member of the County Council of Antrim since its inception, and I never heard the word politics mentioned at it, good, bad, or indifferent. We recommend the abolition of Antrim, and the politics of Antrim are very considerably different from the politics of Ballycastle, as far as I know them; therefore, the same actions that would animate us in abolishing Ballycastle could not be a political feeling to make us abolish Antrim.

9839. You will admit that Antrim stands in a very different position from Ballycastle; is it not surrounded on all sides by other unions?—Yes; so is Ballycastle.

9840. At a nearer distance than the unions are to Ballycastle?—I don't think Larne is much nearer to Antrim.

Mr. ALEXANDER MURPHY'S CONTINUATION.

Mr. Alexander
Murphy.

9841. CHAIRMAN.—You are the other member of the County Council who was delegated to give evidence?—I 9842. Well, we have had the evidence at considerable length of Mr. McCune, and I don't suppose it will be necessary to take you verbatim through it in the same way—I don't see any advantage in it at all.

9843. If there were any matters in which you dissent from Mr. McCune or your wish to express your own view so we will take it in that way from you?—Really, I have very little to say in addition to what Mr. McCune has put before you. The Council were actuated in this matter largely by a desire to save the ratepayers; as business men we considered that small unions with expensive establishment charges are not conducive to economy. We had before us Ballycastle Union with only twenty-six ordinary inmates, and we had Antrim Union with only seventy-four ordinary inmates; they were the two unions with the smallest number of inmates in the County Antrim, and we considered the advisability of the abolition of those two unions and their amalgamation with the adjoining unions. We were of opinion from the facts before us that the establishment charges in small unions are necessarily bound to be out of proportion to the establishment charges in the larger unions. Now, sir, that is borne out by the facts. If you take the Ballymena Union, with 126 inmates, we find there that the total cost for all purposes, including establishment charges, is £5. 4d. each inmate. Ballycastle Union I am sorry I cannot give you, for the simple reason that although we have applied from the County offices here we have been unable to get the establishment charges 9844. Do you know whether or not it is a fact that in Ballycastle a party have a majority there who have not a majority in any other part of the county?—I know nothing personally about parties, and take no interest in parties.

9845. Do you know whether that is so or not?—I know the County Council of Antrim had no political animus in this matter.

9846. They are a very innocent body; but do you know that a party have a majority in Ballycastle who have not a majority in any other union of the county?—I know nothing about the majority in Ballycastle.

9847. Did you ever hear of such a thing?—I have heard of contested elections in Ballycastle, where the party that you are representing have been defeated, so I don't know that they have a majority. Mr. Woodside, who represents that district, does not represent the party I take it you represent.

9848. You are speaking of the County Council's representation, I am speaking of the composition of the Board of Guardians of Ballycastle?—I cannot tell you about the composition.

9849. As a matter of fact did you vote against any commission of inquiry?—I did not.

9850. When the question was before the County Council?—No, I never did.

9851. On the resolution of Mr. O'Connell?—Never did. I would like to see it produced if I did, I would like you to produce any amendment I voted against.

9852. The resolution, I am told, is as follows:—29th of October, 1902, moved by Mr. O'Connell, Chairman of the Ballycastle Board of Guardians, at a meeting of the Antrim County Council: "That in the opinion of this Council the time has now come when the Government should appoint a Commission to inquire into the working of the Poor Law system in Ireland with a view to introduce some other method of dealing with our poor, or to make such changes in the present system as will lessen the heavy expenditure imposed on the ratepayers, and be more in accordance with the wishes of the people and the requirements of the poor." Did you vote against that?—That was an amendment proposed to the report of the committee which I had signed. Of course, I supported the report of the committee, which I had previously submitted, and, consequently, voted against that amendment.

9853. Whether it was an amendment to the report or what it was did you vote against it?—I voted in favour of the report I put before the Council.

9854. And against this resolution of Mr. O'Connell?—Certainly I did, and would again in the same position.

from the Ballycastle Union. But take Antrim Union. The total cost there is 7s. 1½d. per inmate, including establishment charges, as against 5s. 4d. for Ballymena, and 6s. 9½d. in Larne; so that it is quite clear that if the inmates of Antrim were distributed over Ballymena and Larne that the cost of these inmates would be less per head than at present. That is, broadly, the fact that influenced us in the course that was come to by the Council.

9855. Subject, of course, to any considerable expenses that might be incurred?—You mean, perhaps, for the transfer of the inmates.

9856. Yes?—That, sir, we thought would be much more than compensated for by the fact—

9857. And possibly other expenses, salaries?—Yes; but, broadly, we considered that if you increase the number of inmates, say in Larne Union, that you save establishment charges in Larne Union. That is borne out in Ballymena, where the number of inmates is larger—the rate per head for establishment charges is reduced in proportion to the number of inmates. The total number of ordinary inmates for the whole of the unions, as far as I know, would be about 600, omitting Belfast.

9858. In ordinary inmates do you include aged and infirm?—Yes; but not including the infirm.

9859. Not including the sick?—Not those in the infirmary and hospital. The total number in the various workhouses is 780, but from that I deduct half of Lisburn, because there is half in the County Down; and I deduct 150 out of 171 in Lurgan, because there is a very small portion of Lurgan in the County

Antrim; so, really, there are only about 500 ordinary inmates to be accommodated in the whole of the unions, at the outside.

9010. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Do you not think that it would be a waste of money to keep four institutions for these 600?—As a business man, I certainly say it would be. I would be in favour of reducing the number still further, but I am here speaking only in the first instance for the Council.

CHAIRMAN.—Now coming to it from your own point of view.

9011. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—What would you, as a business man—a man who would wish to manage the thing to the best advantage—what would you suggest would be sufficient accommodation for the class known as the infirm and destitute, and all who could travel by rail?—Looking at the figures before me, when I find that we have in Ballymena—where we have a large number of inmates—we have the cost down to 5s. 4d. per head, including all establishment charges; and that I compare that with, say, Antrim, with only half the number of inmates, and the cost 7s. 1½d., then I say our ideal would be to go towards the number at Ballymena, and have such a number of union workhouses as would accommodate the people in such numbers as at Ballymena.

9012. The average number in Ballymena is about 350, including inmates and all?—It is rather more than that. We have 326 ordinary, and in the infirmary and hospital 112, and there are, in addition, 112 inmates; about 360. You are quite right. That would be my idea of what we should come to.

9013. Do you not consider that for the 500 or 600 inmates that two workhouses would meet all the requirements of those able to travel—the destitute and infirm of Antrim—outside Belfast?—Not speaking for the moment as a representative of the County Council, but speaking for myself, I would not be in favour of more than two or three unions. But, personally, I would be in favour of adopting the system of cottage schemes for scattered couples throughout the county. We have some little experience of that at Carrickfergus, where the inmates get about £14 a year. I do think they serve a very useful purpose.

9014. Do you think that could be done with a strict regard to economy?—I think so.

9015. CHAIRMAN.—It would not be an indictment to people to look forward to the rates for support in their old age—I must admit I have heard that argument put forward. I don't think that parsimony, however, is the result of deliberate calculation, and I hardly think it is as appreciable an argument, although I must admit I have heard it put forward in Carrickfergus.

9017. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—But still the country has to look after those that cannot look after themselves, and on general grounds do you not think it would be a danger to offer to people when they get into that condition of life that they are no longer able to work—to offer them a better condition of life than they had when they were well and thrifty?—But such a provision as I would propose, of not more than 6s. a week with a free house, would not be something to look forward to—it would be a something to prevent them going into the workhouse. That is my view.

9018. That is a pretty large extension of the outdoor relief system?—Not quite that. I would be in favour of the provision of suitable cottages, not necessarily detached cottages, but in rows, that they could be put up more cheaply, and grant, then, outdoor relief to old married couples.

9019. CHAIRMAN.—Would you be in favour of giving labourers' cottages to actual labourers?—That is a subject in which I am not prepared to speak with authority.

9020. The only thing is giving a cottage to a man as soon as he ceases to be able to labour?—What interested me is that it appears to me they could be maintained as cheaply as in the house, looking at the cost here, and that it would be far more acceptable to respectable poor people. We have a feeling that there are many respectable poor pairs who have to go to the workhouse greatly against their own wish. I have in my mind many at present that would feel it a great hardship and disgrace, although I know they are living in great poverty.

9021. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—But would not the establishment of such a system as that have rather an irritating effect upon the labouring classes of the community, who, while giving their whole time to industry, would not be as well off as those who are idle?—I cannot see that—that if you give 6s. a week, which is 3s. for each person—you will be making them as well off as those who were working; and it should be a condition precedent that the parties are not able to work.

9022. CHAIRMAN.—I don't know whether you are aware that the agricultural labourers in some parts of Ireland only get 4s. a week for himself and his family, not including a free house?—I was not aware of that, but am I aware how they live on it?

9023. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—I know that the agricultural labourer does not get more than 9s. on an average the year round; and if you establish houses of this kind it certainly would be a source of irritation to a labourer to know that he had to work hard and not live as well as a neighbour who was doing nothing—just so.

9024. So you think two workhouses or so under the conditions you have outlined would accommodate all the classes known as destitute and infirm of Antrim, outside Belfast?—That would be my view, but it is not the view of the Council.

9025. CHAIRMAN.—You might push it further—would not one do? Take Ballymena a centre for Ballymena, Bellinacorney, Larnah, and Antrim—these are all the unions, except Belfast or Larnah; or even leaving Larnah in, and putting out Belfast, if you were satisfied that these poor people when once they become chronic inmates of workhouses received no virtue, would you see more hardship in sending them to one central institution than there is now in sending the means, many of whom are only temporarily infirm, and receive visits, would you see more hardship in sending them to one institution?—I would not.

CHAIRMAN.—There might be an objection in the case of people who would have to go to hospital, but they would have cottage hospitals.

9026. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Did the Council consider the question of a sanatorium for consumptives?—They did not.

9027. The Council would be in favour of an auxiliary asylum if it could be worked with economy?—You are putting the keynote—the question of economy. I must say the Council are very much afraid that if they have to undertake the remodelling of Antrim Workhouse they would be in for enormous expense. We have great dread of the expense in connection with lunatic asylums, or auxiliary asylums. We think they are not at all on a commercial basis. The dread is that the remodelling of Antrim Workhouse might be such an exposure rather it would not be advisable to undertake it.

9028. But, still, if the thing could be done without any additional cost, and to give better treatment to those afflicted people, you would be in favour of the change?—Certainly.

9029. Of course, this thing will have to be gone into closely and the matter considered in regard to expense and everything else?—Yes; the two points that interested us were the question of the expense and the question of the economical working after it was altered.

9030. Is not the Ballymena plan at present working fairly well?—So far as I know, it is.

9031. We went through the house yesterday and the inmates seemed to be well looked after?—As a County Councillor I don't profess to be familiar with the Poor Law system.

9032. But from the point of view of an administrator of the county, and that it brings a saving to the rates, you would be in favour of it?—We are entirely in favour of it. Mr. McCune suggests to me that Belfast is now a separate entity for all purposes.

9033. CHAIRMAN.—If they got rid of the little bit of the union outside they would have a union of their own?—Yes.

9034. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—And they would have no objection to shed that part?—I don't know.

Mr. McCune.—I don't think they would. It would not affect them in the very least.

Dec. 16, 1903.

Mr. Alexander
Macanpfeill.

Witness.—Not having any official knowledge on the matter, I don't wish to say anything.

9955. Dr. BACON.—You speak of cottage homes—what are the conditions for admission to those homes?—In Carrickfergus the conditions are, they must be natives of the town, be destitute, and be over sixty-five years of age, and unable to work.

9956. Have they any means of their own?—It is not a necessary condition.

9957. With regard to the Antrim Workhouse, did the County Council come to any decision what use it should be put to?—The opinion was very strongly in favour of using it as a branch asylum in connection with the one at present at Antrim.

9958. Are they agreed about that—is that part of their resolution?—It is not part of the resolution, but they were practically agreed on it. Mr. McCance reminds me it is part of the resolution. They were practically agreed on it, but they wished to fully consider it in view of what might be the expenditure to fit it for the purpose.

Mr. McCance.—It is referred to, sir, in the resolution which is submitted.

CHAIRMAN.—I have it, thanks.

Witness.—"It might form a very suitable auxiliary to that institution." They did not decide that it was to be so used, but they were of opinion that it might. The question of the cost of altering was considered.

9959. CHAIRMAN.—That is what frightened you?—Yes.

9960. Mr. Campbell.—Though you propose to abolish Ballycastle you don't propose to interfere in any way with Larne?—No.

9961. Does not every reason you give for abolishing Ballycastle apply with equal force to Larne?—I don't think so.

9962. Take them one by one—is Larne not a seaport the same as Ballycastle?—I did not give that as my reason.

9963. I am taking the reasons given by the County Council. Is Larne not a seaport?—It is.

9964. Is there not a small claim at present on its resources?—There are 124 in it, as against twenty-six in Ballycastle.

9965. Are you taking 126 as the average number?—I am taking the return we have from Ballycastle Union—I don't know whether it is correct or not—26 ordinary inmates.

9966. Have you any idea of the proportion of valuation between the two unions?—Oh, yes. £45,500 is Ballycastle, as against £150,000 of Larne.

9967. So that the proportion is about two to five?—Yes; but that does not at all affect the question.

9968. Are not all the districts of Larne in close touch with the surrounding unions?—Larne, of course, as you know, goes quite close to Cushendall. I heard you raising the question that Cushendall would be unduly distant from Ballymena or Ballymoney, and Larne is just in the same position as that point, but it is still further from Larne than any of those places are from either Ballymena or Ballymoney. Between Larne and Ballymena the distance is not great—you must not take Larne town, but take the Larne Poor Law district. The people have to come from quite close to Cushendall to Larne. They have to come a further distance to Larne at present than under the amended arrangement they would have to go to Ballymoney or Ballymena. The distances would not be so bad for the poor of Ballycastle Union as they are today for the poor of Larne Union.

9969. Antrim district comes very near the Larne Union district?—It comes to within about eight miles of Larne, and we are proposing to join part of Antrim Union on to Larne.

9970. Take the Ballymena district—how near does it come to Larne?—I don't know the boundary.

9971. How near does Belfast district come to Larne?—I suppose fifteen or sixteen miles at the nearest point; but don't take me as giving actual figures.

9972. Pass away from Larne altogether, and take the case of Ballymoney. What considerations weighed with the County Council to destroy Ballycastle rather than Ballymoney?—The whole force of the County Council's position is this—that a small union must of necessity cost more for establishment charges per inmate than a larger one, supposing the administration is equally satisfactory in both, and we look to the Local Government Board to see to that point.

9973. So that the main element was the question of cost?—Yes; economy to the county.

9974. Did you take into account to the same extent the condition to which the sick and destitute poor of the district would be reduced?—We don't see that there would be any hardship to them at all.

9975. Did you consider the question?—Oh, certainly. No intelligent man would give a vote without considering it.

9976. Did you make any inquiries in the district yourself?—Yes; we certainly had the most able representatives from the district.

9977. Who was last?—Your neighbor here, Mr. O'Kane, who made a most eloquent speech at the County Council, and enlarged on the whole case—it was put as well as it was possible to put it.

9978. You don't suggest that you have given effect to his recommendations?—We gave full weight to the case he made, but we did not agree with him. We did not think his views sound. If we had, we would have voted contrary to what we did.

9979. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—What do you think of an arrangement that would enable one union to be based on the infirm and destitute in a neighbouring union, pretty much on the plan that you do with regard to Ballymena here and the asylum without the discharging at all of the union?—I would rather not express an opinion. I have not given that matter thought.

9980. I notice the number of inmates in Ballycastle is not large, but even small as they are, they are nearly all in the infirmary. Of course, there will have to be a hospital kept there for the sick in any case. I don't necessarily say, of course, because it is quite possible the greater number of those may just as conveniently be removed to Ballymena, as they have to be removed from quite adjoining it at Cushendall to Larne. I would be disposed to take it that a great many in the infirmary could, without injury to their health, be removed by rail to Ballymena or Ballymoney.

9981. CHAIRMAN.—Do you mean leave no hospital whatever?—No, I did not quite say that; but these might be temporary cases. A hospital might be for acute cases, and these might be temporary cases in the infirmary that could be removed without injury to themselves.

9982. Then, that would be merely with regard to the size of the hospital?—Yes.

9983. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—In that case you know that these inmates could be boarded out in the neighbouring unions then the expensive staff that at present is required would not have to be maintained, but only the nursing staff and medical aid, and in that case you would effect economy without interfering with the local management?—I would have no objection at all provided the establishment charges can be kept down. One of the things that we have to pay for without the poor being specially benefited by is the establishment charge.

9984. A great economy in any change of the system will be secured by a reduction in the number of the staff?—That is the point thus influenced the Council.

9985. If we could get rid of a number of the expensive staff and still keep up the local infirmaries at a moderate cost we would arrive at economy without hindering efficiency, and carry out all the ideas we have been concerned for?—That is the ideal we are aiming at.

9986. What would you think of a system like that that would enable Boards of Guardians to be based on in neighbouring unions their infirm and destitute?—I don't see any objection to it. If a plan can be devised that will work economically I don't see any objection to it.

9988. That is, the reduction of the cost of the staff?—Quite so. I wish to say in reference to the inquiry by the gentleman here to Mr. McCance about the political animus, I have been a member of the County Council, and I know that he is not speaking with the authority of Mr. O'Kane, the County Councillor, when he suggests such a thing.

Mr. Campbell.—That is a thing this gentleman should not say. I am speaking with the full authority of Mr. O'Kane—that shows the nature of the County Council.

Mr. JOSEPH P. O'KANE examined.

9960. Mr. Campbell.—You have been appointed by the unanimous vote of the Ballycastle Board of Guardians to represent their views here?—I have.

9970. And I also understand that coming here to-day you represent the views of the Most Rev. Dr. Henry, who is the Roman Catholic Bishop of Down and Connor?—I do.

9971. The diocese of Down and Connor includes the County Antrim?—Yes.

9972. So you are not only speaking for the Ballycastle Guardians, but for the head of the Catholic community in this county?—Quite so.

9973. You yourself are a member of the County Antrim Council?—I have been for three years—the first term.

9974. While you were a member of the County Council did you propose the resolution I read to-day in favour of the Commission?—I did; on the 29th of October, 1901.

9975. And you were actually voted down on that resolution?—I was voted against, but amongst those who supported it was the Chairman, Sir Francis M'Laughlin, and Mr. McCance, to my own knowledge, voted against it.

Mr. McCance—I stated I voted against it.

9976. Mr. Campbell.—I object to any interference on the part of Mr. McCance. In any case your resolution has fruit later on?—Yes.

9977. You are thoroughly familiar with all the circumstances and requirements of the Ballycastle district?—I am.

9978. And, unlike the two gentlemen who gave evidence to-day, you have lived there all your life?—I have lived there for upwards of twenty years.

9979. Do you believe is there any reason for recommending the dissolution of this union on the ground of economy?—I cannot see it at all.

9980. Or in the interests of the sick and destitute poor?—Decidedly not.

9981. Is there any reason whatever except, in your judgment, a political motive at the back of it?—I cannot fathom any other.

9982. Is it a fact that Ballycastle is the only union in the County Antrim in which the Nationalist party have a majority?—Yes, that is admitted; it is undeniable.

9983. On this very question, with regard to what should be done with the union itself, was there a vote taken recently at your board?—There was.

9984. Was that vote strictly on party lines?—It was. Well, two gentlemen, liberally minded, refused to vote, but it was strictly on party lines.

9985. That is to say, the Nationalists wanted to preserve their integrity so and the Unionists wanted to destroy it?—Quite so. I should explain, I proposed at the board that there should be a Commission of Inquiry. I followed the example of the County Armagh, and I proposed a Commission of Inquiry. I am quite sure we are all delighted to see you present here at this Inquiry, for they would have had no Inquiry—they would have simply rubbed out Ballycastle without any inquiry and would have inquired afterwards.

9986. You have prepared replies to the various queries submitted by the Commissioners?—I have. On account of being, as it were, on the defensive, if we are going to be wiped out I took the precaution of entering a plea why sentence should not be passed upon us by Mr. M'Campbell and Mr. McCance. I have taken the queries, and I have answered them to the best of my ability. But, as regards the auxiliary system, I would like to bring to your notice the new departure suggested by the Belfast District Council, not in the way of auxiliaries at all, but as homes, and also as regards the outdoor relief question, where we have recommended a reversion to the old electoral division rating. I don't know that Mr. McCance or Mr. M'Campbell have ever had the happiness of being Poor Law Guardians. I have, for ten years, and I would suggest a grant in aid, that is, if we do

CHAIRMAN.—We may leave it so.

Mr. M'KINAGHAN.—We really don't want to touch on that question.

WITNESS.—But I must make the statement. I know Mr. O'Kane has said over and over again that there is not such a body in the world.

Dec. 16, 1903.

Mr. Alexander M'Campbell.

revert to electoral rating for the relief of the poor, the old system should be had regard to, that is, where it is over 50 per cent., it should be an entire union rating. With that safeguard I would wish to advocate a return to electoral rating.

9987. In regard to the Ballycastle Union district itself, is it a mountainous and almost inaccessible district in many parts?—I am an auctioneer, and I have gone over every inch of the ground, and the only way I could describe the road from Ballycastle to Torr, and on round to Cushendun, that is the coast road, there are two roads—the coast road and the main road—is to say it is a switchback.

9988. CHAIRMAN.—We are going to visit Ballycastle?—The only way I can describe it is that it is a switchback railway.

9989. Mr. Campbell.—Taking the district generally, does it consist of a series of switchback roads?—The greater portion of it. From Ballycastle to Ballymoney the roads are very good, but if you go by Arney to Cushendun, Torr and Fairhead, it is all undulations. To give you an example—if you are going from Coleraine Chapel to Ballycastle, Ballycastle is fifty feet above the level of the sea, Coleraine is 350 feet; you have to ascend 800 feet and descend 1,100 feet, that gives you an idea of the road.

9990. In any case, you agree with this—that there is not a more mountainous district in the northern part of Ulster?—Quite so; with the exception of Donegal, there is no district like it.

9991. And starting from the Giant's Causeway, going as the crow flies, to Cushendun, what is the mileage?—Twenty-one.

9992. Does the union also include Rathlin Island?—It does.

9993. And do some of the patients come from Rathlin Island?—They do.

9994. CHAIRMAN.—Do many come?—There used to be more come until outdoor relief came in.

9995. Do the sick come—a good many of the sick. I would say once in the two months, or once in the three months, since outdoor relief came in, before that, about nine or ten years ago, there was no such thing as outdoor relief; now there are 460 mouths being fed at a cost of £250 annually.

9996. How many get outdoor relief in Rathlin?—About forty-eight, I suppose.

9997. In Rathlin?—I don't know the exact number, but about 40.

9998. But it is given on the island?—It is given.

9999. And by whom—the Bellingham Officer?—I cannot say exactly.

10000. How far out does Rathlin Island lie?—I think eight miles.

10001. Speaking of the railway accommodation of the district, what do you say?—Of all the unions in the county it is the most inconveniently situated. It is an old saying that the railway was intended to be to Ballymena, but the railway is only from Ballycastle to Ballymoney, and that is the only line of railway, except you go from Cushendun to a place called the Battery, where there is a railway to Ballymena, but in the whole district round from the Causeway to Ballymoney, and round by Torr and Cushendun, there is not a single railway.

10002. Mr. Campbell.—Would it not add enormously to the inconvenience of the public men and representatives to have to go to Ballymena and Ballymoney?—There is a representative here who had to get up at a quarter to four this morning, and who will be back to-night at ten o'clock if he catches the 3.30, and that is what he would have to do if he had to go to Ballymoney.

10003. He does not support the scheme of the County Council?—He does not.

10004. Your general evidence is that Ballycastle is more poorly supplied with railways than any other union in Antrim?—Yes.

10005. Have you formed any calculation as regards the distances?—I have.

Mr. Joseph P. O'Kane.

Dec. 16, 1909.
Mr. Joseph P.
O'Kane.

10006. What is the average distance from Ballymoney to Ballymena?—Twenty-one and a half miles from Ballymena and nineteen three-quarters from Ballymoney.

10007. That is not speaking of Rathlin Island at all?—Oh, no.

10008. Take the case of Ballymoney itself, in regard to which the County Council make no recommendation, you know that Ballymoney is only seven miles from Coleraine?—That is all.

10009. Coleraine has a workhouse?—It has.

10010. And Ballymoney is eighteen miles from Ballymena, which has a workhouse?—Yes.

10011. And it is fifteen and a half miles from Ballycastle, and Ballycastle has a workhouse?—Yes.

10012. And the average from those three places is?—About eleven miles.

10013. And the average in the other case from the nearest union is about twenty miles?—Yes.

10014. Is Ballymoney more centrally situated than Ballycastle?—Oh, certainly—the map shows it.

10015. In fact, Ballycastle is out of the way altogether?—Oh, but it has a seaward position, which seems to be a cogent argument to the County Council.

10016. Is it colored green on the map?—I should say, sir, that the County Council at the time they recommended the abolition of Ballycastle and Antrim, went upon the ground that Ballycastle has a seaward position, and they were following out the terms of sec. 76 of the Act of 1863, which, as you know, in terms declares that the providing of an auxiliary to an asylum shall be reason for amalgamation; but the County Council did not want any reason, they gave that reason for Antrim, but for Ballycastle they gave the seaward position.

10017. Is Ballycastle at all centrally situated?—I refer to the map.

10018. It is not surrounded by any other workhouses which are very near at hand in any aspect?—No.

10019. And it has no good roads and no railway?—It has the Ballymoney railway only, although it is called the Ballycastle railway.

10020. With regard to the present buildings, have the County Council ever suggested any way in which those buildings could be utilized?—Oh, no.

10021. Have you made a calculation now yourself, supposing this transfer did take place, how it would work out in establishment charges?—With a great deal of diffidence I submit it to the chairman; he will know whether it is correct or not; I hand it in; and the gain on Mr. McCree's or Mr. Macanephell's system scheme would be about £17 on the most favorable consideration.

10022. And against that you must set off the enormous insurance to the representatives there and the enormous probable suffering of the poor?—Quite so. I admit workhouses were in the past houses for the sick-bodied, but I say now they have become infirmaries, and I would go so far as to say that, following the statement of Dr. Joseph Smyth, out of 100 inmates of an infirmary there would not be more than twenty that would be really hospital cases, and of those twenty probably five or six merely bed-ridden cases; I would make the infirmary a real infirmary; I would classify the pure from the impure, and the ones who had come to poverty from their own fault should be separated from those who had come to it from misfortune. I would have a real hospital, and place it on the same basis as in New Zealand or Australia, where a patient is either a paying patient or not, according as the committee of management afterwards decided, and I would make it a source of revenue. And, briefly, I would see that the houses that used to be workhouses now become infirmaries plus district hospitals, whereas what we have to do is to provide for the sick poor when formerly we had to provide for the poverty-stricken poor simply. The areas are large enough; I would keep these areas; but I would no longer have them workhouses, but district hospitals and infirmaries; with all this idea of amalgamation there is only one way of making a saving if it could be carried out, that is if you had a central home in Ballymena for the paupers, and then comes the argument that if you had it what about the old and infirm and those incapable of long journeys; one of the members of the Commission raised a pertinent remark that after some time they will become old and infirm. I would have a central home—a hospital and infirmary. Where workhouses now are keep the buildings and give us what medical science says we require. Many a poor man if he takes sick tomorrow his independence will not let him go into the workhouse if he could go into a hospital in his own village or town where he could pay a small sum and preserve his independence. It does not matter if a pauper is weak him, he can get medical attendance and trained nursing, and that is the trend of events now, and not the scheme of amalgamation which, with all respect, I say is supported by people who have never studied the question and whose experience of workhouses begins and ends outside of one.

10023. CHAIRMAN.—How would you apply this plan to Ballycastle; what would be the change that would take place at Ballycastle?—I would say, first of all I would band out the children; I would like the infirmary classified.

10024. You would first put an end to the workhouse as a workhouse?—I would.

10025. You would use the same buildings, and they would be merely for the reception of the sick and infirm?—Yes; but, of course, I would have a hospital attached to it.

10026. A fever hospital you mean, for the medical and surgical sick and the infirm, and you would have no other class whatever there?—Of course accidents would be in the hospital, and then comes the question of the tramps; I think you should have a casual ward for them. You cannot differentiate between as honest men tramping for work and a man tramping to avoid work.

10027. You have very few tramps at Ballycastle?—Sometimes the winds attract them in summer.

10028. Mr. Campbell.—They don't get so far as Rathlin?—They do not.

10029. CHAIRMAN.—You would have the same board of management—the Board of Guardians and the District Council—and the people who are now members of the Rural District Council would manage the district hospital?—Yes; I would have the hospital the infirmary, practically, and I would band out the children.

10032. Where they could remain for a few months and go to the lying-in hospital and then back to the penitentiary; as an old Guardian and Chairman of your board, do you think the people would have any objection to pay perhaps a little more than the average cost of maintenance; these women have always cost a good deal of money to the rates; do you think they would object to pay the cost of maintenance to the institution?—I don't believe they would object.

10033. That might have the effect of forwarding the career of that girl as a mother of illegitimate children, and in that way, taking the lowest point of view, it might be an economy?—Quite so.

10034. You would let the lunatics go?—We are all sane at Ballycastle; we have no lunatics in the workhouse; we have obeyed the Local Government Board orders and sent the lunatics over to Antrim.

10035. Now I think I understand thoroughly what you suggest?—It is gone thoroughly into my mind; I would be very glad to let you experience the mode of Ballycastle when you go down.

10036. Mr. Campbell.—The number of people in the workhouse is small; they are nearly all in the infirmary?—They are all patients; of course there are some aged and infirm.

10037. With regard to the hospital accommodation in Ballycastle, have you recently erected there by private subscription a hospital at Oushanahill?—No; it is by private philanthropy; a Miss McDonnell erected the hospital.

10038. That is used at the present time by the people of the district?—It is.

10039. CHAIRMAN.—That was never taken over as a district hospital?—It never was; I did my best to get it taken over, but I was defeated by a small majority; Miss McDonnell was going to endow it with £200 a year.

10040. Would Miss McDonnell be willing to give it absolutely; turn it over as a district hospital?—She would, and endow it with about £200 per annum.

10041. Would she still?—Unfortunately, I think I am justified in saying that Miss Barbara McDonnell, her sister, said she did not think she would; she felt gratified at her generosity being refused; I cannot say for certain.

10042. Mr. Campbell.—I understand the Guardians would have taken the hospital over but for certain conditions which she would not waive?—Conditions which she majesty would not accept.

10043. CHAIRMAN.—Some of them would be hardly legal?—I think if you called upon her, with the other two gentlemen, you would succeed.

10044. Mr. Campbell.—If this amalgamation scheme is carried out the people that will be most injuriously affected are the sick and destitute poor?—Quite so.

10045. You have made a calculation with regard to the probable gain and loss on amalgamation?—I have.

10046. And is the net result of your calculation that the gain would be £17?—Quite so, and that only possible.

10047. You still retain your dispensary and fever hospital?—Yes.

10048. And your doctors and relieving officers and your infirmary ward?—Yes; well, second wards; that is assuming amalgamation not on the lines I have suggested; and all the officials—the chaplain, dispensary doctors, medical officers to the fever hospital, the porter, we might do without the master of matron, not both, and the relieving officers.

10049. CHAIRMAN.—Why could you not do without the master and matron?—We would require somebody in charge.

10050. The matron, I suppose, is unmarried; she is not a nurse?—No, she is not.

10051. Would it not be better to make one of the nurses a matron?—She might; but you would hardly ask a nurse to have charge of the whole building.

10052. There would be no difficulty?—Well, it is a matter of detail.

10053. Mr. Campbell.—You think the net result of the County Council scheme would be to abolish one post and create two new ones in its place?—It would.

10054. Spending of accidents, have you repairs and repairs in that district in actual working?—We have three.

10055. And accidents do, of course, occur to the workmen there?—One occurred—a fatal one—last week.

CHAIRMAN.—The hospital will remain, of course.

10056. Mr. Campbell.—From your experience as a County Councillor and also as Chairman of your board, is there any reason you can conceive why Ballycastle should be abolished and such unions as Ballymoney and Larne should be allowed to exist?—I don't see it at all.

10057. Would there be any advantage in the way of economy?—I cannot see it.

10058. Would there be any advantage to the sick and destitute poor?—Decidedly not.

10059. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—You take a great interest in this question of Poor Law reform?—I do.

10060. You say you are in favour of boarding out children and you say you are in favour of sending out inmates into other institutions for better care?—I am.

10061. You say you are in favour of sending mothers to some reformatory institution in the hope that they will be reclaimed; now, when you take out those three classes you don't have many left?—No.

10062. Would it not be a good thing for Ballycastle simply to have an infirmary there under the same management and control as at present?—Must decidedly, and that is what I have suggested, because there is no longer the able-bodied; it is the sick poor in the infirmary and the hospital only is required for the same administrative area.

10063. You did not wait until I had finished; we have got rid of three classes—the children, the inmates, and the mothers—then we have nothing left except the sick, the infirm, and the occasional tramp?—Quite so.

10064. Now, as regards the tramp, when he is not a frequent visitor, would it not be a good arrangement if the Guardians could give that man a lodging for the night in some house in the town?—That would be a very good idea.

10065. Suppose the Guardians had the power to pay for a man's night's lodging and breakfast, that would be a small sum of money?—Yes; but with the buildings you have if you have the space there and require a porter as well for your hospital and infirmary, you have a casual ward there, there is no necessity to pay anything extra; give them a bit of bread and a drink at night, and the same in the morning, keep them there for three hours, and extend the terms of the Vagrancy Act.

10066. CHAIRMAN.—You have practically no tramps in Ballycastle?—No; except in the summer time; but I am speaking of the question generally.

10067. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Do you not think it would be a wise thing for the Guardians to have power if they wished to use it?—I do.

10069. Ballymoney is not far from you, and suppose you could enter into an arrangement with the Ballymoney Board of Guardians to keep your infirm and destitute for, say £s. a week, you would require no expensive staff in Ballymoney, you would still be masters of your own household as regards the management, what objection would there be to a course like that?—I place it on record that on the terms you have suggested no Guardians but would jump at the offer. But you will have to pay for the increased duties, the wear and tear and the upkeep as well; I maintain it would be as dear as in the other case.

10070. But suppose after investigation it was found to be thoroughly workable and safe, would you see any objection to it?—I would not; I would be delighted at it.

10071. You have taken a very great interest in this work and speak sympathetically; all we want is to get at the true facts of the case and arrive at the best result possible?—Yes.

10072. CHAIRMAN.—You think the Ballymoney people might not see it in the same way?—Mr. Murtaghan's idea would be a splendid one, but I would go further; I would say what would be beneficial and economical for a seaboard union would be the same for an inland union—Ballymoney. A workhouse was to accommodate 700 or 800, but amongst all the Antrim workhouses there are not more than seven or eight hundred inmates. Why not utilize the workhouses to the utmost capacity, and don't stop at Antrim or Ballycastle, but go round the others; Ballymoney is central.

10073. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Suppose we apply the same principle to Larne where we got there?—I say that is the only principle on which you will do it.

10074. Mr. Greer.—Am I to take it as the effect of your last answer that you have no objection that your workhouses should be abolished if all the others, with the exception of Ballymoney, were abolished?—On the terms I have indicated. I am not going to give you a general answer to a general question.

10075. What do you mean by that?—On the terms Mr. Murtaghan has suggested.

10076. Do you understand by those terms that there would be any difference in the constitution of the union?—I cannot say what is in the mind of the Commission.

10077. Then you have given an answer without quite grasping the point of the question?—I never do that. Who do you appear for; is it Ballymoney?

Mr. Campbell.—Mr. Greer is the solicitor for the County Council.

Witness.—He might have the courtesy to answer.

Mr. Greer.—I am here to ask questions.

Mr. Campbell.—Mr. Greer is the County Council solicitor, and Mr. O'Kane does not know in what capacity he appears.

10078. Mr. Greer.—As I do happen to be the County Council solicitor, perhaps you will allow me to refer to the answer that you gave; you said that you proposed a resolution on the 26th of October, 1901.

Mr. Campbell.—I object to this; he is not appearing for the County Council.

CHAIRMAN.—This dignity does not go—

Mr. Campbell.—It is an extraordinary business that the solicitor for the County Council should appear for the Ballymoney Board of Guardians.

CHAIRMAN.—We give the fullest latitude to everybody here.

10079. Mr. Greer.—As a matter of fact, was not what occurred this—Did not Mr. James Caruth propose and Colonel McNell second: "That the report of the workhouse committee now read be adopted and referred back to the committee to take the necessary steps to have their recommendations carried out." And did you not move, as an amendment, seconded by Mr. McSparran, that you have already read out, and was not that amendment lost by fourteen to five; is not that right?—So far as I remember.

10083. So that if Mr. McCann had voted for your amendment he would be voting against the recommendation of his own committee—I make you a present of the difference.

10084. Perhaps you will make me a present of this also; was there one word said, except perhaps by yourself, with reference to politics in the discussion—good, bad, or indifferent—by any member of the Council before the voting occurred, and, if so, by whom, for I was present at the time?

Mr. Campbell.—I don't know in what capacity Mr. Greer is speaking.

10085. Mr. Greer.—It is in reply to my friend, who said it was decided on political grounds.

Witness.—It is not necessary for Mr. Greer to tell me that he was present for me to tell you what happened; I generally speak as truthfully as any other man; you don't require to hold out that throat to me that you were present. "I was present," he says, as much as to say, "Don't quarrel with me."

10086. CHAIRMAN.—I would not take that inference from it—I don't like that last string, "I was present," as much as to say it required his presence to keep me to the facts. There was no word of politics whatever, and in the Antism Union Council, so far as I was concerned personally, I never had anything but the greatest courtesy from any individual member; we might differ very acutely, and very keenly, on several occasions, but after that was over our differences ceased, and I never had anything at all but the feelings of friendship for everyone; there was no politics whatever mentioned in the wide world afterwards.

CHAIRMAN.—I think we might remember that we are in the Council chamber here, and in the same atmosphere.

Witness.—What I wish to say is that the only time politics were mentioned by me was when I asked for a reason why Ballycastle should be wiped out; they were following the action in the Act of Parliament in Antism; they would not follow it in Ballycastle; and I said in the public press, not behind backs, that unless they could give some more tangible reason than merely a selfish position that I would come to the conclusion that politics was the main spring, and not otherwise, and I now say it.

10084. Mr. Greer.—I notice your Council has several times referred to this amalgamation scheme of the County Council as if the County Council brought forward any amalgamation scheme?—My District Council never referred to this amalgamation scheme until the report was sent down to them by the County Council recommending the abolition of Ballycastle and Antism, and then a violent party vote was taken whether Ballycastle should be rubbed out or remain; the minority at the District Council would have no inquiry, but would rub us out.

10085. But this Inquiry is not being held in pursuance of any scheme the County Council brought forward?—No; because the County Council wanted no inquiry whatever; they were against this Commission being appointed.

Mr. Campbell.—Perhaps the minutes will show the last vote that was given—

Mr. McCann.—Perhaps I might be allowed to say—

CHAIRMAN.—No, no; really!

10086. Mr. Greer.—I have not had time to read this; you are giving it in as evidence now; but I want to know from you whether I may take it that it does not affect the question of the amalgamation of Ballymoney Union; does it only deal with the question of the Ballycastle Union?—It deals generally with Ballycastle.

10087. You don't intend it to affect Ballymoney?—I really don't think it touches any union but Ballycastle; I am nearly certain of that.

10088. Because I have not had time to read it to ask you any questions. In reference to the roads, you say there are very bad roads in Ballycastle Union?—Yes; and you live at the top of a very bad one yourself.

10089. Well, I hope I won't have occasion to go to the union. Is it not principally from Ballycastle towards Cushendall that the roads are bad?—I would say principally.

10090. Of course Knocknagney is in the other direction?—It is principally in the direction where there is no railway.

10091. Is not the idea of the County Council that the majority of the people who would come to Ballymoney would come through Ballycastle and come by train?—Without meaning any disrespect to the County Council, they did not know what way the people would come.

10092. That being so, would not the roads they would have to come over be the very same roads that would bring them to the Ballymoney station and would bring them to the Ballycastle Union?—Yes.

10093. So that as far as the road is concerned the inconvenience would be the same, but you would add the difference of the railway journey?—It would be the same, but when they come to Ballycastle they would say "Thanks be to goodness, my journey is over," but in the other case they would say "Money be to God, here is an hour's railway journey before me."

10094. Could you tell what the average in the house has been for the last three years?—It has gone from sixty-eight to seventy-five and up to eighty.

10095. Could you not give the average?—Sixty-eight.

10096. Can you not supply the figures to us that we were not able to get before—that is to say the cost per head per minute?—Well, I think the cost per head is 3s. 6d. to 3s. 8d.

10097. Does it include establishment charges?—It does; I will get it for you.

10098. Does it include more than the mere upkeep?—I cannot tell you; if you want to contract Ballymoney with Ballycastle it is no harm to tell you we are cheaper in the year rate.

10099. I would like to get the information; we have got it in every other instance but Ballycastle?—I promise to get you the return, but we are cheaper; we keep our poor cheaper and so comfortable.

10100. Mr. Campbell.—Mr. Greer is appearing for the Ballymoney Board of Guardians; do you know that the Portrush Guardians go to Ballymoney?—They do.

10101. And do they actually pass Coleraine on their way, and Coleraine has a workhouse?—Yes; they pass from Portrush, through Coleraine, into Ballymoney.

10102. Where do the Portlough Guardians go?—To Coleraine.

10103. Mr. Greer.—How far is Portlough from Ballymoney?—I could not honestly say; it is six or seven miles to Coleraine and about eleven or twelve miles altogether.

10104. Is there not a tramway from Portlough to Bushmills?—There is.

10105. So that the Bushmills people can come by train and railway to Ballymoney?—Yes.

10106. Does not the end of your district just come to Bushmills?—Yes.

10107. If you could put yourself in the position of a destitute infirm person would you not rather come by train and trade to Ballymoney than by a car to Ballycastle by Bushmills on a cold winter day?—I would; and I am very much obliged to you, for you have proved my case—the facilities in the one case and the want of facilities in the other.

10108. Mr. Campbell.—Is there a feeling in the district that the people should not be taken out of Ballycastle district to an outside district?—A very great feeling.

10109. Why does that feeling exist?—They don't care to go to Ballymoney.

Mr. Campbell.—For reasons you don't care to go into.

Mr. ALEXANDER BLACK examined.

10110. Mr. Campbell.—Are you a member of the Ballycastle Board of Guardians?—Yes.

10111. Is the board divided into two sections?—It is.

10112. Do the Nationalists number twenty-one and the Unionists twelve?—Exactly.

10113. Was there a vote taken recently on this very question with regard to the abolition of unions?—Not recently; some time ago there was.

10114. And did that vote take strictly party lines?—I believe so.

10115. The Nationalists were in favour of keeping the union and the Unionists for abolishing it?—Yes.

10116. I believe you manage matters so admirably in Ballycastle that you actually have a Unionist chairman?—Yes.

10117. And in electing a Unionist chairman you intend to set a good example to the Antrim County Council and other backward bodies about Belfast?—We do.

10118. You know what the feeling of the district is with regard to the proposals of the County Council?—I do.

10119. Is the feeling among your people unanimously against this idea of the County Council?—It is. I may say we feel that owing to the chairman of the Board of Guardians not being a member of the County Council it looks like a scheme being put forward to which we have no voice. Our chairman is not a member of the County Council, and, consequently, we have no voice.

10120. CHAIRMAN.—The Chairman of the District Council is?—Yes; but this being a Poor Law Reform Commission we look on it that we have no representation on the County Council.

10121. No Chairman of a Board of Guardians is a member of the County Council; that applies all over Ireland?—Yes, unless he is Chairman of the District Council.

10122. Mr. Campbell.—What you mean to convey is, that in the idea they put forward here to-day they have no representative weight from the people of this district?—Yes.

10123. How would it affect you yourself if the union were shifted to Ballymena or Ballymoney?—I would not attend; I could not possibly attend; I consider it disfranchising it.

10124. Does that not only apply to yourself but to a number of members of the board?—Yes, worse than to me.

10125. Would it apply to the majority of the board?—It would.

10126. Would those be members of the present majority of the board?—They would.

10127. So, in the net effect of your evidence, that if this scheme is adopted by the Commission it would mean practically the disfranchisement of the Nationalists of Ballycastle?—It would.

10128. And have you any idea that the real reason behind this scheme of the County Council is such an idea as that?—I could hardly say that.

10129. Do you believe it is done in the interests of economy?—I cannot say that it is done in the interests of economy.

10130. Do you believe it is done in the interests of the sick and destitute poor?—I do not.

10131. And you cannot see any ostensible reason for it?—I cannot.

10132. Explain how you think it would affect the destitute sick in case this scheme was carried out?—I would think that it would be a great inconvenience to be shifting them over roads so far—they would have such long journeys, such difficult roads to get over. I claim it is disfranchising members, because I am about as well situated as any other member in this district, and I could not possibly attend. I can see you my reasons, and I think you will agree that it would be quite impossible for me to attend. I come to attend here; I got up at a quarter to four this morning; I live four and a half miles out of Ballycastle; I got breakfast, and was ready to leave at five o'clock, and walked into Ballycastle, and got a train there at a quarter past seven to come to Ballymoney and come here. If I had to attend in Ballymoney I would have to do the same thing, because I see that the meetings would be held at eleven o'clock.

10133. Dr. BROOKS.—If the meeting was at twelve o'clock could you not get home about three o'clock?—My twelve o'clock; there is no train back then until half-past five; I should not arrive at Ballycastle until twenty past six; I should then have to take this road journey again. I assure you I would not do it, and there could not be a member of the division got to do it.

10134. How many miles is it to Ballymoney from your house by road?—It is four and a half miles to the train, and then sixteen miles by train.

10135. By road?—It is twenty miles.

10136. Mr. Campbell.—As regards you and the members of your division, it would be just as good an idea to change the union to Belfast as to Ballymoney or Ballymena?—Quite the same, as far as time is concerned.

10137. You would have no representation, and you would have larger rates?—Yes; the members of the board are all men who follow their own plough, and they could not afford the time to go to Ballymoney or Ballymena, because Ballycastle, being the market town for them, and the board meeting on market day, they can do their own business and attend the board. They are not in a position to spend money, and although it is only an hour's journey by train, it means money.

10138. You heard the evidence of Mr. O'Kane with regard to the peculiar nature of the district—do you agree with that?—I do.

10139. Do you agree that there is no advantage whatever in this change in the interests of the sick and destitute poor or the ratepayers themselves?—I cannot see any benefit.

10140. Mr. GEAR.—I want to ask you a question or two and it is in no hostile spirit. We all understand that there are some changes in the air, and I understand we are met here to discuss what they ought to be with advantage. We have heard that in no case would the infirmary be taken away from any place where there was a workhouse, and there have been suggestions made that the children and women of a certain class should be dealt with specially—that leaves the tramps and the able-bodied poor to be dealt with. Do you not think that they might be housed in some more central workhouse in the county?—I have never given the question any consideration, because, owing to the fact that when I become a Guardian, the County Council had made this attack on Ballycastle, and had come to the conclusion of abolishing Ballycastle, it then became a question of life or death with us; we felt that we were getting disfranchised, and could not look after the interests of the place, and, consequently, it became a question of trying to prevent amalgamation; and, as far as I was concerned with regard to the reform of the place, I have given it no study.

10141. Has not this amalgamation question been gone into in every county in Ireland where the Commission has already sat?—Yes.

10144. Supposing there was a change made, and the poor and the class I have mentioned—that is, the able-bodied poor—were sent out of the Ballycastle union to some other union, could the rest of the work not be carried on by a committee at Ballycastle? You know the sections of the Local Government Act giving the Board of Guardians power to entrust certain work to committees—don't you think that could be worked effectively?—I really would not like to express an opinion.

10145. Would not that prevent you, and people like you, from having to come up to Ballymoney for

Dec. 16, 1903.

Mr. Alexander Black.

Dec. 16, 1893. EXAMPLE, except on important occasions—would you not be carrying out all the actual work, the administrative work?—Quite so.

10145. And then you would have quarterly meetings that you could attend either in Ballymoney or Ballymena or elsewhere?—I could not give an opinion; I have never considered the thing, and don't know how it would result. I am against expense as much as anyone.

10147. Can you tell me what your poor rate is in Ballycastle?—I could not tell you.

CHAIRMAN.—It is 9½.

MR. THOMAS McILROY examined.

MR. THOMAS McILROY.

10151. Mr. Greer.—I believe you have been a member of the Board of Guardians of Ballymoney for a number of years?—I think over thirty years.

10152. And how long have you been chairman of the board?—Twenty-one, I think.

10153. And you have taken an active interest all that time in the administration of the Poor Law Act?—Yes.

10154. You have had this list of queries that were submitted to the board before you?—Yes.

Mr. Greer.—I think the reply of the board has already been sent forward, so that we need not refer to that.

CHAIRMAN.—More his own personal views, I think.

10156. Mr. Greer.—Take the first question—“Whether, having regard to the extent, population, necessities of the sick and destitute poor and economic condition of the County Antrim, and the facilities of locomotion and proper administration of the Poor Law therein, it would be expedient to dissolve any of the unions wholly or partly contained in the county, and, if so, what arrangements, whether by amalgamation or otherwise, should be substituted therefor.” I think the board has already sent forward a reply that it does not wish to deal with the question of amalgamating any union?—No, they did not want to go into that question.

10155. Have you anything to say as an individual on that subject?—At one time there was an agitation on the subject of amalgamation, and Mr. Bears at that time was chairman of our board, and he and I went to Coleraine, and we had a meeting there, and went into a great many figures, and came away with the conclusion that it would not produce much economy.

10157. In any amalgamation scheme I presume the sick people would have to be dealt with locally?—I would think so.

10159. That is all you want to say about the first question. The second is—“Whether, in the event of any union or unions being dissolved and of the workhouse or workhouses thereof being no longer required in Poor Law purposes, such workhouse or workhouses could, with advantage, be taken over by the County Council for an auxiliary lunatic asylum under sec. 76 of the Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1893, or could be otherwise utilized for any other, and, if so, what public purposes?” Assuming that two or three workhouses were left vacant?—I think it would be very important to have suitable accommodation for people who are imbeciles and lunatics and not have any of them in the workhouses at all.

10160. Harmless lunatics?—Well, there is a class of lunatics that would be better away in another place and get better treatment.

10161. Do you think it is a suitable thing that lunatics of that kind should be kept in a workhouse?—I think it is not. We have one case at present in Ballymoney Workhouse, a woman, and she was sent to the asylum at Antrim and returned, and she is in the infirmary at the present time. It does not suit her at all, and it just suits as ill the patients who are lying beside her.

10162. She is a nuisance to them, I suppose?—Yes; she is incapable of going about.

10163. And the treatment you can give her in Bally-

10148. Mr. Greer.—And you don't know how much it is in Ballymoney?

CHAIRMAN.—Oh.

10149. Mr. Compell.—You heard Mr. Greer say that the Ballymoney Guardians are not actuated by any spirit of hostility to Ballycastle?—Yes.

10150. And you have heard his question. Do you know whether he is acting for the County Council or the Ballymoney people?—I don't know.

Mr. Compell.—That is the case as regards Ballycastle.

money Workhouse is not satisfactory?—It is not what we would like to give her.

10154. Are you in a position to judge whether it would be a wise thing to take one of those workhouses—for instance, Antrim—and convert it into an auxiliary asylum in connection with the Antrim Asylum?—I think it would be a very sensible thing to turn it to if the question of amalgamation was decided on.

10155. And, of course, there would be the further question whether the cost of the alterations that would have to be made in the workhouse to make it suitable for the imbeciles could not be better expended in building a new wing to the present asylum?—That is a question I did not get into.

10156. Are there any other purposes to which you think these workhouses might be applied—for instance, as a sanatorium?—I think that some of them might be turned to a sanatorium, or some might be devoted to the education of children.

10157. Do you mean bringing children from other unions?—I would think so. The reason why I say that is, take Ballymoney Union, which is an average union, we have not enough children there to keep ten teachers going, and they get no training in the way of technical instruction, or anything that will fit them for future life; and I see when they are out they have not the spirit that other children have, and I think it is from want of proper training, and we have not enough of them in the house to give them proper training.

10158. Do you think it would be a better thing to collect children from a larger area into one place and have a better class of teacher?—I think it would; and teach them some industries to fit them for whatever position in life they go to.

10159. Have you considered the question of a sanatorium?—Well, no, I have not.

10170. Then, the third question is—“Whether with or without a dissolution of any union, it would be possible: (a) by an arrangement for the maintenance of any class or classes of paupers in the workhouse of another union; or (b) by combining a number of unions for the purpose of Poor Law relief; or (c) by boarding out workhouse inmates, to make better provision for the classification and treatment of the inmates chargeable to the said unions?” Would you be disposed to send any of the destitute poor, the people who come to the workhouse, to any other union at so much per head?—I don't think there would be much good from my standpoint in it. I think I would as soon retain them in Ballymoney, where they are; there are sometimes some of them have to go out and so; if you send them away it would be difficult.

10171. Supposing they were not infirm, but just destitute persons, in fairly good health, do you think it would be a bad thing to send them away, say, to Ballymena, or still further, from their friends?—There are some of them we would let go very cheap.

10172. Tramps?—Well, no; a class of people who come in through drunkenness and one thing or another, who would be just as well away from home.

10173. Is there another class of well-conducted poor people that you would not like to send?—I would not like to send them away.

10174. Why?—Their friends come very often to see them, and I think it would indicate a hardship on them and their friends both if they were sent away to another district.

10175. Do you know of your own knowledge that in the Ballymoney Union a number of these inmates are visited by their friends?—Yes, I have seen them frequently coming in.

10176. CHAIRMAN.—To what part of the workhouse?

—Well, it is principally to the infirmary, but they come to see them in the body of the house as well, but none to the infirmary.

10177. Have you often seen them coming to the body of the house?—Oh, yes.

10178. To visit friends?—There are some decent old people who are in there whose friends are living in the district and who like to see them.

10179. Mr. Greer.—Then the second class of the question as to combining a number of inmates?—Well, I was not thinking about combining, but I think there should be a better classification of persons in the house, because I was through the old men's ward the other day, and there are some very decent old men there, who have lived a decent life all the time, and there are also some of the greatest scamps in the union there, all kept in the one common ward, and it is not a good thing, and I think the same applies to the female side of the house as well.

10180. CHAIRMAN.—Would you find any difficulty in dividing the two classes, if you had to do so, into the dress and the scamp?—There are plenty of them even in there with their characters made.

10181. There would be no difficulty in dividing them?—There would be no difficulty in dividing them, and there could be made for good conduct and good habits a sort of promotion.

10182. Mr. Greer.—I take it you would have no objection to hand on the scamps to some other union?—Not a bit.

10183. The next section of the question is the boarding out of workhouse inmates—have you anything to say on the subject of boarding out?—I don't see that there would be any good in boarding out the inmates we have; we give a good deal of outdoor relief.

10184. Are you dealing with the old people now?—Yes, old people; but children, of course.

10185. First let us deal with the old people—you don't believe in boarding out old people?—Not the class that come to the workhouse.

10186. Mr. Milnespall, one of the previous witnesses, said something about having houses in which old married people might be boarded out, what is your experience?—We have none of that class, because decent old couples, on the recommendation of the local Guardians and the Relieving Officer, get outdoor relief. I remember a year ago we agreed to provide some rooms for the accommodation of old couples, and that was let be known, but it never was once asked for.

10187. Now take up the question of boarding out children, do you agree with that?—I do.

10188. Have you done it already?—We have a number boarded out, but there is great difficulty in providing suitable boarding houses for them. The people that we would be willing to let them go to, a great many of them would not take them, and a great many of them who would take them we would not let them go to, so that there is a difficulty in getting as many boarded out as we would like.

10189. CHAIRMAN.—Have you any in the house for want of finding out anybody to board them out with?—We could have sent more out if we had suitable places for them.

10190. Then you have some in the house still who are eligible for boarding out?—There are some in the house, we would send out if we had boarding out houses; but the members of the ladies' committee can shew that better than I can; they have gone more into the question.

10191. Mr. Greer.—The next question is—"Whether, in the event of an amalgamation or combination of unions being carried out, or any other arrangement being made for the relief of the destitute poor, any changes in the law and procedure as to administration and in the chargeability of relief would be desirable?"—That is a thing I did not consider.

10192. I presume that means whether it should be a county-at-large charge?—I did not think over that.

10193. The next is—"Whether, having regard to the number, capacity, and situation of the workhouse hospitals, county infirmaries, county fever hospitals, and other hospitals existing in the county, additional accommodation is required for the proper treatment of the sick poor in any union, district, or locality in the county; and, if other accommodation seems desirable, how it may best be provided without entailing undue hardship upon the destitute or on the sick poor of the union?"—Within the last dozen or years or so the number of sick coming to the house very largely increased, and as the numbers have increased we have given larger and better accommodation for them, so that in Ballyvaughan we are in a very good position, so far as infirmary and hospital are concerned.

10194. I believe you have had to expend £1,200 within the last few years?—Yes, but Mr. Hamilton can give you the figures.

10195. It was at the instance of the Local Government Board you had to make this expenditure?—It was absolutely at their suggestion.

10196. The next is—"Whether any administrative and financial changes are desirable in order to secure a more economical system for the relief generally of (a) the sick, (b) the insane, and (c) all other classes of the poor or destitute, without impairing efficiency of administration?" Can you point to anything where economy might be effected?—No, I could not.

10197. Then there is the question—"How far in the case of persons who are not destitute it would be desirable to introduce a system of payments, or contributions, in aid of the cost of treatment of the sick and insane in hospitals or other such institutions?"—We receive now and again patients who generally pay something in proportion to their means, but I find that a good many people are not willing to take advantage of that, because they are put into the infirmary along with paupers, and I think if there was a separate ward and suitable charges made there, and proper attendance given that it would be a great advantage, and a good many people would avail of it.

10198. Do you mean that patients who would come in would not be placed alongside pauper patients?—No.

10199. And you think that would be an advantage?—I think it would be an advantage.

10200. Would it be an advantage in taking people, for example, who were suffering from infectious diseases from their homes and putting them into—

CHAIRMAN.—The powers, I think, are sufficient for that.

10201. Mr. Greer.—What I want to bring out is, is there a stigma of present attaching to persons being taken away to the workhouse?—There is always that.

10202. Have you known of cases where the fact of an infectious disease existing was concealed?—I have known of a good many cases where they were very unwilling to be sent; but in cases of infectious diseases, fever, there is generally no difficulty at all.

10203. Of course, you have power to take them, but there is an unwillingness on the part of the people to go?—Yes, to be put into an infirmary—there is the stigma of the workhouse about it.

10204. The last question is—"What change, if any, seems to be possible and desirable as regards the treatment of the vagrant poor, generally known as tramps or casuals?"—Well, I don't know; I think our union has about as many of them as any other union, and they have always been a great difficulty with us.

10205. Have you tried any means of stopping the nuisance?—We recently put on a labour test, but the officers had quite enough to do, and it was very difficult to carry it out, and it really has done no good.

10206. Would you approve of what Mr. McCune suggested, having a power to detain them?—I think we have some powers already, but we are generally glad to get rid of them as soon as possible.

10207. Can you suggest any improvement in the law in respect to them?—We discussed that matter at our board, and the general opinion seemed to be that it would be better to have a separate place for tramps, where they would be more directly under the superintendence of the police than they are with us, because the workhouse officers cannot find out the case of these tramps at all, and so far as I can see, I would think at least three-fourths of them belong to the criminal classes.

10208. Would you like to have any system of identifying them?—Yes.

10209. And you think it would be desirable if you found they were coming back three or four times that the police should have power to deal with them?—If they come back within a certain time they are refused admittance at present; and they know that very well, and don't come; but, on the other hand, there is a difficulty if you don't provide accommodation for these people they get accommodation for themselves, and they are sometimes rather more dangerous outside the house than in it.

10210. Then is there a suggestion you would like to make on that subject to the Commission?—In discussing the matter we considered the different systems in England and Scotland, and we came to the conclusion that to adopt the English line would be about the best.

10211. You have got some statistics prepared by the clerk, I believe?—Mr. Hamilton prepared statistics.

10212. Mr. McELROY.—When you went into the question of amalgamation and the cost of it, did you go closely into the figures?—We did at that time. I did not go into it at that time but I did before.

10213. To any considerable extent?—Yes; I went into it to a very considerable extent, and we came to the conclusion that the saving would be very small. The houses are there, and at first sight I thought there would be a great reduction in the number of officials, but I came to the conclusion it would not be such a large reduction at all.

10214. Why not?—Because we must keep up infirmaries and fever hospitals, and when we keep these up, the number of officials and the amount of salaries would be very small that would be reduced.

10215. You would not want an expensive staff for a small hospital?—We have not a very expensive staff as it is.

10216. You have a very elaborate staff for workhouse purposes?—The principal expense in connection with our workhouse is in the infirmary.

10218. That is a considerable sum; and then the question of fuel is no small item, and the upkeep and repair?—The fuel in Ballymoney comes to about £200 a year.

10219. At least that, I know in a neighbouring union, not much larger, it costs £400?—There are 280 tons of coal contracted for each year.

10221. You have a large number of children in your house?—We have at present, I think, nearly one-third of the whole house; but from whatever cause I don't know, within the last month about a dozen more children have come in.

10222. If those children were taken away—as you advocate the taking away of them—it would lessen the number very considerably in your house?—It would. I got from friends some time ago a number of letters about the boarding out in England, and I was very much struck with the manner in which it is done there. There are cottages and houses erected there, and so many children are put under a foster mother, or matron, and the children are brought up there more with a home life than they can be in the workhouse, and I would like something of that kind very much. The great fault with the education of the children in the workhouse at present is, they come out almost fit for nothing. You cannot send them to service or put them to a trade, because they have not the spirit that children reared in a home life have.

10223. You would prefer the boarding out of the children amongst the ordinary population to sending them to an institution?—I would, if in the ordinary population we could get a sufficient number of homes to take them in. Of course, there is the religious question comes in and the suitability of homes; there are plenty of people that apply for children, and on no account would I let a child go to them, and the people to whom we would like to give them won't take them. I would like to see every child in the Ballymoney Workhouse in some sort of an institution where they would be sent to school, attend their own place of worship and Sunday schools, and be under the charge of a matron or foster mother.

10224. Have you made any effort to get foster parents for those children in your district?—Oh, yes; that is a matter that Miss Hamilton can tell you about.

10225. I was greatly struck with the large number of children in your union and the neighbouring union. We have found nearly four times as many in these institutions as in any similar institution we have come to yet?—I must say that the children in Ballymoney have been very well done for, and have turned out, as a whole, very well. I know people brought up in the workhouse who are now filling respectable positions, at the same time they were handicapped in the start in life.

10226. Were these children boarded out?—No; it was before the boarding out system.

10227. You have not considered the question of boarding out the aged and the insane; that would get rid of the difficulty of taking away the poor from their own locality if suitable arrangements were made for the boarding out of them in the locality?—I don't think that would be much use to us, for we have very few we would send out. We give outdoor relief, and where a respectable old couple are living together a little given at home is better to them.

10228. You approve of the outdoor relief system?—I do; but, of course, they are constantly under the superintendence of the relieving Officer and the local Guardians, and we make it a point that if they are old and infirm we will not give them outdoor relief unless some neighbour or relative undertakes to keep an eye on them.

10229. CHAIRMAN.—Have you had much increase in the outdoor relief?—Not for a number of years. There is only one point I would like to say—I think in the appointment of officers there should be some regulation that the Local Government Board would give a proper examination, and let the officers be suitable for the appointments, such as for master and matron. It requires a person of intelligence, and acquainted with figures; and very often very decent people come and apply for the situation, and get it, who have no qualification for that sort of thing.

10230. Mr. McELROY.—Does not that rest with the Guardians?—The Guardians go more generally as the question of low salary than efficiency of the office.

10231. They have to pay the money—why would they not? Is it any wonder that they are more careful as to salary than a board who has to pay nothing?—I would rather pay an officer £80 a year who was qualified for his duty than £20 to one who was not.

10232. Do you find the present day Guardians any worse than their predecessors in that regard?—No, I have found it the same all along.

10233. Do you think there should be some standard of fitness marked out for these officials?—I do think it. A master has important duties to perform and a number of difficult calculations to make. A man would not be admitted into any other Government office without some examination to see whether he is qualified to discharge his duties or not.

10234. The master now has to go through an examination, and actually an Inspector of the Local Government Board of his fitness before he would be approved of?—I am aware of that; but I believe there should be some sort of examination, similar to the Civil Service examination, where they would be properly tested.

10235. Do you not think you would be asking the ratepayers to contribute a sum of money unnecessarily?—If you make the standard too high, but if you make it a standard suitable for a man to perform the work, I think a person appointed as master or matron requires to know some of the rules of arithmetic anyway.

10236. Don't they require that at present as to workhouse?—Well, we have a master at present who is doing his work very well, but he had a good deal to learn after he came in; he is a very good master, and does his work very well.

10237. Is he a recent appointment?—He was appointed four or five years ago.

10238. What better test would you want than a test of ordinary education, well qualified to read and write—an intelligent man for such a position as that—you don't want a Bachelor's degree for a position such as master of a workhouse?—The salary would not afford it.

10239. Do you want a change so that it should be such a person?—No; but a master has a good many calculations to make in connection with the dietary and all that sort of thing; and I would like to examination to show the man was familiar with the figure he is called upon to work with.

10290. That is so at present, as far as I know?—It is done, but I think it is done in rather a haphazard sort of way.

10291. You think the Inspectors of the Local Government Board are not mistaking individuals?

10292a. CHAIRMAN:—Have you ever seen the papers?—I have never seen the papers.

CHAIRMAN:—I have seen a great many of them, and I cannot agree with your judgment on them.

10292. Mr. Green:—Do you think there should be some system of advancement?—I think it would be a good thing if there was, and that a man should advance in the service.

10293. That a schoolmaster might be advanced up to a higher position on passing an examination?—You; and we had a master for a considerable time who was a schoolmaster—in fact, two masters who had been schoolmasters, and they were both excellent masters.

10294. Do you think the appointments should be taken out of the hands of the Boards of Guardians and put into the hands of the Local Government Board?—I don't think that. All I would want would be that there should be some guarantee that a suitable candidate should be appointed, and not whoever offered at the lowest salary.

10295. You think the present system has not been altogether satisfactory?—Some Guardians are inclined to advertise for officers, and what salary they will take, and that brings in a class of candidates who are not fit for the appointment at all.

10296. CHAIRMAN:—Were any of your officers appointed on that tender system?—I think it was once done.

10297. It is no longer an evil with you?—No.

10298. Mr. Campbell:—You know the Antrim County Council wish to add on to the Ballymoney Union some of the districts in Ballycastle?—I heard that.

10299. Is the feeling of your board that that change is desirable?—Our board never discussed that question.

10300. Did you ever consider it in any form?—We never discussed it.

10301. As to how it would work out in the way of economy or otherwise?—We never did.

10302. And, as far as you know, is there any desire at all amongst the Ballymoney Guardians to have this transfer?—We would be delighted to see the Ballymoney Guardians coming to us; we never took any steps to bring them, and have expressed no opinion on it.

10303. Would you be equally delighted on your side to go to Ballycastle?—We would be going out of the world to go to Ballycastle.

Mr. JOHN BORN examined.

10307. CHAIRMAN:—Are you one of the Guardians of the Union?—Yes; I am a Guardian.

10308. You have heard the evidence that the chairman of the Guardians has just given?—Yes; and I am quite in accord with the greater portion of it. I suppose you have got already information from the Guardians themselves.

10309. Mr. Green:—Is there anything special you want to refer to?—Beyond the fact that I think he might have amplified some of the objections. I think there are more objections than he mentioned, and more disadvantages, and I think the balance altogether is in favor of amalgamation, especially in regard to classification, which is impossible with the present unions and the management of them. The feeling generally in this amalgamation would tend to lessen expense, but it would depend very much on the arrangements. It would be exceedingly difficult to convince me that arrangements could be made for utilizing old houses that would be empty with very much saving, for the cost of making alterations in them when we are making changes to suit the new requirements of public feeling in regard to lodging after the poor would be very large. There was £1,200 spent in Ballymoney alone in making improvements within the last twelve months, and it is not enough, because it only applies to the improvements in the infirmary; possibly the sewerage would have a good deal to do with it. I think that the principal objection I would have to 10304. You would be perfectly willing that Ballycastle should come to you, but you would not go to Ballycastle?—We never took any steps to bring it about.

10305. In Ballycastle there is an infirmary that accommodates forty patients—do you think it would be a good thing to have that continued there under local management?—I think it would be better under local management.

10306. Thus under Ballymoney management?—I don't know. Our patients are about the best treated we know.

10307. You think it would be as well to have well alone?—We are not asking for them.

10308. You say in Ballymoney there is a feeling among the friends of the poor that they should not be sent out of the locality to another district?—Yes.

10309. I suppose you can understand the same feeling existing in Ballycastle?—I am sure it does.

10310. You said with regard to the bounding out of children that a religious question would come in there?—That always crops up, because we have to look for homes that suit the dispositions of the children.

10311. And you, from your knowledge of Ballycastle, would know that a religious question would crop up there also?—The religious question never has cropped up with us unless when looking for a suitable home. We are always very careful to send children to a home that would be approved of by their own religion.

10312. You don't take seriously the suggestion to send the scamps up to Ballycastle?—A gentleman gave evidence about coming to Ballymoney that he would have to leave home at seven o'clock in the morning; you could have Ballycastle at eleven o'clock, and the Ballymoney Board meets at one o'clock, and he would get home at a quarter past three. I am not saying a word either for or against it, but I want to show that the accommodation for coming to Ballymoney is not as bad as he pointed out to me.

10313. CHAIRMAN:—They would not have much time for a bit of dinner?—They could get home by half-past five.

10314. Mr. Campbell:—How would that man get his dinner—the man you speak of now that would get away so soon?—We don't have luncheon in our place, but he would have half an hour between the time he came in and the meeting of the board, and he would generally have an hour after that before going to the train.

10315. Mr. Green:—Your union and the Ballycastle Union are neighbours?—Yes.

10316. And you did not want to come to any collision over this question because you are on good terms with them?—We never debated it at all.

Mr. Campbell:—They are very good neighbours.

amalgamation would be with regard to the fitness of the place for the things suggested, but if that would be overcome I think there are other things which some of the witnesses have mentioned that it would be quite possible and exceedingly useful and very desirable to use these workhouses for. I think the locality would have a great deal to do with their selection—a sanatorium for consumptives I think is a most admirable suggestion, and some of the workhouses, owing to their situation, would be much more suitable than others, and if the feeling in connection with the medical treatment of both well-to-do and poor goes on as at present I think it would be an admirable thing to have at least one sanatorium for consumptives in the County Antrim. Another thing would be that boys and girls if necessary, if there was accommodation, over a certain age, that is when they would pass the standard which would allow them to be exempt from compulsory attendance at school, should be sent to a central school, and I would have none of the children in the workhouse at all; I would have them all boarded out. Of course I need not tell you we have not the power to board all classes out. There is still a fringe of children in a house like ours that would not be eligible for boarding out even if we got the authority to do it; that is they are sent there for short terms—a month or three months; but they don't come under the control of the Guardians and are only waiting passively until their parents come out of jail that they may be removed. But still, in the administration there is very great difficulty in arranging any plan which would include the whole of them, but all children capable of being boarded out should be boarded out of the house. There are, in our locality, a number of farm-houses better than the ordinary labourers' cottages. The law in connection with letting these is pretty strict, but, I think, on looking to what the prospects of the next few years are, I think there are a number of these houses from which that disbarment will be removed and those better-class houses will be utilised on the principle of sending the children to them under a caretaker, or the occupiers of these dwellings could take some of them off our hands.

10270. You were going on to tell when the children passed a certain standard?—I say when they pass a certain standard I would send them to one training school or technical school—of course without the talent of detaining orders—something like we have at Hampton House here in the neighbourhood of Belfast.

10271. How long would you have them kept there?—I find on a memorandum here that the committee in charge of that school would have them there as detained or trained until such time as they could apprentice them or send them out, but always with a provision that would take them out of local influence. Local influence, sometimes, is a great advantage, but when it comes to a certain time it would be better that they should be put where they would not be either praised or blamed. I believe the union in Ireland, in all cases, should be retained. We have had a considerable number of respectable people using the hospital with us, and it has been a boon to several people—sometimes people who were in situations not living with their families—and the feeling was that it was a boon to the house that they were removed from and there was a very much better chance of their recovery. I remember a good many years ago thirty patients being ill with fever, and the attendance and attention they got in the fever hospital now gives them ten chances of recovery as compared with the old time. Having regard to the great improvement of infirmaries and hospitals and dispensaries, with the judicious outdoor relief that is given in nearly all the unions in the County Antrim, I think the wants of the sick poor are very liberally met; those who are as old as myself find there is a great improvement, and the people get a great amount of attention and sympathetic and careful administration, and there is very little want for anything connected with the sick poor at all. There is another class which comes in afterwards which is a problem that this generation or the next won't solve. I think that the classification of the inmates of the workhouses is very desirable. It may be more or less difficult, but I am quite sure the majority of the Guardians would do it if this Commission could recommend anything in the nature of a division of the cost, because to make the present workhouses suitable for a classification without a complete change would be very difficult.

10273. Mr. Greer.—Do you mean that if you have an alteration of an establishment to serve the entire county the cost of the alteration should be borne by the entire county?—I do; if they cannot get rid of the cost of altering themselves they ought to alter and classify at home. I have gone into the question of boarding out, and in Ballymoney we have met the matter very squarely. I find there are only a very small number in the house who could be boarded out. If I had the opportunity of boarding out all the numbers that have ever been in Ballymoney Workhouse in my time of the respectable class I could get them nicely boarded out for about 4s. a head, and therefore I would not say that there would be any difficulty in making provision for them.

10274. CHAIRMAN.—Do you mean the adults?—I do; there are eight children under two years, forty-two between two and fifteen. I would say that there would not be more than one-third of those that would come under the age to send to the school.

10275. Are you speaking altogether about children or old people?—I am speaking first about children. I would class the deserving poor as forty-nine, but I could not put that forty-nine in the sense of deserving, for the majority have brought themselves to the workhouse from the neglect of common precautions, which the next generation will hardly fall into—I mean, in the matter of saving and the necessity for going into the workhouse at all—partly from dissipation or the early marriages of their children or emigration; there are in the workhouse at present fourteen of these. The whole of the workhouse is 115, and in addition to that there would be about fifty-seven in the infirmary. I would not have any objection to sending the majority of the forty-nine to another workhouse, but if we are to be retained we may as well retain them. We have no married couples in the house at all. There are two men in the body of the house whose wives are in the infirmary. As far as adults and unchildren, we have two in the entire house, and while I am quite correct in the matter of my opinion about Ballymoney it is only for the one house I am speaking about. I know there is a delusion in lumping up another matter connected with it, that you have all been asking about, and that is with regard to the class of women that are in it. At first I had an idea that it would be wise to make one workhouse into a Magdalen Asylum. My experience of the houses of the kind, however, is most unfavourable, and I have other reasons. I find that in the year 1880, 1882, and 1883 the number of births in the maternity ward was eighteen, and the mothers of those had already children; some of them had as many as six; there were three had one, four had two, four had three, one had four, four had five, and one had six, and one I could not tell how many; a man might have many or might have few. The position that I take up is this—I could not tell you how long I have been in the habit of going to the workhouse—twenty or thirty years, possibly more. Recently there has been been a week I am not in it, and I know that that sort of the kind of subjects that nobody likes to tackle, and one of the kind of duties that nobody likes to take on, but I am quite sure with intelligent and Christian sympathy and attention a vast amount of good can be done by trying to ameliorate or, at least, get somebody to make provision for the infirm class. People interested in matters of this kind have enabled some of the Guardians that I know very well to take up the cause, and in three cases they have been enabled to recover very considerable sums of money—as much as £200—and in one or two cases as much as £25, and these people are removed, and by the help of the money they get they have been removed out of the locality, and not only prevented coming on the rates but living an moral life to support themselves. I find what is probably worth being noticed as a matter of statistics is that these are nearly all servants.

10276. House servants or farm servants?—I refer to domestic servants. There are five farm servants, and there are two mill workers, and there is one labourer—the girl and her people were labourers—and one soldier's wife, and one married tramp, and the rest were servants in term. I need not say that this does not possibly—what I am talking about now does not come within the arrangement, but what I am going to say now I think does. That is, I would not send these people to the Magdalen or any other place like it. I would rather keep them and look after them. I am quite sure the feeling could be cultivated with first offenders that would not make it a disgraceful thing to help them. And with regard to the others, if we send them out we have the problem of their children—a very large and difficult question, unless we have a deterring law, and I don't think any Parliament would pass a law for separating these children from their parents.

10277. If the House of Commons could be beguiled into passing such a law, what would you think about it?—I would say you would only get a greater temptation in the way of those who have not come through the same position; you might lessen it in one way and increase it in a far worse way. We have not a single person in the house that we could depend on for washing or scrubbing and doing work of the kind, and it would cost at least six or seven attendants to do the necessary work of the house.

10278. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—That is not the point; our intention is not to send these poor unhappy people to any place where they would be punished; it is for reformatory purposes; to take them away from the surroundings where they fell and put them into a place where they would be informed and changed by sympathetic attention and kindly advice; it is not sending them to jail or a place of imprisonment at all; it is in the very opposite direction?—I am quite under-stand your feeling. I am speaking now of what I have personally experienced, and that is in spite of the feeling that there are lost and helpless. There is a considerable amount of affection for their children in the class I refer to, outside the tramp class, and sometimes in these too.

10270. CHAIRMAN.—You say you have an unfavourable impression in your mind about some of these institutions, is that from close knowledge or inquiry?—No; it is from people who were inmates, and came out when I was trying to get them to return. I would not like to say it; it is plain language—they preferred to go to that awful place.

10271. The workhouse?—No; hell! It is worse than the workhouse, as far as I know. Have I said enough, or may be too much, about this particular subject?

10272. Mr. Green.—What do you say about the tramps?—The tramps are a continually marching army, who go in a circle and come back again; it was 3,800 the year before last and 1,900 this year, and the actual deduction from that would be very nearly one-third, and this one-third would be people belonging to the neighbourhood who make a habit of going in and out, and are counted as tramps, although they don't belong to the army.

10273. What would you prefer to do for the tramp classes?—The proposal I would make would be to make sure that the people who are accused of being tramps are tramps. A week or two before the militia training there would be fifty people, at least, in the workhouse in addition to the ordinary men.

10274. Assuming there is any number you like, what would you propose to do with them?—I want the Chairman of the Commission to understand that there is a very large number of the militia who use this place as tramps.

10275. CHAIRMAN.—We have not held a single inquiry yet that we have not heard that?—We have at the present time a police inspection. And from the most minute inquiry I find that a large number of these people have some trade, such as iron-workers or wire-workers, and they come round regularly. I heard a question asked with regard to identification—how to do it. I don't know how you see to do it.

10276. Mr. MURKIN.—Then there are not regular visitors?—They are not regular visitors in that sense.

10277. You dropped an remark in regard to these unhappy women if they were sent to a penitentiary that it would take them away from working in the institutions; do you think it fair to utilise the misfortune of these people for the benefit of any category?—I do not, but if they were sent away for any purpose I say there should be a provision not to separate them from their children.

10278. That might be done under a new system, and I am sure such a kind-hearted gentleman as you would not want to keep these unhappy people as drudges and slaves for the benefit of the ratepayers?—I certainly would not. I made inquiry, and I found the feeling is that in summer the tramps would not care to stay three or four days, but in winter they are glad to do it. We have some of them in the house now. In summer, when their feet get broken up, the doctor sometimes allows them to stay one or two nights, and I don't think three days' detention would meet the case at all. I would like to have a classification made even of tramps. Decent people I would treat decently, and the man who would not work I would make him suffer. There is a very considerable cost about washing the bed-clothes for them.

10279. CHAIRMAN.—Fresh linen every night on their beds?—Every article on their beds washed every night with it. I would have an ordinary shelter, the same as they have in England, a plank bed, or a broad bench around the walls; I would give them bread and water and a good fire, and, if you choose, rugs, but I would see that no person lost their lives or was unnecessarily punished for want of a shelter, such as humanity would give a bad character, and I would give them no more. I am very sorry if in the excitement of wanting to tell you all I could I have kept you longer than I should.

10280. Mr. Campbell.—Did I understand you to say that in any scheme of amalgamation the fitness of the place should be considered?—Yes.

10281. What you mean, I take it, is that the geographical position of any special locality affected should be taken into account?—In the event of amalgamation an unused house should be selected for the object it could best be turned into.

10282. Would you go this length and say that the geographical position of any district in the county should be considered in the event of any amalgamation being decided on?—No; I would say that having first decided on amalgamation, the one to which you would put any particular workhouse would depend very largely on its locality.

10283. Would you not think it fair to take into account the geographical difficulties of any particular district?—Oh, yes.

10284. In the interests of the sick and destitute poor. I think Mr. McIlhenny said you and Ballycastle had been very good neighbours?—Undoubtedly.

10285. And your desire is that you should continue so?—Undoubtedly. I have no objection to Ballycastle remaining if it is considered it is doing its duty properly, and I don't think there is any one in Ballymoney that does not think the same.

Miss HAMMOND examined.

10286. Mr. Green.—You are a Guardian?—Yes.

10287. Have taken a very deep interest in workhouse affairs since you joined the Board of Guardians?—Very much so.

10288. You represent Portrush?—Yes.

10289. Have you anything to say with reference to the boarding out of children?—We think we would like increased powers to board out more children than we are able to do now. There are three sets of children we cannot board out at present, and we would like powers to board them out. Adopted children—adopted from either vicious parents or parents who have treated them cruelly, or under the Industrial Act—and we at present have not the power to board them out. We think it would be well if we had power occasionally to transfer a child from one union to another. I mean to make it over entirely to the care of another union that our relieving officer would not be called upon to visit it.

10290. That is to say you would not object to have the power to board out your children with another union?—We would like to make the care of that child over to that other union. If we wanted to board out a child in the County Clerk we could make it over; there are certain circumstances in which it might be desirable to do that, but we have not the power.

10291. You say something here about scattered homes?—These have been already referred to. We think the plan of scattered homes would be very good indeed.

10292. CHAIRMAN.—Would you be in favour of having powers to board out all children who come into the workhouse except legitimate children?—Oh, no; there are some mothers we could not take them from.

10293. Would you be in favour of giving the Guardians discretionary powers to do so?—I think that might be a very good plan, but it is the adoption of the children we want power for; there are other children, and it seems unreasonable we should not have power to board them out.

10294. Mr. Green.—You think their interests would be better looked after if they were boarded out?—It would be greatly to their interest.

10295. CHAIRMAN.—Would you be glad to see no children left in the workhouse?—Yes, if that were possible.

10296. Therefore would you agree to have the boarding-out powers of the Guardians increased as much as possible?—Yes.

10297. Mr. Green.—Would you board them out with people that you would think suitable to take them or would you have special homes built for the purpose?—No; in some unions in England they do build scattered homes, but if we could get any suitable houses and took them and put in foster parents—a master and mistress—and put a dozen children under their care, and let them lead the sort of life workhouse children would lead in the country; when people have only two or three the amount of money they get is not enough to enable them to live comfortably.

10298. How would you deal with the religious aspect?—Certainly keep each child under its own religion. Supposing the Local Government Board did think of giving us three scattered homes, with a master and workhouse except legitimate children?—Oh, no; there are some mothers we could not take them from.

10299. Would you be in favour of giving the Guardians discretionary powers to do so?—I think that might be a very good plan, but it is the adoption of the children we want power for; there are other children, and it seems unreasonable we should not have power to board them out.

10300. Mr. Green.—You think their interests would be better looked after if they were boarded out?—It would be greatly to their interest.

10301. CHAIRMAN.—Would you be glad to see no children left in the workhouse?—Yes, if that were possible.

10302. Therefore would you agree to have the boarding-out powers of the Guardians increased as much as possible?—Yes.

10303. Mr. Green.—Would you board them out with people that you would think suitable to take them or would you have special homes built for the purpose?—No; in some unions in England they do build scattered homes, but if we could get any suitable houses and took them and put in foster parents—a master and mistress—and put a dozen children under their care, and let them lead the sort of life workhouse children would lead in the country; when people have only two or three the amount of money they get is not enough to enable them to live comfortably.

10304. How would you deal with the religious aspect?—Certainly keep each child under its own religion. Supposing the Local Government Board did think of giving us three scattered homes, with a master and women, would they pay portion of the salary, as they do with the schoolmaster and schoolmistress?

10306. You think they should?—We think it would be worth while their considering. We would keep each demonstration to itself, even as far as possible, and I don't think any foster parents to be employed should be of an ecclesiastical nature, either dissonance of the Anglican Church or such.

10308. Is there a ladies' committee in Ballymoney?—There is. We think that where there are ladies' committees working the relieving officer should not be required by law to visit more than once a quarter; it seems a great waste of time and power.

10310. CHAIRMAN.—You think, perhaps, a good arrangement would be where there is an active committee that that committee should be authorized to suspend the relieving officer's visits to some such limit?—Yes; as it is, he is bound to visit once a month; that makes our visits almost unnecessary.

10311. Mr. Grev.—Have you anything to say about the feeble-minded inmates?—Yes; that is a subject I think a great deal about. We need more powers of taking care of the feeble-minded. I believe the word "feeble-minded" is not included in the Local Government Board classification, and it really is a very large class in our workhouses—people that have a want; they are not imbecile and they are not insane.

10312. CHAIRMAN.—There are a large class everywhere?—Yes; and they are an ever-increasing class.

10313. Mr. Grev.—Can you subdivide them?—Yes; some have a mental want and some a moral want; they are not able to take care of themselves; and I think we need powers to take care of them.

10314. CHAIRMAN.—What power would you want?—Power to keep them in. I would like houses for them.

10315. How would you proceed to exercise those powers if you had them?—I don't know that I thought about that so much. I suppose the Board of Guardians would have something to say to it.

10316. How would you go about it if you thought some young woman had a mental or moral want; how would you propose to keep her straight?—The medical officer would be present to consult.

10317. You would have to get a certificate that she was not right in her head?—No; that goes further than I mean.

10318. I am afraid if you wanted to lock up everybody who had a slate off it would be a big contract?—There are girls that are feeble-minded, and at fifteen or sixteen they have power to go out and live themselves, and I have seen time after time when them come back the worst had happened. I could give a great many instances.

10319. If you give a typical case without mentioning names the amount of defect you mean?—Simple-minded.

10320. Have you any case in your mind?—Half a dozen.

10321. If you give me one; what is the particular defect?—That they believe everything that is said to them, and that they will do everything that is told them—good or bad. They don't understand the difference between good and evil. There is one girl I know; she is not in our union here; her first baby was born before the war sixteen; she is now twenty-two, and has four or five babies; one baby died; she went in and out just as she liked; the children were constantly ill and ill-treated, and one died.

10322. What symptoms had she of any mental infirmity?—Her language and her conduct, and she was not married, and her mother was not married, and her grandmother was not married.

10323. Mr. Grev.—Did she go out to service?—I don't know; but another case of a feeble-minded girl I know; she was just silly; she did just exactly what you told her; if you told her to do a wrong thing she would do it just as easily as a right thing.

10324. CHAIRMAN.—The doctor would not certify her?—No.

10325. Mr. Grev.—How do you propose to deal with her when she comes to the workhouse a second time?—After they become a danger and an expense to the country we ought to have power to lock them up and be kind to them. In Massachusetts they have such homes that they call custodial homes, where, if there is reason to think that anyone is becoming a danger to the State, they go before a judge, and two or three other authorities are brought in, and if it is found on examination that it would be well for everybody that such a person should be put under restraint they put them into a home—one side is the custodial home and the other is the training home for girls. I don't think there is such a class recognised as feeble-minded under the Local Government Board.

10326. Have you anything to say about training masters and mistresses?—Mr. McEllery, I think, referred to it. It occurred to me that the Local Government Board might plan some system of promotion when they see from their inspectors how people manage their various unions, and recommended them for promotion, and I think there is more than the power of keeping accounts required; there is something in discipline; there are ex-politicians who understand discipline.

10327. Mr. McEllery.—Where could you promote a clerk?—There are a great many small unions.

10328. Send him to Belfast, if they want a clerk from Ballymoney?—Exactly. Mr. Boyd referred to a certain class of women, and sending them to penitentiaries. I think if we had a little more power of keeping them in the workhouse it would set very well.

10329. CHAIRMAN.—Have you ever thought that keeping them in the workhouse contributes more than anything else to the objectionable idea that people have of workhouses at present?—Yes; but perhaps there would come some change in the arrangements—some new classification.

10330. Workhouses becoming so much as they are now—hospitals—how would you propose to get rid of that class of persons?—I don't know that I would exactly propose to get rid of them.

10331. Don't you think it would be a great mistake to keep them there?—I would not keep them there always.

10332. You would always have some of that class?—Yes.

10333. Don't you think that would be a great mistake to have the workhouse for such people?—I suppose, no matter where they are, we would have to pay.

10334. Do you not think it is a great mistake to have the ordinary country hospital tainted as it is by such persons?—It is more than a country hospital now.

10335. A union hospital; but one of our hopes is this matter is to reduce it very much to the condition of a district hospital, getting the children out and getting the mothers of illegitimate children out?—If we could have a home for them; it would be so much better to make one of the workhouses into a place for them.

10336. I don't say that these poor women are in themselves so objectionable, but they create the idea, and people do object to send their relatives into a place where they will be perhaps in direct contact with these women?—Yes; but then you know they would not come near them.

10337. They would be scrubbing up their wards for one thing?—There is always a lot of laundry work to be done by them; the women I am speaking of are the hardiest offenders.

10338. Well, all the more objectionable?—I would not like to have them wandering round the country.

10339. Suppose they go into a penitentiary?—I don't like the idea of penitentiaries.

10340. Well, call them anything you like. What was that Massachusetts word that fascinated you?—Custodial homes; that is for the feeble-minded only; not for this class.

10341. Mr. McEllery.—They have places of the kind in certain parts of the States for these poor people. Some are known as Houses of the Good Shepherd, under the care of religious communities; they are detained there for six months or a year in the hope of reformation. Would something of that kind in Ireland not be an advantage?—It might; but I am not fond of religious institutions.

10343. You would stop it by sending them to penitentiaries?—I would stop it by keeping them in the workhouses and making them work.

10344. CHAIRMAN.—That would be impracticable for life?—No; I would give them one year to begin with, and if they offended again I would give them two at three, or up to five years.

10345. The penitentiaries we had in view were penitentiaries managed by religious people of diverse communities?—I don't know really very much about them.

Mr. CAMPBELL W. TWEED examined.

Dec. 16, 1903.

Mr. Campbell
W. Tweed.

10345. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Lurgan Board of Guardians?—Yes; I am a member of the Lurgan Board of Guardians; I have been a member for thirty-eight years.

10347. Now, there is no proposal of the County Council to break up your union?—Not at present.

10348. Did the Board of Guardians pass any resolution on the subject of amalgamation?—No, sir, they did not.

10349. What are your own views on the subject?—I think, sir, we have too many unions in the county.

10350. Putting Belfast out of the question you have six?—Yes.

10351. How many do you think you could manage with?—I think one would do the whole county.

10352. One at Ballymena?—Ballymena would be a central place.

10353. Is that would you put the infirm sick that could be removed by railway?—Yes.

10354. Would you approve of sending lunatics elsewhere?—I would put lunatics in some one place by themselves.

10355. Either in an auxiliary lunatic asylum or a lunatic asylum?—An auxiliary, I think, would be a proper place for them.

10356. Then as regards the children, do you approve of the boarding-out system?—Oh, yes, by all means.

10357. Would you approve of enlarging the powers of the Guardians so as to enable them to board out all the children?—All children, because we find that when children are boarded out from the workhouse they are not likely to come back on us again, and if they are kept in the house they generally come back; they think it is their home.

10358. You heard a conversation we had just now with Miss Hamilton about the penitentiaries; are you inclined to think it might be a useful thing to send these poor women to a place where they would be dealt with by religious influences according to their religious faith?—Not a doubt.

10359. You would be in favour of that?—I would, because this class of women comes in to have a baby and they go out again; the whole thing goes over again; I would be inclined to have them sent to some penitentiary.

10360. From your knowledge of the workhouse do you think a workhouse is the place where any kindly and Christian influence can be brought to bear on a poor woman of that kind to keep her straight?—I don't think so.

10361. Therefore you think that really any hope would be in another direction?—I think so; I think the atmosphere of the workhouse is not the proper place in which to make any reformation.

10362. Then it would come really that the only people you would have left in the workhouse would be the sick and aged and infirm. The sick you would deal with in a local hospital, and the aged and infirm you would send to one building for the county?—Yes, and all children boarded out in proper country houses.

10363. Have you found trouble much of a trouble in your union?—In the summer season they tramp round the coast; I really don't know what you could do with them; it is a very hard question to do anything with them at all; we tried to get work out of them in our house; of course they broke all the utensils and harness, and we had to get iron harness for them; so I don't know what you would do with them at all, unless we had some ticket from the union they were in the night before to carry to the next union again, so that we would know if they came back to us.

10364. You would telegraph on?—Yes; a very useful thing.

10365. Mr. MURKIN.—How would it do to make it necessary for them to get a ticket of admittance from the police officer of the town?—I think it would do very well; that is the proper place for them to get the ticket, because the master of a workhouse is not the proper man to work with them at all.

10366. Then the question of distances; if you had only one workhouse in the county they would have a long trip?—They would; they should apply to the relieving officer for a night's lodging, breakfast, and supper.

10367. CHAIRMAN.—Do any people pay for their keep in your workhouse?—They do; it is according to their means we charge.

10368. Do they ever dispute that with you?—No; they never do.

10369. You would be in favour of the Board of Guardians being empowered to recover that legally?—I would; anyone that is able to pay.

10370. At their discretion?—Yes.

10371. Mr. MURKIN.—You would be in favour of continuing the present system of representation and making no change?—Certainly.

10372. Let the Guardians manage the district hospital and let them pay for the expense of their destitute and infirm in the central union?—It has been very well done so in Larne.

10373. You would rather have that system than something like dispensary committees to manage the Poor Law affairs of the union that is dissolved?—I would say it would be better because it would be more representative for one thing.

10374. And, of course, the Guardians being the district councillors there would be no inconvenience in the matter; no additional labour?—Not at all; no additional labour.

10375. Have you any views as regards the question of the area of rating; do you prefer the union to the electoral division?—We count the electoral division the proper rating, because I think the Guardians take more interest in it.

10376. CHAIRMAN.—For what purposes; what expenses would you charge in the electoral division?—The former charges; the doctor's charges and the paupers that were in the house.

10377. Go back to the old system?—Go back to the old system.

10378. Mr. MURKIN.—Make each division responsible for its own poor?—Yes.

10379. You think it was more carefully looked after in those days?—A great deal.

10380. Mr. BROWN.—You have a cottage hospital in Larne?—We have.

10381. Have you found that that reduces the number of admissions to the workhouse hospital?—It is only opened; we can say very little about it yet; it is only just about a month opened.

Mr. ROBERT ALLEN examined.

10382. CHAIRMAN.—You are also a member of the Larne Board of Guardians?—Yes, sir.

10383. You have heard the evidence of your Chairman?—Yes.

10384. Are there any matters in which you differ from him or anything you would like to add to what he has said?—No; so far as I have heard, I don't know whether you have the answers to the queries sent him as or not.

10385. Yes?—They were practically my drawing up; I am in favour of the amalgamation.

10386. How many workhouses would you have in the county?—I am sure four would be plenty.

10387. Mr. MURKIN.—Your chairman said one? Under certain circumstances. Suppose the hospitals are retained and the children boarded out; I think Ballymena could accommodate all the rest.

10388. Take the harmless lunatics out of Ballymena and put them in an auxiliary asylum?—Yes; I think Ballymena could accommodate all the rest.

10389. Larne would not have any objection to that?—I don't know; personally, I would have no objection at all.

10390. Was the matter discussed by your body?—Not very much; a copy of these queries was sent out to every Guardian and they were asked to make suggestions, but very few did it.

10391. Then you had no public discussion or notice?—No; there was not.

10392. We find there is an unwillingness on the part of each locality to sacrifice itself, but, theoretically, there is a great feeling in favour of amalgamation?—The Guardians did not seem to take very much interest in it as a rule.

Mr. Robert
Allen.

Dec. 16, 1903.
Mr. Robert
Allen.

10393. But you think, on broad principles, it would be better to change the system?—Yes; it seems to me, from reading over the annual reports of the Local Government Board, that the smaller the union the greater is the cost, so then I reasoned that if there were fewer workhouses they would cost less; there would be economy.

10394. And better management perhaps?—There would be better classification; a want of proper classification in our union is one of the worst things I see; decent people being left with a lot of blackguards.

10395. Have you many in your house?—205.

10396. Many of that number children?—No, very few; about fourteen or fifteen; we board out all the orphans and deserted children.

10397. You find that a satisfactory method?—I am greatly in favour of that.

10398. Have you homeless inmates in the house?—No, we sent away the greater part of them to the asylum within the last few years.

10399. You had no trouble in getting the asylum authorities to take them?—No; only they said there was not room, and we had to wait, and there are some still that they say there is not room for.

10400. Have you anything to say about the tramps?—The tramps are a very hard question; I think the relieving officer or master of the workhouse should have power to admit them if they are very old; if they are young people, and not likely to suffer, I think they should not be admitted at all; I don't know whether there is power to keep them out or not.

10401. You would hardly want a person to be out at night if there was no shelter?—In summer it would not be much harm.

10402. He might go into your barn or house?—I think I would be prepared to take the chance; we are not exactly at the mercy of the tramps.

10403. Do you not think that if they had to go to the police station to get an order for assistance it would be better?—There is not a question, and if there were fewer workhouses there would be less tramps.

10404. You heard the questions put by the Charities in regard to the mothers of children in the houses?—I don't know anything at all about that; I don't care to express an opinion; there are a class in our workhouse that I don't care to go among at all; I don't see what we could do with them.

10405. CHAIRMAN.—You would rather have them away if you could?—I don't know whether they would be better outside than in.

10406. They are a class you feel rather hopeless about?—Yes; it has always been, and I think it always will be; there are some things that the Local Government Board should give us a little more liberty about. There is one question that Dr. Higgs is acquainted with—the question of paid wardens. It seems to me a great nuisance; the class we get as a rule are no better than the paupers in the workhouse; and they don't do the work well, at least according to the nurses and the doctor.

10407. Dr. HIGGINS.—My experience is that they do it much better?—We have a third pair since you were there.

10408. I would not compare your workhouse with Ballymena, where they have no paid wardens?—I think we should all be treated uniformly.

MR. PATRICK HAMILLE examined.

Mr. Patrick
Hamille.

10409. CHAIRMAN.—You are also a member of the Larne Board of Guardians?—Yes.

10410. Have you any idea of how many workhouses would be enough for the County Antrim, putting Belfast out of the question?—I don't think any at all are required.

10411. How would you administer the Poor Law?—I would first and foremost make a selection in any of the unions, take the able-bodied, the children, and the inmates, and then set the destitute on one side, and how few you would have you would be surprised.

10412. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—What would you do with them?—I would then send them out; outside the house entirely; board them out, and dispose of these standing memorials disgraceful to Irishmen to look at them; dispose of them, or else send them.

10413. CHAIRMAN.—They would make quarries as long as they would last?—They would.

10414. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Do you not think the destitute class might grow when you boarded them out?—I do not.

10415. Not afraid it would spread?—I don't think so.

10416. CHAIRMAN.—Would you keep any place for the sick?—Oh, yes, a hospital, and for the aged and infirm cases, I would go in for having treatment for them; boarding them out.

MR. ALEXANDER MILLER examined.

Mr. Alexander
Miller.

10420. CHAIRMAN.—The opinion of the Ballymena Board of Guardians is that amalgamation with adjoining unions is desirable and could be effected with very little, if any, disadvantage to the sick and poor; how many unions, do you think, might be retained in the County Antrim, provided that a hospital is kept up?—The Board did not express an opinion with regard to the numbers, nor even the particular ones, that should be amalgamated; we kept ourselves free in that matter.

10421. You have heard a great deal to-day on that subject, and no one wanted to knock down Ballymena?—No; I must say we are in a favoured position.

Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Thanks to its situation.

10422. CHAIRMAN.—And the railways; do you think Ballymena ought to get?—No; certainly.

10423. Do you think it would be able to receive all the rest?—Aged and infirm in all the others. I am not exactly sure with regard to the capacity; I have not made out the figures, but the workhouse was supposed to be able to accommodate 1,300 individuals, and I don't suppose there is that many in the whole of them.

10424. You think the number of workhouses might be reduced very much, but you don't go so far as to say that Ballymena should act as the only union?—No; I would not particularise; my Board has not, and therefore I would not.

10425. Your Board thinks that an arrangement could be come to whereby some class of paupers could be maintained in the workhouse of another union; that would be the very arrangement we have just been speaking of?—But I think their idea is ridiculous; that matter was that in case any of the workhouse were done away with, emptied of their present patients, these establishments should be made a training school for destitute children.

10430. That does not come under the heading of No. 5; they state there that the inmates of workhouses that were closed could be sent to another and maintained in that?—Perhaps we did not understand exactly the import of the query. Our idea in answering it was sending all the children to one place and having them taught primary education, and then, perhaps, trades.

10431. Your union wishes to go back to the old chargeability of electoral charges?—Yes; such was their decision, not altogether unanimous but almost.

10432. For all Poor Law expenditure?—Well, yes.

10433. Even for the maintenance of the sick?—I don't know exactly about the sick; it is principally in connection with outdoor relief.

10434. That is what I thought; it is merely as regards outdoor relief you want to go back to electoral division chargeability?—I think that is the principal thing; I think it is principally for the purpose of outdoor relief; we find the Guardians in a certain division do not care how many they put on outdoor relief in that division as long as it is a union-at-large charge, but we are of opinion that if it was a divisional charge they would be more cautious and careful.

10435. Has outdoor relief increased much in your union?—Not latterly; I think it has been decreasing less or more.

10436. Do you know how much a year it is now?—I think it is close on £2,300 or £2,400.

10437. How much is Belfast?—I could not say that.

CHAIRMAN.—You are about £2,000 over them.

10438. Mr. MURKHAUGH.—You are a kindly people in Ballymena?—Yes.

10439. CHAIRMAN.—On what basis do you give outdoor relief?—Some are entirely destitute; and others have a little to support them, but not sufficient to keep them out of the workhouse.

10440. Some are destitute and some are not destitute?—Not altogether destitute; they have a little to support them, but not sufficient to keep them out of the workhouse, therefore we give them a little relief because they have a great aversion to come into the workhouse. Better to give them £2. 6d. as outdoor relief than maintain them in the house at £3. 8d. per week.

10441. You said just now there was a considerable competition amongst the Guardians to give outdoor relief because it is a union charge; would you distribute some of the outdoor relief given to the fact that it is a union charge and comes light on the whole union?—Some of the divisions would feel it very heavy if it was a divisional charge because some of the divisions are very poor and require relief and the charge would be heavy on them.

10442. Do you find that the numbers in the house have gone down since you took to this outdoor relief as a large scale?—No, I think the numbers in the house have not gone down as far as I am aware; the Clerk is present and can go better into the figures than I can. But the outdoor relief acts as a preventative to them coming into the house.

10443. As regards the lunatics, supposing your workhouse were used for a central workhouse for the aged and infirm of the County Antrim, than what do you think might be done with the lunatics you have there?—We did not calculate in considering the queries to do away with the lunatics; we wrote the Local Government Board some time ago and they advised us to lay the whole matter before you as a Commission. The statement I would make would be on the lines of the letter I wrote laying the matter before the Local Government Board. I will read you the letter and reply:—

"Queen-street,

"Ballymena, 26th August, 1903.

"Gentlemen,

"In reply to the enquiry of the Ballymena Board of Guardians of the 20th June, 1903, you refer them to your circular of July, 1902, which states that Boards of Guardians should take steps to have all inmates in workhouses transferred to the county asylum. I have been directed by them to inform your Board that the Ballymena Board of Guardians appointed a committee twelve months ago to have four recommendations carried out, and at an interview with the asylum committee we were informed that the asylum was already congested, having seventy more patients in it than the space was supposed to accommodate. We then proposed that, since they could not take them from us, that they should transfer them into their books and board them out to us on the same terms and at the same rate paid us for the fifty boarded out to us by them under the Act of 1875; this, we considered, would only be fair and just. We have had several interviews with them on the matter, but up to the present the only information we have from them is, that "the subject is still under consideration." Had we obtained the consent of the asylum committee to an extension of the existing scheme of course it would have been submitted to your Board for approval. Now, gentlemen, they pay us 7s. per week per board, for the patients we have from them under the Act of 1875, and that amount per board for the fifty we wanted to transfer to them amounts to £17 10s. per week, or £10 per annum. This is not only a local charge on the ratepayers of the Ballymena Union, but we are obliged to contribute our quota as a county charge for the upkeep of the asylum at Antrim, filled by the inmates from Larne, Ballycastle, Ballymoney, and the other unions in the county. I ask you is that fair or just to the ratepayers of the Ballymena Union, and I would further ask you to consider us how we are to obtain relief and redress. Have we not a grievance? Have we not reason to complain? We informed the asylum committee at the same time that we could take more than 300 additional of the harmless lunatics if they wished to avail themselves of the accommodation in the Ballymena Workhouse, and that would relieve the congestion at the asylum, and might possibly obviolate the necessity of additional expense by adding to their present building, or of converting any of the workhouses into an auxiliary asylum at a cost of several thousand pounds. Could they not be cared for and maintained as well in Ballymena as in Antrim, and at a much cheaper rate? But gentlemen, should the asylum committee decide to build an auxiliary asylum out of some one of the workhouses, when we would be relieved of the unjust burden of maintaining the fifty they refuse to take off our hands? That should have been a county instead of a local charge, to the disadvantage of the ratepayers of the Ballymena Union for the last few years. I venture to say that either of these schemes, if adopted by the asylum committee, would not be ready for the reception of patients for the next two or three years. Are we to suffer to the extent of £10 a year for the next few years as we have done in the past? We hope your Board will be as good as to devise some means whereby we will be recompensed for the past injustice and relieved at once of this unfair state of matters.

"An early reply will oblige.

"Yours most respectfully,

"ALEXANDER MILLER (Chairman).

"Messrs.

"The Local Government Board, Dublin."

"No. 52,575/1903.

"Ballymena Union.

"Local Government Board, Dublin,

26th September, 1903.

"Sir,

"The Local Government Board for Ireland have had before them your letter of the 26th ultimo, relative to the chargeability of the cost of maintenance of certain harmless lunatics, numbering about fifty, who are at present ordinary pauper inmates of the workhouse of Ballymena Union, and whose chargeability is different from that of the inmates boarded out in the workhouse by the authorities of the County Antrim Lunatic Asylum. In reply the Board desire to point out that the patients in the County Lunatic Asylum are admitted from the various localities in the several unions of the county, and the cost of maintenance is therefore borne by the county at large.

"The Board are informed that harmless lunatics are maintained in the other workhouses in the County Antrim, the cost of maintenance in their case, as well as in Ballymena, being a local charge, and that the ratepayers of the Ballymena Union are not placed in a different position from those of the other unions in the county in regard to this matter.

* With respect to the suggestion that the asylum authorities might send further patients to the Ballymena Workhouse, the Board have to state that before steps could be taken with that object, it would be necessary to carry out extensive structural alterations in the workhouse buildings, involving a large outlay.

* Under the circumstances, and having regard to the fact that the question of asylum accommodation is included in the terms of reference of the Poor Law Reform Commission, the Local Government Board consider that the Guardians would do well to place all the particulars of their case before the Commission, and to await the result of its deliberations before incurring heavy expenditure on workhouse alterations of this nature.

"I am, Sir,

"Your obedient Servant

"A. R. BARRER,

"Assistant Secretary.

"Alexander Milkhen, Esq.,

"Chairman of the Board of Guardians

"of Ballymena Union, Queen-street,

"Ballymena."

10444. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—In regard to outdoor relief, do many of the recipients come from the town of Ballymena itself?—Yes; there is a considerable number.

10445. Have you many towns in your union?—Yes; we have four or five considerable towns.

10446. Have you any idea as to the numbers from those towns that are on the outdoor relief list?—Yes; I have not specified particularly to what divisions they belong.

10447. Our experience, so far, is that the outdoor relief has grown principally because of the number that are relieved in the towns?—Yes.

10448. You are not aware whether there are many in receipt of outdoor relief in the country parishes or not?—We have three relieving officers, and I believe I would be correct in saying that in one of the districts they have far more on outdoor relief than even we have in the urban district of Ballymena.

10449. So then it does not altogether apply in your case?—It does not.

10450. You have a large number of children in your house?—We have; I think we have only some twenty-five or twenty-eight that are attending school; we have a schoolmistress, but there are some younger children than those attending school.

10451. I think there were forty or forty-five in the house yesterday?—I daresay.

10452. Have you tried to get houses for these children?—Yes; where we can get suitable houses we do, but out, and as far as I am personally concerned I certainly would advocate the boarding out of children, all that could possibly be got, but the difficulty is getting suitable houses for these children.

10453. Do you make any effort to get these houses; do you let the people know in the country?—The people generally know that we are prepared to board them, but provided suitable houses can be found for them, and I think it is the right thing, as far as I am personally concerned, because they grow up with other surroundings and out of the atmosphere of the workhouse entirely. I saw some time ago where one gentleman gave evidence that he found in some of those cases that they were made to herd the farms. I believe a farmer's son would have to do that himself, and I don't think we need export boarded-out children from workhouses to be better viewed than a farmer would treat his own children.

10454. CHAIRMAN.—You are quite right!—Of course the ones that we would give them to don't want them, for it is not generally well-to-do persons that are prepared to take them, and ones that would want them we refuse to give them unless where they are proper persons to bring up children. I know some of them that are boarded out. I have visited them myself, and you could not tell when they go to school that they came out of a workhouse at all, nor is it recognised in the community that they are, and I only wish we had more of such homes.

10455. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Have you many tramps in Ballymena?—We had, but they have been considerably reduced lately.

10456. Would you be in favour of giving the Guardians any more power?—I certainly would. I am largely in favour of the answer that has been based on, and that is that the word "vagrant" in the Act should include any person frequenting a workhouse more than twice a month, and who, in the opinion of the Guardians, is able to work, and unless there was some reasonable cause they should be liable to be prosecuted before a Justice of the Peace, even though that person belonged to the union in which the workhouse is situated. We find that sometimes in our own area a person will come in postage two or three times in the week and go out the next day. The word "vagrant" in the Act does not contemplate that person as a vagrant at all, and therefore we have inserted this that a person who comes in perhaps two or three times in the month should be treated as a vagrant, and in the opinion of the Ballymena Board of Guardians there should be accommodation provided at the various police barracks for persons of this class. If there was accommodation provided at the police barracks I believe some of these persons would be likely to try to improve on the rates. That is our opinion. I think they are a very great imposition, and there is too much encouragement given to them.

10457. Your rates are much higher than in any of the other unions in the county; how is that?—I don't know.

Mr. MURKAGHAN.—They are 1s. 6d. in the £, whereas in the other unions they are 8d. and 9d.

CHAIRMAN.—£2,400 on outdoor relief more than accounts for it.

10458. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Do you find these lunatics which you have got from the asylum a source of income to you?—They are very little of an income where you have 1s. per head per week beyond the cost of maintenance; a worker in a mill would pay 1s. a week, or more, for his lodgings, so that we are not overpaid. A very important percentage—I must say I am thankful to him—informed the Commission and the public to-day that he was very well satisfied with the treatment that he himself had seen that these lunatics got in the Ballymena Workhouse. I refer to yourself, and I accept it as a compliment.

10459. We found the place very well kept and the people apparently very comfortable.—I suppose we found also that we have accommodation for a considerable number more of the same class, if they do not decide to build an addition to the asylum?

10461. Dr. BURGESS.—You mentioned you made in a week out of the lunatics that are there; you have 11s. that is 25 lbs. a week, and you think they are very well treated there; do you not think it would be desirable for the Guardians to treat their own lunatics just as well?—We were waiting for a decision in reference to this matter that I have brought before you. If the Asylum Asylum Committee had taken our lunatics on their books and boarded them out with us on the same terms we certainly would have made arrangements in the same way for the ones we have ourselves, but after all I think they get almost the same care and treatment.

10462. There are about eight sleeping with 250 cubic feet each?—Yes; but you must admit there has been a considerable improvement since the last time you were there.

10463. There is still room for more?—And always will be, no matter how much we do.

10464. Do you think the lunatics are the proper class to do the attendance in the infirmary?—There are some of them quite capable, very little being wrong with them.

10465. You would have to pay attendants if you got rid of your lunatics?—They are very useful in many ways; we have a twenty-acre farm, and they do the labouring work.

10466. I refer to the four or five lunatics that are employed in the ward, and the nurses seem to think that their time is largely taken up looking after the lunatics?—They have to spend two or three hours in the morning cleaning, and then return to the body of the house.

10467. Have you been through the house early in the morning, at half-past ten or about 11?—Yes; I visit sometimes twice and sometimes three times a week.

10468. If the accommodation for the healthy should be increased in Ballymena do you think you would have room for an increase from other unions and at the same time hold the lunatics you have—I think we have, if you take away the children; look at the large rooms we would have that are now used as schoolrooms for twenty-three children.

10494. It would not accommodate many healthy people; is that the only empty place?—We have other places besides that; we have vacant wards.

10495. How many persons from other unions do you think you could accommodate?—I have told you already the number that the house was supposed to accommodate when it was built, and I think we have altogether about 360 in it, including lunatics from Asylum and Belfast.

10496. CHAIRMAN.—How many of these are lunatics?—112, besides our own fifty.

10497. It is a very odd thing that made it necessary to have them kept there so long?—We tried the Asylum authorities to take them from us and they were not able to do it; they told us that there were seventy more patients in the asylum than the place was built to accommodate. We took steps to carry out the directions of the Local Government Board, and they could not receive them; therefore we have been maintaining them ever since as a local charge, when they should be a county charge.

10498. Making it a week on it?—Oh, no; there are fifty of our own for whom we receive no payment.

10499. Dr. BROWN.—You mention in your letter that the other unions have them on the county; that is quite correct?—There are not fifty in all the other unions combined.

10500. CHAIRMAN.—How do you happen to have so many?—There never was any of them taken to the asylum from us; in Ballycastle they have only two.

10501. Mr. MURPHY.—There are only about fifteen outside Belfast and your own place?—Oh, I think there are eighteen in Asylum. At any rate we have more than all the other unions combined.

10502. The railway facilities are good at Ballymena?—Yes; in all directions—Larne, Belfast, Derry, and Farnham in the direction of Oshenduff.

Mr. JOHN CLARKE examined.

10503. CHAIRMAN.—You represent the Board of Guardians of ASYLUM?—I am the Clerk.

10504. Have you any of the Guardians here?—Two Guardians.

10505. You have not come to express any opinion yourself?—Yes; that is what I have come for.

10506. To tell the opinion of the Board of Guardians?—No; it is a personal matter altogether. The opinion of the Board of Guardians is embodied in the replies to the queries.

10507. What did you want to mention?—It is my own personal opinion entirely. That is that there should be one county workhouse.

10508. Where would you put it?—I leave that to the Commission to decide.

10509. What class of inmates do you think ought to be in that workhouse?—What I would call the middle or inferior characters I would send to that. I would board out all decent aged people over sixty years of age; I would board out all orphan children; I would advocate that the Guardians pay a little more to adopt decent people to take these children. At the present time I find that the difficulty we have to contend with is to get a decent home for these children. In Asylum we pay £60 a month, which I think is quite little to induce people of the standing that children should be boarded out with, and I would advocate that the Guardians would pay a little more in order to get suitable homes for these children. I think that the children are the most important item in the whole programme—the young.

10510. So as to take them off the list of the paupers eventually?—Yes.

10511. The sick you would keep in the local hospitals?—Well, my idea with regard to the sick is that the sick would go to the infirmary in connection with the workhouse, and I would provide a couple of wards in connection with each dispensary. Of course this is my own idea—I am not giving it as the Guardians—under the superintendence of the dispensary medical officer. The Local Government Board at present are insisting on a trained nurse being appointed for each dispensary district.

10513. She would know no more about it than one of the charwomen you would meet outside, say, knows about surgical or medical nursing?—Then my theory bills to the ground.

10514. It does unless she happens to be a medical and surgical nurse as well?—At any rate my idea is that in connection with these two wards they should be available for paying patients in the district; you could arrange a scale of fees.

10516. But primarily for the poor?—Yes; it would only be for cases of accident and sudden diseases that could not be removed to the county infirmary; the county workhouse you might call it, or county infirmary in connection with the workhouse.

10517. Would you propose that all the sick except the very acutely sick should be dealt with in one building for the whole county?—Yes.

10518. If a person got ill at Ballycastle or Asylum would they have to go to the central institution to be cured?—Yes; that is the idea I have, except in cases of acute or sudden sickness.

10519. Mr. MURPHY.—Do you see any danger in that?—Not if they are fit for removal; my experience is that the great majority of infirmary patients could go to any place at all.

10520. CHAIRMAN.—Don't you think it would be greedy to remove the sick from their own friends?—Yes; but my idea would be to board out all those people.

10522. That can could bear removal. I am afraid you are going a little ahead as soon as you get into the medical aspect of the case?—Then I will drop that. My idea with regard to the management of the county workhouse is that it should be placed under a committee of the County Council, and the District Councils in proportion to valuation should send two or three representatives, and in that way I think they would minimise what is complained of—the outdoor relief. There would not be so many people to approach—that is their neighbours would not be disturbing them or pressuring them to have outdoor relief in all cases given. Outdoor relief, to my mind, is at present shared. There is too much favoritism; it is not given on the merits. If the management of the county workhouse were in the hands of a committee from the County Council and a small committee from each of the District Councils I think it would reduce that considerably.

10524. Take an application for outdoor relief from Glenamara, how would that be dealt with by a central body meeting in Ballymena?—It would be dealt with just in the same way as at present.

10525. Mr. MURPHY.—How would they get local knowledge as to the necessities of the case?—From the relieving officer.

10526. Could he be present?—He must be present at each meeting of the board.

10527. If it is delegated to the County Council could you bring all the relieving officers of the county to meet the County Council?—It is not delegated to the County Council but to a committee of the County Council, and that might be a local committee appointed from or by the County Council, and the District Council I would have it in the same way; the committee they should appoint should be either chosen from or by them to attend at the workhouse, as the Board of Guardians do at present.

10503. That would do away with supervision—the most important part of administration?—The boarding out can be principally under the charge of the District Council or dispensary committee. I would appoint a committee in each dispensary area to manage the wards; revert to the old principle of dispensary committees.

10504. At the present time the asylum committees frequently have before them considerations as to the ability of persons in the institution to pay, and they have to apply to outsiders for information; the same thing would likely occur if you adopt that system of committees?—The difference between the asylum committee and the committee I propose is this—the committee chosen by the District Council would have all the information that the District Council could give in connection with any pauper that was seeking admission or getting outdoor relief.

10505. What advantage would there be in taking from the Guardians the administration of this important matter and referring it to a committee; why not leave it with the body still?—If you had one county workhouse you could not have the whole of the members of the District Council attending that county workhouse.

Mr. THOMAS FERGUSON examined.

Mr. Thomas
Ferguson.

10510. CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the Guardians of the Antrim Union?—Yes.

10511. What are your views about the amalgamation of unions?—I suppose you have the answers to the queries from Antrim.

10512. We have; you believe that a scheme is desirable?—I do not; I don't believe in amalgamation, although I am here.

10513. You are here to express your dissent from that?—Yes; and, of course, I was selected to come and give my views.

10514. As one of the minority?—Yes; as one of the minority.

10515. Would you make any change in the administration of the present system?—Of course I believe a great many changes would be desirable, but I don't see that amalgamation would effect an improvement; economy is one of the objects, I think, that we aim at.

10516. It is almost a necessary condition?—Yes, economy and efficiency.

10517. Economy with efficiency?—Then I hold that if we want to accommodate and relieve the poor we cannot disturb the present workhouses and effect that purpose, and in the next place I believe that instead of amalgamating the present institutions the idea is to create another, or two, because it has never been proposed to do away with the present hospitals or infirmaries, and I can say for Antrim that if you have a central institution I don't believe you have a dozen people you could send away from the neighbourhood to that central place, and, even supposing you had a dozen, by still maintaining the present establishment you would have to employ and pay for the labour that what are called able-bodied paupers do at present, and that is even good for them to be employed at—to work about the gardens and about the place. Then with regard to the auxiliary asylum—

10518. That is a question that touches you closely at Antrim?—It does. A great many of us believe that instead of the being an economical idea to turn the Antrim Workhouse into an auxiliary asylum it would be far more profitable to extend the present asylum buildings; it has been estimated it would cost about £20,000 to convert the Antrim Workhouse into a fit place for an auxiliary asylum; it has also been estimated, in fact it is quite settled, that £15,000 would provide the needed accommodation at Halwell—the present asylum—and you would not have then to employ a new staff; the only difference in the outlay between the larger establishment and the present would be the addition of some attendants or keepers.

10519. So you would be against the auxiliary asylum?—Yes.

10520. You would not break up any of the workhouses in the county?—I believe in the boarding out of the children and all that sort of thing, but even after you had all these changes made you would still require the 10506. Then you would propose to do away with the present system altogether?—Yes.

10507. And follow pretty much the lines of the County Council as at present, giving only to the dispensaries a certain representation on the committee; is that the view you take up?—No; I don't exactly follow you. The point I take up is that the upkeep of the workhouse would be a county charge; consequently, a committee of the County Council would be appointed to look after the interests of the county charge; the paupers in that workhouse would be a district charge, or a union charge, and, consequently, the District Council would appoint committees to look after their paupers.

10508. The paupers from their own unions?—Yes; it would not revert back to the old principle of union charges and divisional charges; but instead of that it would be county charges and union charges.

10509. We have been told here to-day that the wide area, except extravagance?—Well, with regard to the divisional charges, I think it is a hardship on a poor district to have to pay for the poor of that district; they have all their rates to pay; in a poor district I feel from my experience that there will be less money expended on roads and other matters than in a more populous and thriving district; consequently, I think it would be a hardship on the poor district to have to support their own poor.

present places. The Antrim Workhouse was built to accommodate 600 or 700 paupers or inmates, and it appears that now when every inmate would be allowed the space that is required, according to the newer regulations, it would be fit to accommodate about 300 only, so that there is not so great a saving building as might appear at first sight.

10521. Mr. MURPHY.—You have a large number of children in your house?—We have.

10522. Have you ever tried to get them boarded out?—No; we send a few very young children out to some, but we have not tried to get the young people boarded out.

10523. Did it ever occur to you that it would be a good thing to get those children out of the house?—We never considered that very seriously, but I believe it is a very good idea.

10524. If you get the children away and get the harmless lunatics out of the house you would not have much use for the institutions?—They would not be so very well equipped. But when should we do away with? If you would keep the hospital there and the infirmary you would not send the old infirm people out of their own district.

10525. You have a number of people there that would be very well able to go on a train to Ballinacree, for instance?—They could, of course; but would you save by doing that if you don't improve their condition or position.

10526. It would not take as much to keep up the fever hospital as the whole house?—No.

10527. The fever hospital would very nearly accommodate the sick of Antrim?—It might.

10528. The upkeep of that institution must be considerable, and the expenses of the fuel and a large staff, and all those things, might be reduced?—Yes.

10529. And the people that you would send away to a neighbouring town perhaps could get better treatment without any additional cost?—They might, of course, but I think they would regard it as a great hardship to be sent out of their district. I know there is a feeling among the poor that if Antrim were done away with it would be a great calamity.

10530. We have made inquiries in our visitations and have found out that the people who have been a long time in the body of the house really receive visitors?—Yes; but when they have been there for a long time they begin to regard it as their home, and don't feel the need of outside visitors. I know some old people in Antrim who have been fretting over the thought of leaving it.

10531. But when they had been in the new institution for some time would they not regard that as their home?—But they would be away from the district in which they were brought up.

10532. When you go home I hope you will think over the question of boarding out children?—Yes; I think there is something good about that.

Mr. THOMAS BRYSON examined.

Dec 16, 1905

Mr. Thomas Bryson.

10533. CHAIRMAN.—You are also a member of the Board of Guardians of Antrim?—Yes.

10534. Were you one of the majority or one of the minority? did you support the proposal for amalgamation or vote against it?—I am not clear; I think I voted for amalgamation.

10535. Which would you vote for now if you had to do it again?—I would vote for amalgamation.

10536. What are your reasons for going in favour of amalgamation?—I believe it would tend to economy in the first place; it would do away with a great many of the officials, and I would like to see the Antrim Workhouse utilized for something more useful.

10537. What do you think might be done with it?—I don't know whether I should give a personal opinion.

10538. Certainly?—I think a sanatorium or a school for all the children in the county.

10539. All the workhouse children?—Yes.

10540. Would you prefer sending the workhouse children to a common school to boarding them out?—I think I would board them out.

10541. Therefore you would not make them into a school; you would prefer making it into a sanatorium for consumptives?—Yes. Part of it could be utilized, say, for the very sick—that is to say for anyone who had met with an accident—and I would recommend a place for paying patients—that is to say a person who was able to pay a little and had an adherence to going into a workhouse as a pauper.

10542. We have had cases of that kind come under our notice?—People who would like to pay 2s. or 4s. a week, but we have no place set apart for people of that class.

10543. What would they like—a room to themselves or to be in a pay ward with other paying patients?—A pay ward where there would be six or seven.

10544. It is merely the fact that the other people don't pay that they object to?—Yes; going in as pauper.

10545. But they are not in as persons in the infirmary; they are only in as poor people?—Well, they have that feeling that they are when they are not paying. What I mean to convey is in the case of a person who required proper medical attendance, and was able to pay 4s. or 5s. a ward might be set apart in the workhouse for those people.

10546. I was wondering what the necessity for a ward would be; people sometimes have the idea of getting into a ward by themselves, and after a bit they feel very lonely and are sorry they are there—I would not recommend a ward by themselves. I think the previous witness touched on divisional ratings.

10547. He did?—I don't agree with him; I prefer union rating.

Mr. JOHN McHARGUE examined.

10548. CHAIRMAN.—Did the Licham Board of Guardians consider this question?—They did.

10549. What was the resolution you passed on the subject; for or against amalgamation?—For.

10550. How many unions do you think might be broken up in the county?—If I were speaking for the Board of Guardians I would have to say two, but I think you might go further under certain stringent conditions.

10551. The Board of Guardians thought two; what is your own view of the matter?—I would be prepared to go the whole length, leaving one.

10552. That would be leaving some central one?—Quite so.

10553. Leaving accommodation for the sick backed at each place?—Yes; practically leaving the present poorhouses—that is the Licham, Larnoe, and the rest—as hospitals as far as possible, and do away with all else; you can centralise as far as possible.

10554. Then if before our report came out major ameliorations are improved to a considerable extent you might go further and shut up the hospitals in such places?—It might come to that in the year 2000.

10555. You heard the evidence that was given to-day about moving the aged and infirm from all over the county to one workhouse; do you see any objection to that yourself?—None whatever.

10556. As regards the various classes we would have to get out of the workhouse if that were carried out, the lunatic you would send to the Lunatic asylum or ordinary lunatic asylums?—Yes.

10557. Where do you send?—In the town of Antrim. There is one thing I would like to impress on the Commission, and that is with regard to tramps. I have had great experience for thirty years of tramps passing through Antrim. They go from Belfast to Antrim, and they solicit alms from there leave Belfast to Antrim.

10558. What road do they walk?—The county road—the straight road—and they then go and stay in the workhouse over night, and they leave and go on to Ballymena.

10559. Can they do that in one day's walk; how many miles?—Sixteen miles.

10560. That is a pretty good step for them?—They can do that, and then it is eleven miles from Antrim to Ballymena. I think that tramp question is very difficult to deal with.

10561. It is not a serious one as regards expense. I don't suppose it costs you £50 a year?—I think that police supervision would be a good thing; it would have a deterrent effect.

10562. If a workhouse was closed altogether tramps could not go to it?—If Antrim was closed they will have to tramp from Belfast to Ballymena; I believe that would have a deterrent as far as the tramps are concerned, but in some instances they are deserving people who are destitute, and, of course, they should have a place where they could get a night's lodging.

10564. It was suggested by some witnesses?—Of course I would strongly recommend the boarding out of children.

10565. How is it that nothing was done in that way at Antrim yet?—Well, we have some children.

10566. Mixed out, but not boarded out?—There are a few.

10567. How is it you did so little?—As to that I cannot say.

10568. You have not started boarding them out until recently?—No.

10569. But, as a Board of Guardians, do you approve of boarding out?—I do, for the reason—it takes them away from the taint of the workhouse.

10570. Mr. McHARGUE.—It gives them a knowledge of domestic life that they never can get in an institution?—Quite so. They get mixing more with the people.

10571. The children?—That is a difficult question. Theoretically, they should be boarded out, but my experience of it is that it is a patch-work system; it does not work; you cannot get people to take them.

10572. That is a very unusual piece of evidence?—It is the truth.

10573. There are some special circumstances in the Licham Union I expect that makes it difficult?—I don't think so.

10574. Small farmers won't take them?—No.

10575. Have you a ladies' committee there?—We had a lady that looked after them.

10576. No; a ladies' committee?—No; I don't think so.

10577. If you had a ladies' committee there is nobody who would make inquiries and get children boarded out more successfully?—I may say that I have had inquiries made of me by persons who wanted them, but they found difficulties in the way.

10578. What were the difficulties?—They think they would not be very useful to them, and they would be inspected very closely, and the cost of keeping them would exceed the profit; the gains would not be worth the candle.

10579. How much do you give in your union?—I cannot say exactly. I should say 2s. or 4s. a week, but I am only speaking from memory; I could not say exactly.

10580. About £5 a year would it be?—Possibly. I give you that under reserve.

10581. Mr. McHARGUE.—You have not tried the

Mr. John McHargue.

Dec. 10, 1901.

Mr. John
M'Hargre,

experiment much. I see you have only two boarded out!—We are willing to board out any we can, but people don't come forward.

10582. In other unions not far away there is competition for the children!—It may be the circumstances of the district; the districts differ very much.

10583. CHAIRMAN.—I think if you get a ladies' committee it will help you in the matter!—I think when all is said and done there will be a consensus that must be attended to—that won't be got on.

10584. If they never come as you cannot get them out. If you don't admit children to the workhouse of the future!—That is another aspect of the question.

10585. Dr. BOGGS.—How much do you give for keeping the boarded-out children; the two you have?—I said my impression is from 2s. to 4s.

10586. If you increased the amount would you not have plenty of applicants?—Ought here; I could not say; but even so, the question still remains, will they get properly trained and equipped for the struggle for existence afterwards; will they be trained to industrial habits; there is that question to be considered.

Dr. BOGGS.—The experience is that nearly every foster mother adopts the child when it becomes fitful; they nearly all do adopt them.

10587. CHAIRMAN.—They really fall into the home life!—I quite approve of it, but I see some difficulties. 10588. Don't you think the training of the home life is better than that of an institution?—It is, if it can be managed. I should be the last to throw difficulties in the way.

CHAIRMAN.—I think if you get a ladies' committee appointed you will be doing a good deal to remove difficulties out of the way.

10589. Mr. MURKIN.—You ought to try a ladies' committee and see if they cannot find suitable homes for some of your children; you have a number of mothering children in your house who are wasting their time!—How is that worked in other places?

CHAIRMAN.—Simply the Guardians name a committee; they need not be Guardians—retirees.

10590. Mr. MURKIN.—Select a committee of four or five ladies who have time at their disposal and are energetic and willing to undertake the work of looking after the children!—We had a lady Guardian who looked after them very closely; she was a committee in herself—Mrs. Keightley.

Mr. MURKIN.—You could hardly expect one lady to do all the work.

10591. CHAIRMAN.—You want ladies from different parts of the union to each look after one parish or district. Would you be in favour of sending women with illegitimate children to a penitentiary?—I have not considered that question. I suppose there should be something done in that line for these people.

10592. Mr. MURKIN.—You did not consider the question of union rating as against divisional rating or dispensary?—As far as my own position is concerned the electoral division rating would be the best arrangement. I live in about the centre of the district, but after all I don't think it is fair; I think the present system works pretty well; I know they are all fairly well satisfied—all the members of the board—and I don't believe that there is a single person getting outdoor relief that the board would like to cut off.

10593. Have you got many on the list?—We have; we have generally from 250 to 300.

10594. Getting on an average 2s. a week or 3s. 1s. From 1s. 6d. to 2s.; 2s. might be the average.

10595. You think there is no person in receipt that is not entitled to it?—I don't think there is. Two of the most economical members of the board were selected as a committee to go round Lismore, and the report of these members was that there was not a soul in Lismore they could strike off; we go over the list periodically.

10596. In the event of amalgamation how would you continue the management of the system; would you leave it as it is, in the hands of the Guardians, or would you alter it in any way to a county administration or dispensary?—To a certain extent I fancy you would need to alter it. Suppose, for instance, you make a big central institution to send the infirm to, I think a committee would be the best in that case.

10597. Ought not the Guardians, in their respective localities, look after the local hospital?—Quite so.

10598. And simply contract for the pay of the infirm that they boarded in the central union of the county?—They could; that would do.

10599. That would be a simple method, and would not arouse much opposition?—That would do very nicely.

10600. And it would not mean additional labour, for the body would meet as a District Council?—Yes. In the case of the Lismore Union there is a difficulty because they don't meet as a District Council and Board of Guardians; we have two District Councils amalgamated to form the Board of Guardians. They met separately as District Councils, and on different days, and combine together to form the Board of Guardians, so that difficulty arises there.

10601. But still you could get over it?—I point out to you that it would need to be looked into.

10602. Have you any view as regards the question of county boundaries—that is to leave every county as it is itself in the administration of its own affairs?—We have the administration except in the case of the Poor Law. I don't know whether it would work well then Lismore.

10603. Now, for instance, if the Guardians were empowered to board out at a neighbouring union would it not work out all right. If there was a workhouse convenient to another union outside that county they could bargain with that county for the upkeep of their destitute poor?—Yes; that would be advisable.

10604. Some witnesses we have heard seemed to think that the counties should be units in themselves for all administrative purposes; you did not think over the matter?—I did many a time, but I don't see just at the moment that it is advisable. Of course you understand the way we are at Lismore; half the union is in the County Down; at present the two counties contribute for the support of the place; if you divide them you cut them into small fragments, and the question arises whether that would be satisfactory or not; you need to have a pretty fair area of change to work one of those places.

10605. Of course it is a matter for close inquiry?—It is a matter that, in my opinion, would raise controversy to the whole spirit of your Commission. You are to effect amalgamation; this would be a scotching.

10606. No; it would be only marking out more clearly the lines of the different administrative entities; don't you think there is some little difficulty in having two counties interlocked in that way?—We have not found any as yet; there may be a difficulty in carrying out any scheme you would draw up for Parliament.

10607. You have no views to give on that particular point?—No; nothing definite. There is the question of canals; we are plagued with them to an extent that is unusual; we are a distributing centre for Astor, Lurgan, Banbridge, and Newry, from what the police tell me. Newry is the only place that sprouts in the North of Ireland; we have about 4,000 a year, eighty a week.

10608. CHAIRMAN.—What do you think about it?—If the scheme I have outlined is carried out it would solve the question automatically, but if not I think we should be provided with more powers in regard to these people.

10609. Would you be satisfied with the powers they have in England of detaining them?—That is what we proposed, and it was adopted by the board once or twice.

10610. Do you think that would be sufficient?—I don't think it would be sufficient, but it would tend towards it.

10611. If you could close your workhouse they have no place to go to!—I have already given you the power that it would tend to solve it.

10612. Mr. MURKIN.—Still there ought to be some provision for a person who was destitute and had no shelter?—Yes; and it would be a danger to the community if there were not.

10613. And also it would be very undesirable?—Yes.

10614. If some arrangement could be made that the Guardians would be empowered to furnish the rest of a bed and breakfast for a person of that kind would it not be a simple method?—It would; but it is not in the score of expense that we deal with this question; it is on moral and sentimental grounds; they give a great deal of trouble in the workhouse besides.

10615. Supposing the casual or tramp had to go to the police station and state his case to the sergeant, and the sergeant would have power to give him a ticket to some lodging-house where he would get his bed and breakfast, and the Guardians should pay for it!—That would be quite satisfactory.

10616. The sergeant would know him, and if he came often would begin to deal with him in another way?—Yes. We are in the vicinity of a big town, with hospitals; our poor sometimes have to go to Belfast.

10027. CHAIRMAN.—You have got two hospitals in your own town?—Yes; but in special circumstances they have to go to Belfast. Of course we have the power of sending them by admitting them into the workhouse first and then sending them, but there are cases arise, and there is one case occurs to me at the moment—that of a child suffering from intussusception—that child was taken away to the Children's Hospital, twelve miles off, in Belfast, and its life was saved, and the decision to send it there was arrived at in an hour. I think the Guardians should have the power to bear the cost of such a thing.

10028. You propose the Guardians should have the power to send any poor person?—Not to send, but to bear the cost after they are sent, when they have investigated the matter; it would have been too late in this case.

10029. Able to defray the cost of any poor persons being sent to hospital?—Yes; that you should relax the bonds of red tape.

10030. It is the bonds of red tape in the unions and hospitals. One person suggested what you suggest, but that it should be on the recommendation of one of the relieving officers?—Yes; or any medical officer at all.

10031. Dr. BROOKS.—I suppose you would say dispensary doctor?—I should like to relax this red tape business.

10032. You must draw the line somewhere; if a person is able to pay a private medical man why should he be paid for out of the rates afterwards; if it is a poor person then the Guardians might pay afterwards?—Well, that seems reasonable; subject, of course, to the approval of the Local Government Board.

10033. CHAIRMAN.—Their approval would not be necessary to that?—I should think it would be in this case; it might be abused. I should think there should be proper precautions taken.

10034. There is not much danger of its being abused; it does not give a person any pleasure to go to hospital?—In districts surrounding a big town where there are hospitals available they should be made available.

10035. Dr. BROOKS.—Would you like to give more liberty to Guardians or their medical officers to send cases to large city hospitals without going into the workhouse at all?—That is the gist of my evidence.

10036. At a fixed rate per day or week?—That would be too delicate a matter for me to go into.

TWENTIETH PUBLIC SITTING—THURSDAY, DECEMBER 17TH, 1903.

At the Courthouse, Belfast.

Present:— Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. CORY BROOKS.

Dr. GEORGE ST. GEORGE examined.

Dr. George
St. George.

10627. CHAIRMAN.—You are the Medical Officer of the Lifford County Infirmary?—Yes, the County Antrim Infirmary.

10628. Would you just let the Commission know your views?—Of course I can say nothing on the amalgamation of unions; that point is beyond me; I think myself, of course, there are too many unions in Antrim, but to give any idea as to what unions should be broken up, or how it should be done, is beyond my ideas.

But from a medical point of view I think it would be wise if the hospitals at present attached to unions were disseminated from them so as to relieve them of the idea of pauperism, and made, if possible, district hospitals, or abolished, as might follow amalgamation. I think there is great necessity for some form of district hospital for infectious diseases, over and above the present fever hospitals to which respectable people might go on payment. As it stands at present a respectable person of the middle class has nowhere to go except to the union, and the consequences are they are nursed often in their own homes, with the result of spreading infection through the house and neighbourhood.

10629. Of course you know that the fever hospitals attached to the workhouses are largely availed of by respectable people?—Fairly.

10630. Much more so than the infirmaries?—I quite agree with you. I also think that there should be some attempt made to try and get patients to pay. In the infirmary, of which I am surgeon for the last three years, we have been trying to get patients to pay and we find it worked very successfully. The year before last we got £291 in small sums from paying patients, and last year, that is the year ended 30th November, 1903, the fees rose to £165.

10632. There is no compulsion?—No compulsion whatever; they pay sums varying from 1s. 6d. to 10s.

10633. You have no power?—No power at all.

10634. Do you think there is any necessity for you to get the power?—At present it is working very well.

10635. You don't see any necessity for the power?—As far as my hospital is concerned it is working very well.

10636. Do you think the people are really giving as much as they can afford?—I do. Of course we have private wards as well, for which a patient pays a much larger sum for getting the use of that private ward, but that is not so much availed of as the general ward of the hospital. In reference to the amount of work done in the county infirmary last year, ending 30th of November, I treated 335 cases in the hospital, and those are from all parts of the county. Now at the present moment—today—I have patients in the hospital from Ballycastle, Ballymoney, two from Ballymena, two from Cullybackey, Bandalstown, Toome Bridge, Crumlin, Antrim, &c. Last month I discharged a patient from Portrush.

10637. Dr. BROOKS.—Is it anything like the same proportion as in the immediate district round Lifford?—Oh, no.

10638. They are exceptional cases?—They are; the same would apply no matter where the hospital was in Ireland; people think a great deal about sending patients away from their friends, and no matter where a hospital is it will be availed of by the neighbourhood more than the more distant places. There is a very large extern, but that does not draw on the funds of the infirmary. I simply give advice free; the patients get the prescription, and must provide their own medicine outside; there are about 550 externs, but they have to provide their own medicine; they don't not the hospital anything at all except the paper the prescription is written on.

10639. Do you treat many extern patients for surgical diseases?—Very few, except exceptionally small fractures of the arm or collar bone, and small accidents.

10640. Do you think there are any changes desirable in connection with the county infirmary?—Nothing, except that I think it would be advisable if the Board of Guardians had power to send patients to me in difficult cases; the dispensary doctors do send them to me from a distance, but then a patient has to pay his own expenses coming, and I think it is cases where they are not able to pay their own expenses I don't see why the authorities should not pay them. Of course Lifford contributes very largely to the infirmary. Two years ago we had a large basins at Lifford, and raised £1,100, with which we put the whole infirmary into thorough repair; refitted everything; put in ventilating shafts into all the wards, and put up, as you saw yourselves, an operating theatre, and made it up-to-date. Then, again, at the Queen's Jubilee, 1887, the town bought, and presented the house next door, to make the nurses' home, the private ward, which is now attached and part of the building of the county infirmary, and in 1897 they presented us with an ambulance which cost £115.

10641. What does your annual subscription amount to?—I suppose it would be about £400 between collections and one thing and another; the milk subscribes, and the people about, and the churches in the town and neighbourhood.

10642. The County Council contribute?—£500 of my salary; that is £294, and out of that they receive £50 from the Corporation of Belfast, and £3 10s towards my salary.

10643. Do the Corporation of Belfast receive £294?—They do, and more.

10644. Do many patients go from Belfast to Ballymena; there are, at present, three patients from Belfast; we have between thirty and forty every year from Belfast.

10645. Is that from Donaghadee?—No; inside the boundary.

10646. Ballymore?—Perhaps so; some come from the other end of the town.

10647. CHAIRMAN.—Would those people who had family connections with Lifford?—Some, and perhaps it is agitated to say—have heard of me. I have a patient wanting to come in from Ballymena, and won't come until my arm is well. I have not been in Ballymena since I was at school there as a boy.

10648. Dr. BROOKS.—Are your funds ample?—This year we had a balance, for the first time, of £30 out and above our expenditure. Mrs. J. M. Becher presented £2,000 to the infirmary, to be (granted in condition of the infirmary remaining in Lifford) if it is removed from Lifford that is forfeited.

10649. Do you get many patients from the County Down?—Forty or fifty a year, and these patients must pay 10s. a week to come in; that is understood.

10650. You won't admit a person free from the County Down?—No.

10651. Would you suggest any changes in reference to that?—Yes; I went to the County Council of Down twice on a deputation; the first time they were rather against us, but the last time they appeared inclined to meet us, partly when they saw the names and residence of the patients who came, and as by the Local Government Act it is perfectly competent for them to agree with the Antrim Council to arrange for these patients, the County Antrim Council, at the last meeting of the Board of Management, asked could we suggest what should be done. I suggested we should go in for a policy of reciprocity—the County Down Council should give 10s. a week for their patients and we should give 10s. a week for any Antrim ones who went into Down; but if a patient paid anything for his keep that was to be deducted from the 10s. charged to the County Down, and vice versa; it is only in preliminary negotiations at present.

10652. Do you think that would meet the case?—I think it would, because by the Act there would be a member of the County Down Council on the Board of Management of the County Antrim Infirmary, the same is at present with the Belfast Corporation—Dr. O'Donnell represents the Corporation of Belfast on the Infirmary Board.

10653. You have an ambulance in connection with your infirmary?—Yes, it was given to us.

10654. Have you any trouble in the working of it?—It is used fairly about the neighbourhood, but not at any distance, because we have to charge for the hiring of it—make the patient's friends pay. That, I think, could also be well managed if they allowed us a grant for the expense of hiring so as to allow the patients to be brought in free; it is a very fine ambulance, and I think it is a pity it is not more used.

10655. I don't think it is a general thing in connection with county infirmaries; you are rather exceptional?—Yes; we make the patients pay the hiring of it, but even that sometimes proves a poor people who have to be brought in.

10656. Should the County Council have power to defray all necessary expenses of the infirmary leaving the subscriptions for improvements and matters of that kind?—I think it would be better.

10657. You think it would really work better?—I do.

10658. You are in a wealthy district, and probably have a larger number of subscriptions than most county infirmaries in Ireland?—Perhaps so; Lisburn is a very large manufacturing centre, and the workers in the mills not only subscribe freely, but the owners of the mills do.

10659. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you think that would not have the effect of closing up private contributions?—I would think not, because the private contributor would be still a governor and have a right to recommend; he would get value for his money.

10660. Dr. BROWN.—It was mentioned about a patient from Lisburn Union having been sent to Belfast for an operation; could that case have been well enough treated at Lisburn?—Yes; I am connected by telephone with Belfast; I have a very large consulting staff; Professor Sinclair is the consulting surgeon; Dr. Caldwell of the Royal Infirmary, Dr. Cecil Shaw is the ophthalmic surgeon, and Dr. Campbell is the gynaecologist. Those are all honorary, but they are available at short intervals. I have a telephone that was put in by a private friend. A case of appendicitis was sent by a local medical man to the Royal Infirmary and Mr. Kirk, of the Royal Hospital, advised the Board of Management to send it back to me, so they thought it was crowded enough with their own cases. It was done so, and in the presence of those medical men I operated in the case of appendicitis. In that case of misapprehension the doctor thought it was better to send it to the Children's Hospital; I have a children's ward, especially reserved for children, and I am available at day and night; I have a telephone from the infirmary to my own bedroom; I have a large staff, and a trained matron, and a trained nurse.

10661. Do you train your own nurses?—Yes.

10662. You have no difficulty in getting probationers?—None at all; we won't let them have less than a three years' course. I lecture during the winter; give thirty-five lectures, and see that they are examined by independent men from Belfast; Mr. Kirk and Mr. Caldwell act as my examiners, and the certificate is granted with my approval; no nurse receives a certificate until she has completed three years' training in the wards and has passed an examination.

10663. CHAIRMAN.—How much has the present infirmary cost of recent years for structural changes?—We might say about £500 or £700 last year; the County Council have given us nothing towards improvements, and the house is indeed in bad repair.

10664. Is it an old town house?—It is an old house modified.

10665. It is not a property that the county would lose on if they were to sell, wishing to rebuild?—It would have to be pulled down; it is a good site; there is a good garden beside it.

10666. Would the house not sell?—I don't think so; it is built in a curious way, like an E with the middle part left out, and that would be very awkward; there have been so many changes made in it.

10667. At all events they would never dream of pulling it down before they sold it?—I think not.

10668. Mr. MURKIN.—At present it is not county property?—I think it has been decided that the infirmaries are not county property but the Board of Management property; I think it was decided in reference to Omagh.

10669. Dr. BROWN.—I understand the decision was the other way, that they are county property?—I am not sure. Of course it is a very old house, but we have improved it so much recently, except that it is a little overcrowded.

10670. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose you would be glad to see a good modern hospital erected?—I would.

10671. If such a modern hospital were erected do you think it would be necessary to keep open any other sick wards in the town of Lisburn?—Except for what you might call insanities, chronic infirmities, rheumatic cases, and bronchitis that would not be treated in a general hospital unless you added infirm wards to those, but as far as the sick and surgical cases I would say no.

10672. It would be unnecessary to have any other provision?—That is what I would think; my experience of the workhouse in Lisburn is that there are very few acute cases—I am excluding fever cases—there are very few acute cases in it, and I know for the last twenty years there has not been an operation performed in it of any consequence. In the County Antrim Infirmary, last year, I did eighty or ninety operations.

10673. You have a good exercise ground there?—Oh, yes, very good, half an acre of garden.

10674. For patients to exercise?—Yes; of course. I don't receive any consumptive cases; there is a great want of a sanatorium for the county into which phthisical cases can be sent; it is not good for the sufferers, and worse still for the other patients, to treat them in the general ward of a hospital, and if you crowd a number of phthisical cases in an ordinary ward I don't think it is good for the patients; some at home do make shelter, and open air treatment is greatly wanted for the North of Ireland on the lines of the Foster Green's Hospital in Belfast.

10675. Mr. MURKIN.—An attempt has been made, on a small scale, at Coolhill?—I did not know that, but I think it would be a very good plan.

10676. Dr. BROWN.—Do you know anything about the sanatorium treatment; have you any suggestion to make with regard to it?—Except what I have suggested, that the open air treatment of the cases would be desirable. I think that while lunatics should be sent to an asylum, imbeciles should be treated more on the style of trying to teach them something and elevating them something, on the style of the epileptic colonies in England. The treatment of the insane, of course, we need not go into at all; I have nothing to do with it.

10679. The cases I refer to are the infirm and aged people; to have a place where those able to work could be occupied?—I agree with you; it would raise them above the idea of being perfectly destitute if they were doing something for themselves.

 Dr. George
 St. George.

10580. Something of a home form on a large scale that would occupy these people when they are fit to do anything!—Yes, instead of, as at present, loafing around the yard.

change that takes place some central place should be obtained where there would be a good deal of land about it that these people could be kept, with the weather was good, in doing little turns which, perhaps would lighten their hours!—I quite agree with you; it would make them sleep better, eat better, and live longer, and feel that they had some interest in life.

Dr. ELIZABETH BELL CONTINUED.

Dr. Elizabeth
 Bell.

10582. Dr. BROWN.—Would you just tell the members of the Commission your views?—Miss Blackburn, the matron of the Rescue Maternity Home, is here. We wish to bring under your notice the cases of unmarried mothers with their first children—first cases. We have here a record of the cases helped in our Rescue and Maternity Home, 28, Malena-place, Belfast, during the past three years—thirty-two cases in all. Mothers—married, 2; in service, 23; in workrooms, 3; fever nurses, 1; in own homes, 1; dead, 1; fallen again, 1; total, 32. Children—living, 27; dead, 5; total, 32. The last seven cases on the list were women we kept in the Home after, and sometimes before their confinement, and whom we assisted to find suitable foster-mothers for their children. We found these cases the most hopeful, and two years ago the Maternity Home was added to the rescue work to keep these girls out of the maternity ward of the workhouse from the inmates of which place the girl was likely to acquire a deeper knowledge of evil, and come out later beggars, helpless, and reckless, and without a friend to help her or her child. In our Maternity Home we take the women in care to three months before the birth and keep them three weeks to three months afterwards. The patients pay 5s. weekly, or some lady interested pays, or helps to pay, the amount. We make it a rule to write to the alleged father, and usually the paternity is not denied. In two cases help was given in a lump sum, and in two the mothers got married. The keep of a child in a good home costs, usually, about 5s. weekly; this means £15 a year; a sum the girl finds it impossible to pay without assistance out of her small wages. Of the thirty-two cases we have had twelve have been helped by Dr. Barnardo; at present he is helping ten cases with sums varying from 2s. 6d. to 3s. 6d. weekly. We help the mothers to get suitable employment and to find suitable foster-mothers for their children; we encourage them to visit at the Home frequently. When in the Home, as patients, we keep them as much apart as possible, as even some of these first cases are not suitable for treatment with others. We like to make the mother breastfeed her child, if only for a few weeks, so as to strengthen the natural bond between mother and child. We would like to extend this period, and at the same time train the mother, if untrained, to fit her for better paid domestic service. In the after care of each case we encourage them, as I said, to visit the Home, and here again we find it best not to let the girls meet. We see that they visit their children, and if the child is at nurse, out of Belfast, we advise the mother to ask for part of a day each month instead of the weekly night out. We would like to look after the girls on this weekly night out allowed in domestic service, and perhaps teach them to sew, make clothes for themselves and their children, or learn anything else that might help them in their positions in life.

10583. Is the period that you keep them after the birth of the child from three weeks to three months?—Some of the cases we would like to keep longer.

10584. Is the difficulty about funds your reason for not keeping them longer?—Yes; the girl has to pay, or some one interested in her. It is altogether a question of money; some we could not keep. Some girls are in good situations, and would not stay longer than three weeks, and they got back to their situations, and a good many mistresses take back the girl.

10585. Dr. BROWN.—And look after them?—Yes; they are very good to them now; they need not to take them back.

10586. CHATELAIN.—Have you had repetitions?—One out of these thirty-two, and that girl was in and out of a workhouse in her childhood, and came from Hampton House—one of the industrial homes.

10587. That was hardly a case for you to take at all?—She was a very nice girl; we hoped she would be all right; she has a second baby now, born in the workhouse; it was another girl we blessed.

10588. Would it be at all attributable to the facility with which they can come and go to your Home and get rid of the child?—Oh, no; it was really this girl's companion was blamed for leading her wrong a second time, and she stopped coming to the Home.

10589. You did not take in any case a second time?—No, not this girl; she went to the workhouse. We have taken two second cases, but they were quite separate from the others, and counted as rescue cases; we got them out of the Magdalens.

10590. Are you short of funds?—No, sir.

10591. Miss Blackburn.—Funds are collected in the town.

10592. CHATELAIN.—Do you find that you can raise enough money for your ordinary working expenses?—We have done so; but it means a good deal of work for the ladies.

10593. You have trouble to collect it?—Yes.

Dr. Bell.—Dr. Barnardo helps the girls afterwards.

Miss Blackburn.—Some of these girls would not have been able to support their children.

10594. CHATELAIN.—Are you the medical attendant to the institution?—Yes.

10595. Do you happen to know whether your committee would be willing if the Board of Guardians or local authorities came to the decision to ask you whether you would be willing to accept first cases?—We refuse no first cases.

10596. And if necessary you would even accept second cases?—Yes; but we would not like them to mix with first cases.

10597. Of course not!—These would be treated as rescue cases.

10598. If the Boards of Guardians came to the conclusion that it would be wise to exclude all women under these circumstances from workhouses in future, would you be willing, as far as your institution permits, to accept all such cases?—Do you mean third and fourth cases?

10599. Every case in fact?—I could not answer.

10600. As far as first cases you certainly would?—Yes; we are just interested in first cases and considerably in rescue cases and young girls.

10601. The difficulty would be if the Guardians were not enabled to deal with the whole of that class there might be a difficulty in merely handling over some!—First cases are so much more hopeful.

10602. One would hope that one would see the lot of these chronic mothers of Magdalens children if such efforts were made to exclude them from smothering together without any classification!—Yes; even some of the second and even third cases are not so bad.

10603. I think you might talk it over with your committee!—I think so.

10604. Dr. BROWN.—Was it started altogether for first cases?—Yes; it was really started on account of these first cases; these seven cases we did not know what to do with them, and the maternity ward was opened not to let them go into the world.

10605. Mr. CHATELAIN.—How long has your institution been in operation?—Only two years for the maternity part, but before that we helped some of the girls, keeping them before and after.

10606. So you have not had any lengthened experience as to the value of the work you are doing; the fruits may be later on!—They may.

10607. Dr. BROWN.—Are the committee satisfied so far as they have gone?—Yes; and really the girls look well, and they are very grateful and thankful.

Mr. Oswald.—Some years ago a member of our Guardians moved, and I was a supporter, that the lady should be appointed a warder to our institution. At the end of a few weeks we found this lady was sending so many cases down to us that we had to withdraw her name as a warder, for one of the Guardians found that if these poor girls who went to this institution could not pay they brought them down to the gate and the master had to admit them.

10707. CHAIRMAN.—That is owing to want of funds, which naturally is to be expected. What we wanted to find out was would the Guardians be willing to supply funds if the machinery was well managed.

Mr. Oswald.—You will find we have plenty of machinery. Am. 17, 1902.

Miss Blackburn.—This House was in connection with the Midnight Mission; that was the foundation of it. Dr. Elizabeth Bell.

Dr. DAVID WHISON examined.

10708. Dr. BINGER.—You appear for the Belfast Rural District Council No. 1?—Yes.

10709. Would you just let us know what your views are?—In answer to the queries we received the Council are opposed to separation unless we are separated for all purposes, and to No. 2 question there was no reply.

10710. Are you opposed to the separation of the Belfast Rural District from the Belfast Union?—Yes.

10711. It was mentioned here yesterday that you were willing to be separated?—It was never put before the District Council.

10712. That was not the decision of the District Council?—It was not; the decision of the District Council was that they were opposed to be separated.

10713. CHAIRMAN.—Unanimously?—Yes, it was.

10714. Dr. BINGER.—You answer here *that the Council is opposed to the separation of the Belfast Union unless at the same time the Belfast Rural District as a county district is obliterated and divided between the surrounding districts?—Yes.

10715. CHAIRMAN.—You don't like too small an area of charge?—No, sir; we don't wish to be separated for Poor Law purposes.

10716. On account of the area of charge?—Yes.

10717. Mr. MURKIN.—You want to keep beside the back neighbour?—We want to be where it would be convenient for the poor.

10718. Dr. BINGER.—No. 31—All pauper children should be boarded out in unions to foster parents to nurse, and as far as possible boarded out to small farmers and brought up to a country life.

10719. You would rather have them brought up as farm labourers than mill-hands?—Certainly.

10721. You could do that at present?—It is only in very few cases it has been done in my presence, and I have been a long time in the workhouse as a Guardian. Powers to adopt the children extended, and generally to enlarge the powers of Guardians as to the boarding out of children, also to send paupers back to their own districts who have not worked at least six months in the union.

10723. No. 51—We recommend a sanatorium for consumptives.

10724. Do you wish to enlarge upon that in any way?—No, sir.

10725. CHAIRMAN.—There is one for the city of Belfast—There is a Foster Green Hospital; not on the river.

10726. Is there one in contemplation?—Yes, there is.

10727. Dr. BINGER.—No. 61—No reply.

10728. No. 71—Sick, insane poor, not destitute, should pay part of the cost of treatment; the Guardians should have power to set apart a ward or wards and fix the scale of payment.

10729. Do you think that would be largely availed of?—I think it would.

10730. You have a number that pay for the cost of maintenance?—Yes.

10731. You would rather have that extended so as to make different scales of charges?—Certainly.

10732. Would you say what the scale might extend to—from the lowest to the highest?—We did not think of that.

10733. Anything about the lunatics?—No; we did not say anything about that.

10734. CHAIRMAN.—You have a large number in Belfast—between 130 and 150. Is there a desire on the part of the Guardians to get them out?—There is.

10735. Dr. BINGER.—Regarding tramps?—A labour or task should be imposed on all, with a power to detain them until completed.

10736. Habitual tramps?—They should be detained and prosecuted as vagrants.

10737. Do you wish to enlarge on that?—I do not.

10738. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you speak as a professional gentleman or a representative of the Guardians?—A representative of the District Council.

10739. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the District Council?—Yes.

10740. Mr. MURKIN.—When you say your body is opposed to separation I would like to know from you what you mean by that?—We don't wish to be separated and joined to Larne, Larne, or Antrim Unions.

10741. Do you not know that there is a waste of forces in having a larger number of institutions than is actually necessary?—Yes.

10742. And if some arrangement could be made, I suppose you have sufficient accommodation for the sick in the neighbourhood of Belfast?—We have.

10743. I suppose you are in favour of boarding out children?—Yes.

10744. I presume you are in favour of sending inmates to auxiliary asylums or somewhere where they could be better taken care of than at present?—Yes.

10745. I suppose you would have no objection to sending unmanageable patients to a place where there would be some hope of reformation?—I would not.

10746. When you take away these several classes you would have hardly anybody left but the infirm; do you think there would be any hardship in having an arrangement with a central union where the people would have sunshine and air, to send them there and board them, the Guardians having control of their own area as at present?—I don't think I would object to that.

10747. If that could be done on a better basis and without any additional money you would not disapprove of it?—I would not.

10748. You would not have any objection to removing from Belfast Workhouse to a central place where they could have better country life and some little expense the districts—those chronic cases not in need of medical aid?—No; I would not object to that.

10749. Would you approve of the Guardians getting extended powers in regard to tramps—power of turning them over to the police—or do you think something like the English system of detention would be sufficient?—I think the habitual tramps should be treated as vagrants, and turned over to the police.

10750. The suggestion was made during the course of our inquiry that it would be well to make these casuals go to the police station for shelter, empowering the Guardians to pay for a night's lodging and breakfast; do you think that would be an improvement?—It would be.

10751. CHAIRMAN.—This matter has not been considered by the Guardians, so that the opinion you have expressed is merely a personal opinion?—Yes.

10752. If you had some poor sick and infirm people, and they were taken to Larne or Larnoe or Newtownards, would it not be a very expensive thing for their friends to go occasionally and see them?—The distance being considerable, it would be expensive.

10753. Mr. MURKIN.—But the idea I put before you was to retain hospitals for the sick and only send the chronic cases to the central place?—I understood that.

10754. Where they would have exercise and fresher air, and, if possible, better treatment?—Yes.

Dr. O'CONNELL examined.

Dec. 27, 1902. I should like to give you my views in case you come to some conclusion in regard to amalgamation about the hospitals, as that is the point I am best acquainted with. I am senior surgeon of the Mater Hospital here, and I have taken a considerable interest in public health and have had opportunities of seeing the system of hospitals in various countries—quite recently in America. I have just returned from a couple of months' trip there. I consider that Belfast stands in a position by itself, in regard to the subject matter of your Commission, quite different from the country. As regards the country, my views briefly are that, owing to the great decrease in population and the fact that these workhouses were built for a very much larger number, that amalgamation of some sort should take place; where you have perhaps only fifty people where there was accommodation for 500, I think some arrangement should be made, especially as I think it is quite agreed now that the children should be taken from the surroundings, that it is not desirable to continue children among the people who form the population of a workhouse. Boarding them out is a very excellent system, and would cover a good many of them, but the remainder, I fancy, or a selected number, should be brought to some central place and taught some useful trade.

10704. CHAIRMAN.—If the law were enlarged sufficiently, would you see any objection to boarding out all?—If it could be done, especially in the country districts. Probably they would be better to be trained as labourers, of which there is a great scarcity, than as tradesmen, but if required a certain number of them might be attached to the industrial schools in various large centres, such as Dublin, Belfast, or Cork. The epileptics will also have to be, I fancy, farmed out in some way, so that that reduces the number that exists still further. Then I am sorry to say that my view is that the population of this country is still on the decline, and will continue, and although I take a great interest in this technical education I feel the first effect of it will be to give a further impetus to emigration; we will have a great number of highly trained young persons of both sexes, and I am afraid that for some years we will not have the means of employing them outside Belfast, especially when they will not go back to the country, and I fear the effect will be to still further increase emigration; we have not touched bottom yet.

10705. Going away with knowledge—I am glad to say that they are going with knowledge, and not as formerly—without knowledge—and then there is no intention of coming back to this country. I gathered that in America.

10706. Don't you think that some of them come back?—Very few. I regret that exceedingly; so on this ground I am in favour of amalgamation generally. Having said so, I now want to state my opinion that although you may abolish a certain number of the workhouses it will be absolutely necessary to continue some form of rural hospitals for certain cases. Now, if I had my own will, I would start a new hospital independent of the workhouse altogether.

10707. If you got all the other inmates out of it then you have nobody but the sick remaining?—If you did that, with a good many alterations, because some of the hospitals I have seen are not at all adapted to modern hospital requirements.

10708. Do you think it would be cheaper to build a small cottage hospital?—Decidedly; you could build a one-story building, with good air about, and space, and a fever hospital, which will always be an essential.

10709. Do you think the sale of the site might go a long way towards building?—Decidedly; if industry began to flourish I don't see why these fine buildings should not be utilised and sold for a good price. I suppose it is outside the scope of your Inquiry to allude to county infirmaries?

10710. No?—I consider county infirmaries are for the most part hardly the use they were intended for. First of all, county infirmaries, as far as they are supported by the county, don't do the work as a sort of high-class hospital for the county.

10711. In Ulster have you seen them lately? we have been just round there?—I am fairly acquainted with them. I am a member of the County Antrim Infirmary for some years, but I don't speak of it; it is very well conducted.

10712. We have found many of them quite modern?—Many important cases in the old days were sent to the county infirmaries because transport to the large cities and surrounding hospitals was difficult; that has now gone away. In the county infirmaries you have very efficient men who are able to do a great many of the ordinary operations, and do them very well. The consequence is that I believe in a great many cases the county infirmaries simply serve as a hospital for a limited radius of fourteen or fifteen miles.

10713. Are you aware of many union hospitals outside of large places, like Belfast, where they have suitable rooms and conditions for operating?—They have not the modern conditions, but they are in a high position, and with cleanliness and everything else they seem to succeed very well.

10714. Would you like to operate yourself in a ward there?—No, certainly not; still in the country in a small union ward it would be quite possible to keep the place sanitary; there is no place so suitable as where every provision was made. In most of the towns where there is a county infirmary you have also a union hospital on a large scale. I certainly say the county infirmary should be quite sufficient for the limited population of the county towns of Ireland, and I see no necessity of carrying on two hospitals in a small town. So that the funds would be available for further extension of cottage or district hospitals. In regard to Belfast, it is a very large concern, and it requires a great deal of judgment in managing it.

10715. There are two main outside hospitals here?—Yes.

10716. Do they rely largely on voluntary contributions?—Altogether, or else on some small endowments.

10717. Is there a great difficulty to raise the necessary funds?—Great pressure always.

10718. A great many poor are treated in these hospitals?—Yes; but not the extreme poor, except they come in as accidents; they seem to differentiate to some degree.

10719. Has there ever been a question of getting public aid for these hospitals?—It is always a question existing here.

10720. I don't mean public charity?—It has been mooted in the City Corporation from time to time, but nothing has been done.

10721. The question has not been raised?—Not formally.

10722. What would be your view on that question?—There are two sides to it; you might dry up the source of benevolence if you had it altogether on the city or locally supported.

10723. Suppose you were to divide the expenditure into two classes, expenditure on what would be absolutely necessary and expenditure that would be desirable, although not absolutely necessary?—I would be inclined to take the absolutely necessary from local sources.

10724. And look to charity for the other?—Yes; we have had to build those two large hospitals in recent years, and it certainly was a great call on the benevolence of the people of Ulster and Belfast.

10725. You are not over-hospitalised in Belfast?—Not by any means; yet in fact we were in a most deplorable condition until the last seven years; if it were not for the union hospital it could not be managed at all. The number of sick in Belfast hospitals sometimes goes up to 1,200 or 1,500; of course a great many of the chronic cases will always be dumped there, but I think it is a pity that there is such a waste of fine clinical material as it is at present in the Belfast hospitals. It is bad for the students, because if there was an efficient clinical class there operations would be done on so extensive a scale, and the class of cases we have in Belfast—sub-acute—could be very much relieved and sent much out, and cease to be a burden on the rates. It would be good for the medical students and school and good for the man who has to operate and lecture; it is a great waste of fine arrangements. At present there is a fair amount of work being done, but it is a very small proportion of what might be done, judging from the reports of chloroform cases they had last year, it seemed only to be a little over 100. I would expect them to do at least ten times that amount.

10726. I suppose they don't aim at doing all capital or major operations they can get?—From time to time it has been talked of.

10727. They would rather see them going perhaps to your hospital or the other?—The staff there is not sufficient to contend with the number of cases by any means.

10792. that they have a very good staff—A splendid staff, especially the fever department, which was once provided for by your colleagues, and now very efficiently by Dr. Robb. The staff is very excellent, but the management is not sufficient to develop a clinical school and do the work that is absolutely necessary.

10793. What you regret is that such a good hospital should not be availed of for clinical purposes?—Quite so. In a continental city they would be sure to use that for the purpose.

10794. Dr. BROWN.—The fever hospital is clinical, surely—I am quite aware of that, but it will be reversed in a very short time. I really think the abandoned people should be put to do something in the nature of work. Then in regard to the fever hospital and your general system, I think it is a great pity that any better-class patient who has to go in should have to submit to what he considers the indignity of putting on the workhouse uniform; that is a piece of out-of-date clothing that might be very well dropped.

10795. CHAIRMAN.—They can have a different dress for them if they like, such as serge clothes; it is not at all according to regulation that they should be all dressed in proper grey?—It is a custom that obtains throughout the country.

10796. Dr. BROWN.—Have you anything to say about district hospitals in isolated districts?—I would be strongly in favour of erecting small hospitals there—set at a very great expense—and conducting them as cheaply as possible; they are absolutely essential.

10797. Would you suggest any steel?—It would be in relation to the population, but for acute cases I think you would want very few beds if you deal with your chronic cases in some central place; very few of them would do.

10798. Do you think it could be worked very inexpensively?—I think so. Somebody suggested that some workhouses might be used as sanatoria for consumptives. I am thoroughly opposed to that; the buildings are unsuited, and they are generally in the town, or on the edge of the town; that is not the idea of the open-air treatment at all—it is some place further out.

10799. CHAIRMAN.—Are you aware it has been tried at one workhouse at Cootahill by Dr. Moorhead?—I was not aware of it.

10800. His figures are very encouraging; he has open-air sheds?—There are very few patients there now. It is one of the places that I presume if there was amalgamation would have to go; it is practically in the town; of course it is on a nice elevation, but the fact of those solid walls and the prison-like aspect of the workhouse buildings—

10801. He has them outside?—Of course if you have sufficient ground, and in the country, that objection would be more or less done away with, but not for the sleeping accommodation at night; on a large scale I don't think they would be suitable.

10802. You would like to see some special hospital?—Quite so.

10803. Mr. MURKIN.—Have you seen the fever hospitals attached to the unions throughout the country?—Yes; I have in former days.

10804. Do you not think they would be suitable for small hospital purposes; they are fairly modern?—You have the surroundings—the environment of the old poor-houses there. I would rather start in the new, and not have a poorhouse or workhouse hospital at all; there is a good deal of sentiment about it, I confess, and then, as regards the buildings, they are not our ideas of ventilation, even the most modern of them.

10805. Still they are there, and it would be well to utilize them. Having these houses at hand, would it not be better to make the best of them?—Under certain circumstances.

10806. CHAIRMAN.—You remember the fever hospital at Cootahill; that is on the type of Omaha, Strathmore, and Rushmill?—They do very well; if you cannot do better, but suppose you were able to sell some of these places.

10807. And Lisburn?—They do very fairly. Of course I can well understand that the new boards are very economical, and quite right too.

10808. Even going into these little hospitals with identically high ideas, one may feel satisfied with them?—I think you could deal very well with acute cases in them.

10809. Mr. MURKIN.—You say the very poor don't get admittance into the hospitals here?—There seems to be some form of differentiating between the extremely poor and the people who are fairly well-to-do; the extremely poor have to go to the unions.

10810. It is for the extreme poor that these institutions ought to be?—Possibly, but the method of obtaining admittance—subscribers write the notes. The extreme poor certainly are not refused here, but there is just that feeling in the minds of the people that they are not exactly for the extreme poor except in the case of accident.

10812. Mr. MURKIN.—What staff would you suggest for one of those small hospitals?—I think one man would be able to deal with any place where you have up to thirty acute cases.

10813. CHAIRMAN.—The dispensary doctor?—Certainly; I am leaving out of sight that you are not going to confine so many chronic cases in any new place.

10814. Mr. MURKIN.—On the suggestion that we would recommend that hospitals should be retained in the existing places with thirty or forty beds, what staff would be sufficient for such hospitals?—I think one man can very well manage a hospital department with thirty beds and be in a position to call in assistance in case of operations.

10815. With what nursing staff?—Views differ very much about nursing.

10816. Go between the two; take a mean?—You want a night nurse, of course, always.

10817. CHAIRMAN.—A nurse matron?—Of course you want five of a staff, that is including the matron—three for day and one for night.

10818. Nurse matron, assistant ordinary nurse, night nurse, and two attendants?—Yes. That would be my idea. I don't know that you would get an economical Board of Guardians to admit as many as that.

10819. Mr. MURKIN.—That would be a high-class standard?—Yes; some go so far as to say there should be a nurse to every four patients.

10820. A good deal depends on the condition of patients?—It is a movable standard, because if you have one of these cases very troublesome—

10821. CHAIRMAN.—There would have to be that power in the doctor to requisition an emergency nurse?—I think that is done at present.

10822. Mr. ADAMS.—How many beds have you in the Mater?—We have 135.

10823. And how many in the Royal?—Officially, I think there are 305; in the same way we can put far more in as soon as we get the funds; we have sub-space for over 200.

10824. How many in the union infirmary?—I should say they are able to put up 1,500 to 1,600, but the number of acute cases I don't know.

10825. You said you thought the staff was not sufficient; do you mean the staff of the union infirmary?—CHAIRMAN.—I think he explained that he did not mean that.

Witness.—I have nothing to say but praise of the members of the staff. I mean if you commenced to open a clinical school you would have to commence to increase the staff.

10826. Mr. ADAMS.—Do you think the union infirmary is not a clinical school?—I am satisfied it is not recognised as such.

Mr. ADAMS.—I think Dr. Bigger can set the doctor right.

Dr. BROWN.—It is not recognised, but it is largely a clinical school.

Mr. ADAMS.—The Board of Guardians have given it a recommendation as a clinical school.

Witness.—You must be recognised by the licensing body first, and I am satisfied you are not recognised by any licensing body in the world.

Mr. WELCH.—I wish to take exception to the phrase of the doctor that it was a waste of clinical materials.

10827. Mr. Murphy.—Your views are with greater efficiency and also the lowering of the rates?—Yes.

Dec. 17, 1903.

Dr. O'Connell.

Dec. 17, 1902.
De O'Connell.

10814. You see a member of the City Council?—Yes.
10815. You are aware that amongst the officers of Belfast there is a prevalent opinion that the rates are too high?—Well, they are very high; they have been doing a lot of big works.

10816. You have heard general complaints regarding the administration of the Belfast Union among the public generally?—Well, it is a body that we derive a good deal of amusement from reading their performances occasionally.

10817. That amusement may be too expensive to the ratepayers?—I think on the matter of the rates they have done very well.

10818. Since 1899 the City Council has taken over the striking of the poor rate?—Yes.

10819. You have made some very good suggestions regarding the amalgamation of the workhouse and the asylums, would you be in favour of an amalgamation of the Poor Law Guardians and the City Council, the City Council taking over the duties of the Poor Law Guardians?—Some men who are entitled to form a better judgment on the matter than I am, such as Mr. James O'Hanrahan, hold, I believe, that it should be abolished altogether.

10820. CHAIRMAN.—Which, the Corporation or the Guardians?—The Guardians. But I don't go as far as that. I think the committees of the Corporation have quite enough to do if they do their work at present, and if there were more authorised committees in the union I think they could do more work; though they have quite a number of committees, I believe there is only one that is really authorised by the Local Government Board; there is a really weak enough for the Guardians if they do it.

10821. Mr. Murphy.—How many Public Beads are there in Belfast—the City Council and the Poor Law Guardians?—And the Harbour Board.

10822. Would a system of amalgamation of the City Council, the Poor Law Board, and the Water Board—

CHAIRMAN.—That is outside our Commission.

10823. Mr. Murphy.—At present a separate body collects the poor rate, and it is differentiated from the municipal rate; could not the municipal and the poor rate be collected by the same officials of the Corporation?—Decidedly; it would be for economy.

10824. There is a grievance in Belfast regarding the collection of this poor rate, because if a tenant goes into home in the middle of the official year he gets a reduction in his municipal rate, but is charged the whole poor rate. If the poor rate collectors were abolished and the collection of the rates taken over by the City Council and all the rates sent out in one document to the public, would not that bring about a lessening of the rates and more efficiency in the conduct of municipal affairs?—Yes.

10825. Miss Murphy.—Am I right in saying you have accommodation for 500 patients, but have only fifty patients in the Mater hospital?—No; we have beds at present for 255 patients, and we are always very close to our full number; we have cubic space for 300 all told; we have several wards for children that we have not opened at all yet through lack of funds, but we hope in time to have them. Our hospital of 200 beds is considered a right standard for efficiency in size, but at present it is not open for teaching, which I regret exceedingly.

10826. Dr. Bosom.—How many patients have you at present?—We have always over the 100.

10827. Mr. O'Hara.—May I ask you if the Poor Law Board and the Corporation were amalgamated whether the collection of the rates by the two bodies could not be done at the same post?—I don't see why it should not be.

10828. Are you aware that one of the duties of the collectors of poor rate in Belfast is to go from house to house through the entire city and ascertain who is dwelling in each house?—I believe so.

10829. Supposing now the amalgamation had occurred, could the collector of rates in the City Hall collect the rates and visit the houses I have described?—He could do it in this way: a rate collector in the Town Hall at present generally has an office and a staff and assistants, and that sort of thing, and why not one of these do it.

10830. Would that man not require to be paid for his work?—I think we pay them a great deal too much as it is for all they do; you would get plenty of people able and willing to take it up at the present rate of remuneration. I take it you mean about the registration of voters.

10831. Yes; that is one of the difficulties of the Poor Law?—Yes; I have an objection to the entire system of registration.

10832. Are you familiar with the scale of the salaries paid to the Corporation and to the Poor Law at the present time?—I am not in the Poor Law Board.

10833. Would you be surprised to hear that there is no comparison at all between the salaries displayed in the Corporation and the salaries paid in the Belfast Workhouse?—I would give the Guardians of Belfast credit for practising economy in this and other matters; they have reduced the rates; on the other hand you must remember that since the reformed Corporation came in we have reduced the rate very much of our collectors also.

10834. You have given credit to the Poor Law Board for economy; assuming they were amalgamated, would not the scale of fees paid to the Poor Law officials then be modelled upon the scale of fees paid by the Corporation?—I don't know.

10835. Is it not a reasonable assumption that they would?—It is rather a large order that would have to be thrashed out before any conclusion could be arrived at. I did not speak in favour of all of the Corporation swallowing up the Poor Law Board; on the contrary, I said they had quite enough to do their own business; it was Mr. Murphy that asked the questions on which you are putting your questions.

10836. Mr. Murphy.—The Corporation have a staff of collectors for the Poor Law rate, as it is struck by the Corporation or levied; would not one staff of collectors sending out the documents include the poor rate as well as collecting the rates, certainly, but Mr. O'Hara has raised the point that they have other duties besides. There is just one point I would like to draw attention to, that if there is to be any reform instituted on the medical side of the workhouse something should be done for the establishing of an efficient maternity. In Belfast we are in a very bad state for the want of something in that line.

10837. CHAIRMAN.—What maternity wards are there at present?—There is a small hospital down away here which is doing good work, but it is only a drop in the ocean.

10838. Have you a ward attached to your hospital?—No, none, not in the Royal; it is only the union hospital.

10839. Have you any externs?—Some of the students do some work, and they also do some work under the direction of the dispensary doctor and in Ballinacorney in connection with the Women's and Children's Hospital. In Dublin you have the Rotunda, the Convent, Holles Street, and St. Patrick Dun's; they treat quite a number of cases as intern cases; they also attend thousands of extern by sending out pupils to attend after they have seen a certain number of cases in the hospital and always under the supervision of a highly-qualified medical man in a case of difficulty. In Belfast there is nothing of that system at all I think. We have a great many cases in which the General has to draw attention to the number of poor people who are attended by handy women, with deplorable results. If we had a properly established maternity, with visiting students in their fourth or fifth year, a great many of these cases would be efficiently attended to, and do a lot of good in several ways. There is a growing want in Belfast for something to be done to aid and assist in this direction.

10840. Is there a disinclination on the part of the more respectable classes to go into the union maternity ward?—Decidedly, I think so; it is only certain classes that go in there. Of course some of the poor do go besides, but not the numbers that ought to go.

10841. Do you think it would be a good thing when women go into a workhouse for the purpose of having illegitimate children born; do you think it would be a good thing they should be sent to institutions under religious management, and that that class should not be received at all into the workhouse, with a view of rather taking away what is known as the workhouse spirit?—Well, I don't know; it is a very difficult question to deal with. These things exist in a great many cases, and I am afraid you won't be able to stamp it out; it would be well on the first bid to do something.

10842. If religious associations were willing to undertake it?—It would be no harm to try it as an experiment, but it would be in a very limited number of cases I should say.

10843. One would have to begin by testing all?—It would do no harm; it might do some good, but I am not very hopeful. In the same way about the temper-

I don't think they do very much harm. They don't seem to cost very much. I see they are maintained for 1d. and 1½d. a night, and probably they would cost more on the jails. I would not interfere with them.

10844. Mr. McBRIDE.—If that were simply confined to the strolling males; but when you have a lot of children going through the country—Oh, it is deplorable, from a sanitary and moral point of view, but I don't know that they exist in such vast numbers.

10845. I understand they do exist very considerably!—In America they hold public meetings, with thirty or forty thousand attending; they hold up trains and threaten towns; in the freest country in the world they can exist.

10846. America is big, and can stand a great deal!—This country has stood a great deal when it has stood this system of the Poor Law for so many years.

Mr. GOSCH.—The doctor has given us a great deal of information in general, from America to the workhouse, and he says it would be a good thing—as a Town Councillor he sits here and does not know that he has power as a Town Councillor, and should exercise those powers to amalgamate the rate collectors, yet when one of our poor rate collectors died he did not do it.

Witness.—I am only one out of sixty.

Mr. Murphy.—It is the amalgamation of the two boards.

Mr. Gosch.—Yes; the people of Mars!

Dec 17, 1885.
De O'Connell.

Mr. WILLIAM ROBINSON examined.

There are a couple of points upon which I should like to say a few words. The first is the necessity for legislation enabling girls, who have been wronged, to proceed against the putative father for the maintenance of the child; and the second is the maintenance of girls who have fallen for the first time entering the workhouse maternity hospital. The first point may seem perhaps outside the scope of your inquiry.

10847. CHAIRMAN.—That is the assimilation of the English and Irish law?—Quite so. At the present moment, as you are no doubt aware, the mother cannot proceed against the father himself; her father, or her mother, or her employer may proceed in case they are able to prove loss of service. The result of such actions are very unsatisfactory, because it is often found that the defendant has got no goods to be distrained, and practically the last state becomes worse than the first. If the father has promised support the girl may proceed for monies already expended on the maintenance of the child; but the mere fact of the father having admitted parentage does not entitle her to sue him for such monies, but only in case he has promised to help in the maintenance of the child. The girl who experiences most hardship in this matter is, of course, the girl whose parents are dead, or, perhaps she does not want to acquaint her parents. She comes from a distant part of Ireland; and I have many such cases in my own knowledge. I am Organising Secretary in Ireland for the Association for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. She cannot sue the man who has wronged her; she struggles to maintain herself and her child; she works out by day, earns 7s. or 8s. per week, and will have to pay 2s. 6d. or 3s. a week for the care of the child; she very soon discovers she cannot continue to work and she has to seek for the shelter of the workhouse, or, unhappily, perhaps, she enters upon a life of shame; many such cases, I am sorry to say have come under my own notice in Belfast. Moreover, I think the Legislature is guilty of a sort of refined cruelty with regard to such cases. Not very long ago the school authority in Belfast summoned a woman, who was in this unhappy position, because she did not send her child to school; as a matter of fact she was obliged to keep the boy from school that he might earn a little money by selling newspapers in order to help to support himself and his mother. My friend, who brought the case under my notice, told me that the woman appeared in court in about as many clothes as would stuff a rat hole; but unfortunately the case was such that the magistrates had to convict; so that the unhappy woman had to pay a small fine because she was not in a position to allow her boy to go to school. I mention this in order to show that the whole burden is cast upon the mother, and it is a burden, as I had said, made heavy to bear even by the Legislature itself, and yet the same Legislature practically allows the putative father to go scot free. Things are different in England and in Scotland. In England there is the Bastardy Act, 38 and 36 Vic.; and, very briefly, that Act enables, in the first place, the mother to proceed against the putative father in a very simple way. She can bring him into a court of summary jurisdiction; the court is empowered to make an order upon the father for the payment of a sum not exceeding 5s. per week, until the child reaches the age of sixteen years, or, in their discretion, until the child reaches the age of sixteen years. If the father fails to pay on the order he can be arrested and brought before the court. If he refuses to pay when before the court the court has power to make an order that the amount shall be recovered by distress and sale of his goods, and the father is detained in custody until the sheriff makes his return to the Warrant of distress. If the return is one of "No Goods" the court can commit the father for any period not exceeding three months, and for continued disobedience to the order since any commitment he can be recommitted. And I think, sir, that that is perhaps one of the very strongest points in the Act: that if a man who has been committed, still fails to do his duty, he can be recommitted. That is the law, very briefly, as it applies to England. Then with regard to Scotland, by a very simple process the mother can proceed against the father; if she succeeds in her case an order can be made against the father to pay half the cost of the maintenance of the child; in the case of a boy, until he is ten years of age; in the case of a girl, until she is twelve years of age. At the expiration of the period for which the order is to run, the mother, or the child, if it is not able to maintain itself, can ask the court to continue the maintenance order, and this is done at the discretion of the court. The mother, after obtaining judgment in Scotland, can recover as in the case of an ordinary civil debt. I may add that the statute abolishing imprisonment for civil debts in Scotland does not apply to a debt of this kind, because the sheriff, under 45 and 46 Vic., cap. 42, s. 4, may send to prison any person who wilfully fails to pay such a debt; and, by sub-sect. 3, the burden of proving inability to pay was cast upon the debtor. I mention these points in order to show that in England and Scotland girls who have been wronged have got the remedy within themselves if they wished to take advantage of it, and I ask the question why is this remedy denied to Irish girls? Perhaps on this point I may state, that two years ago I went on a deputation to the Chief Secretary on the very point. Unfortunately we did not succeed as we had hoped to do. It may be asked is there any demand for legislation of this kind. Well, my answer to that is this—it is difficult for those needing such help to formulate a demand, but they have done so unconsciously. Some time ago a girl came into my office in Belfast; she had her baby in her arms; she told me her story, which, briefly, was this—she was a domestic servant, wronged in the house in which she was serving; the person who had wronged her had promised to marry her; after the baby was born he refused to do so; she asked me what she could do; she said her father and mother lived in the extreme west of Ireland; she had come to Belfast to service; she had a baby, and she was unable to work because she had to care for the baby; she would not make known her circumstances to her parents. Unfortunately I was obliged to tell her that she had no remedy within herself. She was very anxious that she might proceed against the young man who had wronged her. I am perfectly certain that if the girl had been in the position that girls in England and Scotland are in on this matter, all she would have had to do was simply to serve a summons in order that her wrong, in some measure, might be righted, because I believe the individual would not have gone into court in the matter. Some time ago I addressed certain gentlemen to fifteen of the Inspectors of this society in Ireland with regard to illegitimate children. The returns which I got showed me that in twelve months 119 children, born out of wedlock, had, so to speak, passed through the hands of the inspectors; in some cases the children were neglected, mostly by the mothers;

Mr. William Robinson.

Dec. 17, 1863.
 Mr. Wm. Staddon.
 Dublin.

In some cases the children were at nurse; but investigation showed that poverty was at the root of it all, and in no one case out of the 119 was the putative father contributing one cent to the maintenance of the child. In one case—I give it as a specimen—there was a girl, aged twenty-one years, a domestic servant; she earned £10 per year. She paid 25 10s. per year for the nursing of her child, and she had 23 10s. with which to clothe herself and her baby. The father of the child was earning 80s. per week and he positively refused to contribute one penny. Now, sir, if the English Bastardy law was extended to Ireland I believe it would do an immense deal of good, and I think, undoubtedly, would mean that fewer cases would go into our workhouse maternity hospitals than do at present. Now the other point I want to refer to very briefly is—I consider it very undesirable that girls who have fallen for the first time should enter the workhouse maternity hospital. I hold that there ought to be a home or maternity house, call it by any other name, outside the workhouse, for the reception of such girls. I deal now especially with girls who have fallen for the first time, and I think that the conditions of commitment to such a home or maternity house ought to be that the girl has fallen for the first time and that her past history would indicate that her case was a hopeful one so far as the future is concerned. Now, I think, sir, such a maternity house would have advantages; in the first place the girl does not become a pauper. Well, of course, I dare say, on that point there is a good deal of sentiment, but at the same time I think it would enable a girl to feel somewhat independent if she felt she had not passed within the four walls of a workhouse. In the second place there is the question of environment. I understand when a girl, about to be confined, enters the workhouse, that for the period prior to her confinement, and for the period or days during her confinement she is associated with some of the very worst classes. She may be associated with those who have come in two, three, or four times to be confined. I think it is very undesirable that a girl who has fallen for the first time should associate with such. Again, sir, when a girl goes into the workhouse, she is lost in the crowd, whereas if she were in a home, such as I have suggested, she would have the influence, and the advice, and the kindly counsel of, say, a lady's committee, in connection with the home, and that would mean a great deal for her; she would be dealt with personally, while in the workhouse maternity she is lost in the crowd. And, further, I think that the ladies would help such a girl to obtain a situation; and the very fact that a number of ladies were interested in her would, no doubt, create sympathy for her, and the situation would be forthcoming. I think the Guardians ought to have power to contribute to the maintenance of such an institution, and they ought to have power, also, to proceed against the putative father. Of course I know they have that power at present, but whether that power would extend to them in the case of homes, such as I have suggested, being established, I don't know, but at all events they ought to have the power to proceed.

Then, sir, I think when the mother secured employment the child should be boarded out, but at the same time I think that the mother ought to contribute, say, 1s. a week to the maintenance of the child. Now you may think that that is placing rather a premium upon the matter of illegitimacy, but I think in this matter you have to look at the case of the girl and, unquestionably, at the case of the child, and I think it would be very much better if the Guardians had the power to board out such illegitimate children. I believe it would mean that fewer of our boys and girls would be lost to us than there are at present. These are the remarks which I have to make on the points that you have allowed me to bring under your notice, and I would commend them very earnestly indeed to the consideration of this Commission, in making its report. As I said before it is a question I am very much interested in, because, unhappily, I have seen some deplorable results following from the state of our law at present with regard to the maintenance of children of putative fathers.

CHAIRMAN.—I am sure the Commission are very much obliged to you for the trouble you have taken in systematising and putting your views before us.

10646. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—You think the existing laws in England and Scotland would be sufficient? So far as I am able to judge I think they would; they are so much in advance of what we have here; we have nothing here.

10649. You have something; not very much!—It is very little; the girl is known; I think the extension of the English Bastardy Laws to Ireland would most probably meet the case; it might be found some slight amendments would be necessary in applying them to Ireland.

10650. CHAIRMAN.—What was the answer you received when you did make a move in this matter already?—The objection was that most probably the Bill would be regarded as being a contentious measure and therefore there would be a difficulty in passing it through the House.

10651. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—There are so many Bills so passed it is very difficult to get them all through?—That was the answer I received; I have the letter of the Chief Secretary to me on the subject.

10652. He showed sympathy with it?—Undoubtedly he did.

10653. Mr. Monaghan.—What is the evidence necessary in England to secure an order of this description under the Bastardy Act?—The evidence required is the evidence of the mother with reasonable corroboration.

10654. I think the section states that it is necessary to show that there has been maintenance by the putative father. The Act should be amended so as to give the magistrates fuller discretion?—May I say it is not necessary to prove previous maintenance; as a matter of fact under the English Act the matter can come into the court before the child is born.

10655. Mr. Murphy.—You are aware that the rule of illegitimacy in Scotland is greater than it is in Ireland?—I believe it is.

Mr. JOHN GILL examined.

Mr. John Gill.

10656. CHAIRMAN.—You are anxious to give some views on the way in which the Lismore Board of Guardians regard this question of proposed assignment?—Yes, sir. Do you wish a few figures relative to the valuation of the unions?

10657. We have these; I don't think you need trouble yourself with them; but merely your personal views?—Respecting the suggestions of the Lismore Board of Guardians and of the Antrim County Council with regard to the abolition of certain workhouses in the County Antrim—that is Antrim and Ballycastle—we consider them worthy of adoption; we consider they should be abolished. Coming into the County Down, as you are aware, there are two Rural District Councils in the Lismore Union—that is Hillsborough and Lismore.

10658. We are not dealing with the County Down to-day you know?—How do you arrange that?

10659. We are not going into the County Down; we are going to have an early sitting next month for that; any views you have to-day will be as regards the Antrim and Lismore Unions; and so far as the rural district in Lismore, you may say anything about that you know, but I don't want you to go ahead and take the whole County Down?—Lismore Union is in two rural districts—one in Antrim and one in Down.

10660. Anything you want to say about the rural district of the County Down, in your own union of Lismore, but I don't want you to go generally into the other unions in the County Down?—Well I really cannot see how I could keep out of it to give you any evidence respecting how it would affect Lismore Union, the portion in the County Down.

10661. Well what would you wish to say about your own part of the Lismore Union in the County Down?—The Guardians of the Lismore Union are of opinion that the Belfast Union should be the county boundary. The county boundary should be exactly the south of the Belfast Union; that the portions lying around it, which presently take in a larger area or which should be divided equally between Lismore, Larne, and Newtownards.

10662. That is to say that the rural district of Carrickfergus should be divided into three parts?—Yes.

10263. That the county borough should be the boundary?—Yes, quite so; of the Belfast Union.

10264. That the union and county borough should be co-terminous in future?—Quite so.

10265. And the rural district should be divided among the three adjoining unions?—Quite so; Larnagh, Larne, and Newtownards. They believe that it would tend to lessen the strain on the Belfast Workhouse; and there are facilities in Larnagh, Larne, and Newtownards which have not been taken up yet in the way of accommodation in those houses. The Larnagh Guardians are not in favour of too much amalgamation of workhouses. It is contended by some that there should be only one central workhouse in the county; they are not of that opinion; they are in favour of abolishing two in the County Antrim, and Kirkcubbin and Banbridge.

10266. That is what I don't want you to go into in the County Down; we will have that all over again?—That (produced) is a small map I had respecting it; you will see that the unions are pretty near the boundary of the whole county; but that would be getting into the question you don't want to hear.

10268. We have all had the pleasure of seeing it?—And it stands on fifteen acres of ground; and I see no reason why Ballycunnale and Antrim—the balance of it that has into the Larnagh Union—could not be easily accessible both by road and rail; the roads are very good indeed; they are under a new system of management and the train facilities are tolerably good. It is contended by some that the Antrim Workhouse buildings should be utilised as an auxiliary to the County Antrim Asylum, which is overcrowded. But whilst that is a statement, there is also the counter-statement to be considered; if you abolish Antrim Workhouse that means the abolishing of all the officials on persons, and to make an auxiliary out of it you must have a new set of officials; that would not be reducing the rates. I am giving you the two opinions expressed about it. Respecting Larnagh Workhouse, we are in a position there, if needs be, to use that as an auxiliary hospital for certain kinds of diseases; we would take them in as paying patients; it is only about seven miles from Belfast. We are prepared to take them in on a reasonable per-wherever the charges would be—the staff is there and the workhouse is there, and we would only be delighted to have the establishment taken up so as to alleviate suffering and at the same time not to be a drag on the ratepayers. With respect to the rating, we don't like—I am speaking now of the rural district of the Larnagh Union—the Urban Council are fond of union rating, but the Rural District Councils don't like union rating. I am a Guardian for thirteen or fifteen years, and represent a division in which the last rate struck was 3d. In the 2d last year I was there as an elected Guardian, before I went in as an ex-officio, about eight years ago; the last year I held office there was no rate struck at all—I had so much money in advance—and last year the rate was something like 1s. 1d. in the £.

10269. Eightpence, according to the last published report, is the rate for Poor Law purposes only?—Very well; now we consider there should be divisional rating.

10270. For all Poor Law purposes?—For outdoor relief only; I would go in for union rating for all purposes other than outdoor relief, but outdoor relief, I think, should be divisional rating, because under the old system there was a better regulation. Under your present system at the end of six months the abstract is made up by orders of the Local Government Board, which shows the amount of Poor Law relief; this is sent to each Guardian; it is like Scotch metaphysics, except you are full of the whole thing you don't know anything about it, whereas under the old system there was a board hung up outside the boardroom door each morning which showed exactly who was relieved inside and outside.

10271. Why is that information not still given? Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Does the clerk not read that out every meeting?—It is printed at the end of every half-year; but whereas under the old system it was hanging outside the boardroom door—

10272. CHAIRMAN.—Why is not that done still?—I asked that question and it appears the Local Government Board does not consider it necessary.

10273. Oh, no; it is a question in your own discretion; if you direct it is to be hung in any certain place for the information of the Guardians you have absolute power to do so.

Clerk of the Union.—The names of the recipients of relief are printed and circulated at the end of every half-year; but under the old state of things a notice was prepared by the clerk, showing the number of persons in receipt of outdoor relief in each particular division, and how many were in the workhouse, and so on, changeable to that particular division.

10274. CHAIRMAN.—Now it is union-at-large rating; you still could give the names of the people receiving indoor and outdoor relief, but you would not be able to give more than the residence.

Witness.—Exactly so; but we consider the old system was much better.

10275. Therefore for outdoor relief purposes you would rather go back to the old system?—I would. Then again outdoor relief has gone up largely with us; in that respect we find that the Guardians don't take the same personal interest in the matter of expenditure—judicious expenditure as heretofore—there are too many of them. When it is union rating one man gets up and says that this woman gets 2s. 6d., or 4s., or 5s.; his brother Guardian seconds this; in all probability this is never thought about, because it is so small, and out of a valuation of £103,192 of the union, it is let pass, whereas under the old order of things when a case did come forward if the Guardian of that particular division was not there the matter was adjourned for the presence of the Guardian, and the relieving officer would be asked for a report and it would be stated at 1s., 1s. 6d., or, in an extreme case, 2s. 6d., whereas now it is a question of 3s., 4s., 5s., or 6s. This is, I fear, too largely done now.

10276. Have any cases come within your own immediate knowledge in which you think relief has been either unnecessary altogether or profuse?—I think there are cases that have come under my knowledge.

10277. Are you speaking from a general impression?—I am speaking from a general impression, but I would not care to put my finger exactly on a particular case; I have come in my mind where, under the old order of things, they would have been satisfied, and the ends of charity would have been fully met, by giving them 2s. 6d., whereas it is now a question of a good many shillings.

10278. Are you aware of cases in which outdoor relief was given, in which, in your opinion, no relief at all ought to be given?—No; I could not put my hand on that case.

10279. You are not aware of people working in mills and factories whose aged parents, residing with them, get outdoor relief?—No; I am not quite aware of that.

10280. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—You don't seem to be very extravagant with outdoor relief in Larnagh; you are only giving about 1d. in the £ on the valuation?—That is all true, but it is not a very poor district; I am not speaking in disparagement of any other district.

10281. Don't you think it an economical way of giving assistance to the destitute when rationed given?—I do; I consider it a very desirable thing; much better than crowding them into the house.

10282. While divisional rating is very generally advocated on the score of economy, don't you think it would work very hard on the people in towns; people frequently have to leave the country and seek employment in towns, and then if you went back to divisional rating you would put the whole burden on Dec. 27, 1903. the towns?—That may be so, but the town ratepayer has certain advantages that the rural ratepayer has not.

Mr John Gill. 10893. In what way?—He has certain business advantages that the rural man has not; besides, I think the Local Government Act was wrong in abolishing the £4 rating, where the landlord had to pay the rates. It is a fact that the rates are collectible from every person now, and hence obviates the outdoor relief is ostensibly given for the purpose of paying rates, whereas if it had been kept at the £4 business the landlord would have had to pay rates and that would not be taken out of the relief. We are also of opinion that the maintenance of lunatics should be defrayed by the rates instead of locally; I think that that should be exactly a state institution; I am a County Councillor; but I am not too much impressed with everything in connection with County Councils; indeed I would just exactly say this, and I say it fearlessly, that if a vote was to be given and my vote determined it, I would vote back the old grand jury, and I am a man of progress and ahead of the world I hope, but I would vote in the old grand jury and presentment system. We are also of opinion that it would be desirable to introduce a system of payments, by those who could afford to pay, to whom we give shelter, either in hospital or otherwise; there is a way of doing that—relief by way of loan—but that is not very largely taken up under the new system.

10894. You could not graduate that; you could not declare the relief by way of loan as regards one-tenth of your expenditure?—That is so; but I think the respectable poor who have not perhaps very comfortable surroundings at home—I mean sanitary dwellings—I think that if there was a system introduced whereby they could come into the hospital or workhouse and pay their way, it would serve a very useful purpose for a very desirable class of poor people throughout the country; I am strongly of that opinion, and have been for years. Now, respecting the class of society known as vagrants, those men up every day, and the women we have to deal with them are inadequate altogether; it has been proposed by the Licham Guardians to lock these men; that won't work either. You will find a fellow comes forward for his bath and says: "I cannot take it; I have heart disease." Then you have to get the medical officer to examine this man, but the medical officer of the workhouse might be a mile or five miles away. Is the staff going to wait there until the officer comes before this fellow can be bathed? It would require new legislation; a lot of those fellows are purely rogues and vagabonds, and the system of night lodgings is not a good business; they tramp from one union to another; they are continually on the road, and so long as they are able to find a ticket they will go on; it requires very drastic legislation in the way of corporal punishment to be inflicted on those men. I also believe that the old dispensary committees should be again established with all their former powers, save the appointment of medical officer; they were a very useful body of men; they occupied a cotterless district; they knew every person in the district; if the medical officer wanted a ticket enrolled the whole matter was known; the distribution of the necessaries of the dispensary was brought before them at each monthly meeting, and a proper minute book was kept; I am speaking from experience; I was secretary of a committee for six or seven years; the meetings were always held locally.

10895. The Chairman of the Derry Board of Guardians mentioned that he found that owing to the abolition of dispensary committees he got out of touch very much with the condition of the poor, not having an opportunity of knowing who was sick, and various other matters that came before them at dispensary committees; is that one of the points of view you refer to?—That is so. In the old order of things we fixed a certain number for each district; invariably half of those turned up, and where there was a fair in the town the meeting was held on the fair day, and always suited the convenience of the country people coming in; they did come to these places generally, and had control over the whole place, whereas the books are now sent from the dispensary to the workhouse to be examined, and this costs 1s. 6d. each time. Then they are laid down in the boardroom; some gentlemen take the one end of the union from Saltinfield and some Lough Neagh men sign the book, or some central Guardian signs the Lough Neagh book, that don't know a single thing about it.

10896. Mr. MURPHY.—It is a mere routine matter?—It is a farce, simply.

10897. You think the dispensary committees supervised the work of the medical officer, and that they were acquainted with all the needs of the sick poor of that particular area?—I do, and more especially in view of the fact that the Local Government Board are insisting on medical men being put into the country.

10898. There is no inspection now; it is a mere matter of signing the book?—The Guardians don't trouble themselves to look at it at all; they have no time.

10899. So you think it is a retrograde movement?—Yes; I don't think the Government, when passing that, had any mandate from the country.

10900. A great many experienced Guardians have stated the same thing, being of opinion that it was a mistake to do away with dispensary committees?—I would reduce the number of Councils or Guardians to the old figures; I really cannot see why two should be there instead of one; surely one man is able to do the housing of four townlands for Poor Law business. I also think that the Local Government Board should not sanction a very serious decrease of salary to a new medical officer coming in, in the way—the salary of the medical officer is £20, say; you give him one half of that, but if that salary is increased, say £10, you don't give back half of that; you still keep on to your £20; whereas I think that there should be any serious decrease of salary sanctioned by the Local Government Board, because I don't think £20 is a fit and proper salary for any medical gentleman to start his work; the Local Government Board has plenty of money; if they have not they can draw it plenty. I think they should sanction a salary of at least £300, and, while stating that, I claim to be a ratepayer's man, and then give £50 more if they so desire.

10901. Mr. MURPHY.—Don't you think that lies largely in the hands of the Guardians that they ought to start high and get the full half contribution? That is so; but there are always small men in every place.

10902. None in Licham, I hope?—We hope not.

10903. You say you are not in favour of amalgamation except so far as the County Council advised?—Yes.

10904. You have plenty of railway facilities in Licham, and there would be no difficulty in sending chronic cases to a central institution in the country where the reform could have classification and more considerate treatment—don't you think they would be better off in the fresh air with something to do instead of being caged in a day-room as at present?—I think from a humanitarian point of view it would be very desirable.

10905. And you would have no objection to the boarding out of the children?—None whatever, and them all out.

10906. You have forty-five at present in the house?—We are quite willing to abolish the school-teacher if the Local Government Board so directs us. The Local Government Board pay £26 to the school-teacher, and we asked them to increase it by £10, but they refused to do so.

10907. And I suppose you would have no objection in having lunatics sent to a place where they could be better taken care of?—We do desire that. Now, with respect to the old taxation area for sanitary purposes, does that come within the terms of the reference?

CHAIRMAN.—Not at all.

10908. Mr. Murphy.—You stated that you would be in favour of making the county borough boundaries and union boundaries coterminous in Belfast?—Yes.

10909. That would facilitate the amalgamation of the City Council with the Poor Law Guardians in one? It should be decided on in future?—I would rather allow gentlemen of more huge minds than mine to easily give you an answer on that question.

10910. If this scheme was decided on in the future it would facilitate it?—It would to a certain extent, but there was a gentleman, Mr. O'Hare, that I heard of a few questions that I was greatly impressed with—the difference in the salaries paid by the City Council and the salaries paid by the Poor Law Guardians of Belfast—and that is walking through my mind at a salary rate presently.

10911. Do you consider the salary paid by both bodies too high?—I don't like to sit in judgment on anybody, but I have a very great respect for the Belfast Poor Law Guardians, for I believe they have done an enormous amount of good work recently. The Corporation have yet to do their great work, if you take the tramways, for instance.

CHAIRMAN.—That is entirely too far afield.

1900. Mr. MURPHY.—You have made some suggestions for the relief of the poor; could you not make some suggestions for the relief of the poor ratepayer. You went in for abolishing one thing and setting up another thing!—Speaking generally, I am of opinion that government by the people is always dear government; that is the history of all European nations—where you allow democracy to have the complete government there will be increased taxation; that is the history of all first-rate, second-rate, and third-rate powers. The government under the old order of things—take the Grand Jury business—was an unrepresentative body—yet they did their work well and cheaply.

1901. You are a land valuer—I am a Poor Law Guardian and a few other things, and there are gentlemen in this room, who, if you wish to know my character—

CHAIRMAN.—Quite unnecessary; we are exceedingly obliged to you for your very valuable evidence.

Mr. G. R. WHITNEY, Solicitor, examined.

1904. CHAIRMAN.—You have just heard the evidence of our colleague, Mr. Gill?—I have, sir. There are one or two things that I differ with Mr. Gill in, and one is the advantage of districtal rating over union rating. Of course I represent the town of Licham in the Board of Guardians; I don't think it would be fair—I quite agree with the remark of Mr. Murnaghan that people drift from the country into the town and become chargeable on the town. Licham is a large manufacturing town, and the districts of Denham and Barnaby join it. There is another reason. Some time ago a grant was made in relief of rural rating, and one of the grounds that were put forward when it was decided that it should be union rating was that the ratepayers of the town got no benefit from the grant made in favour of the rural ratepayers, and that was one of the reasons why it should be union rating. I think it would be exceedingly hard on Licham that union rating should be done away with.

1905. I think Mr. Gill's objection was as regards outdoor relief only?—That would apply to outdoor relief too, because these people drift out of the country and become subjects for outdoor relief. I happen to be chairman of the Licham Board of Guardians, and I am there almost every day and hear the relief that is granted, and I can assure you there is the greatest possible care taken in every single case, and there is hardly a case in which they don't wait until the member for the division in which that person resides is up there, and it is nearly every case it is the member for the division brings it under the notice of the relieving officer. Mr. Gill is altogether wrong in the amount granted. 2s. and 2s. 6d. would be the amounts in nine cases out of ten; a larger sum than that is only given in exceptional circumstances, and only for a short time, where there is a large family and the head is stricken down by illness. I think if it is wisely given outdoor relief is a very admirable way of relieving the poor at the expense of the rates. For instance, you give a person 2s. 6d.; if you bring them into the house it cost 2s. 6d., and in the infirmary 2s. 6d., but if you give them 2s. 6d. and keep them outside, they are far better than in the workhouse, and cost the ratepayers less. Outdoor relief is not given unless the person is practically destitute, and would have to come into the house.

1906. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—It saves them the taint of the workhouse?—It saves them the taint of the workhouse, and is a good deal cheaper. We give a considerable amount of outdoor relief.

1907. You don't give much for Licham?—There are 324 people getting relief. The valuation is high, and it extends over an area of twenty-two miles by twelve.

1908. Can you account for the increased numbers in the house. In the last ten years they have doubled?—One of the reasons is we have an extremely good dietary scale—one of the best in Ulster. We revised it some time ago, and we have some lady Guardians on the committee, and they are very generous. I don't know that it is too high yet, but I know it has been going up. In 1892 the entire number of inmates was 135; now they are 243.

1909. CHAIRMAN.—Is not the chief increase in the sick wards?—It has increased in both.

1910. Would it be due to a greater confidence in your nursing arrangements?—I would not doubt but it would, for they are infinitely better now than at that time. Then there were no trained nurses, and they are all trained nurses now. There is another thing I feel strongly on: if something could be done to separate the lunatics from the workhouse, that a responsible poor person coming to the hospital should not have to go in as an inmate of the workhouse. No doubt the hospital must always supply the needs of inmates who are sick, but there are a class of persons who come in for three weeks or a month, and they should not have to go through the workhouse if it could possibly be avoided. It may not matter in a large city like Belfast, but in a country town like Licham, it would follow them all their life. If it was not for the County Asylum Infirmary, I don't know what would happen.

1911. CHAIRMAN.—You began by saying you think the sick who are not paupers ought not to be obliged to come into the workhouse?—Yes.

1912. But if we had not the permanent ones in the house at all?—You suggest that they should be brought to a central home, where they would have open air and everything of that sort.

1913. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—The old chronic cases!—Those people do come in, and they have relatives in the district, and perhaps the greatest pleasure that those old people have. It may be sentiment, but there is not much sentiment about the life of a person in a workhouse, and it should have full weight. On visiting days their friends come to see them, and if you take these people away to Ballymena, it prevents them having visits from their friends, and it is the only bright spot in their lives.

1914. CHAIRMAN.—Have you taken any steps to look up the porter's book?—I see them every morning as I go in.

1915. That might make an impression on you, but have you ever looked at the book?—No; because I see them there waiting to see their friends.

1916. Would you know whether they were going to the sick wards or the ordinary wards?—Yes, I ask the porter where they are going; they go to both.

1917. Our impression is going round and making inquiries into the matter is, that the visits are nearly all to the sick; hardly any to the aged and infirm after they are in the house for a short time?—Very often they take them out of the workhouse when they are dead, and bury them.

1918. That I don't look on as a visit?—It shows they take an interest in them. If you take these people away from their homes the workhouse would practically be a prison to them. They are as well treated in Licham as in any sanatorium. We have fifteen acres of a farm, and these old people are not confined indoors.

1919. You think the healthy people would be more at home in Licham than in Ballymena?—I am sure they would. Licham is the market town for the entire Licham union. The friends of these old people if they could not come by railway would get a drive in a farmer's cart, which they would not get going to Ballymena. In theory that system is good, but it would have a depressing effect on the inmates.

1920. You are afraid it would operate harshly?—That is the chief objection I have to it. I think the children should be all boarded out. If possible there should be no children reared in the workhouse if it could be avoided.

1921. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—You would be in favour of harmless lunatics being put in a place by themselves?—Yes.

1922. When you take as many out what employment would there be for these homes?—I think there are only about twelve children in the school altogether. There is another thing with regard to the classification of the inmates. I think something should be done in that way. There are people who get into the workhouse through their own fault, and they are very respectable members of society, and there are poor people who have been most respectable members of society, and something should be done to classify them. That could be done in a large institution better than in several small ones scattered about.

1923. CHAIRMAN.—It could be done quite easily if

Dec 17, 1908.
Mr. John Gill.

Mr. G. R. Whitney.

Dec. 17, 1903. 790 had one institution for the aged and infirm?—I don't think the details would be difficult to work out in any institution.

10040. You would find it impossible in a workhouse when you have so many different classes?—I would not say impossible; it might be difficult.

10041. Mr. MONTAGUE.—Don't you think it is a waste of money to have so many buildings in the county only partly filled?—I would say that Ballycastle and Antrim could be easily disposed of.

10042. Would you not go a little farther?—I don't know. I think there are difficulties.

10043. CHAIRMAN.—At all events you would stop short of Lismore?—Certainly. I understand that the Belfast gentlemen are going to suggest that Lismore should be done away with. I would personally have the strongest objection to that, and so would the entire of the people of the Lismore Union. I don't think it is a wise thing to make Belfast Workhouses any larger than it is, and it occurs to me the city of Belfast should look after its own poor, and not get up with the country, and I have an idea that in a large union like Belfast the country people would not feel themselves very happy with the class of poor from the city of Belfast who come into their workhouse. I don't want to say anything offensive about them. They are too intelligent many of them. If you bring country people to Belfast you will keep them up in the city, when they have been used to live in the country, and country towns. That objection I mentioned about friends coming to see them would apply in that case too. I am pretty intimately acquainted with the manner in which the Belfast workhouse is managed. There is a very enterprising daily press in Belfast, and it reports the proceedings of the Belfast Board of Guardians, which is always one of the hot-beds looked for in the country. They squabble with one another and with the Local Government Board, and we think in Lismore we are able to conduct ourselves much better.

10044. Mr. MONTAGUE.—You could accommodate 300 or 400?—We could. If you sent the county district of Belfast to us it would be the best plan that could be done, and let the Belfast city people fight out their battles amongst themselves.

10045. What do you say about the tramp?—It is a very difficult question. We threatened to beat them, and we got hammers for them to break stones with, and they broke the handles of the hammers. If you make such firm rules as preclude them from coming into the workhouse, they go into the farmers' haggards, and malicious burnings have been traced to them. It is a very hard problem unless there was some sort of a salary where they could be compelled to work.

10047. Mr. GILL.—Are you aware under the old order of rating that a pauper before he goes to be a small charge was charged back on the old division that he came out of?—I hardly understand what you mean exactly. For instance, a man coming from Belfast, do you mean he would be sent back to Belfast?

Dr. MATTHEW B. MACKEON examined.

Dr.
Matthew B.
MacKee.

10049. CHAIRMAN.—You were anxious to tell us your views about Poor Law administration and reform?—Well, my views regarding the amalgamation of workhouses are very much the same as have been given to-day and yesterday. I would think that Antrim Workhouses having so few inmates could be made an auxiliary asylum, as Ballycastle is perfectly unable to take the inmates of the other different unions. Also that Ballycastle, having so few inmates, could be used for the reception of children over five and under fifteen. My reason for stating that is, I think it is a very preferable thing, if at all possible, that children should be brought up in an institution, run perhaps on the same lines as an industrial school, and thereby taking the stigma away from them in after life of having been brought up in a workhouse. Then I think Ballycastle Union could drop into Ballymoney; and Antrim Union could drop into Ballycastle, Larne, and Ballymena. Then as regards Lismore, Belfast is in such a congested condition, as I saw by the report of Dr. Rigger the last time, that they have no more space to build on. We have fifteen acres of land, and we have an establishment that was built to accommodate about 1,035, whereas we have only about 250 in it at the present time. This, I think, could be utilized and made auxiliary to Belfast. And if in addition to the Antrim Union we could take part of Belfast, say from Ligoniel right up along by Shankill and Springfield and the Falls on the Antrim side, and from the Albert Bridge, Ballybracken, and Newtownards on the Co. Down side, it would be the means of relieving the congestion of Belfast and utilizing the buildings we have already, because we have buildings that with a little outlay to bring them up to date, could be made commodious for a great many more than we have at the present time. Then as regards our numbers, we have 130 patients in the hospital and infirmary at the present time. If these suggestions were carried out it would enable us to be able to train nurses under Section 63, and we could supply other unions, and the county infirmary being in Lismore, it could be used as an auxiliary, because I think that as it is now the county infirmary's place has been taken.

10050. What do you mean by an auxiliary?—Supposing you could send patients down to it.

10051. From the workhouse, an overflow?—In connection with the workhouse, an overflow, and as regards the county infirmary, county infirmaries were made originally in order to do what the dispensaries and workhouses are doing now. I think by utilizing it with the workhouse, as it is now, it would be a great means of helping the workhouse, and enable us to form it into a nursing school. As regards convalescent wards in workhouses, I think that it is very much more preferable, if at all possible, that, having ground such as we have, we should have shelters instead of convalescent wards. I think having shelters would be a far more salutary mode of treatment than having convalescent wards, no matter how good they might be. In Lismore, we have a sandy soil, good sanitation, and good air, and everything that could be appropriate for the treatment of convalescent patients there. As regards classification, I would recommend that illegitimate children should be taken from under the care of the mothers when over three years of age, and not left with them in order to imbricate perhaps the weaknesses of the mother, and the ill-treatment and the disfigurement that they would otherwise receive from them, and that this class of mother should be separated from the other class of inmates. And I recommend also that old married people—of course it is a regulation of the Local Government Board when it can be done—over sixty, that they should not be separated, because I think that that is a great source of keeping old people from going into unions, simply the idea of separation. Mr. Watkins mentioned about having people in better positions in separate parts of the union workhouses. I find from experience and inquiry that respectable people are in the union workhouses simply because they are neglected by their sons and daughters when they are old, and I think that the fact can be borne out by inquiries from the people; and not only that, but those self-same people that are neglected and brought into this position have done the same with their fathers and mothers, so that I think if you would go into that part at all what ought to be done would be if there was a law brought in that would compel sons and daughters that are in a good position to support their fathers and mothers, and not send them into the union to die, and simply, I suppose, put in the proper time to get the burial society money, or something like that, because that is what is often done. They know they are cared for and looked after, and whenever they do these people receive remittances by their death. Now, as regards vagrants, which is a very wide question, I think the law requiring any inmate of a workhouse to discharge himself on three hours' notice should not apply to the vagrant class, and that a vagrant or casual coming in at night should not be allowed to leave the union for at least forty-eight hours, on forty-eight hours' notice, and that they should be engaged during that time in appropriate work, work that would not only benefit themselves, but benefit the union at large. Outdoor relief is, I think, a very worthy way of helping poor people. I would not recommend that outdoor relief would be given to thoroughly destitute people, but I think it is much more preferable in the case of honest, decent poor people, who perhaps have lived in the community, been respected by the community, and maybe are receiving a little assistance from friends and neighbors, perhaps from a church, that it would be far better for the Guardians to give them say £1 a week additional to what they are already receiving, say 3s. 6d., and thus it would save them the shame of having gone to the workhouse and fasting themselves paupers. You have had so much evidence that it is pretty well repeating it, and that is all the evidence I would wish to bring before you.

10635. The only thing that struck me in your note is making the county infirmary an auxiliary. I don't know on what basis that should be. You are assuming the Board of Guardians should remain as they are. The county infirmary now has thirty or forty beds; the Victoria Hospital is so adjacent to the county infirmary now; it is within telephone call, and a severe accident occurring in Rathoura mills, Glencore, or Lambeg could be as readily taken to the Victoria Hospital as to the county infirmary—the consequence would be that if these public works would subscribe largely to the Victoria Hospital, it would enable the Victoria Hospital to open wards that they are unable to open now for want of funds, and what I meant by the county infirmary being an auxiliary was that it could be used either for acute cases or convalescent cases.

10637. You would transfer it to the Guardians?—Yes.

10638. And close it as a county infirmary?—I don't think I would close it.

10639. As a county infirmary, you would dissolve the present board of management and put it under the Guardians?—Could the grant not be given to it?

10640. Not if it was an auxiliary workhouse?—The idea I had was that the county infirmary could be appropriated as a sort of an adjunct to the workhouse.

10641. Mr. MURKIN.—Is not the workhouse large enough already?—Yes, of course.

10642. What do you want any more?—For example, in the infirmary now we would want additional wards built to it.

10643. Have you not a lot of space unused in the body of the house?—We have.

10644. What would you leave that vacant for?—It was recommended by Dr. Rigger that we should add to the infirmary. We went over the body of the house and there was not exactly what we wanted. We wanted consumptive wards, but if we would get consumptive wards through the ground it might do without adding to the infirmary at all. Consumptive wards are the great drawback in the infirmary as it is now. Also we want to have space in order to classify the inmates, but if we could get the inmates wards cleared that would give us the space we want.

10645. By agreeing to amalgamation you would be able to get classification quite easily?—How do you mean amalgamation?

10646. The same centralization and distribution suit better; take the infirm and destitute and put them in one institution; board out the children, provide for the mothers, and get rid of the insane?—Then we would have space enough.

10647. CHAIRMAN.—Then you don't want to annex the county infirmary?—As there is a difficulty about whether it could be done, I only hint the thing; but what I recommend is that we should get additional from Antrim and from Belfast, and get our union enlarged, so that Lurgan would be put in the same position as Lurgan. All we want is a very few extra patients to bring us under the section for training nurses.

10648. Mr. GOSWOLD.—How many consumptive patients have you in your place—three, I believe, is your figure?—I suppose we have four or five now.

10649. You want more accommodation for those by Dr. Rigger's authority?—Wade.

10650. You want to have your workhouse increased and the wards increased for those three, I suppose. You would give each consumptive patient a room twice the size of this?

CHAIRMAN.—I suppose in your union and about your town there is a good deal of consumption?—We would have three or four patients in at a time.

10651. I am not talking about the workhouse; I am talking about the district?—Oh, there is a good deal of it.

10652. Do you think a medical man would recommend his consumptive patients to come into a workhouse if there is no isolation and no special treatment for them?—It is for the consumptives I want special treatment.

10653. Could patients be received in the workhouse at present, there being no separate wards and no special treatment?—Not to have them properly cared for.

10654. If you had such wards, do you anticipate that a considerable number would come in?—I think they would.

CHAIRMAN.—That is the way it works, Mr. Goswold. There is a shocking amount of consumption in the country, and very little in the workhouses, because they are not suitable for their treatment.

10655. Dr. BROWN.—You have no ward at present for consumption?—No.

Mr. GOSWOLD.—I understand Lurgan was built for 1,000 inmates. At present they have something over 200 patients, and why should there be any lack of accommodation if they wanted it?

10656. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you not think it would be better to have some central place for the consumptives where they could be isolated?—Yes, I would go in as readily for that as for a shelter. A common sanatorium would be quite as advisable, but where that is impossible the shelter would be more readily available.

10657. An institution to themselves would be preferable?—It would.

Mr. JAMES B. CAMPBELL examined.

There are fifty-five beds in the County Antrim Infirmary. The average number of patients last year was thirty-five.

10658. CHAIRMAN.—Do you happen to remember the greatest number at any time?—The beds at the same time are nearly filled up, I may say filled up altogether. The average cost is £35. I may be going over some of the figures that our surgeon gave. The cost to the county is £20—that is, we get £500 from the county, and portion of that £500 is paid by Belfast. We get also the surgeon's salary. The rest is made up largely by subscriptions from Lurgan people—the mills and the fishermen of Lurgan—and also by some donations; for instance, Mrs. Rathour gave £1,000. Owing to being so near Belfast, we certainly have the advantage of having some eminent men on the consulting staff. We have four—Professor Sinclair, Dr. Caldwell, Dr. Cecil Brown, and Dr. John Campbell—and these men are always available; they offer their services gratuitously, and it is no cost at all to the infirmary. With regard to the cases of accidents and others, I happen to be manager of a mill in which we have about a thousand workers. We could not treat the cases, or at least get them treated in the same way as now if the infirmary were not available. We can simply telephone to the infirmary saying the cases are going up, and we can have them up inside five minutes. The same applies to another large mill and several small factories, and Hillside will not be more than ten minutes from the infirmary. Some of the accidents may be treated in other places if the infirmary were separated from the workhouse. A few cases may be treated in the workhouse hospital. I don't know whether the others could or not. We have a splendid operating room—I suppose as good as any in Belfast—and we have a highly-trained staff of nurses. We have six nurses, and the certificate granted by the County Antrim Infirmary is now accepted by the Local Government Board. We get a great deal of help from the people about us. For instance, a lady came in; she saw the rooms wanted papering; she ordered them to be papered at once, and a good deal of money has been spent by local people that way.

Dec. 17, 1943
 Mr. James B. Connelley

10589. There is a good deal of local interest in it—
There is a good deal of local interest in it; we raised $1,800 the year before last.

10660. And you got a present of an ambulance?—
Yes; £1,200 was spent in the renovation of the house.
I don't know who built the house originally; it was a very old institution. I rather think it was built by subscriptions. Anyway it has been kept up for the last thirty years entirely by local subscriptions. There has been no charge whatever for keeping it up on the county or on the Government.

10862. Was the county infirmary always at Lisburn? —I believe it is there 100 years and over.

10902. How long has it been in the same locality?—
I believe all that time.

10963. Not in the same house, was it?—In the same house: the house has been enlarged.

10964. Was it built for that purpose or had it been used for some other purpose?—If it had been used for other purposes the house must have been gutted and adapted for the purpose.

Mr. Williams.—It was constituted under an Act of the old Irish Parliament.

Witness.—We now try to get the patients to pay. They pay from 2s. 6d. to 10s. a week, according to their means, but there is no difference whatever made in the treatment, either with regard to the dietary or surgical treatment of the patients.

19965. CHAIRMAN.—What was the total you got for subscriptions last year?

Mr. WILKINS.—The difference between £600 and £1,000.

Witness.—The £15 extra that the patients cost was largely made up by subscriptions.

10666. Do your accounts show how much you got from subscriptions and from patients towards the cost of their treatment?—The subscriptions, including collections, were over £250; paying patients, £31. It would be rather more this year, but our accounts have not been published yet.

Mr. EDWARD HOCKER examined.

Mr. Edward Meehan.

I am from Lisburn also. I was sent here by the Lisburn Rural Council, and also by the Board of Guardians, but I cannot add very much to what has been already said.

10974. CHAIRMAN.—You heard the evidence that was given?—I heard it all.

19078 Is there anything you would like to explain your views more distinctly on?—Personally speaking, as a representative of the rural constituency, we would like electoral rating. I don't represent Leaburn, and it may be a benefit to us where it is not so advantageous to Leaburn; but it is the opinion of all the Rural Commissioners that if we went back to rural rating with regard to outdoor relief, it would be better for the district and cheaper, because Leaburn absorbs a great deal of the money. With regard to this amalgamation question, I am merely here to represent the views of the Guardians and of the Council, and you have had their views with regard to amalgamation fully before you. There is another point with regard to the Leaburn Union; we have got thirty-four lunatics in the union, and the county asylum cannot accept them; they hang out now 10670. Are they partly from Down and partly from Antioch?—I think the great bulk are County Antioch patients, and we feel it a grievance that we have to pay the county-at-large charges for the Antioch Asylum and support our own lunatics at our own expense. When I see Mr. Clegg here, one of the committee of the asylum, I think he should take a note of it.

15097 Q. You would rather have them all transferred?
 --To Anstein. It would give them better treatment, treatment they cannot possibly have in the workhouse, and also remove them from the other inmates of the workhouse. It is not right to have them associating with sane people from day to day. That is one of the points that is vexing the Guardians at Lichburn. Ballymore, I understand, are getting money from the county for the upkeep of their own lunatics.

16978. I suppose a large number of lunatics do go direct from Leilbarn to the County Asylum?—I don't suppose we have sent half a dozen under the new order of things.

10679. I don't mean from the workhouse, but from the spit!—I have no figures.

20060. Is it not likely that there are a great many that reside in the barony, say of Upper Manassas, that 10937. The doctor thought $160?—I think he is quite correct. Then there is the extern department. A good many patients are treated in the extern department gratuitously. We don't provide medicine.

10960. You charge for these?—No; we simply give them a prescription.

10969. Have you any dispensary where you make up doses?—No.

10070. What is done with the patients in the house?—We have a contract with some of the local apothecaries. We found that was as cheap as having drugs in the house.

10971. You have some drugs for an emergency?—
Yes, they are all kept in stock.

Mr. BULLOCK:—The number of catenae was something about 700, testified by Dr. St. George, who gets no remuneration for that; there were 1,500 vials. Two or three years ago we applied for an increased grant from the County Council. They are obliged to give us $2000 as a minimum. They can give a grant up to $1,400. Two or three years ago we applied to them, and they granted $150 extra. At that time they wanted to give some figures how our infirmary compared with other infirmaries, and we found it was one of the most economically managed on the island. The only one that was lower was the County Clinic. It was two or three pounds lower per patient, but that is accounted for largely by the fact that the surgeon's salary was not included, or I am sure it would be brought near ours, and there has been a considerable increase since then.

10072. CHAFMAN.—Yonkers is a very nice hospital situated in a healthy part of the town, and anything done to remove the infirmary would be a great loss to the community at large.

10893. You would not care to be affiliated in the way it was suggested just now?—Certainly not; we don't think the work could be done in the same way.

Mr. WILKINS.—In the County Down side there are a great number of factories, and we take the people in go to Antrim?—I don't think there are very many. I am speaking of lunatics in the workhouse. That is the point I wish to accentuate. They cannot possibly be properly treated in the body of the home.

19061. Dr. BIGGIE.—Are you a County Councillor?—
I am.

1968. Did you bring this before the County Council?—Frequently; but I am not on the asylum committee. If it could be brought about that Antrim could be done away with as a workhouse, and made it an auxiliary asylum, there might be room got for these lunatics. It is close to where the asylum is, but there is the question of cost brought up before you by Mr. McCann; but it is a very burning question in Loughrea.

10295. Mr. M. K. KAGANIAN, an Eastern European, says: "The Government is about to be in some position as you say; they have an equal number. How can you say other than that? I suggest—The American people would be perfectly satisfied to contribute the Government would be perfectly satisfied to contribute per head for a sanatorium for consumptive if it were established anywhere in the province. They would be satisfied to contribute to the location of it, and pay the way for the patients they send there. Because it is not a property grievance, that consumptive patients are not properly treated in union workhouses. As regards children, send them out; take them away from the associations of the workhouse."

10989. You would be in favour also of having some place to which to send the unmarried about to be mothers?—That is a thing that was not considered at the time that we were looking over the report. I don't think there are many in Lisbon at present. We think Ballynacree would be a proper place to send children to if it were done away with.

10605. Don't you think Antrim could do with less than five workhorses?—Our idea is to get rid of two of them at the present time.

20088. Considering that the number of the infirm is so small, do you not think a lesser number than five would be sufficient?—Certainly; one house would accommodate them all very well, but then there is the sentimental idea after all. I don't know whether we can take sentiment into consideration in treating the poor.

18887. CHAIRMAN.—Certainly!—The removing of them from their own district, where they would not be in touch with their people, would be a hardship.

10082. Mr. MURKIN.—You are to consider the advantage and disadvantages, and let us see where the balance lies?—I should not like to remove these old people away from the district in which they have been living all their lives.

10083. If that view is general there cannot be any change at all. You are willing to take the Ballymena and Antrim people away, why not go a little further?—That is not a very severe journey.

10084. CHAIRMAN.—From Licharn would not be very severe?—I don't know. What first rose in my mind was the small number of people that were in these two unions, and the officials were as many as could have taken care of five times as many. That was what weighed with me at the time.

10085. Mr. MURKIN.—A proper thing to weigh with you, but do you not think it might be carried a little further?—That is the only point I see—the sentimental idea of taking the people away from the district they are living in. Friends come in to see them occasionally, and occasionally they discharge themselves, and go on for a few days and come back again.

10087. That would do away with the sentimental grievance you refer to?—I don't think it would ever be carried out satisfactorily. They would not get the same care in the country as in the house. Old people are hard to deal with, and if you board them out, the country people could not get up with them. They get fretted in their ideas. That would not arise in the union. They are satisfied with their treatment there.

10088. Have you any suggestion to make about the tramps?—I think if the English system was brought in it might minimise the number of tramps.

10089. The power of detention?—For three days, and give them work to do. I was at the conference at Ballymena, and I was of opinion that it could be got over in another way: if the unions would communicate one with another when certain tramps passed through their union, and were expected to land at another union next evening. I understood the law is they could be arrested as vagrants.

10090. Some unions tried that for a while, but it was not effective?—Ballymena, Ballymoney, and Antrim are better situated for trying it. In Ballymena at the present time they have practically very few tramps coming in and out. I don't know what drastic measures should be taken.

10091. We found that was the case in another union in Cavan?—At the same time I think those tramps should be either in the workhouse or under some detention. It would never do to have them wandering about the country, sleeping behind haystacks, and in farmyards, and running a chance of doing all sorts of damage.

10092. That is one of the difficulties. Some gentlemen have said it was better as an insurance against these dangers to have a shelter for them?—I am perfectly agreeable to that, but if we could come at any plan to prevent them adopting the profession of a tramp in the first instance, it would meet the evil, but I don't see how it is to be done.

10093. If the practices were adopted that when a tramp became regular in his visits he should be sent to the police station, would not that be a deterrent?—That would, of course. That was the idea we were thinking of in Licharn, but it has not been carried out. A great deal depends on the master of the workhouse and the porter. If a man comes back within a month they can bring him up before the police, but they won't do it. If there was a premium put on every tramp they caught something might be done. I don't care how a man disguises himself, I don't see any difficulty in telling him again at the end of the month, if you look at him particularly in the first instance. I don't see how any two men could not prove to him at the end of the month.

10094. If he makes a big circuit of the country it might be a year or two before he came back?—In a year or two he would be perfectly free, but I don't know; I think the law is that they must not present themselves again within a month.

10095. CHAIRMAN.—Have you ever spoken to the resident medical superintendent of the asylum with regard to your lunatics?—We have sent for forms, and they always send back word that there is no room.

10096. Have you ever visited the asylum yourself?—I have not.

10097. Dr. BROWN.—I think you made one mistake in regard to the lunatics in Ballymena Workhouse: you said they were paid for by the county?—Are there not some sent there?

10098. These are the county-at-large lunatics, and the Belfast lunatics that are paid for, but their own lunatics are a union charge?—That constitutes the grievance.

10099. You are not treated so unfairly?—I don't say we are, but it is a thing that ought not to be.

10100. Mr. O'NEILL.—You say your lunatics are associated with other lunatics in the Licharn Workhouse: is that so?—I understand they are in the infirmary ward, along with those who are not lunatics.

Mr. PHILIP JORDAN EXAMINED.

Not to waste your time and that of the Commission, there is one thing the witness omitted, that is with reference to the deportation of paupers across the Channel.

10101. Mr. MURKIN.—Have you many in your union of that class?—We get a good many now and again that have served their day in England and Scotland, and we have to pay their carriage back again to Licharn.

10102. Does any inquiry be made as to the length of time these people have been away?—If they have one year in any union and five years in the country they cannot depart them?—They have sent them back after thirty years' service.

10103. Some inquiry ought to be made. It would be worth the while of the Guardians to test a case?—We are powerless in the matter.

10104. Are those cases coming on now and again?—There have been none for a short time.

10105. Have there been any for the last three years?—I won't say. There are none to my knowledge.

CHAIRMAN.—There is a new Act, you know, and very likely that grievance has disappeared.

Mr. Philip Jordan.

Mr. WILLIAM WALKER EXAMINED.

I might say that the evidence to be given by this commission, which is appearing before you to-day, is not evidence which has been confirmed by the Board of Guardians; it is evidence which was taken by a sub-committee who will appear before you to-day. They examined the visiting and resident superintendents, the relieving officer, and school-teachers, and the assistant master, and that, in conjunction with their own personal observation, extending in some cases over 45 years, is what will be laid before the Commission. I may state on this question of amalgamation we are absolutely unanimous that there are no adjacent workhouses called for any purpose that the Belfast Board of Guardians might apply them to. We believe that if the Government, as the Government should, provide special treatment in a specially equipped institution for epileptics, of whom we have fifty-six, and I may say that is within the region of practical accomplishment, because two years ago the Belfast Board was informed by the Local Government Board that a private subscriber had offered to build a place, provided the several unions would amalgamate for the purpose of maintaining their epileptics, but unfortunately there was no central authority for taking the opinion of the various Boards, and I am afraid that matter has lapsed.

10106. CHAIRMAN.—The offer was renewed the other day?—We don't think the Belfast Workhouse is the proper place to house epileptics.

10107. Dr. BROWN.—Do you refer to some epileptic?—I am afraid it is very hard to differentiate between insane and some epileptic. We include all our epileptics, and if the asylum authorities took over the mentally afflicted, of whom we have 117—and may I say that the accommodation in the workhouse, which is the best that can be given under the circumstances, is an accommodation which accommodates the disease; they are surrounded by four walls; their only method of recreation is on a paved ground, and they sometimes get out on a little lawn that has hardly accommodation to wheel a wheelbarrow. We don't think we have the slightest chance to benefit the mentally afflicted, and we think the asylum authorities are the proper people to care for them, and if it is hoped to get an improvement in their condition, the only place is Parkisburn. We think we should be relieved from that class.

12024. CHAIRMAN.—Have the Psychiatric Asylum people been taking any from you?—They take them when we send them, but at the present time there is almost a deadlock owing to the accommodation. They are more than full. The only cases they take from us are dangerous cases, but there are other cases that are medium cases. Then there is a Commission appointed to inquire into this question of an auxiliary workhouse to be used as a sanatorium, and our hope is that that Commission will meet shortly, and that a sanatorium for the Belfast Board of Guardians will be an accomplished fact, before the beginning of the New Year. Belfast has a death-rate of 1,500 per annum of this disease, according to Dr. Whitaker, and the medical officer of health in an county borough over one-eighth. The number afflicted in Belfast is 4,000. We feel the working classes are becoming contaminated with this disease, and are becoming more chargeable on the rates, and we think if an effort was made to stamp out the disease, that by means of the convalescent building which is being erected under the Board of Guardians, in a few years, and with the education which the patients would carry with them, we would be able to stamp it out.

12025. Is this the project of the Guardians?—It is the project of the Guardians. We had a deputation before the Local Government Board. The Local Government Board was sympathetic, but a legal difficulty arose whether we had power to do this. We got the opinion of the Solicitor-General that we had power to do so as an auxiliary workhouse, and the Local Government Board have named a Commissioner to inquire into the matter. I believe the Commissioner is favourable personally, and I hope it will be an accomplished fact. The infectious diseases hospital now being erected by the City Council takes out the infectious cases. The Borough Council up to the present time have shirked the responsibility of infectious cases. That burden has been cast on the Belfast Board of Guardians, who have had to keep isolated from all other parts of the house—a very large establishment—and at a heavy cost to the poor rate.

12016. That has practically disappeared?—There are some of the revenues we allege against amalgamation—we believe that none of these classes we have dealt with are fit cases to be treated in a workhouse adjacent to Belfast. I have visited workhouses in Cork, Kerry, Kilkenny, and Newry, practically the one exception has designed them all; they are not designed to lead people to the better end of their days in a happy frame of mind, but to set as a penal affliction on them.

law?" And the answer is:—"No, there is no such thing as that; there is no limit: deserving cases all get very nice treatment, and are well attended to." Then there is the further question:—"Mr. O'Hare: It is not that; do you find yourself embarrassed or twinned by the law in giving adequate help to deserving cases?"—There is no such thing. Mr. Adams: "Then you have power to give a sum of money?—No." "Have you power to give them goods?"—No. "What is your power on the outside relief question?"—You cannot give them either goods or money; you can give them relief only in the workhouse." Mr. Mercer is asked what he does with the people, when they apply to him, so when he cannot give outdoor relief. He advises them to remain out as long as they can. The Committee felt that the evidence given by the relieving officer amounts to this, that when a person applies whose temporary relief would place on their feet again, the relieving officer has no power to give that temporary relief; he says, "Go and remain as long as you can without relief." The person goes to starvation, and comes into the workhouse, afterwards, broken in mind and body and a permanent charge on the rates, whereas, in the first instance, if a little relief were given they would have been enabled to remain out of the workhouse the remainder of their days.

12018. I think that relieving officer ought to be charged; he does not seem to understand the law. He has ample power to give provisional relief in all cases, and if he refuses he is breaking the law. Might I illustrate the position by a case I brought before the Guardians: a woman with three children; her husband was lying with phthisis; he was earning 7s. a week. I brought the matter before the Board, and the Board was informed they had no power to give relief because the woman's husband was alive, but as soon as he died—

12019. That was quite wrong; when the husband was incapacitated, unable to work, the relieving officer and Guardians had ample power to give what assistance they thought necessary—I am afraid the mailing of the Act of Parliament is not that.

12020. Well, the fact through the country is that?—There are five exempted cases, and Belfast is one of them. It is in Mooney's Compendium.

12021. Dr. BROOKER.—It is repealed, I understand?—It is in operation as far as the Belfast Board of Guardians is concerned.

12022. CHAIRMAN.—At all events that is not the law?—That is the legal advice tendered to the Board of Guardians, that unless the person is unfit to be removed, or unless she is a widow with two or more children, no relief can be given.

12023. Mr. MURPHY.—That is not the case. Where the husband—the father of the family—is sick and unable to earn a livelihood for his children, the Guardians have ample power to give what assistance they think necessary?—Two of the children were brought into the workhouse by the Guardians, when they were advised they could not give outdoor relief. To keep those children cost 4s. each, when a relief of 5s. to the woman would have enabled her to keep herself and the third one out of the workhouse; so that the Guardians are losing 5s. a week by not giving outdoor relief.

Mr. MURPHY.—They ought to stop that practice, and give relief wherever it is necessary.

12024. Dr. BROOKER.—Is there any resolution on the subject by the Belfast Board of Guardians?—No; we were advised it was the law.

12025. CHAIRMAN.—I am sure the Belfast Board of Guardians are well able to exercise their discretion?—Classification of indoor paupers. It appears that the indiscriminate housing of all classes of inmates, caused by lack of accommodation in order to classify, is a far to a large number of decent deserving poor, and in addition, the bad influence exercised by some of those who are old gail birds and stunted criminals tends to demoralise those who fall within the associations which the present system fosters. It is suggested, therefore:—(1) That different forms of occupation should be specified for those of varying degrees, both of age and condition. (2) That different wings or blocks of the body of the house should be set apart according to classification. (3) That stricter industrial supervision over those who might be classed as idlers, vagrants, or old gail birds, should be exercised. (4) And that the several positions of comparative trust—we believe that giving a position of comparative trust to a person who is a deserving inmate very often keeps them up morally—which be carried by pauper labour should be conferred upon those whom destitute circumstance or breakdown of health have forced into the workhouse. It appears, however, to myself, that the present method of dealing with what is, and can only be, classed as a periodic unemployed problem on the one hand, and a chronic destitution on the other, is mainly caused by (1) Such periods of "out of work" as have broken the persons in health and spirits, and indeed their first entry into the workhouse. The case which I mentioned of the woman and her two children is one of these. (2) Drink. (3) A depravity engendered by their early and subsequent environment. I believe this can only be met in a satisfactory fashion by establishing a series of farm colonies by county or district, but under central government, the persons sent to some to be transferred by the several Boards of Guardians to the central authority for a stated period, say, three months, and after that time the failure to remove at the farm unless seeking or obtaining bona fide employment to entitle the central authority to put these persons upon a black list, the object of which would be to prevent their receiving Poor Law relief, unless under an express resolution of the Board of Guardians to which they originally belonged. I find that this is a system which is becoming popular in England, the system of farm colonies. I find the Stratford, Poplar, and other Boards of Guardians have power to board out their paupers. Christian social colonies are throughout England. These men are kept at productive undertakings; they are taught habits of industry; they are not prisoners in the ordinary acceptance of the term; they are kept cleanly, and are made independent of Poor Law relief, and they come back with some occupation at their finger tips, and a desire to keep them from workhouse associations in future. I believe the present system tends to demoralise them. If we take a dozen paupers housed in a small ward, there may be one or two men of some considerable ability, but they have absolutely no chance of exercising it, because the supervision over them does not demoralise; they are all sent to the same occupation, and my personal opinion is, that the four millions of acres which, in Ireland, are absolutely untouched at the present time should be either started with re-stocking, as in Staffordshire, or else used to develop the resources of Ireland in the raising of agricultural produce.

11035. Do you think the Belfast inmates would be helpful material to set to work on?—I do; the Belfast unskilled labourer is an agricultural labourer first.

11037. I mean the men who are now in the workhouse?—I do; they are agricultural labourers who have drifted into town. The land is going out of cultivation in Ireland, and the naturally gravitates towards where there is the biggest chance of casual employment, and that is in Belfast.

11038. Mr. MURKIN.—Have you many able-bodied in the nation?—We have 99 able-bodied healthy men; able-bodied healthy women, 73; infirm men, 511; infirm women, 134. I would put the women on the same principle as dairy farming; I believe it would be a productive occupation, and I believe a woman, after three months' experience of it, would feel herself morally elevated, and she would be inclined to keep at work of that character. At the present time they get no chance of reform in Belfast Workhouse, and I take the Belfast Workhouse as typical of every other workhouse. Then again, I would draw the attention of the Commissioners to the superior women, as done to our industrial, as well as our service women, by offering the shelter of the workhouse as the only refuge. I believe that an old age pension of, say, 5s. per week per head, or 7s. 6d. per week where two persons, husband and wife, are together, will alter the system of the conditions under which the Poor Law system exists, and it also appears that a very little additional cost will be involved, for I find that for the year 1899-1900 the cost in Ireland was £2,269,045, and in England, £15,870,858, or a total of £18,139,903. It appears to me that that is a fearful sum of money, growing up year after year, and with no attempt to grapple with the question, we are not getting to the root of it. I think the farm colony will get at the root of it in Ireland.

11039. CHAIRMAN.—Is there any place in the neighbourhood of Belfast where you could start anything of the sort?—Yes; there is a good deal of uncultivated land about Belfast.

11040. Mr. MURKIN.—Will the Guardians take kindly to an idea like that?—Yes; provided it was under a central government. I don't think we should have the tramps or unemployed from one small union as a farm.

11041. Would county or provincial area be preferable?—I think county government would do better or Down. It appears to me that, given the establishment of farm colonies, and an old-age pension scheme, raised, both financial and administrative, would be afforded that would be bound to affect beneficially the future of Ireland. That is my own opinion, from a study of the entire question, and also observations as a Guardian.

11042. Have you been a Guardian long?—Four and a half years. It is not the length of time that makes people famous.

11043. CHAIRMAN.—Have you been studying the Irish question long?—From 1895. I have been in every borough in Ireland, and wherever I go, I go to the workhouse. I have always managed to get out of it. My own opinion is that that is my ultimate end. Then I deal with the question of children. There are, it appears to us, four systems for the care of children under the control of Boards of Guardians:—(1) Continuing as at present; (2) a separate outside barracks system, i.e., to build a school outside the union premises, and to continue the present method; (3) scattered homes; (4) all children boarded out. I may say at once that a careful consideration of the entire situation compels me to reject the two first methods. The third method is a highly successful one, and is very popular in some parts of England; but I am convinced that the boarding-out of children is the most successful yet adopted, and I desire to call the Commissioners' attention to par. 8 of report 3, page 11; that is the doctor's evidence on the question. The evidence of every person who was examined points to the enormous success which attended the boarding-out of the children. It is the evidence of everyone who was examined before that special Committee, that one out of every hundred only comes back, and then through distressed circumstances; whereas the children who are reared in the workhouse take it as their home, and whenever they are face to face with a hill they won't climb the hill, they will come into the workhouse, and take the first chance of going out and having one or two days' rambling about and coming back again; it is their home. We have children in the workhouse whose parents are in the workhouse.

11044. We have four generations in the workhouse the other day?—I beg to state that in the absence of powers to board out at the discretion of the Guardians, I would advise that industrial outside homes should be established for both boys and girls, so that when suitable employment was found for them there should be some place under an administrative authority, such as the Boards of Guardians, where boys and girls could be kept and supervised, and I would suggest that any deficiency between the net earnings of the boys and girls, and the cost of the upkeep of the home, might be very well taken as a charge on the Poor Rate, as I believe that the want of such a home often prevents children rising to a position of self dependence in the world. We have evidence, not only from our own observation, but from the officers—we know we can get any amount of boys out as messengers in the several shops in Belfast; but the net earnings of those boys would not keep them in the home; they have either to go to a doss house of the lowest character, and associate with boys of the lowest moral standard, or else they have to come back to us. We believe, if we had a home where the Guardians would bear the difference between their net earnings and the cost of the home.

11045. Is there no home for working boys in Belfast?—There is Dr. Bernard's Home; but any home of that character will deal only with particular religious denominations.

Mr. O'NEIL.—There is a home; but it is for boys that have come from an industrial school.

Witness.—The Committee entirely agree with boarding-out; the children get an association with their foster parent that very often keeps them straight. We have boys boarded out that are in positions of trust, not merely in Belfast, but through Ireland and England; and girls who have risen to comparative affluence. On the question of illegitimacy, which is an important one in Belfast, because for the year ended June last, out of 282 births in the Belfast Sanatorium, 283 were illegitimate, or 50 per cent. of those born in the workhouse were legitimate. I suggest that the law as to the putative father, dealt with so ably by Mr. Madden to-day, might be amended to enable us to adopt powers that Mr. Rodden suggested. In addition, I suggest the establishment of an outside nursery, to which the mother of a destitute child should take the child and herself until re-employment can be obtained, and if such employment is of the character of a domestic servant, that the girl should pay such sum for the maintenance of the child as the Guardians might direct, the mother to be allowed to visit periodically and to be under the paternal eye of an officer of the Board entrusted with that duty, that is, that the officer should have the responsibility cast upon him of seeing that this girl is not keeping the company of vicious characters whilst her child is being maintained at the expense of the rates, the officer should stand in loco parentis, and see that the girl kept absolutely straight.

11036. It would be a rather difficult task—I am afraid the very difficulty of it makes it the more necessary.

11037. If a girl were at service in a private house would it not be rather objectionable having a man as her parent looking around after her?—It could be done in this way: that she should have to report at certain times in the month where the child was, or at some other place.

11038. Mr. MURKINMAN.—Do you not think a reformatory under religious auspices would be better?—I do not; there is too much of a penalty attached to the girl, while the putative father gets off scot free. I think girls who lapse come, not from vicious habits, but because they were raised—girls of that sort should be taught that they are to take their place in society again without any degrading stain on them; they should not be made sensitive to public opinion. A girl who feels herself sensitive to public opinion in these cases never straightens her back again; whereas if she is kept straight for a little while she will continue in that straight path. I am of opinion that day nurseries at present in existence might be utilised for that purpose, the home, of course, being supplied, the Guardians to pay the cost of upkeep and to supervise the children; and in the case of cripples I advise that all cripples should be transferred to a suitable home, where some industrial training should be afforded them. I deal with the question of night shelters. In a big city like Belfast there are always a number of people temporarily straitened: we have had whole families admitted to the workhouse.

11040. At present these people either have to go to the workhouse or else stay outside in the open air?—Yes.

11041. Are they found by the police sheltering in places?—There are not many cases of that sort. They come up and loiter about the gate of the workhouse, and if the relieving officer cannot be found—as he cannot always be found—and the master is not available, they have to remain there until admitted by the night watchman or the master.

11042. Could not the assistant master act?—He could; but the master has the responsibility cast on him.

11043. But these people should not be kept in the rain while the master is spending an evening out?—That is a question of administration in which we are defective. I am afraid we do keep them exposed to the elements. That could be got over by building a temporary hut—a wooden hut at the gate.

11044. In a union like Belfast you would have some officer competent if the master was sick—you would have a temporary officer?—We have an assistant master and matron.

11045. Could not some officer be always present to deal with cases?—That is true in theory, but we don't find it works in practice. There is no regulation for their attending them. If the Board of Guardians framed a regulation that as soon as a person applied to the gatekeeper for admission the master or his representative should be sent for—11046. The master should always leave word if he was going away.

Mr. Robt.—The arrangement is that some officer is always on duty up to 12 o'clock at night. They are not kept waiting outside the gate up to that time.

11047. Did you ever call the attention of the police to the people?—Yes, and they will take no action. On the question of the treatment of the sick, I desire to say that in the Belfast Infirmary the treatment has early improved both in accommodation, administration, and medical and nursing attendance within the past 40 years. That is the only period for which I can speak from observation. The number of sick treated in the infirmary was 12,050, and it speaks volumes for the medical staff. I would like to take this opportunity of bearing my testimony to the fact that fifteen serious operations are performed by our visiting surgeons per month. They are of the most serious character, and they are performed with a skill unequalled in the whole city. I believe the number of acute cases treated in the infirmary are cases that the patient would prefer to be treated in the infirmary rather than in a general hospital. Possibly one of the points is the absence of that clinical material. They are not clinical material. They are human beings, and treated as human beings, and I think because of that the Belfast poor would prefer to come to the infirmary.

11048. Dr. BROOKS.—Do you not think there are many other reasons?—I think that is the main reason.

11049. CHAIRMAN.—Is it not an important reason that they have not rooms in the others?—They have not rooms in the others, and there is not the same attention paid to them in the others as in the infirmary. I can speak from practical knowledge of both. I have been having a court of inquiry at the Royal Hospital with regard to the alleged ill-treatment of one of my own men. I am connected with a trades union, and I can speak with knowledge on the subject.

11050. Hardly with knowledge of three hospitals—I can compare the treatment.

11051. Mr. MURKINMAN.—How the infirmary of the workhouse a better reputation amongst the poor than the general hospitals?—Very much better; ninety-nine out of every hundred persons will tell you they prefer to go to the infirmary rather than to the Royal Hospital.

11052. CHAIRMAN.—I know it has a very high name, and very properly, but I must say I don't quite like to hear these comparisons made—I am not making a comparison with the object of detracting from the efficiency of the Royal Victoria Hospital, but workhouse infirmaries throughout Ireland don't always bear a high reputation, and care has been made exceedingly efficient through the abilities of the medical staff. One thing, which I think is desirable, provided accommodation could be obtained, would be to classify not merely according to the nature of the ailment, but also in relation to the class of patients, i.e., to keep those whose illness is self-inflicted beyond the power to annoy, as in the case of drunkards, other patients, and to enable the medical officer, with the express approval of the Board of Guardians, to permit patients on discharge to retain the furniture, if the medical officer and the board are satisfied that a sudden change into the person's own underwear would inflame against them. We have cases of persons coming in with pneumonia who have cotton underwear, and they get contrived and desire to go back to work as soon as possible, and the board, under present arrangements, have no alternative but to take the furniture from them and put them back into their own cotton underwear.

11054. It would have to be under outdoor relief administration; you could not give away the clothes they wear in the house; that would be taking away the very stock of the house; look into that—I would be very glad if that could be done, and so would the entire committee. We wish to call the Commissioners' attention to the difference in cost to the Belfast corporation of outdoor and indoor relief. We have forty-four persons receiving outdoor relief in Belfast; that is apart from children who are boarded out; and the cost of outdoor relief is £7 10s. 6d. per head, the average, compared to the cost inside of £15 10s. 6d. per head; that covers maintenance and the entire establishment charges, and we think that is an enormous discrepancy—more than double—and it is the opinion of the committee who investigated the whole matter that if outdoor relief was more relied on it would benefit the destitute person and the ratepayer at the same time.

11055. I suppose you have made representations to (just affect yourself as a Guardian?—Yes; but we have been met with the legal difficulty that Belfast had no power to relieve except under the circumstances I have mentioned.)

11059. Well, there may be some special clause in some Belfast Act that I am not aware of?—It was from one of the public General Acts.

11060. Mr. MURPHY.—That does not apply outside Belfast; in other unions it is given under the conditions named by you?—We would be very glad if it could be applied.

11061. CHAIRMAN.—It is in the discretion of the Guardians to decide in each case whether it should be given or not?—The total number of days of relief for the last twelve months was 1,170,127; we gave relief to 19,977 and to 3,206 persons continuously resident with us, and when I say that the rate is only 2d. in the £ and it was 19d. four or five years ago I think the Guardians and the administrative staff deserve some little credit for having with efficiency reduced the rate also in the Belfast Union.

11062. Mr. MURPHY.—When was the rate 16d.?—In 1860.

11063. On what valuation was the 11d. rate struck?—The revised valuation has not come into operation.

11064. On what valuation was the 11d. rate struck?—On the old valuation.

CHAIRMAN.—£1,542,000.

Dec. 17, 1903.

Mr. William Walker.

Mr. J. S. OSWALD, Chairman Belfast

Board of Guardians, examined.

To start, perhaps, your time as well as the time of the witnesses present, I may say that prior to the Act coming into force the rate in Ballyhackamore was 1s. 2d. in the £; Greenisland would be 1s. 2d. in the £; and Carramony would be 1s. 5d. in the £; you know the union; you will find that out; those were all different; and Belfast would be 1s. When the Act came into force in 1859 all were amalgamated, and we reduced ourselves to 1s. in the £. It is only to save time I say this.

CHAIRMAN.—It is the same all over Ireland.

Mr. J. S. Oswald.

11065. Mr. MURPHY.—You give to the new administration the credit of doing good work at a smaller cost than its predecessors?—Might I say to you, as a member of Parliament, and one to whom I have looked up for a long time as a wise man, that it would be unfair that the new man should get all the credit, seeing that I am one of the old men, and a member of the board during that time.

Mr. WILLIAM WALKER further examined.

11066. Mr. MURPHY.—What is the amount of poor rate you receive?—The amount of expenditure was £66,000.

CHAIRMAN.—For Poor Law purposes, £66,000.

11067. Mr. MURPHY.—What did you receive from the Poor Law?—I cannot say.

11068. CHAIRMAN.—The Poor Law rate for that year was 2d. We are in the position that the county borough of Belfast, and Antrim, and Down contribute a quota; sometimes they pay within the stipulated time and sometimes they do not. Indoor maintenance, £31,368; establishment charges, £21,687; outdoor maintenance, £1,880; maintenance in extern institutions, £790; dispensary charges, £3,964.

11069. Mr. MURPHY.—You gave some evidence respecting parties being refused relief at the workhouse?—Yes.

11070. You stated you asked under legal advice?—That is the clerk's advice.

11071. You did not take the advice of a professional gentleman?—We took it that the clerk was sufficiently acquainted with the law.

11072. That is the reason these men have been excluded from the workhouse who have been admitted all over Ireland that the clerk is the person to decide on a legal point?—The clerk of the workhouse is the official appointed by the Board of Guardians to keep us straight with the Local Government Board. We did not consult counsel.

11073. You said you had taken legal advice, and you had also read the Act yourself; the sooner you take legal advice on that matter the better?—I am perfectly satisfied with the Chairman's statement that that Act has been repealed or amended.

CHAIRMAN.—Oh, I don't know that.

11074. Mr. MURPHY.—How many relieving officers are connected with the union?—Mercer, Johnson, Morrison, Stewart, and Mitchell—five.

11075. Where do these gentlemen reside?—In different divisions of the city.

11076. A person wishing admission to this Civil Hotel on the Lifford Road must go to these relieving officers?—Or the Master.

11077. I have been instructed that people are excluded there at night and many are taken to the police office?—That is not my opinion.

11078. One person stated that anyone going up there not later than nine or ten would get admission?—The statement was that up to nine or ten the Master or his assistant was on duty, and after nine or ten it was dependent on the policeman.

11079. On many occasions the Master might not be there, and therefore these people would be excluded?—No; the policeman has power to admit anyone when the Master is not there.

11080. I observe that some time ago £17,000 was spent in erecting a boardroom?—That is the first I heard of it.

11081. Has any motion been before the Board to expend a large sum of money for the purpose of erecting a large boardroom?—No. There was a proposal to spend £3,000 on a boardroom and suite of offices, and the contingencies made up to £13,500; that was brought down to £9,000 on the revised plans.

11082. You would have a small parliament there?—We are a parliament, and as a economical parliament.

11084. Perhaps they would hand you over the old municipal buildings?—It would be no service to us; we like to be on the spot where the work is done.

11085. Would you, personally, as a ratepayer, have any objection to a scheme which would amalgamate the affairs of the City Council with the Guardians?—If you can transfer the present personnel of the Guardians to supervise under the Corporation the administration of Poor Law relief I have no objection.

11086. How many members are there in the Board of Guardians?—Fifty-four; they are a diminishing number; the ex-officio are gradually retiring under the Act.

11087. Do many of the prominent merchants of Belfast seek election for that board?—Some of them have been beaten, and they have not had the courage to come up again.

11088. Even in the City Corporation some of the prominent merchants do not seek election?—No.

11089. If a central body was established, do you not think it would be calculated to bring into public life in Belfast many of the prominent merchants?—I take it that a successful merchant means a man who is devoting the whole of his time to his own business, and a man who is doing that cannot possibly attend to the business of the poor.

11090. Then all the gentlemen who are Poor Law Guardians are not attending to their own business?—They are sacrificing a little in the interests of the general ratepayer, yourself among the number.

11091. Regarding the collection of the rates, could not this poor rate be collected as an ordinary municipal rate by the Corporation?—Yes, I believe it could. We have nothing to do with the rate collectors—neither appoint them, dismiss them, nor superintend them.

Mr. William Walker.

Dec. 17, 1903.
Mr. William
Walker.

11088. Do you pay them anything at all in your account?—No.

11089. There is an item here—"Postage paid on stamped requisition forms, £122." How does that arise?—It is on the question of the franchise; the Clerk of the Union is responsible for the making of the lists, I believe, until the present clerk resigns, when the office will be transferred, and it is in connection with that; these are requisition forms sent out for the purpose of the franchise.

CHAIRMAN.—I think you need not mind going into that.

11091. Mr. Murphy.—The relieving officers live in different districts in the town?—Yes.

Mr. Oswald.—In their own districts.

11092. Mr. Murphy.—Could there be no means of having a man at the workhouse in constant attendance

—a day man and a night man—who would have power to admit a proper destitute case into the workhouse?—The Master or his representative is there up to ten o'clock, and then there is the relieving officer and the gate porter. I don't see any necessity for putting on an additional man.

11093. How do the mentally infirm come into the workhouse?—They are admitted by us as destitute persons, and on examination they are found to be sick in mind. Being destitute persons, and not dangerous lunatics, the asylum authorities being overworked, refuse to take them from us.

11094. I understand there is an interchange of lunatics between the Asylum Board and the Poor Law Guardians?—There was, but that is done away with; every dangerous lunatic we sent was got a lunatic lunatic instead, but that has been stopped.

Mr. EDWARD COOY examined.

Mr. Edward
Cooy.

I was appointed by the Belfast Rural District Council, along with the Chairman, Dr. Wilson, to give evidence. I may say that the Rural District Council will be very glad to be amalgamated with other districts for all purposes, but we could not see any advantage in being changed for union purposes only. Our district is a district which was mapped out, I may say, by happenstance; it was never mapped out for any purpose; it is a residence of the Belfast Union when the city was taken out of it, and it is a district that for district purposes we consider very inconvenient.

11095. Dr. Broome.—It has been very much encroached upon by the extension of the boundaries?—Very much; if the boundary had not been extended it would have been another thing altogether, and we think that if there is any change to be made the district purposes should be considered as well as the union purposes.

11096. CHAIRMAN.—Your feeling is that you would rather not go to the adjoining unions?—Unless our district was divided up and added to the other districts.

11097. Is not that what would happen?—No; I mean the district as a district for roads.

11098. You would like the rural district to be broken up as well as the union?—Exactly so.

11099. I suppose the only reason the rural district was formed was because it had to be formed, being part of the union?—Exactly so.

11100. And you would like the rural district to be broken up as a separate rural district?—We would. The next point I would speak of is the boarding-out system for children. I happen to know a good deal about it from living in a village where there are a very large number of children boarded out, and I can bear witness that it has succeeded in a very marked manner, and I would be in favour of boarding out in preference to any other plan. I consider a small home where a foster mother would have a half-dozen or more children would be better than the next best thing, but not near so good as boarding out in individual families. One instance came before me some time ago—a very remarkable instance—in which a boy had been boarded out into a family; the head of the family died, and that boy, who had grown up, actually kept the family together, and it was out of his wages the family was supported until some of the other children reached an age at which they could help. As to persons being sent back to their districts I can get no figures on the subject, but I have come to the conclusion that there are a very large number of paupers in Belfast Union—more than usual—that have never worked in or had any connection with the union, but came into it merely to get into the workhouse.

11101. You mean without having worked in it once straight in here to the workhouse?—Yes; and I think it is unfair that that should be so.

11102. Dr. Broome.—You think they should have some residence in the district before they should be admitted?—Yes. If they had been any time working in the district I would not send them back.

11103. CHAIRMAN.—But you mean when they come straight from another place?—Yes; for the purpose of going into the workhouse. There is one point I wish to mention; if we continued on with the Belfast Union I think there should not be the old system of district rating, but a district rating in which the rural district would be one item, and the city another, and the County Down Rural a third.

11104. For all purposes or outdoor relief only?—All purposes.

The sitting was adjourned.

TWENTY-FIRST PUBLIC SITTING—FRIDAY, DECEMBER 18TH, 1903.

Dec. 18, 1903.

At the Court-house, Belfast.

Present:—Mr. MURTAGHAN (in the Chair); and Dr. COBY BIGGER.

Miss F. F. CLARK examined.

11105. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Miss Clark, we would like to hear your views?—I sent in a paper to the Commission asking some suggestions as regards the children. It is the only department of which I feel I have any real knowledge. The first was as to the extension of boarding-out for children. By the Act passed I think two years ago, all children adopted can be boarded out with the exception of three classes, that is to say, the children of vicious parents, the children of idiots, and children whose parents might be prosecuted under the Criminal Act. The recommendation of the Committee, and I think also of the Board of Guardians, is that it should be further extended so as to allow us to board out all children.

11106. Dr. BIGGER.—All children?—Not all children, that would be absolutely impossible; but that you should board out all children who have been adopted under the Act. It would give us a certain extended number of children, but by no means all.

11107. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—What class would you prefer?—That I would like to come to later on, but that, I think, is a matter that everyone is agreed on. Nearly all your evidence goes to recommend the extension of boarding-out of all adopted children. The second matter I wanted to bring out was scattered homes, and I should like to say that I think I, and most women who have worked at this matter of the children, have been very much disappointed with regard to the evidence about proper children brought before you within the two days.

11108. In what way have you been disappointed?—In this way—all the unions, one after the other, have simply brought up one remedy for the difficulty, and that is, "Board out all the children; don't leave one in the workhouse." Anyone who knows much of the subject knows that is simply impossible.

11109. In what way?—The numbers that would be left. Supposing this Commission was to do what has not been done anywhere, that is, widen the Act so as to allow us to board out all children who have been adopted, that would still leave an enormous number in the homes—in Ireland generally.

11110. Don't you think they could be provided for somewhere else than in the workhouse?—That, of course, would be another question, but they certainly could not be in my opinion be boarded out. Suppose that you were to extend this Act wider than it is extended in England, that would be allowing us to board out all children adopted under the Act, I have no means of arriving at how many children would be touched in that way in Ireland, but I fancy not very many. In Belfast there are seven adopted under the section of which I spoke who are now in the workhouse, and would be boarded out if you were to enlarge our boarding-out powers. These seven children have their parents in the home, and, of course, visit them frequently. But my point is that if you were to extend our boarding-out orders, you would not reach any very much larger number of children than you can now board out.

11111. Could there not be some intermediate course between keeping them in a workhouse and boarding-out?—That is the course I wish to recommend in the shape of scattered homes. But I should like first, taking Belfast, which I suppose is a sample of all larger unions, I should like to point out all the children we could not board out. I quote from a return given in April, 1903, in the school and nurseries there were—widows' children, 35; deserted wives whose husbands were in jail, 32; parents in infirmary, 35; that, at the first point of view, gives 100 children who could not be reached by our legislation or boarded out in any way. Widows' children we could not board out; women whose husbands are in jail or otherwise for different reasons in the workhouse, 32; and those in the infirmary, 35.

11112. Dr. BIGGER.—Could they not be boarded-out for a limited time?—Nothing would more destroy the whole boarding-out system than to begin boarding-out for a limited time. It would be ruinous to the system. No parents would take children that they would have to give up in six months, or a year or two years. They would not take them. It would ruin the whole system. Then as to time. I only bring Belfast up as a sample union. There were, by the same report, 10 children admitted for the first time on that morning; 70 children in the workhouse who had been in one month; 22 had been in for three months; 40 were in for six months. Now could any reasonable person propose that homes could be found for those 142 children, even if it were legally, morally, or socially right to board them out? It seems to me it is simply begging the whole question and escaping the whole difficulty of Poor Law children by saying board them out. This state of affairs, I am sure, obtains in smaller unions probably to a smaller extent.

11113. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Boarding-out has a wide application. Making provision for them in any other place than the workhouse would mean boarding out to a certain extent?—Yes; but my disappointment lies in the fact that no such proposal has been made.

11114. It is a matter for the consideration of the Commission?—Yes, of course. I am only speaking of the evidence given in the last two days, and what I have been able to gather from the papers, that no proposal has been made beyond simply boarding out, which does not, to my mind, at all meet the real difficulties of the case. No one is a greater advocate for boarding-out than I am, and it has undoubtedly been most successful in the past, but then I would like to have reminded those gentlemen as anxious about it that it has been worked under certain very definite restrictions, and to those restrictions I would attribute in a large degree the measure of success which boarding-out has obtained. If we were to try to board out in a wholesale way, or remove those restrictions, we should simply ruin the boarding-out system in Ireland. If through this Commission we obtain the result we ask for, we will have gone further than in England. You will find that widening this Act would not give us more than twenty in our union, and perhaps ten in most of those other unions that speak of thirty or forty children. I should think you could not reach more than ten probably by doing what all the unions recommend, that is boarding out all who are adopted. I am sure you would not reach more than twenty, if so many, in the Belfast Union.

11115. Still you will admit it is not a good thing to keep these children housed up in an institution like a workhouse?—Certainly.

11116. And it is for us and for the witnesses to find out some suitable means to meet as many cases as possible. It is from witnesses like you we hope to get information?—There are so many witnesses within the last two days who have spoken on so many subjects, and they have not offered any suggestion but the case on this subject.

11117. Dr. BIGGER.—In Dublin scattered homes under a foster mother was mentioned?—That seems to me in Ireland to meet the difficulty very much.

11118. A home with two or fifteen children under a foster mother, situated in a country district?—Exactly. The Board asked the Local Government Board for permission to establish such a home in Belfast, and their answer was that this Commission was coming round, and that the matter would be considered then. The scattered homes, I think, especially in a place like Belfast, would meet the requirements of Ireland much better and more effectively than cottage homes or some of those more expensive systems. All we ask for, and in Belfast we urgently ask for it, is that permission should be given to try a scattered home. It would mean you would take a house at £10 or £20 a year; that you would get into it practically a foster-mother and ten or twelve children from the workhouse school. Our idea of trying one scattered home was that we might put into it the older boys who ought to be more or less at work. They might work and return at night to those homes, and their work would go towards their maintenance. Now in the Boys' Home that is here they bring in £200 of money earned by the boys, which goes towards their maintenance, and if we could obtain, which I very much hope, and have always hoped through this Commission, permission to have these scattered homes, I have no doubt whatever the Belfast Board of Guardians would try that system.

11110. Would you propose such a system for all the children that would be left after those that could not be boarded-out otherwise. Would you put them all into scattered homes?—I would hope to do so in time, but that would necessitate a central building, which is more expensive. We would have to use for a while, until the system was tried, the workhouse school. Later on, of course, if the plan were a success, they might have an establishment built where the regular in-and-outs would go for a while.

11110. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you think it is a good thing to have a great number of children kept all in one place?—No, certainly not.

11111. Would you not think it would be better to have them in small rather than large numbers?—Much better, but that is the effect of the scattered homes.

11112. What would you do with the very young?—Put them into the scattered homes to scatter them among the older children. An older girl could have a younger girl in the same home to look after.

11113. How many are there in the home you refer to?—It is the Balmoral Home for Boys. I could not tell you fully about it. Twenty, I think. We tried to get our boys there, but they won't take them. They have not more than room enough for their own boys.

11114. We will likely hear something about how that school is worked?—Yes; but it is not a boy's home we want, or such very strict legislation as that would require, but if you allowed us to have scattered homes it would cover in Ireland the whole district. It is a matter of discretion. If you gave us discretionary power and allowed us to try it in Belfast, the expense would not be very great, because we could take the house, and supposing it failed, could give it up; but we have not discretionary power now and cannot try it. As to expense, in England the expense is about 7s. a week, and in England the expense of pauper children is 5s. 3d. to 7s. 6d. a week, which, of course, is very much larger than our children here cost.

11115. What is the expense of the children here on an average?—As a week, and in the scattered homes, I think—of course it is speaking rapidly—we ought to be able to do it for something like 5s., especially if the Local Government Board would pay our industrial trainer for us. There then would be merely the expense of the house.

11116. Still it would not cost any more than the present system?—Very little more. I would not go so far as to say it would not cost something more, but the present system is so very unsatisfactory I think there would be no hesitation in paying a little more. I am sure there would not be from the Belfast Board of Guardians, and another thing is it would pay in the end. An industrial boys' school, started on the principle on which the Board of Guardians wish to start it, would pay very soon for itself. The boys could nearly pay for their own maintenance.

11117. Supplemented, as you suggest, by the earnings of the boys, it would seem to me rather a saving in the course of a few years?—Yes; but even if extra expense had to be gone to it would be most important, because the history of our large barrack schools is that it is almost impossible to keep the children from returning. One boy who went out in June has been twice back in the workhouse. He has no other place to go to.

11118. You think that would not still apply to the cottage homes?—To a very slight extent to the scattered homes, not cottage homes. By a slight extension of them we might be able to provide for those returns, as is done in some places in England; in any case the boy would not have learned his way through the workhouse gates. There is a girl who is not yet seventeen and she has been in seven situations and has returned to the house between times. We have tried to prevent her returning, but she has been in seven different situations. That means she returns finally to the workhouse.

11119. She looks to the workhouse as her home?—Yes; our experience is that first places are very rarely successful with our orphans. They sometimes stay in the second. I think if we could watch them between the first and the second we could make a success of them.

11120. Having been used to idleness all their lives, they don't care to do any work?—I suppose that is it. The boys are specially winged, because between twice and fifteen they live five boys of a different class. They have their school and playtime and no work such as the working population have. I wish you would let us try scattered homes as an experiment. If the Local Government Board would give Guardians at their discretion power to have these scattered homes, an experiment in Belfast or any up-to-date place would perhaps prove a success, and other unions would adopt it.

11121. Dr. BROOKS.—Would the law give you power at present?—No, it would need legislation. That is the answer we received from the Local Government Board. I would like once more to point out that there would be no expense in building if permission was given to try scattered homes, even including the cottage homes, which might at a later period suit the people. The experiment might be tried, and if it failed there would be no very great expense incurred.

11122. Mr. MURKIN.—But still you believe in the boarding-out system as far as it can be done?—In every possible way. I would never leave a child in the workhouse or put a child into a scattered home that I could board out, but the boarding-out is, after all, very limited when you consider the number of children; the number of homes is limited. And supposing you do what we ask, extend the law beyond any power they have in England or any place I know of—supposing you give a sort of wholesale permission to board out, I don't think anything would be more ruinous to the boarding-out system.

11123. Dr. BROOKS.—I think the intention was now to get the children out of the workhouse by some means of boarding-out as far as possible, and then find some means to deal with the other children?—Yes, but the remainder is so very large.

11124. Either as an institution or some homes, or something of the kind?—It is such a very large percentage, 20 per cent. are not orphans; boys and girls in the school, 240; 20 per cent. of above are not orphans, but cannot be boarded out for various reasons—parental and some in jail; 45 per cent. of above are practically permanent whose parents are in the workhouse permanently from sickness and other causes; 25 per cent. of above children of persons who are workhouse habitues, and take them out occasionally; 10 per cent. of above children of workhouse habitues who are constantly taken out by parents.

11125. Mr. MURKIN.—Of course the condition of Belfast don't apply throughout the country?—It will apply only, I suppose, to Dublin, Cork, or Limerick, or any working city. Any large city where there is a good deal of work the plan might be most successful and most promptly tried. I think at the present time we are bringing up a generation of paupers.

11126. The difficulty as regards boarding-out is not so acutely felt in the country as in a city like Belfast?—I know one country place where they have also children in the workhouse because they cannot find homes for them, and there is a boarding-out committee, and great efforts have been made, but it does not take in that part.

11127. Have they taken any steps to provide homes made it known through the district?—I believe so. There is a ladies' committee, and they have done their best to find homes and cannot.

11128. In some unions there is no difficulty at all in getting homes?—Of course there is the further question of boarding them out at a distance. Supposing you extend this Act, there is the further question of boarding them out in different unions.

11129. Dr. BROOKS.—You have power already to do it. You can go beyond the union?—I know you can do that, but can you pass over the care of your children to another union?

11130. That has been mentioned by Miss Hamilton, and will be considered?—Well, the next point that I wanted to touch on, I don't know whether it properly comes under your inquiry, that is day industrial schools.

11131. I am afraid it does not?—It touches it in this way, that our in-and-outs come in entirely uneducated. In the large school there are twenty-nine in the first class above ten years of age; there ought not to be more above seven years of age. In the infant class there are thirty-six between seven and nine in the boys' school. That shows a great amount of ignorance. The other point I wanted to touch on was the extension to Ireland of apprenticeship or employment of pauper children, which can be done in England, and I think might profitably be done in large towns here; of course almost to suit the times. We send boys out now sometimes to farmers, but our experience is that the fatter they went them for August and the busy time of the year, and when that time is over the boys come back to the workhouse or go to the workhouse of the union where they are. That might be not if we could send them for a year to the farmers under certain circumstances. I think you will find that the farmers who are anxious to take children don't want them all the year round—I am not speaking of the boarded-out children—but the children who go at fourteen or fifteen, they are very willing to take them at the busy time of the year. I consider it the worst possible thing you can do for a boy is to let him go for a short time to one of these farmers. The extension of that Act would make a great difference in our power.

I am simply speaking of where we find the shoe patches on. There is another point—I don't want to press it, but it would be very useful—the appointment of a visiting officer, that is to say, if the Local Government Board were to appoint visitors for those children, the young girls who go to service, and the boys who go out to employment, if they would appoint visitors, I don't think it would be necessary to pay them, but I think if any lady or gentleman willing to undertake the office were appointed under the Local Government Board it would be a great help, and if the Local Government Board then required a report from them.

11182. Do you think they would act without a salary?

—I think so. I must say I think they might be allowed a small amount for travelling expenses. That is rather hard on them, I think.

11183. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—An officer of the Guardians goes that at present, the relieving officer?—The relieving officer is very unsuitable to go to situations where the girls are at service. It calls attention to the girls, and I think in the same way to the boys, and also with our over-worked relieving officers I don't think it can be satisfactorily done. I know myself that very often, though they are interested in a girl, they won't go to the house itself to inquire after her. Then there are subscriptions to associations. I won't take up your time with these things—notice to be given in certain cases; transmission of the young person to service in another union; duty of supervision to be taken over by the Guardians of the union in which a boy or girl is apprenticed. It would be very useful if there was a father register kept in all the unions as to what becomes of the children. There is no definite register. You cannot find out what becomes of a child except indirectly through separate agencies. There is one more question, as to the feeble-minded girls. I think that was brought up already by Miss Hamilton.

11184. Yes, we had some evidence on that point?—In the workhouse there are five feeble-minded at present; one is a woman with a good many children. Dr. Bell kindly gave me a list of the feeble-minded whom she received into her shelter. The first is aged twenty-eight, with two children in an industrial home; woman now in the asylum. Another now on the streets; another who is an illegitimate child herself; another on the streets; another on the streets before the birth of her child; another daughter of a well-known blind beggar, himself illegitimate. The girl's sister has two illegitimate children; her mother is an inmate of the workhouse. Next, one on the streets. Next, one born in the workhouse, and, I am afraid, brought up in the workhouse also, on the streets for the past five years; treated in hospital. The last one was also born in the workhouse. That gives a large number of children who are feeble-minded. I remember Miss Hamilton was asked to define feeble-minded, which, of course, is rather a difficult matter; but Dr. Bell defines one case here:—"This young girl would not know the difference between 1s. and 1d." I have had some experience of girls whom I would call feeble-minded. If you tell them to do one thing in a day they will do it that day, but their memory does not seem to carry them to the next day. They are absolutely willing to do whatever anyone asks them to do, and I think that a great protection for themselves and the public would be arrived at if those feeble-minded women could be detained for life along with some other class. I would not like to put epileptics along with them. But supposing an Act was passed allowing such children to be detained, that they then might be classed as in the workhouse you give over to epileptics, and that they should be kept there for life. When one considers the number of children who are brought into the workhouse who are wrong in every way, we could make a beginning by detaining for life those children.

11185. Would you leave it to the discretion of the medical officer to decide as to their strength of mind?—Miss Hamilton, I think, had a correspondence on the subject, and Dr. Rowley wrote to say he has just returned from America—that there they treat them in custodial homes. On the application of a Guardian, stating that the child is feeble-minded, the magistrate can give an order for the treatment of the child and detention in the home. Of course with a medical certificate detention for life in these custodial homes, which can be, and ought to be, nicely self-supporting. These girls are quite capable of working and are biddable working. You could give them a happy life and a useful one, and keep them off the street. I do think we could reach a great number and make an important beginning if we could deal with the feeble-minded women.

11186. You say a system like that exists in America?—Yes, in Massachusetts.

11187. Miss Molyneux.—Might I ask one question: is the word feeble-minded a proper word to use; are we allowed to use that term in reference to children?—I believe it is not used. I don't think it has been recognised; probably it would be recognised in time.

11188. Would they come under imbeciles?—No; they are distinct from imbeciles.

Dr. BRICE SMYTH examined.

11189. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—We would be glad to hear what you have to say?—I have not very much. I have been connected with the Poor Law system for about twenty-nine or thirty years. When I was in the infirmary, or had charge of part of it, the consumptive patients were a source of great trouble to know how to deal with them, and if there could be any arrangement made to have them taken out of that, I think it would be a great improvement. I know they try now as much as they possibly can to keep them isolated.

11190. In some unions there are wards for the purpose?—I don't know if we have them here. I know they were a source of great danger and anxiety to us in the time I had charge there. If there could be some arrangements made, which I believe there could be, for getting them into some healthy surroundings. In my time we got them in the last stages generally—the third stage. The poor people would work as long as they possibly could, and then they would come up to the infirmary almost to die, and they generally stayed there until they died, and they were nursed about through the infirmary, but I understand now they are kept as much isolated as possible.

11191. In some houses they are, but not in all?—I am speaking about Belfast.

11192. Would you think there ought to be a sanatorium in each county, or would one for a province be enough for that class?—I think there should be one for each county.

11193. Dr. BIGGER.—But for a large union like Belfast, do you think it should have one of its own?—I think it should have one of its own, for there is so much consumption among the mill-workers and people of that kind. They are badly fed and live on unsuitable food, and when they get an acute bronchial attack they are not able to resist it. I think Belfast should have a place of its own.

11194. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—Do you think the city itself would be a suitable site, or would you suggest it should be out in the country?—I would rather it went out a bit into the country, because the town is extending so, and if you put it in the outskirts of the town it would soon be surrounded.

11195. Dr. BIGGER.—About the children?—The children both in the infirmary and schools. I believe there is a great improvement in that respect now, but it is so difficult to keep children healthy where they are so crowded together.

11196. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—You think the boarding-out system would be an advantage?—Decidedly, a great deal better. In my time they suffered greatly from skin disease, and eye trouble, and nervous bones, from improper food and care.

11197. And they grow up liars?—They grow up liars. If they could be boarded out. It is generally understood now that hardening a lot of children, or even growing boys and girls, in large public institutions when they go into the world they are not able to fight their battle the way they could have done if brought up since under home circumstances.

11153. Dr. BROWN.—They merge into the general population better when brought up outside?—Yes.

11154. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—What would you suggest about the unmarried mothers of children? do you think they should be sent to a lying-in hospital?—The first case, yes, I think they ought to be. I have seen a good deal of that sort of thing. When a woman comes in with her first child and had lost her situation probably, she had no place to go back to, and when she was herded with a crowd of people when she met in the maternity ward, in a great many cases I have found they have gone out not exactly knowing where they were going, and got into a bad way afterwards, and perhaps returned to us in a few years in the same condition. I think if there could be anything done so as to take charge of these young women, a great many of them might be rescued and saved from the after effects.

11155. I suppose you would also desire to see the lunatics taken out of the workhouse?—I would.

11156. And put into an institution by themselves?—Yes. I understand now they try to isolate epileptics and acute cases as much as possible, but it would take a very large establishment to do that up where they are at present.

11157. If there was an institution in each county for such a class?—Yes.

Dr. JOHN MACINTOSH examined.

Dr. John Macintosh.

11158. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—You are a member of the Belfast Board of Guardians?—I am. I acted as chairman of the committee who inquired into these matters regarding the Poor Law Commission. I may say that regarding amalgamation of unions, that is a question that we have dealt very little with in Belfast. It does not interest us at all, because our work is large enough without entailing any more on us.

11159. We know it does not apply to a city like Belfast or Dublin. It applies more to country places?—I am of opinion that if there were several of these unions amalgamated the ground could be taken. The buildings, I am of opinion, are not suitable for the treatment of the sick, or anything like that, judging from the condition of our own buildings, from the body of the house, and from visits to other unions in and around the district of Belfast, I have come to the conclusion that the buildings are unsuitable.

11170. Have you seen the fever hospital?—I have; there are some of the buildings up to date, and some are not.

11171. There are some of them very good?—Some of them exceedingly good for country districts. I think the ground of these workhouses could be taken over with advantage by the County Councils, and utilised for several public purposes, such as to erect a suitable and fully equipped auxiliary asylum for the treatment of a large class of the destitute poor, namely, epileptics—an epileptic colony in a central position of the province, where all the epileptics from the different unions could be collected. This ground could also be utilised for the erection of a provincial sanatorium under the control of the County Council, where the consumptives from the different unions throughout the province could be directed to that sanatorium and treated properly. In Belfast the Board of Guardians, I am happy to say, have grappled with this question. We hope when 1904 comes we will have a suitable sanatorium for consumptives in connection with our union. There is another thing regarding that. I think that a suitable provincial institution could be erected under military authority on some of the ground in connection with unions outside the city of Belfast, that is for a class of patients or inmates very difficult to deal with in connection with our union workhouses, namely, the aged pensioners. In Belfast we have fifty of that class; men who are drawing a pension of 1s. a day. The cost of their keep does not amount to 6d. The amount of their keep is deducted every month off their pension.

11172. Dr. BROWN.—The full amount?—The cost of maintenance only; that is deducted off their pension, and the upshot is they have a considerable balance. They discharge themselves, go down town, and generally come back to the union workhouse in a very intoxicated condition, causing a great amount of uproar. I think that class should be dealt with by the State and taken to a colony, where they could be treated as men who have served their King and country—well treated, 11153. Or even one for several. If there were not enough in one county there should be power given to the neighbouring unions to send them to one?—Is there no power at present?

11154. Dr. BROWN.—Not for sane epileptics?—I look upon them as rather dangerous characters to have them all herded together. After an attack they are not accountable for what they do, and should be almost as well looked after, and better perhaps, than the ordinary insane, because when a person is insane you know it and are on your guard, whereas an epileptic between the attacks may be perfectly sane and able to go about.

11155. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—You would separate the sane epileptics from the lunatics?—I would.

11156. Dr. BROWN.—It has been suggested there should be an epileptic colony farm?—I think that would be a very good idea, for an epileptic can do a certain amount of work between times, and it is good for them to be kept working.

11157. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Have they any prescription of the seizure coming on?—Well, they have; but it is after the seizure they become dangerous, a good many of them. A few of them have a feeling that they know they are going to become ill, but with the majority it comes on so quickly that they don't know about it.

11158. I suppose you don't want to say anything about the tramp question?—Oh, no; I could not speak anything about that.

in a better condition than they are in the union workhouse.

11174. Do you know that many pensioners stay in the workhouse from choice; they could support themselves outside?

Mr. MURKAGHAN.—They go to the workhouse because it is cheaper?—That is so; outside they would have no surplus money with which to have a regular monthly spree. As a matter of fact we only actually charge for their food and clothing, not for the establishment charges.

11175. I know that very well. We have them in my union?—I hope you will get rid of them. From observation, and so on, I have come to the opinion that there are a large number of respectable aged inmates in our union workhouse, and I think that power should be given to grant these old people at least a small weekly sum, from 6s. to 10s., so that they could be kept clean and comfortable with their friends, who are willing to keep them; but friends at the same time find it an utter impossibility to do so owing to their limited weekly wages.

11176. That is an extension of the boarding-out system?—Yes.

11177. Would there not be a danger to the public funds then?—There is certainly a danger, but there is such a large class of these deserving and respectable poor. I think if carefully inquired into there would be very little danger.

11178. Dr. BROWN.—Do you not think every person of the working class over sixty-five would want to be on that?—I do not. I think the Irish people have more independence than that.

11179. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—You would propose some standard?—Yes; and I think if we had this old pension system it would relieve our workhouses. I was very glad to hear we have power with regard to outdoor relief. I am one of those who have been misled in the past regarding that, but I may say we will have great difficulty in Belfast in doing that, because our machinery is inadequate for the large city of Belfast. We have only four relieving officers, and I was astonished to hear that in such a small town as Rallymore, as compared with Belfast, they have three. There was a slight misunderstanding regarding the relieving officers that I would like to clear up. Our relieving officers meet every morning at the dispensary, and grant tickets of relief. They meet at a central place in the town, such as Glasgow-street Dispensary. Then in the evening they grant tickets from their own residences in the different districts.

11180. Dr. BROWN.—I think we understood that?—There was a misunderstanding, I think. That was a question that Mr. Oswald wanted to make plain.

11181. I think each member of the Commission knew that the relieving officer would give a ticket at his own house where there was a necessity?—Then, as regards children, I am of opinion that as far as possible all children should be boarded outside the union workhouse, to keep them away from the taint. This system has been adopted in Belfast, and has been very successful. We have 184 at present boarded out, but I think the power in the hands of the Guardians should be extended—that is, we can only take those children and board them out who are orphans and deserted children. There is a large class over and above that who remain in the union workhouses, that is a class who belong to the industrial runners or inmates. I think power should be extended so that the Boards of Guardians could adopt these children, and then board them out away from the influence of friends or parents.

11182. Mr. McBRIDE.—You think that as the Guardians have the responsibility of their upkeep they should have the power of dealing with them?—I think they should have. These children are continually taken in and out of the union workhouse—sometimes fifteen times in six months—for the purpose of begging and selling papers in the streets of Belfast, to give their fathers and mothers, who have been neglectful of them, money to drink. I think the Boards of Guardians should get extended powers in that direction to adopt these children and board them out, to give the children a start in life. Then I think the Board of Guardians should also have the power to support either cottage homes or scattered homes. There will always be a fringe of children that we cannot deal with in any of the ways I have mentioned. I think we should have power to start scattered homes, which have proved very successful in England and also in Scotland. Then I agree with Miss Clark and Mr. Walker that we should also have power to establish in suitable centres in the city industrial homes for boys and girls over fourteen years of age. We find when they come to the age of sixteen they are sent out into the city and mingle with the scum of society. If we had industrial homes such as are in existence in Belfast—there are two at present, one in connection with the Balmoral at May-street, and one in connection with the St. Vincent de Paul, situated in George's-street—if we had homes such as that, and under the careful training of foster parents, I think the children would have a fair start in life, and would not gravitate back to the union workhouse.

11183. But with the scattered homes in existence you would not require those as much?—We would not. Then we have another difficulty in the Belfast Union, namely, the children being sent there on remand from the Custody Court, sent there by magistrates. A boy remanded for a week is sent up to mix with children in the union workhouse. I think that should be stopped. It has a very bad effect on our children in the school, who have to mix with these children when they are on remand.

11184. What would you suggest?—That they should be sent to some suitable place—some industrial home or otherwise—during the time of remand. I don't think the union workhouse is a fit place for them. Regarding the treatment of the sick in the union workhouse, we don't require any change. Our treatment, both in the nursing quarters and also the medical quarters, is of the highest standard; in fact I must express my opinion from observation that it is higher than in the general hospitals outside the city. A great number of respectable citizens of Belfast prefer to go to the union hospital than either to the Royal Victoria or the Mater Hospital. I was very glad to hear we had the power to grant clothing to the deserving destitute poor on discharge, because we have felt it a great want in the past—a man coming in actually destitute, suffering from acute pneumonia and bronchitis, being thoroughly warmly clothed inside our wards and then discharged outside again in his worn clothes—I was delighted to hear the opinion that we would have power to grant him clothing. There is another class of patients that I think should not be treated in the workhouse, namely, lock patients—patients suffering from venereal diseases. We have roughly 200 on the male side every year, and 180 on the female side. This is a class of patients who are not destitute by any means. They come in to be treated there, and very often they go out before they are thoroughly cured. The female portion of them generally come in from the brothels in the city. I would suggest that these patients should not be allowed inside the union workhouse at all, but proper lock hospitals should be established under the sanitary authority of the city. I don't think they should be inside a union workhouse, that we should have power as a Board of Guardians to detain them there until the medical officer gives them a clean bill of health. Then there is another class we have a large amount of, namely, those suffering from alcoholism. That is another class that is not destitute, and are very often a great amount of trouble to us.

11185. What do you suggest about them?—Send them to general hospitals. Regarding the question of vagrants, I agree with Mr. Walker that we should have established provincial labour colonies such as are in vogue in Belgium, Germany, and America, and also Haddocks. I think these colonies should be under the control of the State, or falling that, under the control of the County Council. I think that is the only solution of the vagrant and tramp question.

11186. Take them out of the hands of the Guardians altogether?—Entirely; put them to productive labour. At the present time they are working at unproductive labour—stone-breaking and tanning rope. Our treatment at the present time is not of a reformatory character.

11187. That would apply to a limited number of people?—A larger number than you think.

11188. Our experience is that the number of able-bodied in workhouse in Ulster is very small?—The number we have is 272 men and women.

11189. How does classification come there?—We classify them as healthy men and healthy women, infirm men and infirm women, and feeble men and feeble women.

11190. It goes up to sixty-five?—To sixty; all over that are classed as feeble.

11192. Your suggestion about the military authorities would get rid of that class?—It would entirely. Regarding the question of illegitimacies, that is a large question with us; it is a question that I am not clear in the solution of; I must say I was delighted to hear the evidence of Dr. Bell. I think that is a step in the right direction, and I go with Mr. Walker in his idea of establishing nurseries outside in the city for that class. That is all I have to say, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Walker has dealt very fully with the questions, and put before you the unanimous opinion of the committee.

11193. Dr. BOOTH.—It was the finding of the whole committee?—Yes.

11194. So what he gave each member endorse?—Yes.

Mr. DONAL McARTHUR examined.

Mr. CHAIRMAN, I was one of the committee appointed to take this evidence, which is before you in bulk. There are one or two matters that I would like to refer to in connection with that that struck me as specially deserving of attention. In the first place, we had evidence before us that on an average there are 20,000 admissions annually to the Belfast Workhouse, and in a great number of the departments we had evidence that almost two-thirds of the admissions were what are known as runners, or habitués. In connection with that aspect of it we got the Master to prepare a return for five months of the numbers who went in and out from the body of the house, and especially of the women who took their children with them when they went out. I would like to put that return in

There are about 200 of them who went in and out of the workhouse over three times during the four months selected by the Master, and he did not take any particular four months, but merely took it at random. We find that those runners were not confined to any particular department; we find them even in the infirmary, but they largely exist in connection with the schools and the body of the house. If some legislative power was given to the Guardians for the purpose of putting a stop to this system of running in and out, dealing with it under the different heads, as I desire to suggest, I think a very great deal of good would be done, and the Belfast Board of Guardians would have better facilities for classification than they have at the present moment; in fact the place is so congested that new that classification is quite impossible. The first matter that attracted my attention was the question of the children; the evidence which you have dealt very exhaustively with that aspect of it, and we came to the unanimous conclusion that the true solution of this problem in regard to the children was to board the entire of them out in the same way as we board deserted children and orphans. The evidence given by the relieving officers showed us that out of every 100 of the cases boarded out there was only about one case turned out badly; that is a very excellent result. They also informed us that their experience was that these children who had been boarded out contracted an affection for the foster parents which lasted long after the period for which we allow them to be boarded out, and that some of the children who had gone away and obtained good situations were in the habit of sending to their foster parents money for their support, as if they had been their natural children. One case we had where a gentleman, who is at present a clergyman in America, was boarded out from the Belfast Workhouse, and another, whom I know personally myself, occupies a very high position in one of the leading mills in Belfast. The teachers inform us, and we were in accord with them, that this system of running in and out interferes with discipline of the children, and the medical doctors put us evidence that it interfered very much with their health; that in fact a great amount of the skin disease, eczema, and eye disorder was attributable to the children who were going in and out, bringing this disease with them. The mothers of these children who are in the schools are in the habit of taking them out frequently, and when they return to the workhouse the Master will tell you they are generally in a pitiable condition. They are sent back to the school, and as you will see from that return of the Master, in a very short time, in the course perhaps of a fortnight or three weeks, the mother takes them out again. And we find that in some instances there are children in the school of fourteen years and upwards who are only learning their alphabet. Of course the mothers who take them out don't send them to school outside.

11195. Mr. Macintosh.—Then you believe the Guardians should have power to adopt any cases such as this?—I think the powers should be extended so as to apply to all children, and I would go further and say in the case of widows, we are entitled to give them relief under the existing laws, but widows with legitimate children I would put them in the same position as we put the foster parents under the boarding-out powers we have. Of course the scale of allowance in such a case would have to be a fluctuating scale according to the needs of the person who is to get the relief in that way. I think we should also put the mothers of legitimate children—mothers who have been deserted by their husbands—in the same position. That is a class we are not able to deal with now except by bringing them into the workhouse, and that is a class that suffers very much from the existing state of the law. If there is an extension to include them under the section which enables us to give a widow with legitimate children relief I think it would be a great advantage. And in that case I would advocate that the powers should be even further extended; that where there was any purely temporary destitution we should be empowered to give purely temporary relief until work was got; in a case, for instance, where the head of the house was out of work there was a mother and small children, and the only alternative to starving outside or depending on outside charity is to come to the workhouse. In such a case I think we ought to have discretion to allow something to tide over the temporary difficulty for the purpose of preventing these people coming into the workhouse. I think the experience of older men than I am—I am only a rear Guardian, but I think in that time I have gone, like our friend, Mr. Gill, at a military rule—the experience of the older Guardians is that once they have found their way into the workhouse they come back again, and I think it would be cheaper in the end to give some temporary relief—not of a very extensive character—to deserving cases of that description.

11196. You know they can get it now, provided the head of the house is sick; you would wish it extended to a temporary want of employment?—Yes; there is a great deal of unskilled labour in Belfast, and the people engaged in that unskilled labour are not connected with any union, and they are not in a position to receive any contributions from societies; that class would be very much benefited, and properly so, by an extension of the Act in that direction.

11197. With regard to the case of deserted wives with children, I know a case of the kind myself, and we think at our Board of Guardians that it was a great hardship we could not give her any relief; she had to come into the house—I had one case myself—a very deserving case—of the same description, where the husband had been in the army, and left the wife with four little children, and, of course, as a rule, the religious charities won't contribute to a person of that description either, so they have to rely on personal bounty; any funds in connection with the various churches are not given out except in the case of widows, following the policy that has been adopted by the Guardians themselves. In connection with the boarding out of the children, I think that home influence is one of the chief advantages, and I think that it is absolutely essential advantage, particularly in regard to young girls. The girls who are kept in our workhouse schools until they are fourteen or fifteen years of age, when they go out into a city like Belfast, are not trained to resist the temptations and the difficulties of life. I think when they are sent out to be boarded with respectable citizens, and I don't think there is any lack of people of that description in this city, that the home influence fits them very well for any companies they may have to go to in after life, and as I have pointed out before, the affection seems to me almost as great and sometimes greater than between natural relatives.

11198. That view is very general over the country; I don't think there would be much difficulty in this regard—I am very glad to hear that; it is one of those things that gives me far more cause for thought than any other subject connected with the workhouse. With regard to the cost of boarding out, we find the average rate is 4s. inside the union and 5s. 5d. for the boarded-out ones per week. I am not an advocate of these other systems, such as cottage houses or scattered homes, because I consider them all as being workhouses on a small scale, and I don't think the children would get rid of the taint of the workhouse where they are congregated in numbers and put under foster parents, as in scattered homes with fifteen or so. I don't think they get rid of the taint of the workhouse. I think the children of the school they are sent to would be able to point their fingers at them and say, "They come from such and such a house," which was a workhouse home.

11199. Dr. Brooker.—Of course, that is a personal opinion—I think it is the opinion of the entire committee.

Miss Clark.—No, I don't think so. It is entirely against my opinion, and also, I think, against Dr. Macintosh's.

Without—I am very sorry to know that Miss Clark is not quite as radical as I am on this subject. I know that Mr. O'Hara, Dr. Macintosh, Mr. Walker, and myself had a conversation in reference to this particular matter, and the other systems were alternatives to this one, and in the event of this one not meeting with the favourable consideration of the Commission the other systems were to be advocated. So far as I am personally concerned I don't advocate the other systems at all, because where I think right is right I advocate that right, and don't take any substitute for what I think is right.

11200. Mr. Macintosh.—There is very little difference between you and Miss Clark; she said that in every case where children could be boarded out she advocated that, and she gave instances where a child could not be sent out, and she said rather than leave them in the workhouse send them to scattered homes—I don't anticipate any routine to be dealt with in that way. In connection with the children arises the question of the putative fathers; that is a very difficult question to deal with, and I quite agree with other witnesses that too much of the penalty is on the women.

11201. Dr. Brooker.—You heard Mr. Rodden's evidence yesterday?—Yes. I perfectly agree with his evidence, except I think that we should try to get the second section of the English Bastardy Act amended so as to give the magistrates a discretion, which is really given to them by the fourth section, because they have only to be satisfied. The second section provides that a girl in this position, even before she is confined, may take proceedings, or within twelve months after confinement may take proceedings against the putative father at Petty Sessions, but it goes on to say that in order to obtain an order she must prove that the putative father had contributed towards the maintenance. It seems a very inconvenient and rather extraordinary section because a girl who is using her mar-because during her sickness, prior to confinement, of course could not prove that there was any maintenance given by the alleged father for the support of the child.

11202. Mr. MURKHAM.—Until there was need of maintenance?—Yes; the necessity had not arisen; and I would direct your attention to that section of the Act. I think if that section were amended to agree with the powers given under section four, where in actuality cases below the coast, the case would practically be met. I think there ought to be some corroboration. If there was not I am afraid there would be very great abuse by some women.

11203. Blackmailing?—Yes. I don't think that blackmailing is a prevalent thing in Ireland; there might be isolated instances, but my experience, and I have a very extensive experience from the legal aspect, is that the blackmailing would be almost the other way, for, although you could not call it blackmailing, the extortionist generally exists on the other side.

11204. You put all the blame on mankind?—I am only giving the result of my experience, and I am not giving any professional secret when I say that on a number of occasions I have been asked to get a declaration of innocence while playing over a case.

11205. Dr. BROWN.—You don't say you were a party to that?—No, Dr. HUGHES. I don't think I would be a party to anything of the kind. The next question I considered was the question of the tramps; that is a very difficult question to deal with, and the country Guardians appear to come in with a light heart with regard to 1860; I don't think they are very much troubled with them just now; they are on the march in Belfast when they visit the adjoining unions. Belfast has a reputation for treating their tramps and other inmates very well, and the result is we have a very large number of them coming to us to show their appreciation of the manner in which we treat them. I think in order to put an end to this tramp question we should have power to make it a condition for admission that the person to be relieved should be resident in the district for one year or have contributed towards the rates; if such a person were not resident within the district and had not contributed towards the rates that we should be in a position, at the expense of the State, to send him to the union where he had so resided or paid rates, or, in the alternative, to the parish of the union in which he was born. I think it would be a good thing to trace the history of all tramps, and if we found they were of an incorrigible disposition—many times decent people are on tramp for work, and may be suitable for people who are not decent—I think we should have power to investigate the history of these people, because it would be a sure way to exterminate that species, and in the event of finding they were of the incorrigible description I think if they were sent to a farm colony it would be a very excellent thing for them and for the country. I would say provincial farm colonies would be sufficient to deal with all the tramps that Poor Law Boards have to deal with at present. There should be four such colonies in Ireland. In connection with the infirmary and hospital I have only one thing to say. In regard to the hospital I think no case is abused. In Belfast there is no fever hospital; we have no hospital for infectious diseases; the Belfast Corporation have not up to the present time exercised these discretionary powers vested in them.

11206. They are exercising them now?—I believe they have commenced to build a fever hospital, and when it is completed I would advocate that all the fever patients should be sent from the workhouse hospital to the fever hospital to be erected by the Belfast Corporation.

11207. You can do that within yourself?—We should, of course, pay for the patients we send there; at the present time we have sixty per cent. that are really not destitute sick or poor sick, and out of that sixty per cent. I think we can only succeed in recovering from about ten per cent. We have a very humane Master, and he uses a very humane discretion with regard to the admission of these cases, and we won't turn away any fewer cases, because we consider for the time being all of them, in the absence of any other hospital, that we are the representatives of the ratepayers from the public health standpoint; although the power is not really vested in us, in the absence of any other hospital we think it right to admit all those cases.

11208. Mr. MURKHAM.—That disability would disappear shortly?—Yes. Dr. Macintosh this morning referred to those Lock patients; I don't think they should come within the jurisdiction of the Board of Guardians at all, and I don't think they do as regard to sixty per cent. of those whom we treat. I was rather astonished at the evidence of Dr. Smyth that there were some hundreds of cases of syphilis treated. A number of those people from the female side come from houses of ill-fame; the people who send them there are very well able to afford to keep them, and before they get better they use all influences—legitimate and illegitimate—to get them out again. On the male side we find our experience is that the men go there for the purpose of hiding themselves from their own relatives, and we think it is an imposition on us as Guardians of the poor to have to treat patients of that description. I don't know whether under the Public Health Act the sanitary authorities have even discretionary power to erect a Lock Hospital. I know there is one in Dublin, and I think in a large city like Belfast there ought to be mandatory directions given by some legislature enacted to the Corporation to erect a building for the treatment of such cases, and, of course, making them pay what they are able to pay. Under our law they are placed in the same position as the poor, and can discharge themselves on two hours' notice, and that is a very serious matter for the public, because they very often discharge themselves when they are not fit to go out among the public at all. In our infirmary a very large number of patients discharge themselves before they are fit to go out, and we think that they do so deliberately. They go out and get somewhat worse, with the result that in two or three days they return and are admitted again to the infirmary, where they get better treatment than in the body of the house, and they have a better time of it, because they have not to work any. I think, in regard to those patients, the doctors ought to have power to certify, or ought rather to be compelled to certify when a patient was fit to be discharged, and until that certificate was given we ought to have the power to compel them to remain.

11209. That would apply only to infirmary patients?—Yes. In regard to the question of out-door relief I have already expressed what my views are. I think it should be extended in the way that I have indicated. There is another matter that has given us very great thought; that is the question of pensioners. At the present time I think we have from eighty to a hundred pensioners in the workhouse. I have not traced the history of each man, but I think there are very few of them belonging to Belfast. The result is that we are maintaining those pensioners, who I think, ought to be maintained in other unions. They are in the receipt of pensions from the Government varying from 8s. to 1s. a day, and in isolated cases they have 1s. 6d., and in one case 2s. 6d. a day. Those who are in the body of the house are charged 4d. per day and those in the infirmary 7d. a day; that is the net cost.

11210. Surely the Guardians have that in their own hands, by raising the charge?—I thought we had no power. I thought all we are entitled to do is charge them the actual cost of maintenance.

11211. Dr. BROWN.—Why do you admit a person who has 2s. 6d. a day, 10s. 6d. a week, and no person depending on him?—That is a matter that, personally, I could not answer truthfully, because I don't know. It has occurred to me sometimes that some of these men should not be admitted. There is only one case of 2s. 6d., and the question you put to me I put to our relieving officers, and they said it appeared to them that the man was destitute at the time. I think it is a falling with men who have been in the army that when they get some money in their pocket they go on what is called "a burst," and after that is done they throw themselves on our mercy. At the end of the month Mr. Murray, who is the relieving officer appointed for the purpose of receiving these pensioners, gets the pensions from the local paymaster. The other part of it is paid to the pensioners, and a few of them go out and have a spree on their own account; discharge themselves immediately. A number of others have women in the house whom they will marry; they arrange with these women to go out, and they go out for three or four days, and at the end of that time come back in a state of destitution apparently. There are others of these whose relatives see living from hand to mouth until the pension day comes round, and they are up there to get them out; when they get them out and their pensioners gone they are back again. I am afraid unless there were some restrictions made by legislation in regard to old age pensions that would be very much abused and treated in the same way as the pensions of penalizers. I think we ought to have power to charge men of that description something more than the actual cost of maintenance. Of course if the suggestion I throw out as to admissions was acted on half of these pensioners, at all events, would be sent to the unions which ought to support them.

11212. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—But still the evil would continue.—The evil would continue, and the only way to put an end to the evil would be to allow us to charge a fair sum—to give the Guardians discretion to charge what they considered a reasonable sum over and above the cost of maintenance, having regard to the person received by each pensioner. The next matter that occurred to me was in reference to the insane and feeble-minded and epileptics. I agree that the insane ought to be transferred to the county asylum. With regard to the epileptics, I think if there was a provincial institute for these people, where they could get light employment to suit their condition, with proper classification, under the control of a medical man, it would be a very great advantage to this class of patients. The case of the girls especially is very distressing, and I don't think they should be cooped up in the workhouse at all. I don't think it was the intention of the legislature that they should come under the designation of the destitute poor—poor afflicted by the act of God should not be regarded as destitute poor.

11213. You think an institution of the kind would have advantages from moral and economical points of view?—Yes; I think it would be most economical to have one institution in each province which I think would meet the demands. We have fifty-six epileptics altogether and 117 lunatics. The next matter is in regard to the consumptives, and I am very glad to say all the Guardians are unanimous in this matter. We have all taken a very deep and, I think, a very energetic interest in it.

11214. Dr. BOGGER.—You will be present at the Inquiry?—Yes; I have hopes that the efforts we have put forth in reference to this will bear fruit after that Inquiry has been held. I hope we will be in a position to satisfy the Inspectors who are sent down that what we intend to do is not only desirable but in the present condition of affairs absolutely necessary. We have also done a great deal in connection with the Belfast Corporation in trying to get them to recognize what their duties are. I don't wish to make any reflection on the Belfast Corporation as a body; they have had very large schemes that they have been carrying out, but none of these schemes, as far as I can see, have been for the welfare of the sick of the city of Belfast. The death rate from consumption is a very, very high one, the conditions of labour foster the disease very much in Belfast, and I would like to state my opinion with regard to one aspect of it, that is with regard to making it a notifiable disease. I think none of the authorities will ever be able to grapple with the question properly until it is made a notifiable disease. I should say the Guardians some time ago instructed their dispensary medical officers to notify voluntarily, as they do in Liverpool, all cases of consumption; we made an effort to get the medical practitioners of Belfast to follow the example of the private medical practitioners in Liverpool by doing the same thing, but we failed in that, and the reason given by them was that there was a good deal of sentiment in regard to this particular disease, and private patients did not like the public to know that any member of the family had suffered from consumption because of the exploded theory that it was hereditary, which seems to cling with a tenaciousness that is remarkable among all classes of people in Belfast.

11215. I am afraid that is outside the scope of our Inquiry; it is more a public health matter.—I would suggest, respectfully, that it is within the scope of the Inquiry with regard to the consumptive poor.

11216. I don't mean to say that it is not very desirable, but I don't think notification is within our province.—There are many of the poor who are consumptives who don't come to the workhouse, but would be compelled to come to the workhouse for treatment if the disease were made notifiable. In connection with this I would like to direct your attention to the fact that two years ago the Local Government Board addressed a circular letter to Boards of Guardians pointing out to them that it could not be circulated too freely among the inhabitants of the various districts that fact that consumption was an infectious disease.

11217. That has been circulated by every Board of Guardians, and the Local Government Board are most anxious about it, but it is a public health matter, and does not come within the scope of the Inquiry.—Except as regards the destitute poor. And in the interests of the public health of Belfast we are desirous to get hold of all the people we are entitled to deal with; it is only in that aspect I press the matter about notification. What has been done has consisted in the issue of circular letters and some other things that have not taken any practical turn; what I want to do is to do something that will have a practical result. We have 237 consumptives, epileptics, 56, lunatics, 117, and the children, 240, that is 580 altogether, and they would be taken away from the union if the suggestions we have made were given effect to by legislation. In addition to that we have insane men, 611, insane women, 124, feeble men, 240, feeble women, 250. If these were removed we would be in a position, without taking down any of the old buildings, to carry out a system of classification in the Belfast Union, and the Belfast Union accommodation would be ample for all our purposes. There was a movement to reconstruct portions of the body of the houses at one time, and I was responsible for a motion to adjourn it until the result of the efforts of this Commission was made known. Dr. Madden referred to those children who are remained on criminal charges; it is a very and matter indeed that these should be sent to the same dormitory with the children we have; there are some sixty or seventy annually, but under the new conditions we cannot expect any legislation could deal with that. In the meantime, pending whatever legislation is passed as the outcome of your investigations, we will have to put up with the state of affairs that exists.

11218. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—But you think something demanded?—I think something is demanded. I think it is our duty to not put them in a dormitory with the children, but, unfortunately, in the present financial state of the house we have no alternative. If these other cases were removed we could deal with them and set aside a ward specially for them. We are in such a cramped state we cannot set aside buildings for religious purposes. In the meantime they might be sent to the industrial schools. I think that we have some time ago by the magistrates, but I don't think that is a matter you could give effect to. We don't go into the question of amalgamation; we don't think it affects me. I should, personally, like to see Belfast being a union by itself, being a county borough, and I think they would have ample material.

11219. Dr. BOGGER.—Managed by the City Council?—No; my experience of the City Council would not lead me to give an opinion in that direction. With regard to the Belfast Workhouse—I don't say it is in any exceptional spirit—I am not responsible for its management, except within the last year, but I certainly have employed my time while I have been there to the best of my ability in the interest of the people I represent, and I cannot speak in too high praise— notwithstanding the little squabbles there are occasionally on hard days—I cannot speak in too high praise of the manner in which the institution is managed and the Poor Law administered. I think it is done with very great discretion, and the amount of advancement that has been made there, taking into consideration the small rate we have struck, is sufficient evidence without any comments from me at all in regard to that aspect. I don't think it would be desirable to invest the Belfast Corporation with any additional powers; I think they have far too much to do at the present time, and if they had less to do it would be done as efficiently as we do our work at the Board of Guardians. I would like to see the Austin portion divided between Larne and Loughburn, and I should also like to see the urban district of Holywood and the Castlereagh Rural District sent to Newtownards. I think the Poor Law administration should, as far as possible, be confined within the county. Personally of course I speak more on behalf of my constituents, the Holywood district—the people there are in favour of Newtownards.

11220. Will you appear at the County Down sitting?—I don't think so. I expressed a wish I should not be appointed to represent the Urban Council; the Urban Council themselves are equally divided on the question.

11221. The Rural Council?—I don't know their opinions, but I am closely in touch with the electors, and I know what their opinions are, and I don't set very much value on the opinion of a small body, comprised of nine men, who constitute the Urban District Council. I don't think they are in a position to give evidence on matters relating to the Poor Law system. I think that in order to be in a position to give any evidence of that kind a man has to get special training and special experience. Of course if we were charged to Newmarket the rate, we think, would be less. I would advocate district rating in regard to outdoor relief only.

11222. District or divisional—Divisional or district; whatever you like. I represent the district. I think it would be a check upon any possible extravagance, and I don't think it would affect the poor in any way putting such a check on them.

11223. District rating would be very hard on the women?—It would be hard on a place like Belfast, but I think the wealthier classes are fairly well distributed all over Belfast.

11224. Mr. Murphy.—Who strikes the poor rate for Belfast?—I had rather a newspaper yesterday that Mr. Murphy held a brief for the city of Belfast.

11225. I do not. I hold a brief for a large number of ratepayers in Belfast. I ask you who struck the poor rate?—I would like, before submitting myself to examination by Mr. Murphy, to know what solicitor instructs him, and whom he represents.

11226. I am instructed by Mr. Peter McGinn, solicitor, and I represent a number of ratepayers in the city of Belfast. I represent one ratepayer who took a very important part in questioning the rate struck by the Corporation, Mr. Pat McCusker, and a number of others. (Witness).—Who are the others?

11227. Who strikes the poor rate?—The poor rate is struck by the Poor Law Guardians. We arrange the figures.

11228. Who makes the rate?—The Corporation of Belfast.

11229. Why did you not say that at first. If the Corporation makes the rate, what is the use of the existence of this Board of Guardians at all?—Mr. Murphy, I am not going into a discussion about the use of the Board of Guardians. I think that is apparent to every man who has got intelligence, and every woman too, and possibly every child in the Fifth ward.

11230. You heard the evidence of Dr. O'Connell yesterday?—Allow me to answer your question first.

11231. Now you are making a speech?—I will answer your first question. You asked me who struck the rate, and when I answered the Corporation you asked me what did the Belfast Board of Guardians do. The rate is struck upon the information given by the Belfast Board of Guardians.

Dr. Brogan.—I think it would be better if you confined yourself to matters arising on the issue of reference. This is not an inquiry into the maladministration of the Belfast Union.

Mr. Murphy.—It is under Reference 5. I spoke to the Chairman about it, and established my locus standi. I am trying to show that it would be an administrative change that would be beneficial to the ratepayers if this body of Guardians was abolished.

Witness.—As far as I am personally concerned, I would advocate strongly the appointment of a barrister to every office vacant in the Council from this forth.

11232. Mr. Murphy.—Are you in favour then of the suggestion I make that the Corporation should take over these duties?—I have got too much feeling for the poor of Belfast to adopt any suggestion of the kind.

11233. You heard the evidence of Dr. O'Connell yesterday?—I did.

11234. Do you consider Dr. O'Connell an intelligent man?—Yes.

11235. Did you hear him say that this Board of Guardians afforded considerable amusement to the public?—Yes.

11236. Is it not rather expensive for the public to have to pay a rate to keep up a Board for amusement?—There are professional men who do the very same thing, and the city of Belfast Council is not exempt from structures of the kind, too. We all admit we have little tills occasionally.

11237. Would you not be in favour of bringing about efficiency and economy in the administration of municipal affairs?—I would certainly, and the question suggests that it wants it.

11238. If by an amalgamation of the Poor Law Board and the City Council such efficiency and economy could be brought about, would you be in favour of it?—Do you mean that if the Poor Law Board became merged in the City Council that efficiency would result?—I really believe it would.

11239. There would be a consequent reduction in salaries?—I don't know about that. It would depend on whether the City Council or the Guardians were in the majority.

11240. Things are in such a jumble regarding the sharing of interest of these bodies. For instance, the poor rate is collected by poor-rate collectors of the Council, and the municipal rate is collected by a body of other collectors. Perhaps you are aware that there is a great grievance amongst the public regarding the collection of the poor rate?—I heard you were engaged in a case the other morning in reference to this matter.

11241. Would you not be in favour of the poor rate being collected as a municipal rate?

Dr. Brogan.—I think this is altogether outside the lines of our inquiry. It is a matter that can be arranged between the Guardians and the Corporation.

Mr. Murphy.—It could if they were one and the same Board.

Witness.—I have no objection to give my opinion in regard to all matters outside the scope of your inquiry that I can give an opinion on, but I feel I should not be a party to trespassing on your time.

11242. Mr. Murphy.—What amount of salaries do you pay?—There are some of them we cannot find out how much our officers get.

11243. Have you a clerk of the union up there?—We have; and the office is about becoming vacant, if that has any interest for you.

Mr. MURPHY.—Really, I don't care to interfere to prevent gentlemen having a free hand, but I think we are going a little too far.

11244. Mr. Murphy.—Will you retire him on a pension?—He has not retired yet.

11245. What person is he to get?—I think I am going to ask counsel that question when it arises.

Mr. MURPHY.—There are several witnesses here anxious to give their evidence. If you have anything pertinent to ask, of course we will hear you.

Mr. Murphy.—You will not finish to-day, for I have a great number of witnesses to examine. I don't know whether you have compulsory powers to make witnesses stand.

Mr. MURPHY.—We have not used them anyway, and hope not to do so.

Mr. Murphy.—It may be necessary for me to compel the attendance of the Town Clerk, the four city Members, and a few others.

Witness.—The panic-stricken season is very near at hand.

Mr. J. W. ROSS examined.

There is just a word of explanation in reference to a statement of Mr. Walker, which I was very much surprised to hear. He said the Guardians had no power to give outdoor relief. Mr. Walker was uninformed, and afterwards found out. Not only have they power, as you are aware, to give outdoor relief in the circumstances mentioned, but they exercise the power. Under the 1st section of the Poor Law Relief Extension Act they have given relief last year to the extent of £269 to cases qualified under that Act.

11246. Mr. MURPHY.—A very small sum of money for a city like Belfast?—They have a resolution, adopted a great many years ago, that where a person is fit for removal to the workhouse outdoor relief is not to be given.

11247. That was illegal?—I would not go exactly the length of saying that.

11248. Every case of absolute destitution is entitled to relief?—It is an understanding with the relieving officer, and customarily it may operate very harshly, and the evidence given by one of the relieving officers seems a misinterpretation of the law altogether. The case under consideration was that of a man who was sick and in hospital, and the wife and children were at home, and the wife applied for outdoor relief. I certainly think that is a case in which it would be most desirable not to break up a home, but to enable the woman and children to struggle through until the bread winner was restored to health.

11249. Quite so, and the Guardians had ample power to give them relief?—Yes; and there seems to be a misinterpretation on the minds of some of the Guardians which I did not share.

Mr. Walker.—The schedule to the 10 Vic., cap. 33, refers to Dublin, Cork, Limerick, Belfast, and Waterford.

Mr. A. W. Roth.

Dec. 18, 1905.

Mr. J. W.
Reids.

Mr. Reids.—The schedule refers to the previous Act. Mr. MURKIN.—I think you will find in a case of absolute destitution the Guardians have power to grant outdoor relief.

(Mr. Walker reads notice).—The case I referred to does not come under any of these. The wife was not a destitute poor person really according to the provision, old age, infirmity, bodily or mental defect. She was not a widow with two or more children. The husband was receiving indoor relief, and the destitution of the child of the union was that this woman did not come within the scope of the Act.

Mr. MURKIN.—It is a matter of common practice in other unions to give relief where the breadwinner is not able through sickness to supply food for his wife and children.

Witness.—I find the exemption of the five towns relates to a section dealing with rating and valuation, and it deals with a former Act of Parliament, which is repealed.

Mr. MURKIN.—The law is of general application.

Witness.—I would like to make a remark about the evidence of Mr. Coey regarding the proposal to transfer the Belfast Rural district to adjoining unions. The proposal relates only to Poor Law purposes, and he rather would confuse your minds as to the decision of the District Council. They wish the district to remain intact as a rural district, but to be transferred for poor law purposes only. I would think, having regard to the convenience of the poor, say at Whiteabbey, which is a large manufacturing centre, it is more desirable to have them brought to Belfast for treatment than sent off to Larnie. It is a manufacturing suburb. It is not, except technically, a rural district; it partakes too much of the town. With regard to the other side, the Larnie road direction, the union workhouse is situated within 1½ miles of the union boundary, and consequently a considerable number of people drift from Larnie Union into Belfast. I would also draw your attention to the fact that the Larnie Workhouse is situated within six miles of the Belfast Workhouse, and I may venture to say that I formed the impression, from the trend of the evidence given at the Inquiry, that Larnie Workhouse, as a fully-equipped establishment, will come to exist in the near future, and in that case it might be made available later on for union purposes in another direction. Another thing is that there are a considerable number of villa residences in that district. The people living in them earn their money in Belfast, and don't contribute to the Belfast poor rate. I think that is a reason for extension also. I very heartily concur in a great many of the proposals the Guardians have made, and especially in the idea in some of their minds that there may be ample accommodation in a short time in Belfast Workhouse. Dr. Bigger, in a very valuable report which will be under consideration this afternoon by a committee, points out the crowding of the site and the unsuitability of having further buildings there. That will be objected of the Guardians acquire premises for the treatment of consumptives, and if the fever hospital comes to exist by the transfer of all infectious diseases to the new infectious hospital where built. I remember discussing that matter with Dr. Bigger many years ago when he was visiting medical officer. The transfer of lunatics will afford further accommodation, and the proposal to erect schools outside will leave the schools available for accommodation.

Dr. Kirk examined.

Dr. Kirk.

11250. Mr. MURKIN.—What do you wish to say on this question?—There is only one point I want to bring under your notice, and that is the question of cottage hospitals in the country. My work takes me down to country towns and villages pretty frequently to perform urgent operations, and the more experience I have the more convinced I become of the great usefulness of the present cottage hospitals, and the urgent need of more of them.

11251. Where situated?—For instance, in Ballymena, or in Larnie, or Bangor, places like that. They are quite distinct from the infirmaries; small cottage hospitals, simply that have a small operating room and a few beds in it.

11252. Some have three or four beds, and others a dozen. You favour that?—Very much indeed. In some country towns you have no such place to take a patient to for an urgent operation or an accident, and you cannot do the cases right. There are cases you cannot remove to any distance. You must operate on the spot.

11253. Dr. Bigger.—Have you any particular class of cases in your mind?—Accident cases, or cases of a bad rupture that has to be operated on at once on the spot—a case that you cannot remove to any considerable distance, say a case in which a man's life or death may depend on an hour or two. These hospitals at present are an absolute necessity for every member of the community, whether rich or poor.

11254. You would have them open to all?—Open to everybody.

11255. And those that are able to pay you expect payment from?—Yes; at present the poor are taken in free, and that handicaps the hospital tremendously. Most of the hospitals are simply struggling along—the bulk of them are in debt—and they have to rely for their expenses largely on subscriptions. What I would urge on you is that the local authorities ought to be empowered to pay for the support of the destitute poor in these hospitals, that is to say the sick who cannot be removed to the sick infirmary, and in that way the difficulty of supporting a number of existing infirmaries would be met to a very great extent. Take a place like Ballymena; that was the last place I was at. A poor person had to be operated on. There was no cottage hospital there. I had to do the operation in a small kitchen—a very badly lighted place—it was at night, and I was handicapped, and the patient had to undergo the operation at a great disadvantage. In Ballymena or Larnie you take your patient to the cottage hospital. There are all the appliances there—a good operating room and a good light, and a nurse there, so that the patient has a fair chance.

11256. What management would you put them under?—What I would suggest is—at present these hospitals are managed by a committee consisting of people resident in the district, and one or two of the doctors of the district. That management seems to work very well, and I would suggest that the local authorities, if any districts are sent in, should simply pay the committee for the hospital charges. The other point is that in some districts that are very thinly populated, or in any place if you have these cottage hospitals, the nurse or nurses that are employed in these hospitals could go out and do very valuable work as district nurses in the district. At present there is a system of Jubilee nurses, and they are all over the country. These hospitals could be made the headquarters for these district nurses; you could combine the two positions.

11257. Would you recommend that more particularly for the thinly populated places?—Yes; we would want only a few beds.

11258. What would be the smallest hospital?—In some districts thinly populated you might only want two or three beds with an operating room. It is not as if there were operations going on constantly, and the appliances would not cost very much. The cost of keeping these places up and equipping them I don't think would be very much.

11259. You could not give the chairman an idea of the cost of a small hospital?—I could not.

11260. Mr. MURKIN.—What staff would be necessary in an intermediate hospital?—In the Bangor Cottage Hospital there are, I think, six beds. It consists of two semi-detached cottages, with doors that have been made between them, and one of the kitchens is used as an operating room; the other is used for cooking the patients' food, and there is just a nurse in charge of the hospital, with a surgeon. It meets all the requirements. I often have to do operations there. There are a few benches, and water has been laid on in the kitchen, and they have lamps suspended over the operating table, and it is perfectly satisfactory.

11261. The cost in connection with such an institution would be very modest?—It is apparently very modest. This system is, I believe, worked in England to a great deal, and there the local authorities pay for the poor. These hospitals are an absolute necessity for everybody, and they are bound to come, but they are handicapped by having to take in the poor people.

11262. And not getting any aid from the public purse?—No aid from the public purse; so I think you would be helping everybody if you enabled the Guardians to contribute the charge.

11253. Dr. Brown.—In a district in which there are very few well-to-do people, would not the hospital require to be almost entirely under the control of some body, and the whole support provided out of the rates?—I should imagine so.

11254. Take a district in Donegal, where there are no well-to-do people?—Yes; it would not be a very easy thing to run that.

Mr. WILLIAM O'HARE continued.

11255. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—What would you like to say?—The first thing I would say is, that I give my most hearty assent to the evidence by Mr. Rodden in regard to the application of the English Act. Mr. Rodden talked about the impropriety of girls confined for the first time going to the workhouse. What may apply elsewhere; I don't think it applies in the case of Belfast, because we do not put a girl who has given birth for the first time to a child among the general class. We have a healthy nursery—a separate department—and in the healthy nursery are the respectable married women, who have been confined in the workhouse, or girls who have given birth for the first time to a child; so as far as that is concerned Mr. Rodden is labouring under a misapprehension. I may add that misapprehension in relation to the Belfast Workhouse is very common in Belfast, and I should be delighted if Dr. Bigger would induce the Chairman of this Commission and yourself to visit the workhouse.

11256. We intend to do that?—And I should be very glad if the leading editors of Belfast would induce their minds of what the Belfast Workhouse is, and what it is doing. I could not speak too highly, or too strongly, of the enormous labours that have been successfully undertaken by our lady Guardians in relation to these girls procuring proper nursing for the children, and good nursing for the girls themselves. Coming, now, to the general subject, I give my hearty assent to the evidence given by Mr. Walker with special reference to the treatment of tramps. I believe the true solution of the tramp question will be found in the establishment of such a scheme of farming and other industrial pursuits for that class as is indicated; but I would say, in relation to the tramps, that the question is not very well understood by even the Guardians. It is not, in this country, the great question that it seems to be thought. As a matter of fact, according to the Local Government Board Report to the House of Commons for the 31st March, 1900, which is the last one I consulted, the total relief given throughout the whole of Ireland was 226,764, that is, every person visiting a workhouse and remaining over night, getting supper going in and breakfast coming out; the actual cost for these released would amount, altogether for the entire kingdom, to £1,600, or £2400 per province.

11257. The money item is a small one; in some unions it does not amount to £5 a year; but what is desired is to put an end to vagrancy?—I quite agree with that, and therefore, in the absence of a scheme being put in operation such as that suggested by Mr. Walker, I know no better plan than the application to Ireland of the Poor Law Act of England dealing with that.

11258. That is the power of detention?—Yes.

11259. You think that would be sufficient?—I do.

11260. You would not go for stringent measures, such as sending them to the police station, or having them prosecuted?—I don't see where the advantage is to arise, either to them or to the community; their help will cost as much, if not more, in the prison than with us, and I don't know that they are likely to be much improved. I know that in Belfast Workhouse there is not a single able-bodied inmate, male or female, who is not kept constantly employed; in point of fact, the number of able-bodied male and female inmates in the workhouse is often inadequate for the work that we have for them to do; it is no unusual occurrence for the Committee in charge of the work to be applied to, especially by the matron, for paid cleaners to come in. We ourselves are perpetrating an illegal act every day in relation to the inmates. The enormous numbers we have in the house, the numbers coming in and the numbers going out are of such a character that if we allowed them to go out whenever they gave three hours' notice, the master and other officials would have their whole time occupied attending to the inmates' admissions and dis-

11261. You would advocate a district nurse to be in these hospitals that would be available in the district?—Yes.

11262. And if there are cases in the hospitals, you could requisition another nurse?—Yes.

11263. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—In fact you would utilise the hospital as a home for district nurses?—Yes.

charges, and the Guardians of Belfast, with the tacit approval of the Local Government Board, have fixed an hour in the day when, and only when, inmates can take their discharge. I think any amending Act should have regard to that, and make our illegal act a legal one by conferring on the Guardians a right to fix an hour in the day when the inmates may take their discharge. I think it is not necessary, in view of the information you have on the subject, to return to the question of the upkeep of casual paupers. I wrote, some two years ago, to a number of unions in the vicinity of Belfast—some seven or eight—and the uniform reply I got in reference to the relief that casuals got coming there was, 5 c. of meal and one-third pint of butter-milk for supper, and like ration in the morning; and then it is to be remembered that every one of these men and women were put to useful work for the three or four hours they were kept after getting their breakfast. For instance, in Lismore the master wrote to me:—"About 4,000 men, women and children call at this house annually and remain one night. They are admitted between 6 and 9 p.m., and discharged at 10 a.m. next morning. Their diet is 5 c. of oatmeal and one-third pint of butter-milk for breakfast, and the same for supper. There are fifteen acres of land, and at different seasons the men are employed at digging and turning manure and covering potatoes, and when not so employed they are put to pump the sewage tanks. The women are employed in the laundry." And the same may be accepted as regards the unions of Newry, Downpatrick, Larne, Coothill, Antrim, and Newtownards. I am thoroughly in accord with the witnesses who have preceded me, on the question of boarding out children; but I don't know what means your Commission recommends for the proper dealing with the children of ins and outs. It occurs to my mind that we should have control over them the same as over orphan children, and that the Guardians should have power to take the children of ins and outs and adopt them, and put them out to board. The Legislature enacted in relation to that matter should contain stringent clauses to prevent their parents or any person interfering with the children while under the care of the Guardians. If that were not so the parents and their friends might give untold trouble to the foster parents.

11274. You think there would be danger of their going to the house and coaxing their way?—There is no doubt about it; we experience it in relation to the orphan children—nurses and grandmothers and others, anxious to get them away; so I respectfully submit this Commission should make some strong recommendation in relation to that matter, and also with regard to their duty as to pay to the Guardians for the support of their children or the part support, according to their ability, and furthermore, that if these people called runners or ins and outs give up their evil habits and become good citizens at the end of a period to be named, the Guardians could restore the children to them, having been satisfied that they had become good citizens, and were willing to take proper care of their children.

11275. Do you think that would be an incentive to reform?—I do; because we cannot at all surmise that parental affection is dead in the breast of all these poor people. I think there is scarcely anything that has caused the Guardians more pain than to see a mother coming in with three or four children, who discharged herself four or five days previously; the children go out healthy and comfortably clad. They go out, and go through some course of dissipation, and they bring back the children in rags, faint with hunger, dirty and probably affected with some skin disease. We should have power to take these children from their mothers, whose so-called parental authority is simply law empowering them to injure themselves and the children. If we could come on the children it might be a means of bringing that woman to her senses, and if she has a husband, the husband to his senses. I think, also, that fifteen years is too early an age at which to relieve the Guardians of their control over the children. I don't require to tell you that it is one of the most critical periods in the life of a girl or boy, just coming into womanhood or manhood. Whilst children boarded out with foster parents have undoubtedly turned out well in 98 cases out of 100, yet I think that the Guardians, while they should cease to contribute to their support at that age, should yet have their authority continued for a longer period in order to safeguard, if that were necessary, the children from any abuse that might arise. For example, the foster mother or father may die, and the children are cast abroad perhaps too young. I think we should have power to look after these cases for a more lengthened period.

11276. Do you approve of the suggestion made by one of the witnesses, that the Guardians should have power to apprentice these children out to farmers, or so on, for a stated period?—I certainly do; and to other trades.

11277. It would be better to send them to the country, if it could be done?—Certainly. With regard to the amalgamation of unions, Mr. MacArthur, in the termination of his evidence, expressed his desire to separate the rural part of the Co. Down from this union. I am strongly opposed to that for two reasons—first, in the interests of the poor themselves; and, second, fair play to Belfast. Hollywood is a very short distance from Belfast; the road to Belfast is a very good road; moreover, we have the apparatus for removing rapidly the sick poor of the Hollywood district to the Belfast Union; whereas the road from Hollywood to Newtownards is a very much longer journey, and the road is a bad one. Again, those in the vicinity of Hollywood have the advantage of connection with Belfast; the farmers in the district have the advantage of the Belfast markets. The poor can be better treated, and more rapidly attended to, from Belfast, and those who are living in the Rural District of Hollywood have the advantage of connection with Belfast. I also disagree with Mr. MacArthur in suggesting district rating. I say that the merchants of the centre of the city, and others who are in the centre of the city, and do their business principally outside the boundary of Belfast, but enjoy the advantage of Belfast as a centre of trade, that is to say, that the part of Belfast in which they are located should have a less rate than the poorer districts of the town, would be utterly unfair, because the ratepayers of Belfast to them arises from Belfast being what it is, and they should take their part, and bear an equal share in the relief of all distress in the city. I think it would be very unfair to inflict upon the poorer section of the community a higher rate for the relief of the poor themselves. I think, therefore, that district rating, as applied to Belfast—while I think it is not a good thing in any part of the country—would be especially unfair in the case of Belfast. Supposing that the Rural Districts connected with Belfast Union were separated, a portion of Greenacres would have to go to Larnah, and portions of the Orange-road would have to go to Larnah, and portions in Belfast would have to go to Newtownards. That would be an enormous disadvantage to the poor.

11278. Mr. Murphy.—You would be in favour of any change that would lighten the load of taxation to the ratepayers?—Certainly; I think every ratepayer would.

11279. Would the merging of this Board of Guardians be calculated to bring about more efficiency?—No; I think it would be the very reverse; it would enormously increase the cost.

11280. Centralization generally in local bodies brings about an improved state of government?—Quite the contrary. My knowledge of the history of this country is, that breaking up large bodies and conferring powers on a district is a great advantage. London used to have one Mayor and Corporation; how many Mayors and Corporations has it now?

Colonel James McCleave, J.P., examined.

Colonel John McCleave.

As paupers come continually from Lisburn to Belfast Workhouse, I consider it would be advisable to extend Belfast Union so as to take in the town of Lisburn, thereby enabling us to send our old and infirm to Lisburn Workhouse, which is capable of holding 1,040 inmates—these figures I took this time last year—and had only 245 last winter. I consider the county is overcrowded with workhouses, and that several of these might be closed with great advantage to the ratepayers, while the destitute poor need suffer nothing. I don't favour the idea of auxiliary lunatic asylums, as I consider all lunatic paupers should be treated in the county asylums, as they are much better looked after, and get the full allowance from the Government. I have long thought that the children in such a large institution as the Belfast Workhouse should have an establishment to themselves, and I would instance Antrim as an ideal house for this purpose. Of course, I think that boarding out is a very good thing, but I think we ought to have a large school to send the children to whom we don't board out, and where they could be taught trades. This Antrim Workhouse accommodates 766 paupers, and last winter it had only ninety-eight; so I think that is one that might be closed up and given to us. And in certain circumstances I consider that arrangements could be made for the maintenance of certain classes of paupers in other unions by paying. As I favour amalgamation, I would be strongly in favour of combining a number of convenient workhouses for the purpose of poor house relief.

11281. Mr. MURKIN.—In what way would you do that?—I would close up one or two of the workhouses and let them go to the others.

11282. That is amalgamation pure and simple?—Yes; I think, really, if it were not for the inconvenience of the thing, I think one workhouse would be almost enough for the Co. Antrim. It would be inconvenient sending paupers so far, but two would be certainly enough, and would save an enormous lot.

11283. Considering that they stay a long time in the institution—considering that the railway facilities in the Co. Antrim are fairly good, there would not be much difficulty?—No. There are several things which would be capable of improving, but on the whole the management, as constituted, should work fairly well. The law, however, should, in my opinion, be altered, to give the Guardians more control over casuals and women having illegitimate children; in fact, all women who are not capable of looking after their children. I endorse everything Mr. O'Hare said about the children.

11284. Dr. BROWN.—Did you hear Mr. Roddie's evidence yesterday?—No, I did not.

11285. Mr. MURKIN.—Miss Clark was still more exhaustive and clear in the same direction?—We should have complete control over these children whose parents are not capable of bringing them up properly.

11286. What about the mothers of illegitimate children—have you any suggestion to make as regards that class?—I would not allow her to take the children out when she goes out; I would keep the children and educate them properly.

11287. You would ask a further extension of the powers of the Guardians in that respect?—I would. I consider it a great hardship that we have not the same power as that possessed by English and Scotch Guardians, to deport the paupers who do not belong to the union. I think that if paupers came to us from England or Scotland, or even from other counties in Ireland, we ought to be able to send them back.

11288. It is outside our reference; I am afraid we cannot enter into that. An effort was recently made in the House to have some changes of that kind?—It is very unfair that we should have to support them. At the present time we have some Englishmen in the house.

11289. That is so; but I am afraid it is not a matter for our consideration?—There is a thing the master and I were talking about the other day, with regard to militiamen; he is very explicit on it, and I would like him to state what he thinks. I will take one case in April. There was a militiaman and his wife and all his children were in the workhouse last spring when the regiment was called up in Tyrone. This man had to walk from Belfast to the outside boundary of Tyrone, as the Government only pays from the outside boundary to the headquarters of the regiment. By law we had to turn this poor woman out and all her children. I think that is a very great hardship, particularly when he is serving his country. That is a law that ought to be altered. And that woman had to walk just from one workhouse to another, tramp it, she had no money to pay her train; of course, when she was coming back he got his bounty. Except in Relief the accommodation is more than sufficient in all the other unions. I consider all persons who avail themselves of the fever hospital—in fact, of anything—and who have means to pay, should pay in full, and those who cannot pay in full should pay as much as they can. I think steps should be taken to decrease the number of tramps and criminals, and with this end in view I would propose a certain amount of work to be done before allowing tramps and criminals to leave the workhouse, and those who present themselves frequently should be treated as prisoners; and to secure sanitation I would have them photographed, and have these photographs sent to the different unions in the neighbourhood. I know that has been done in different places. I have a note of some of the workhouses in Antism. Ballycastle holds 567, and there are only 77 in it; Lisburn, 3,040, and there are 843 in it; Ballymore, 765, and there are 143 in it; Lanes, 706, and there are 170 in it; Ballymena, 1,366, and there are 337; Antism, 766, and there are 86.

11228. You think there is a waste of space and expenditure in connection with the staff, that might be done away with—I do, indeed; I think it is a fearful keeping up a staff for nothing; I think a great number of these workhouses could be made use of in the way of schools and hospitals.

11229. Do you favour the idea of a county farm for old chronic cases that makes their home of a workhouse?—I think it would be a very good thing, free labor.

11230. You believe in taking the children out of the house—I do.

11231. Send them out as far as possible—I do.

11232. And where not possible provide other means?—A sort of public school, where we send our own children to and have them taught. Even if we took a workhouse, the same as Antism, I would be in favour of having foster mothers in it, and let them bring up their children as much as possible in a sort of cottage home in the workhouse, and let the children go to the National school outside, and give them less idea of workhouse life. I have had some children out of the workhouse down in my own place, but they generally ran away.

11233. A suggestion was put forward here that the Guardians should be ashamed to apprentice children to trades, or farmers, for a stated period, because the practice is now when they go out they only remain a few months and return to the house. Would you approve of such a change in the law as that, to enable the Guardians to send the children for a year or two years?—Certainly I do; I thought they could do that really.

11234. Dr. BROWN.—You mentioned that if a workhouse was taken over you would make it a school, with a number of foster-mothers. Do you mean to divide the workhouse into so many houses?—Yes, like cottages; beds, and have kitchens.

11235. All built within itself?—Yes; so that the girls could learn housekeeping, and make it score like a home.

11236. Not all the food cooked together?—No.

11237. Would you keep the children separate from each other?—I would, unless for playing, and let them go to the National schools as much as possible.

11238. Mr. MURPHY.—Do you not think an institutional life a bad one for children—do you not think that sending them over the country is better?—Yes; but they would mix if sent out to the National schools.

11239. But if you had them housed together they would know little of home life—I would rather let them be educated out in National schools.

11240. And mix with the population, and forget the associations of their early days?—Exactly; but I think if they were taken away from workhouse associations, and sent to a nice country place like Antism, it would be more like sending our own sons to boarding schools; they would not have the same associations as they have in the workhouse.

11241. Dr. BROWN.—You are interested in the question of a sanatorium?—Very much indeed; the sanatorium would give us great relief; I think it would be a splendid thing.

11242. Have you any suggestions to offer as regards the county?—I am not a Guardian for the Co. Antism; it is the Co. Down I represent.

11243. You would not think that one of these workhouses might be made into a sanatorium?—I do not think they could; it would be a great pity not to use them for something; it is a great throwing away of money to pull them down and build others, and structural alterations can make great improvements.

11244. Mr. MURPHY.—Is there anything else you would wish to say?—Mr. Walker said, yesterday, there are no homes for boys going to learn trades; there is a fine one in Margaret.

Mr. Walker.—That belongs to a separate institution; that is the Balmoral school.

Mr. MURPHY.—We had evidence on that point yesterday, and the merits of that institution were fully recognized by the witnesses.

Mr. Walker.—It would not cover the case of our boys.

11245. Mr. MURPHY.—Have you any views on the matter of boarding out the old, instead of keeping them in an institution?—I have not thought very much of that.

11246. The question how to provide for the infirm is perhaps the most important we have to consider. What is your view?—I really think they would be taken better care of in an institution like ours; some would be better off than ever they were in their lives.

11247. One of the most sympathetic professional men we have met, Dr. Mooshead, of Cootanhill, said one of the things that these people sighed for was the freedom of outdoor life—I daresay it would be a very good thing, and I don't think it would cost more if proper regulations were made as to the persons entitled to such assistance.

11248. Have you anything to say about the tramps?—I think there ought to be something done about them. I believe it is the law that we can detain them.

11249. Only a short time?—I think we ought to be able to keep them. Their photographs ought to be taken and sent through the country; and give them cold baths; they don't like that when coming in.

11250. Mr. MURPHY.—You have always taken a very active part in endeavoring to keep down expenditure?—I have, to a certain extent.

11251. I may say you are the only Guardian that was opposed to the expenditure of some £13,000 in making a new debating room?—You are referring to the board-room. I think I was the first; but I got a great many converts afterwards.

11252. I believe you succeeded in getting it postponed until there was an election pending?—I think the Local Government Board very wisely did that.

11253. And there was a big correspondence in the public press about it?—Indeed, if it had not been for that I think it would have been passed.

11254. And that board-room has not been built?—No.

11255. Were you present yesterday when a Guardian suggested that examinations should take place for the officials of the union?—I did not hear that.

11256. Some time ago, the proceedings at the Guardians were very noisy?—I think at all his boards they are sometimes noisy; people get excited in their debates.

11257. Mr. MURPHY.—You seem to disapprove of auxiliary asylums?—I would much rather have them sent to the local institution.

11258. Perhaps a method could be adopted cheaper than that?—No, I do not know one.

11259. For instance, the present asylums are all full; new buildings will have to be erected?—We are building very extensively at Downpatrick.

11260. And if some of these buildings that might be disused in case of a change could be put in a proper condition for the reception of these patients they might be kept at a lower rate; it would not require so many attendants to look after them. Do you not think that if this class had a home to itself it would be better, not only for the outpatients, but the patients themselves?—I think it would be better for the outpatients; but I question very much if the patients would be better. I am only speaking of the one I know. Dr. Nolan, at Downpatrick, is a model doctor, and I don't think any institution could be better than he has it.

11261. Don't you know that there is very little attendance required, and consequently less cost per head?—He does not give the harmless ones the same attendance as the dangerous ones; he has them classified.

11262. Don't you think the surroundings of noisy inmates is injurious to their peace and comfort?—I suppose it is; but it is a very large place, Downpatrick Asylum, and he has the harmless working on a large farm, and they don't hear the others.

11263. Dr. BROWN.—The Co. Down has built additional blocks to the asylum?—Yes; we have spent

Dec. 14, 1883.

Colonel John
McGowan.

£20,000 or £20,000 taking over lunatics out of the workhouses. I don't think we ought to have any lunatics in our workhouses.

11320. Mr. MURKIN.—But in the case of asylums that have not the space yours has—?—Yes; I quite agree with you that these distressed workhouses could be utilized as auxiliary asylums or schools.

11321. Then your objection to auxiliary asylums is simply confined to the Co. Down, where you have plenty of accommodation for all the demented?—Yes; I only know about the Co. Down. I think it would be a very good plan, if you had these auxiliaries, to have them under an experienced man like Dr. Nolan, who could go to visit them. These lunatics should be looked after very carefully, as they cannot do anything for themselves. Dr. Nolan has brought up cases where the ailments had threatened patients. In Ballymena there are a large number of lunatics received from Belfast, and they are kept at a loss.

Mr. Murphy.—I was instructed to appear before you on behalf of a large and representative body of ratepayers engaged in commercial pursuits who are distressed that the burthen on their shoulders may be lightened, and a central authority established for the collection of the rates. Some of these gentlemen consider more economy might be effected by the assignment of local bodies in the city, and having regard to the fact that the Poor rate is now, under the Local Government Act, levied by the Corporation, they think there should be a merger of the Guardians, say that of the Water Board in the City Council. And if there was thus established a central body some of our leading merchants might be interested to take a part in the work of the municipality. I have been furnished with a long list of witnesses, but, acting on my advice, they don't intend to present themselves for examination, as I consider it will be necessary to promote a private Bill in Parliament.

Mrs. PATER examined.

Mrs. PATER.

11322. Mr. MURKIN.—I suppose you have heard the evidence of Miss Clark?—Yes.

11323. Do you approve of what she has said on the matter?—Quite so; especially the taking of children from vicious parents. I may give you an example of one case, where a father took out a child who had been ill in the infirmary, and he walked it round, to cure it of whooping-cough, from Belfast to Lismore, and from Lismore back again. Of course, he brought it back again to the workhouse in a very bad state. I really think that children should be taken from parents of that kind.

11324. Have you any other suggestions to make?—Regarding the first case, I have had a great deal to do in that matter, and I don't think these women should come into the workhouse; I think, if possible, they should be taken outside into a maternity home.

11325. Dr. HENNESSY.—You think there would be some chance of reformation?—I think there would be some chance, because when they come into the workhouse they seem to be forgotten, unless any Guardian will take them up and find a home for their child and get them a situation. Many cases I have taken up in that way; but without we do that they are forgotten.

11326. I believe you and other lady Guardians have done a great deal in that way regarding Belfast?—Yes; I have taken up a great many cases myself, and recently we had a first case, where a woman had twins, and she told me a great number of untruths, and after spending about three-quarters of an hour with her she told me the truth, and told me who the father of the children was. I traced him, and placed the matter in the hands of her minister, and when she left the maternity hospital she was married, and they are living together and are quite happy. They really want some lady who will take them up and do what she can for them, and I think that can be done through some maternity home.

11327. Mr. MURKIN.—You think that would be better than through some religious institution?—I am afraid there would be a difficulty in getting them to go to the religious institution; I think they would go more readily to a home such as Dr. Bell speaks of.

11328. You think ladies could be induced to look after them at a maternity home?—I think so; I think we should find we had ladies who would take that sort of thing up. I agree with what Mrs. Clark said about scattered homes and working boys' homes.

11329. You approve of the practice of boarding out?—There are some children that I don't think we can board out—the children of widows; I don't think we should take them from the widow. I think the working boys' home would be a good idea; we should then be able to get the boys right. We have quite a number that we don't know what to do with; they are in the schools, and we cannot obtain situations for them, because we have no place to put them in at night. I have been making inquiries from a home here, and I find they have twenty boys, and find it most essential. It is in connection with the Belmarsh Institution.

11330. You think if that system was extended it would be good?—Something of that kind. They say it is most successful, and they started because they did not know what to do with their boys. They have a very good mother, and they have a small boy earning from 5s. to 10s. will contribute 7s. a week to the home; a boy earning 6s. or 7s. will contribute 5s. 6d. They received, last year, £200 from the boys. The boys seem to be most successful. And they are plumpers and openers among them; and there are very few failures. We have twelve or thirteen boys that we don't know what to do with.

11331. Dr. HENNESSY.—Do the boys from that home do well afterwards?—I am told very well indeed; there are very few failures.

Dr. HALL examined.

Dr. HALL.

11332. Mr. MURKIN.—Well, doctor, we would like to hear your views.—There are just one or two points I would touch upon. I am of opinion that Poor Law infirmaries and hospitals should be open to paying patients, and that Guardians should have the power of charging such a rate either in excess or below the average cost, which may not, in the individual case, be the actual cost, having regard to the requirements of the case and the ability of the patient to recomp the Guardians. A sliding scale of charges could be arranged by the Guardians to cover these points.

11333. Do you think that would be a beneficial charge?—In our institution very frequently we have patients who are well able to pay, and yet they are only charged the average cost. We think that is a hardship.

11334. Dr. HENNESSY.—Do you mean the cost of maintenance?—The cost of maintenance and treatment. Generally, a person is in a position to pay coming to a Poor Law infirmary must be strictly ill and require operative treatment, or he would not be there. So he is likely to cost more than an ordinary patient.

11335. What is the amount you would charge?—Up to one guinea; but I have that entirely in the hands of the Guardians.

11336. What do you charge?—About 6s. in the infirmary. But a case of acute illness, or requiring operative treatment, would cost the Guardians much more than that.

11337. Mr. MURKIN.—You think in the case of patients who were able to pay the Guardians should have power to fix a sum?—I do.

11338. Dr. HENNESSY.—In the same way as the county infirmaries?—Yes. I am also strongly of opinion that consumptive patients should not be treated in workhouse infirmaries. Structurally they are unsuitable and impossible of reconstruction, built as they are, or three-story blocks on the general ward system, and for large numbers of cases. This renders the attention so essential to the satisfactory treatment of the various stages of this disease impossible; while their presence in the same building is a very grave source of danger to patients suffering from other ailments, and therefore in a low state of vitality. Further, I consider that when a large number of consumptive patients are concentrated in any one building or portion of such they become a source of danger to each other.

11343. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you think there should be isolation—I do; that they should be separated and a sanatorium erected outside the town.

11344. Do you think it would require one for each county or would a provincial sanatorium be sufficient?—A large city like Belfast would require one for itself, or it may be two, because if a sanatorium were started some consumptives would be treated. In counties like Antrim or Down it would require two or maybe three. We find in the infirmary that mill-workers compose much more than half of the consumptives, so in any manufacturing district you may count on a large number.

11345. Would you establish these out in the country?—Out in the country, free from towns.

11346. Near the sea?—It may be, or it may be inland; it would not matter much, provided it was in a healthy district, and you had shelter from the most prevalent winds.

11347. There has been something of the kind established in Coochibill by Dr. Moorhead on a small scale—sheds, movable houses that can be shifted about?—That would exactly meet with my idea. Therefore, all cases of pulmonary tuberculosis should be treated in a sanatorium especially established for the purpose. There is a decided hope for them if they are got early.

11348. Would you go as far as some of the witnesses, and say that the disease should be notifiable?—I am also strongly of opinion that the compulsory notification in pulmonary tuberculosis would be of material assistance in the endeavour to stamp out, or at least lessen this disease; the local authorities would then know accurately where the disease was most prevalent, and would be much better able to take preventive or curative steps.

11349. Dr. BLOOM.—As far as Belfast is concerned the Guardians are not the sanitary authority—I know that; but the Local Government Board have a considerable amount of power, and if they suggested it should be a notifiable disease I am sure it would be enforced. There is one point with regard to school children. I think that the school children should all be removed from the workhouse; I think it is a most unhealthy surrounding for them. When they come to the age of fifteen they are sent to the body of the house, which is a great mistake, because up to that time they are not taught any trade. My own idea is that the schools should be removed to the country, and they should have various workshops, where the children should be taught trades, and the Government should permit the age to be increased to seventeen or eighteen before they go to the body of the house. By that time the children would be pretty well advanced in a trade, so that the Guardians would appreciate them outside, and by so doing I believe it would decrease the rates very much, and be a decided benefit to those people.

11350. Mr. MURKIN.—You agree in the view put forward that the Guardians should have further power as regards the apprenticing of the children?—I do; I think it would be a decided advantage to the community.

11351. To be enabled to send them for a term to learn a trade or work on the farm?—Quite so; I am in entire agreement with it.

Dr. LUNN examined.

11352. Mr. MURKIN.—We would like to hear your view—I am of opinion that workhouse infirmaries and fever hospitals should be separated from the workhouse proper, both structurally and in name. By structurally I mean that the buildings should be so arranged that intercourse between the inmates of the workhouse and the patients in the wards and grounds of the infirmary or hospital would be impossible. The workhouse infirmary is, without doubt, obnoxious to the respectable poor of the community, and I believe that many of this class are deterred from seeking the treatment that is necessary to their disease, and only wait for them in our infirmaries until it is too late to be of much value to them, chiefly by a sentimental repugnance to a workhouse institution. I therefore suggest that some terms, such as district infirmary and district hospital, be substituted for these now in use. However, I do not wish it to be inferred that in suggesting a change of name I consider any change in the board of management desirable. I am not saying that it would not be desirable in some cases; but the management that we have had in Belfast does not lead me to think that any change would be desirable here. We get very assistance as medical officers from our Board. I agree with Dr. Hall that paying patients should be admitted to the infirmary and hospital, and that they should be charged at a sliding scale of charges, both extending above and below the average cost of maintenance. I also agree with him and the other witnesses who have recommended the removal of consumptive patients from the workhouse, and also, I believe that notification of consumption would be a very good thing if it could be accomplished by any means. A class of patients that I wish to speak of, as I have a great deal to do with them, are those suffering from simple alcoholism. I think in the infirmary they should be treated in isolated wards. A great many of those patients are able to pay well, and, I think, should be charged above the average cost of maintenance. These cases that are admitted a certain number of times to the institution, I think should be sent to institutions for incurables and detained there for a period regulated by expert medical opinion. We have a very large number of cases that come in habitually, and if they were sent to institutions where they could be detained it would have a very good effect on them. There is, however, a class of alcoholic patients which is very troublesome in large towns. I refer to cases of acute drunkenness combined with delirium. Individuals of this class do not often suffer from delirium tremens; they have not money enough to drink long enough for that result. They indulge in a severe bout of drinking, and have usually sufficiently recovered in a few days to seek discharge from the infirmary. When they have passed enough money they return, or are brought in again in a state of intoxication so severe as to require medical treatment, and often with injuries directly or indirectly caused by drink.

11353. In what condition are they when they appear at the workhouse?—More than ordinarily drunk—acute alcoholism, verging on a state of coma, constantly helpless; frequently in that condition. When they are admitted to the infirmary they are a source of annoyance and danger to patients who are really ill, because even though we have separated them at present their noise and language can be heard at a considerable distance.

11354. And do any of these have means?—This class specially are mostly destitute, and in the case of their readmission they very often come in with slight injuries, broken heads, cuts, and contusions, and have to be treated surgically as well. I take the numbers for one year, 1901. The number of cases for that year of simple alcoholism was 355; in addition to this number there were 178 cases admitted of alcoholism associated with some surgical injuries, usually very slight, making a total of 533. A large proportion of these cases were readmissions, people who had been admitted several times before. I think that a certain number of admissions of this sort should constitute an offence, for which the individual should be sent to jail, or at least some place where they could be detained; detention seems to be the punishment that has most effect on them. I am strongly of opinion that mothers admitted a certain number of times in this condition should be deprived of the charge of their children. Such a plan would undoubtedly be of unspeakable benefit to the children, and would, I think, tend to lessen the propagation of those habits of vice and intemperance which are the main cause of pauperism. About that question of the separation of mothers from the children, I think if any one were round Lichfield-road or Victoria-street after 10 o'clock at night, especially on a Saturday night, he would see a sight that would impress him with the importance of taking the poor children from those parents. They come up there in a shocking state with the children, sometimes one in arms and one able to walk—a most pitiable sight to see these children being brought up on a cold night to the workhouse gates.

11355. Do the officers for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children not look after such cases as that?—I dare say they do, in a certain number of cases; in fact, I know they deal with a large number; but they are evidently not able to deal with all, because it is a thing of very frequent occurrence. I think that a certain number of admissions on the part of a woman to the infirmary in that condition should constitute an offence whereby she could be legally deprived of the charge of her children, and the Guardians could then adopt them. I think every large infirmary throughout the country, especially in large towns, should have isolation wards for the treatment of infectious eye cases. There is a disease called trachoma, which is very infectious, and has been stamped out in some countries entirely; it is a matter for regret that it is prevalent in Ireland. I also think that convalescent departments with associated sitting spaces should be established in every infirmary. Open-air exercise hastens recovery, and therefore tends to shorten the stay of patients in hospital. With regard to venereal cases, I think they should be detained in isolation wards until pronounced free of disease. Some of the Guardians have mentioned that we have not power to detain these people; they can discharge themselves, and it is a matter for great regret that we have not the power to detain them until they are free of disease. It is recommended that there should be city lock hospitals; I suppose that is a matter of public health, too, to a large extent. But I think Mr. MacArthur's statement with regard to fever patients would apply to our relations to the lock cases. He says the master in a humane way admits these cases, because there is no other place to take them. There is no other hospital for lock cases, and I think, instead of rejecting them, every infirmary should be offered to girls suffering from the disease to come in. The care of the disease would not be the only advantage gained; I believe, in a certain number of cases, by the discreet and benevolent efforts of the nurse, assisted by other ladies who are interested in this work, a change of life on the part of the patient would take place. In fact, I know this has been accomplished in our institutions. On the question of rejecting them from our institutions, at present, I think I may mention a thing that is not, perhaps, fully realised, that their going out is a source of serious danger to the community, and it is a well-known fact to medical men that children and other innocent persons have contracted syphilis by using the same eating utensils and drinking vessels and using the same towels, and therefore, to discourage these people from coming in to the infirmary would be very questionable wisdom at the present time. As regards children, I agree in the main with the recommendations made; I think very strongly that the children of violent parents should be removed from their charge. School children over four years of age should be removed from the workhouse entirely. I am not quite sure that I can express any definite opinion on the treatment of children under four. I think, for the first year of infant life, unless there are very good reasons for it, the child should be left with the mother. I think the relation would be mutually beneficial, and unless the mother is extremely unworthy or physically unfit to nurse her child, the child should be with her. When the child is over a month old I think the mother should be separated from the child for certain intervals during the day. She should be made to do some other work, and be allowed at intervals regulated by the medical officer's opinion, to visit the child.

11258 Dr. Broom.—You have some opinion like that in the Belfast Workhouse?—Yes. I will tell you briefly what we have been trying to do. Children over two years, while in the institution, are completely separated from their mothers, who, I believe, are allowed to visit them once a week, and day and night they are under the charge of an experienced nurse. Children over twelve months and under two years should be with their mothers at night only, while in the workhouse; and at night they are all under the charge—that is mothers and children—under the charge of an experienced nurse. By an experienced nurse I don't mean a trained nurse; I think it would be perhaps wasting material to employ a trained nurse for this purpose; I think a woman who has had a family herself, and is skilled in the management of children, would be all that is necessary. Children from one month to a year should be visited by the mothers at intervals during the day, and should at other times be under the care of able-bodied women, an experienced nurse acting as superintendent of the Department, of course. I think mothers with an infant under a month should be with it constantly for the first month after birth. With regard to women giving birth to a first illegitimate child, I think her case is very hard indeed, and I am very glad to hear of the institution over which Dr. Bell presides, and I think it is regrettable it is not better known among medical men in this city. I was not quite clear as to whether in this home the woman is kept during her confinement.

Mrs. Poyne.—She is kept in the home.

Dr. Broom.—And before her confinement also.

Witness.—I don't know whether that is exactly the plan that the Guardians should be asked to approve of or not. I propose to recommend that the Guardians should have power to assist in paying for the expenses of the child for a time, and the support of the mother until such time as she is able to support herself at any rate. I think the Guardians, in that case, should have a good deal to say to the management of the home during the confinement. In the maternity department of our infirmary at present, we have one of the best equipped maternity hospitals in Ireland; the women undergo a very thorough training, and pass a very difficult examination, and the cases that are treated in that institution are by no means all uneducated women, some are respectable women, and they are well treated there, and I think to take all the respectable element from the maternity department would be a mistake. I speak without hesitation of that department, because I am not connected with it myself; but I know it is very thoroughly equipped and well managed, and to have it simply for cases that are giving birth to a second or third illegitimate child I think would be rather a pity. Of course, I thoroughly agree with the scheme of not taking the girls into the workhouse at all before the confinement, and as soon afterwards as they can be sent away they should be. I think the scheme of taking a home, where they can be looked after and situations provided for them is an excellent scheme indeed, and cannot be too highly praised.

11259 Dr. Broom.—Speaking generally on that subject, do you not think it a most desirable thing that all these cases should be treated outside the workhouse?—As a general principle, I think it would be better if they were not taken into the workhouse at all. I don't know anything about the home, but I have a good deal of experience of gynaecological work, and in one of the large hospitals, and I know what would most cases to these hospitals is the want of care and proper treatment at the birth. The home is a small one, and could not adequately treat all these girls, and unless there was a proper maternity hospital, I think it would be a great pity that these poor women should be deterred or discouraged from seeking the help and good treatment they can get in the maternity department of the Belfast Union Infirmary; that is my position. There is just one other matter. I think it is a matter well worth of consideration whether it would not pay the Board of Guardians to subsidise these charitable bodies who supply district nurses to the sick poor. Undoubtedly there are many cases of disease that are best treated in hospital; but I think that, on the other hand, many patients are admitted to hospitals and infirmaries who could be very well treated at their own homes, and who would gladly be so, if a sufficient number of visits could be paid by district nurses. These nurses should not be permitted to attend any case without the sanction of a medical man. The reasons are obvious: they might be attending infectious cases and others who were not at the same time. I simply mention this as a possible means of assisting the sick poor without increasing the risk of promoting a spirit of pauperism, and a means of administering efficiency of treatment that would at the same time tend to secure economy.

11260 Mr. Munnaghan.—You think some change of that kind might be brought about that would be beneficial?—I think it would. I think it would tend to economy, and meet with the wishes of the poor people, to be treated in their own homes. We at present have in Belfast a society for providing district nurses for the sick poor, and I think it is not very well known, and its operations are very much limited. I think if the Guardians had power to subsidise such bodies it would be a very valuable thing for lessening the number in infirmaries, and also meeting the wants of the sick poor.

11261 Dr. Broom.—Did you hear Dr. Kirk's evidence?—I did.

11262 Do you approve of it?—Thoroughly.

11263 He mentioned about district nurses in rural districts, where the population is sparse, and one nurse living in a small hospital with, perhaps, only a few beds. It would be a home for her, and at the same time she might do a great deal of good in the district when there were no cases in the hospital. Quite so.

11364. You approve of that?—Thoroughly; if operative cases were admitted she would be able to procure assistance.

11365. Of course, one doctor might be in charge, and they might get a doctor from an adjoining district?—I think it is a very excellent scheme.

11366. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Your suggestions might be utilized by this system?—Quite so.

11367. Mr. WALSH.—You have a great number of serious operations to perform?—Yes; there are a large number of major operations done every week.

11368. Have you ever had a serious operation which you have had to send out of the infirmary because of lack of facilities for performing it?—No, we are very well equipped as the infirmary in that respect; we have a theatre which is not facilities; but I believe the Guardians are going to make a fine new one for the infirmary in the near future. We have a full set of instruments and a very well-trained nurse, and I have never had anything sent to the infirmary that I could not deal with in the institution—never had any case sent out for an operation since I was there.

Mr. MURKAGHAN.—I may say that everything we have heard since we sat here with regard to the Belfast Infirmary has been of a very high character.

Dec. 16, 1905.

Dr. Lyman.

Dr. McLean examined.

I wish to give evidence with regard to the lunatics and epileptics. I quite agree with everything I have heard stated by other witnesses, that the sooner the lunatics and epileptics are removed from workhouses the better. It is quite obvious it would be very expensive to provide anything like proper accommodation in each workhouse for them.

11369. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—You think the workhouse is not the proper place for them?—Not at all; we have acted on that principle in Belfast, and in the last five years we have sent 367 to the District Lunatic Asylum.

11370. The asylum is now pretty full; something will have to be done to relieve it, either by extension of buildings or taking over some disused institution?—Yes.

11373. Do you approve of that?—I don't know that I would. In some cases it might be used; but it is rather objectionable to have these lunatics mixing with the ordinary population, especially with young people, especially in such an ornate country as Ireland. The other plan suggested was to build auxiliary asylums, say four, one for each province. I don't think I would approve of that very much; it would be merely making four more large asylums, with nearly a thousand inmates in each, and it would be much better to have them on the lines of the ordinary county asylums. I think the best plan of all to dispose of these lunatics in the workhouse would be to send them all to the present county asylums, and to take new land in connection with the asylums and build new buildings in connection with the present district asylums, that is, to build annexes, and probably build them on the cottage plan. My reason for thinking that is largely from looking at the treatment of insanity in general, and the lunatics who are in the workhouse are merely part of all the lunatics in Ireland. The present accommodation in the district asylums is quite inadequate; not only is it insufficient to house the people, but it is not up-to-date; they are largely out-dated dismal structures. My plan would be to build annexes on a cottage or villa plan, and make a selection from the present lunatics in the asylums who would be most benefited by that form of treatment, that is, the patients where there was a chance of curing, and put them in the new buildings.

11374. The hospital cases?—Yes; I would build new buildings for them in connection with the present asylums, and put the demented and the hopeless lunatics from the workhouse in the present asylum buildings.

11375. Do you see no objection to a great gathering of people in one small compass?—You would want, in that case, to take a large farm.

11376. Would it be well to have 1,000 or 2,000 people gathered together?—You only want to accommodate 4,000 additional inmates, and they would be divided through twenty-two asylums in Ireland.

11377. Most of the asylums are already taxed to their full capacity, and it does not seem a very desirable thing to gather together a very large number—to go over 1,000 in any institution is disapproved of by men whose opinion has been gained by experience?—It would not be wise to have too many; but it would be better to have these additions put to the present asylums, because you must have additional accommodation given to them for their ordinary working purposes.

11378. Do you not think auxiliary asylums would be more advantageous than erecting new buildings?—I think they would be better if you built them on a proper system.

11379. Having them by themselves, you could adopt a system of classification; you could utilize their labour, give them more exercise, and elbow-room?—If there were proper additional asylums built that would be all right; but the suggestions I have seen for these additional asylums are to build them in a cheap way and run them in a cheap way.

11380. That would be all matter for consideration and detail?—It would be most satisfactory if you build proper new asylums.

11381. Auxiliaries, instead of keeping them all together in a great district asylum?—Yes; but I would not lock on them as people who are to be shunned merely, I would run them on the lines of the present asylums.

11382. But they would not require very much attendance, or watching?—My experience has been that that class of lunatics are the cases that require the most attendance.

11383. I am referring to idle and harmless lunatics?—There are a class of them who are not very troublesome; but they would have to be very carefully selected from the present asylums, and put the demented and the troublesome cases in the present asylums when you take them out of the workhouse, and in all cases it would be a wise plan that there should be a large quantity of land attached to the asylums, and they should be under medical superintendence, too. It has been suggested to put them under lay superintendence; but I think that would be a mistake, because the circumstances and treatment of lunatics is a mental study, and I think a medical expert is the most suitable man to look after that class of patients.

11384. The idea is to keep them under medical supervision. I was not aware anything else had been suggested?—It has been publicly stated. We have 117 lunatics altogether left at present, and 51 of those are females; of those 51, 27 do work, that is, 14 work in the laundry, 9 as scabbers, and 4 as seamstresses.

11385. Dr. BROWN.—All in their own department?—All in their own department. The remaining 23 are old women, and one idiot child. The 14 laundry girls wash all socks, flannels, woollen scarves and shawls for the whole institution, except the fever hospital; and also the bed linen and night clothing of the lunatic officers. Of the 56 men, 45 do more or less work, 11 work out on the farms; they do weeding, and that sort of thing—of course, we have not near sufficient ground—and 5 do the carrying from the stores of food and so forth, up to the lunatic department and from the kitchen, and 8 of them do scrubbing, and 19 pick oakum.

11386. Is that a penitential business, the picking of the oakum?—Oh, no, just merely to keep them employed; we cannot afford to set up an establishment for picking the hair of mattresses and beds, although the picking of oakum is much more healthy than picking hair mattresses, which is carried on largely in anyhuts. I think the objection to picking cotton is purely sentimental, because it used to be used in prisons, but really it is not a laborious work at all, and, I think, much more healthy than the picking of hair mattresses.

Dec. 17, 1898.

Dr. McLeish.

There are 29 male epileptics, and they all do some work, except 5 old men. Twenty-nine female epileptics, and besides scrubbing they do all the darning and repairing of clothes of the male convalescent and male and female lunatic departments; that is, they work for 300 people. We have no pauper cleaners or attendants in the male and female epileptics or male and female lunatics, except one, who acts as assistant to the landlady. They do all their own cleaning, and run their own establishment.

11387. Mr. MURKIN.—Is their treatment the same as the ordinary inmate in the body of the house?—They get much better; there is a special lunatic diet. Then about the visiting of friends. Out of 55 male inmates there are 19 who are visited by friends, that is, they are visited by friends from once a week to once a month, and those who don't come to see them oftener than once a month, as a rule don't come to see them at all.

11388. So that two-thirds of them are almost forgotten?—Yes; although they will have friends who generally turn up when they die to see to their burial; that is about all the interest they seem to take in them. Out of the 51 females 17 receive some visits—some of them once a week regularly, some once a fortnight, some once a month. And the epileptics—out of 29 males there are 10 who receive visits; and of the 20 females there are 14 who receive visits.

11389. Do you think any special treatment ought to be provided for epileptics?—Unquestionably; I am even more strongly of opinion that they should be removed from the workhouse than the lunatics. Nearly all the epileptics we have are more or less sane.

11390. Did you hear the evidence of Dr. Macdonald on that subject?—I did not. We have sent nearly all the insane epileptics to the asylum. I think the colony system would be the best treatment for the epileptics, and I think they would soon approximate to; and the colony system, with small cottages of from six to twenty in each cottage would entirely suit the requirements of the epileptics as a whole. Epileptics are of a very nervous, nervous disposition, easily offended, touchy sort of people, and the home life they would get in a colony, and the varied occupation which would suit every one of them, would be most useful.

11391. You think the system would be not only humane but economical?—I do; if there was a large enough colony taken they could largely contribute to their own maintenance by their work, and most of them undoubtedly would work, practically all of them.

11392. Dr. BROWN.—How many of the epileptics might be some of the fifty-eight?—All except about six. Of course, we have sent a good many insane away.

11393. It has been roughly estimated that there would be about 300 sane epileptics in Ireland. Do you think they might not all be treated in our institution?—There might be a difference as to what a man would call a sane epileptic.

11394. That is according to a return from the medical officers of the different institutions?—There are epileptics who may be bad tempered, some may have in attack of acute mania, either before or after an epileptic attack; but some are bad tempered about the time and might be considered insane.

11395. You would hardly call bad temper insanity?—No.

Mr. ROBERT H. WILSON, Master, Belfast Workhouse, examined.

There are one or two matters I wish to bring before you with a view to bringing about greater efficiency, more economical administration, and especially better classification of the inmates, and to broaden the sphere of utility towards the respectable poor of the Poor Law system in the Belfast Union district. I would say, on this matter, that any reference I may make is not in any way to be interpreted as a reflection on the system, but merely what came under my own observation as more or less defective arrangements.

11396. Mr. MURKIN.—Have you had long experience?—I have been thirteen years serving the Board, and three and a half years master. I would suggest that a number of unions be combined for the purpose of relieving and maintaining that class of adult paupers who may be termed able-bodied and imbecile, and suggest that they should not be allowed to enter the workhouse at all, the workhouse to be reserved for the sick and infirm only. In the Union of Belfast, according to the evidence taken after the last investigation, it is clearly shown that, owing to this class of inmates taking advantage of the lax state of the existing law the Guardians and their officers are in a greater or less degree prevented from giving the necessary attention to the respectable poor and accommodating them as they should be, the relieving officers' evidence being that their business in regard to dealing with applications for admission to the workhouse is practically turned into a farce.

11397. In what respect do you suggest it is turned into a farce?—That these sane people apply time after time to them, only to discharge themselves after remaining for a short period in the workhouse, and then to re-apply for admission.

11398. Do you think the suggestion of Mr. O'Haire would meet that?—Yes, fully. I would suggest that these persons should be dealt with in the same manner as the class termed tramps or casuals, which, if done, would leave not only the officers who act as inspectors of the poor or relieving officers more time to inspect and ascertain the cases of the respectable destitute poor, but would have the effect, also, of giving greater accommodation at the Guardians' disposal for housing and maintaining them.

11399. You heard the evidence of Dr. Lyneux about the number of these people coming continually drunk to the workhouse after having been about three or four days, and that they had to be housed in the infirmary, thereby taking up the accommodation in the infirmary, which, if they were dealt with in a more stringent manner under the law, they could not do so. I believe that would go a long way towards giving greater facilities to the Guardians for accommodating the respectable poor. From the point of view of accommodation it is a very serious matter for the Guardians, as the ranner class and their children have very often to be sent to the sick wards, owing to their continually and habitually going out in the most inclement weather and coming back, mostly after 9 o'clock at night, and in many cases after midnight, and the hardships inflicted on the children are obvious to all, and in some cases they become a permanent charge on the rates.

11400. Do you mean the children?—Yes, sir. I would be in favour of boarding out all the children, and in order to do so permission should be given to the Guardians to adopt them, and at the same time extended powers of control and detention of parents should be permitted to allow of the system being practicable. Miss Clarke gave you the percentage of children under the different headings.

11401. Would you extend the boarding-out any further than the children?—I deal with the sick and infirm afterwards. I do approve of that, to some extent. The lunatics should be removed, also the consumptives, as neither for the sake of these inmates themselves nor the other classes, is it desirable to have them in such an institution as the Belfast Workhouse. I may say in respect of consumptives, what I feel very strongly about is that in an institution, especially a large one, such as we have, it is not tending to the good government of the other parts of the workhouse to have a class such as the consumptives housed in the same building, and going about the same establishment, as the consumptives are a class we desire to treat luxuriously—in fact their condition demands that—and to treat them in the same establishment as other inmates who are expected to do an honest day's work for their living under good government almost an impossibility.

11403. And you think these people ought to be put in a place where they could have the best food and fresh air?—They could not get better food or more luxuries treatment than they get; but my point is, that treating these luxuriously in the same establishment with other inmates—very often, treating one in that way who has entered the workhouse in company with another man who has to be dealt with in a more stringent way is not a good system.

11404. You think there ought to be better classification in that respect?—I think consensitives should not be in the workhouse. Another class that could with advantage be boarded out is the infirm, who have soldiers with whom they could live, and who are in the workhouse only on account of their very old and infirm condition. There are almost 300 such in the Belfast Workhouse. We have made personal inquiries from the inmates of the infirm wards, and we find that about 50 per cent. of those classed as feeble and infirm have given the addresses of relatives, and have stated that they were willing to go to these in case they were boarded out, and granted a pension of 5s to 7s a week. I think it would be a very good thing if such could be done, but with proper safeguards.

11406. But you would approve of the method if there was a sufficient check?—Yes; I think it would be a splendid thing. I desire the strongest terms to represent to the Commission that the system which permits of army and navy pensioners being lodged in the workhouse is, in my view, the most objectionable possible from all standpoints, the Guardians being only permitted to charge their pensions with the actual cost of food and clothing given to them, the pensioners receiving the balance due quarterly. This system results in the good conduct and control of the establishment being practically upset once a quarter by these men discharging themselves, often returning drunk and in a shattered condition of health, so that many of them have to be treated in hospital, and deaths have resulted owing to this cause, and inquiries held, and the jury regretted that such a system should prevail. I have made inquiries from these men themselves, and find that even the worst offenders in this respect would gladly welcome a scheme which would allow them to be lodged in a hostel under military or civil control, and in which various articles of food, and such comforts as tobacco, &c., might be given them from day to day at a certain price, and in quantities varying according to the rules of their pension, so that they would have nothing left at the end of the quarter. Such a system would give these deserving men greater privileges as to leave of absence, lengthen and cheer their lives, and in many cases save them from cutting short their career by their own conduct. It has imposed itself on me that they do not short their lives.

11407. How many have you in Belfast?—Fifty.

11408. Are there many in the country?—I think we have a greater proportion of them than we really should have. Whether the state of the particular departments in which they are housed is new to their liking or not I cannot tell; but I know they have come from a distance to us to be housed. I don't think, either from a public point of view or a personal point of view, that it is a good thing to have the habit of pensioners attached to soldiers who have served their country, and I don't think the public would object to the Government paying wherever was necessary in order to keep them out of the workhouse. The fact of the matter is, we are charged in the workhouse with the upkeep of these men; they upset the establishment, and the workhouse authorities are made as it were to blame.

11410. Connections or relatives?—Yes, when they have not in the workhouse. With regard to illegitimate children the results of the law as to liability of parents fathers in this sense are expensive, and seriously affect the well-being and after-life of both children and mothers. During the twelve months ended March, 1893, 183 illegitimate children were born in the Workhouse Maternity Hospital. Of this number, as far as could be ascertained, 140 were first cases and 43 not. Thirty-seven of the mothers, with their children, subsequently drifted into the nursery department of the workhouse. On inquiry, I have found that there is, at any one time, an average of fifty women with their children being maintained there by the Guardians, or over 100 persons in all. Owing to the state of the law the Guardians are compelled to maintain, on an average, 300 inmates in the establishment, and if better arrangements were made for the maintaining of these women and the care of their children, I believe that could be prevented. Of all the questions affecting the poor and the ratepayers I consider this one the most serious, and at the same time the most intricate and difficult to successfully deal with. The most serious because of the after effects on the poor, both children and adult, and from the ratepayer's aspect, and the most intricate and difficult owing to the very great delicacy and the proper safeguards necessary to be adopted, so as to meet such first cases as are helpful without encouragement to do wrong.

11411. You think if the treatment was too kind it might induce others to go wrong?—That is my own personal view. I have long felt that if the Local Government Board could see their way to order and authorise a Ladies' Committee, not necessarily members of the Board of Guardians, but similar to that ordered by their regulations, Article 17 of the Pauper Children Act, 1868, for children boarded out, that such a committee could quietly and unobtrusively assist these women to obtain suitable employment, and in addition, if the Guardians were empowered to have their children looked after in properly equipped day nurseries, many of them would be saved from ruin, the children's lives in many cases saved, and the Poor Law expenditure considerably reduced. I have, in my own experience, found such to be the case in those cases which the lady members of the Board have taken in hand as my recent. I tried to trace what became of these first cases afterwards. One case, M.J., born 10th April, 1892, went out within fourteen days, was readmitted with the mother 5th November, 1892, and child died 3rd December, 1892. Another case, born 12th May, 1893, discharged shortly afterwards, was readmitted October 9th, 1893, and discharged 16th of October, 1893; the child being ill, the mother took it out contrary to medical advice. Another case, born 18th of May, readmitted 28th June; child died shortly after that. I have had many consultations with the Deputy Coroner of the city, and we really don't know what to do with them. He has informed me that the number of infant children on whom he has to hold inquests is increasing in the city of Belfast. I have found that the lady members of the Board, in any cases they have taken in hand at my request, have been able to cope with them successfully, that is, assisted them in having the children looked after and obtaining employment for the mothers, and no one was wiser about it. Mrs. Payne, Miss Clarke, and Miss Magill have been very kind in that respect; but they have so much business in hand in connection with Poor Law work that I think an outside committee of ladies would be invaluable.

11412. Do you not think it would be well to remove that class from the workhouse altogether—have a house elsewhere?—It is a very delicate point. These girls very often come into the workhouse in the dead of night; apparently they don't want anyone to know where they are going. I have made it a rule to receive them; in fact, I have had one or two object lessons to teach me to do that. One respectable girl from whom I had an application told me, after I had decided to admit her, that it was just as well I had done so, for had she been turned away she would have thrown herself into the river. Belfast is peculiarly situated with regard to this matter, owing to the fact that there are a considerable number of young girls from the adjoining counties, employed as servants, factory and warehouse workers, &c., in the city, whose parents are in the country, and with whom almost invariably the girls refuse to communicate when they are obliged to seek shelter in the workhouse for confinement or after confinement. I can assure the Commission with the greatest respect, that I have often watched these girls going out with their children on to the streets of the city when they were discharged at their own request, and having told me, in reply to my enquiries, that they did not know what they might do or where they were going, and I have been disgusted to think that the state of the Poor Law permitted such a thing without protection.

Dec. 22, 1893.

Mr. Robert H. Wilson.

Dec. 15, 1903.

Mr Robert H. Wilson.

11413. What would you do in such a case?—I don't know; unless we can assist the mother and protect the children. I don't know what the ultimate result will be.

11414. You have no suggestion to make?—No; further than I think the Ladies' Committee could give great assistance in the matter. There should be extended powers given to the Guardians to assist the mother and take care of the children. One means of employing these women might be to give them employment under the Guardians themselves, and pay them as serivants in the infirmary.

11415. That might be perpetuating the evil?—I think, for the first month or two months, when the Guardians were caring their children, it might be well done, and for the first year when it could be permitted, that they should go to the day nursery at certain times; it would only be a temporary thing, until permanent employment was obtained for them. I would suggest that in accounting for the expenditure of the establishment, separate accounts should be kept for the infirmary, the hospital, and the workhouse proper, which, besides being desirable for public purposes, would be a very valuable incentive to the officers primarily responsible for the administration of the different departments, and judging from the results of the Nursing Order of the Local Government Board, would lead to greater efficiency in other respects. I strongly recommend a scheme of keeping separate accounts of expenses. It would let both the public and the Guardians and their officers see how the expenditure was going from time to time. At present the establishment charges are all grouped in one sum, and it is calculated to lead both the Guardians and their officers and the public astray in the matter.

11416. Have there under different headings?—Yes, sir. As to the treatment of the vagrant poor generally known as tramps or casuals, in many cases I think this class of the vagrant poor are judged too harshly and too harshly, as, for instance, in the case mentioned by Colonel McCann, of adult males who may happen to belong to a militia regiment, as many do, and who have their wives and young children dependent on them in the workhouse. The present state of the law requires that he must take all such with him at his discharge from the workhouse. Suppose he belongs to the Donegal regiment, stationed at Letterkenny, he only obtains a travelling permit from Derry to Letterkenny; so that he is obliged—and his dependants with him—to tramp from Belfast to Derry, and in the spring and summer months a large number of such cases are tramping over the country for that reason. Is it any wonder, when a man must report himself on a certain day at Letterkenny, that he disregards weather, the state of his children, &c., and continues his way? I think the tramp nuisance through Antrim, Down, Derry, &c., might be considerably reduced if a different system were adopted in regard to these people. If they were permitted to discharge themselves temporarily, leaving their wife and children in the workhouse, when we have sufficient information that they are going up to their militia regiment, a communication could be established with the headquarters of the militia, so that they should receive from the point of departure a permit to travel by the railway. Then there are others amongst them—but a small proportion—who have been unable to retain their employment, and who are really anxious to find honest work. Many such cases have come under my own notice of men who could really not obtain employment. I have obtained employment for some of them, and a very large proportion of them have turned out well. And in that respect I must say that the law very often works out harshly to the man who has been engaged in such work as brickfield work, and has a large family depending on him—a season of bad weather comes and work is stopped; he is obliged to come into the workhouse with his wife and family, and before he can go out again, having been in for a month or two, he is obliged to take his family out. I think, in such a case, with a proper safeguard, a discretionary power should be left to assist that man.

11417. By outdoor relief?—No; he should be allowed to leave his wife and children temporarily in the workhouse.

11418. Would it not be better to leave them all out-give them a weekly sum?—I dare say it would. I have known at least one dozen such cases within the past twelve months, and very often they have large families, and their houses are broken up, and they have the greatest difficulty in getting on their feet again; in fact, were it not for private benevolence sometimes placed at my disposal, they could not start again. I don't know whether workhouse masters can be sufficiently trusted to have a little money at their disposal to give to such people; it would save the rates enormously. Then there are others who habitually tramp about from one union to another with no definite object. With such I would class the runners, who run habitually out and return to the same workhouse. I have felt permission from the Guardians to prosecute under the Vagrancy laws such people as run in and out of the workhouse, but owing to the Vagrancy laws applying only to those who go from one union to another we are powerless under that law to deal with them.

11419. What change would you suggest?—I would suggest that the Vagrancy laws should be extended to us not only to include such cases as leave one union and tramp to another, but also those who are habitually running in and out of the same workhouse. Then there is the question of night shelters. I think such night shelters should be established in different districts of the city and suburbs; the dispensary buildings might be economically used for the purpose. The Dispensary Committee formerly met in the board-rooms of these dispensary houses, and they are, under the present system, unused for that purpose. There is a caretaker usually residing in the dispensary, and by a very slight modification of the present arrangements they might be well utilised for such a purpose. These houses are practically idle, unless for three or four hours during the day. Tramps or casuals should get a time for admission, where they would be inspected by the police periodically. Then, in addition, these shelters should have intercommunication one with another, so as to find out where a man had been the night before, so that he should not be going from one place to another.

11421. You think through such a bureau the farmer could get the help they are looking for, and the men can get the labour?—Yes. If it were proved, after a fair trial, that they did not damage employment, a central colony of control would be the ultimate home for them. I am in full accord with the other witnesses that this should be a farm colony; I would not have any penal law attached to it. One other thing that would strongly reduce the tramp nuisance would be if the dietary were made uniform at each meeting shelter, and the same hours and conditions of labour were imposed in each meeting house, so that there would be no inducement for tramping from one to another. In no case should any of the class termed tramps or runners be allowed to enter the workhouse at all; or runners be allowed to enter the infirm and sick. A I would reserve it solely for the infirm and sick. The great saving would be effected by having the night shelter. That has been proved in the evidence you have before you, both on the statements of the infirm officers and in the opinion of the Guardians themselves. Very often a man applies for a lie to the workhouse for a night. He comes into the workhouse and finds, for some reason or other, that he had better stay there—whether it is that he is made more comfortable there—of course, they endure many hardships before they come there, and I think that the Guardians would find—in fact the Committee are of opinion that it would very considerably reduce the rates and relieve the congestion in the workhouse, if they had proper night shelters in the city. By thus taking out inmates into other institutions were suitable for them, the workhouse would be relieved of almost one-third of the present population, and would thus leave ample room for classifying the sick and the infirm and aged poor into two classes: those who are inmates through no fault of their own, and those who may be deemed to have brought poverty upon themselves by their own conduct and actions, a classification which should, in my opinion, be carried out generally as being necessary and desirable.

11432. With whom would you leave the classification?—As a matter of ordinary practice it is carried out by the officers. With respect to our own infirm ones, in whom I have taken some little interest, I myself classify them from time to time, having previously gone into the history of each one, as far as I could ascertain it, and we endeavour to keep the respectable feeble and infirm located in a separate building altogether; but with the present congestion it is impossible to carry it out thoroughly. And the same should be done in the sick wards, where, owing to lack of accommodation, we are not able to do it. One matter I wish to bring before you is that of authorising the Guardians to establish a home for working boys in Belfast. The most crucial time for these boys is between fourteen and sixteen, and in fact we have very little difficulty in looking after the children until they come to that age; then we find the real difficulty begins.

11433. Dr. Brown.—I think that has been already pretty well gone into. You agree with the other witnesses?—I do. And as to apprenticing these boys, I would be very much delighted to find that in any arrangements we would have the power to send them specially to country districts for a term. I think it would work out very well. The best results we have obtained in sending boys out to service are in those cases where we have sent them to respectable farmers, who have taken an interest in the boys. Another question that has been dealt with previously is the question of sending "Police children" to the workhouse. I don't know whether a system could be adopted to enable the magistrates to send these children temporarily or provisionally to the industrial schools pending their permanent commitment, in the same way as we are empowered to relieve in the workhouse provisionally pending a meeting of the Guardians. We have had very well conducted children made into bad boys and girls through the influence of such children being sent to the workhouse from time to time. I have an order of the Board of Guardians not to permit such children to go with the other children.

11434. Can you not carry that out?—But the law also is that children between the age of five and fifteen must be in the workhouse schools. It is impossible for me to do it, unless I have a separate school and separate teachers.

11435. Could they not be put into a separate position, and sleep and play in separate places?—It would be impossible with our present population and accommodation.

11436. If you had the accommodation the law would not prevent you?—It would not.

11437. Mr. McRannan.—The trouble would disappear if the change was made, and the children were put out of the workhouse?—It would. Arrangements should be made for the care and maintenance of blind pauper inmates, either by the State or by some central home in each county, established by the county authorities or Guardians. We have thirty-seven such cases in the infirm wards of the workhouse, and were it not for the kindly assistance of other inmates who take an interest in these people, and lead them about, I do not know what their condition would be. I have in my mind one man who has walked up and down the same pathway for many years, until he has worn a decided mark in one of the blue stone walls of the building with the end of his stick. I don't know whether the Guardians would have the power to send them to a blind institution. And another class is the class of crippled children; the Board are very anxious to be permitted to send such as the medical officer might recommend to a convalescent home to recuperate after undergoing operations or having received infirmity treatment. The Guardians applied to the Local Government Board for permission to send such children to a convalescent home at Bangor, after amputation of legs or arms, and they were informed the state of the law was such that that could not be permitted. I may say, in respect of the whole matter, that I don't think any officer was ever assisted by a Committee who more earnestly desired to do everything that was necessary in order to have any difficulty that we considered was a difficulty brought under the notice of the Commission and removed.

11438. Mr. Walker.—Does Mr. Wilson suggest that persons applying for Poor Law relief who are able to work should be registered at the labour bureau and compelled to take the first offer of labour?—No, sir; but I say they should be given an opportunity of accepting it if they wish to do it. I would have it entirely voluntarily.

Mr. J. C. C. PAYNE, J.P., examined.

I am not here as a member of the Board of Guardians; but I take an interest in the general matter of children. The Master of the Workhouse has attended to the children who are committed from the police courts temporarily whilst on remand. Now, as one of the magistrates of the city, I have seen for some time past a very great objection indeed to sending children to the workhouse. Many of these children have never been inside a workhouse, perhaps, in their lives; but the difficulty that the magistrates were under was this: we could remand them to the jail; but that is more objectionable than the workhouse. We can remand them to the workhouse, or we can remand them to one of the houses registered under the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act; we have four in the city—Dr. Barnardo's Home, St. Vincent de Paul Society. With regard to the shelter in May-street both boys and girls can be taken there. Dr. Barnardo's home is the same; but in Great George-street only boys can be taken; consequently those girls who happen to be Catholic girls have no place to be sent to but to the union workhouse. The magistrates, of course, are anxious that these children should be sent to a place of safety; they feel satisfied that the children will be well looked after when they are sent to the workhouse. But if they are sent to any of the other homes which I have mentioned to you, the committees of these homes have to support the children during the period, which is usually, perhaps, four or five days. In Belfast it is the custom to consider all cases for commitment to the industrial school only on Saturdays, consequently a child brought in for some petty theft must remain in the place to which it is sent until Saturday. My idea is this, that these children would be much better off if the magistrates had power to send them to an industrial school, temporarily, of the same religious denomination to which the child belonged. In Belfast we are very well off in that respect: all the religious denominations have industrial schools, both girls' and boys', so that there is no difficulty whatever; I think that if by some means either an order could be made, or, when you go in for your amending Act, which, I presume, is the idea of this inquiry, if permission might be given for the State to pay for the child in an industrial school when it is there temporarily, until it is finally committed. In most cases the children that are remanded to the workhouse are sent to industrial schools. That is the suggestion I would make about—we must send them to one of two places where they are paid for by the State: we must remand them to the prison or the workhouse. We prefer to send them to the workhouse as the lesser of two evils; but we would rather not send them to either place if we could send them to an industrial school of the same religious denomination to which the child belonged.

11439. CHAIRMAN.—The only difficulty is the question of money?—Yes.

TWENTY-SECOND PUBLIC SITTING.—MONDAY, JANUARY 11TH, 1904.

At the Courthouse, Belfast.

Present:—Mr. MECKS (Chairman), Mr. MURKAGHAN, and Dr. COBY BODGE.

Colonel JOHN MCCANCE, A.M., examined.

Colonel John
McCance.

11432. I am Chairman of the Castlereagh Rural District Council. I am of opinion that there are too many workhouses for the number of poor in the Co. Down. The poor could be as well looked after at considerably less cost. Some of the workhouses should be converted into auxiliary asylums, cottage home schools, or cottage hospitals. In Benbudge Workhouse there is accommodation for 940; there are only 157 inmates in the workhouse, leaving unoccupied space for 783. In Newtownards Workhouse there is accommodation for 1,802, and there are only 876 inmates, leaving unoccupied space for 926. In Downpatrick there is accommodation for 1,033 inmates, and there are only 179 inmates, leaving unoccupied space for 854. In Newry there is accommodation for 905 inmates, and the actual number of inmates is 295, leaving unoccupied space for 610. In Kilkeel there is accommodation for 332, and the actual number of inmates is 123, leaving unoccupied space for 209. Portion of Lisburn Union is in the county of Down. In Lisburn Workhouse there is accommodation for 1,040 inmates. There are at present 243, leaving unoccupied space for about 800. A great number of paupers in the present Newtownards and Lisburn Union come to Belfast. I am of opinion Newtownards and Kilkeel and Lisburn Unions should be dissolved. Belfast Union should be extended on the Co. Down side, so as to embrace Bangor, Newtownards, Comber, and Lisburn. Newtownards and Lisburn Unions should be dissolved by reason of their proximity to Belfast, and Newtownards and Lisburn Workhouses should be handed over to the Belfast Union as auxiliary workhouses, and thus remove the congestion at present in the union workhouses in Belfast, as Dr. Bigger reports that no further buildings should be erected on the present workhouse grounds, the present ground being fully covered. The Co. Antrim portion of Lisburn Union could be added to the Belfast Rural District. The Belfast Workhouse is at present very much congested. Further accommodation is necessary, and auxiliary workhouses must be provided for the purpose of removing congestion by some means. Newtownards and Lisburn Workhouses could be managed so as to admit urgent cases from the neighbourhood. The services of dispensary medical doctors will be available as at present, and such nurses as will be necessary. I am of opinion that the alterations proposed would not inconvenience any one, owing to the excellent railway and other accommodations. I am also of opinion that the proposed alterations would lead to the better treatment of patients, as the patients would receive better medical and other attendance under the proposed scheme at Belfast, than they possibly could in rural districts. Another advantage in having considerable distances between workhouses is that the same facilities will not exist for tramps and vagrants finding shelter, and this should tend to stop the tramp nuisance. I am very strongly of opinion that parents who are of intemperate character, and are the inmates of workhouses, should not have the custody or control of their children, and that the habitual criminals and tramps should be detained until they have completed a certain amount of work, and that they should be fed on the very plainest food. Photographs of tramps should be taken, and the Guardians should be empowered to send back persons to their own districts.

11431. To Mr. MURKAGHAN.—The old and respectable poor might be boarded out instead of being maintained in the workhouse. Possessions also might be so treated, the person being retained and the cost deducted. I do not, from my own experience, think favourably of the proposal to have unions confined strictly to counties. Downpatrick and Newry Workhouses would be sufficient for the Co. Down, and would keep all classes in those workhouses. I would keep local hospitals in every union as at now exists. I would be in favour of enabling Guardians to board out the sick in other hospitals than their own. I am in favour of boarding out children; but in a well-managed institution, when children attend National schools, I do not see how institutions could be dispensable.

11433. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Have you any suggestion to make on the score of illegitimate children as to what should be done with them?—I think immoral parents should not have the custody of their children. If the mothers of these illegitimate children are immoral I would not allow them to have control of them.

11435. As regards the mothers themselves, should something better than the workhouse be provided for them—more of a reformatory character?—Yes; anything that would give them a chance. They should be taken away from workhouse associations. I think the good thing should be to get the children properly brought up. This class of mother is not a very desirable person to bring up children. Women who were not really led, but who had been led into temptation, should not be sent to the workhouse.

11434. Don't you think it would be better to give the Guardians power to arrange with some religious community to make provision for these children?—I think that is a good idea.

11436. Our idea is to get rid of an evil so glaring as that in the country?—I quite agree with you.

11436. Would have you to say on the question of tramps—would it be enough to give the Guardians power of detention?—I think habitual tramps should be treated as prisoners and criminals.

11437. You think they should be brought under police supervision?—I do. Their photographs should be taken, and if they were proved to be habitual tramps they should be placed under police supervision.

11438. Mr. Harper.—Have you known instances where the Guardians have ordered the prosecution of parents for the desertion of their children, and where the parents were arrested and punished?—Yes; they were sentenced to from one to three months' imprisonment.

11439. Do you think it right that such parents, when they came out of jail, should be given the care of their children?—No; and that is the reason I have offered a suggestion on the subject.

11440. And don't you think it desirable and fair that the State should have some control over such children, and have them sent to some institution analogous to an industrial school?—Yes.

11441. You think there should be power given to detain the children?—I do.

11442. And also some power to make the father contribute towards the support of his children?—Yes.

11443. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—What course do the Guardians adopt in order to place themselves in less perilous cases?

Mr. Harper.—You will get that from Mr. Robb, the clerk of the Castlereagh Rural District Council.

Witness.—I remember, a short time ago, while the Commission was sitting, being at Belfast Workhouse, and being struck with one or two cases. One of these was that of a nice young woman who had three illegitimate children, and she was admitted to the house. She told me she had been housekeeper to a farmer in Carlow, who was the father of two of these children, and she was going from one workhouse to another. She stayed three days in the workhouse. On the fourth day I was driving to Holywood, and observed this unfortunate woman with three little children at the road. On being asked why she had left Belfast Workhouse she stated that she came out to look for some work, and not being able to find any was returning to the workhouse.

11444. Mr. MURPHY.—Should some power be given to the Guardians to enable a woman to follow the father of the child for its support?—Certainly; I think so. But I believe they can do so.

Mr. MURPHY.—It is difficult under the Irish law; but the English and Scotch have more extensive powers.

Mr. Harpur.—In Ireland they can in theory, but not in practice. The woman can get a civil decree; but it is worth no money.

CHAIRMAN.—There is no practical remedy?

Mr. Harpur.—No practical remedy.

11445. Mr. MURPHY.—And in such cases there is a difficulty in convincing the magistrates.

Witness.—It is a matter that would have to be gone about with great discretion.

CHAIRMAN.—In such cases corroboration would be required.

Jan. 11, 1904.

Crispin John
McCauley.

Mr. J. W. Ross, Assistant Clerk of Belfast Union and Clerk of Rural District Council of Castlethorough, examined.

11446. CHAIRMAN.—What do the Guardians do with children whose parents are bad characters—do they ever pass resolutions placing themselves in loco parentis?—I don't know that they have actually taken any action. The matter is generally left in the hands of a Committee.

11447. Have the Guardians passed any resolutions on the subject?—They have not passed any general resolutions. If they pass a resolution it is one dealing with a particular case. My opinion is they have in such cases placed themselves in loco parentis as far as they were able.

11448. And have placed themselves as loco parentis where the parents were criminals?—Yes. I remember cases where they have taken advantage of the Act of Parliament, and have boarded the children out.

11449. Mr. MURPHY.—Was there any trouble in connection with these children so boarded out?—Yes; that is the difficulty in boarding out that class of child. The parents haunt the places where the children are kept and cause annoyance to the foster-parent. There should, in my opinion, be some provision made for restraining them from giving annoyance in this way.

11450. Mr. Harpur.—The instances where foster-parents have received trouble in this way are very few. —Very few. (1) I am of opinion that the existing unions in the County of Down should be dissolved and be re-arranged, and for this purpose that Newtownards, Kilkeel, and Lurgan should cease to exist. The workhouses at Banbridge, Downpatrick, and Newry would afford more accommodation for inmates than would be required. Having regard to the proximity of Newtownards Workhouse to the Belfast Union Workhouse the former appears to me to be superfluous. In adjusting the boundaries of the new unions I suggest that the dispensary districts of Coleraine, Newtownards, and Bangor should be added to Belfast Union. The reason I suggest that the transfer should be by dispensary districts is to avoid claims for compensation which might be made by the existing officers, whose positions would otherwise be injuriously affected. If the dispensary medical officer be transferred to another authority no claim for compensation could possibly arise. Speaking of compensation to officers, I am of opinion that the compensation payable on the abolition of a union will not be a loss, but, on the contrary, a saving to the ratepayers; the amount of the compensation will be necessarily less than the salaries and emoluments receivable by the existing officers, whilst no great increase will be required in the salaries of officers remaining in the workhouses which are not to be abolished. I have to point out that the Belfast ratepayers have to support a great many persons coming from adjoining unions. It would not be correct to describe these persons as "tramps" or "casuals," as I find that many of them remain for very considerable periods in the Belfast Workhouse. I have had statistics taken from the workhouse register for a few weeks at random with the following result:—Week ending 6th May last, 308 persons admitted, of whom 36 did not belong to the Belfast Union; there were 8 from Newtownards, 4 from Downpatrick, 7 from Lisburn, others from Newry, Lurgan, Larne, &c. Week ending 13th June, 36 similar cases out of a total of 357. 11th July, 48 out of 330. 8th August, 47 out of 334. 21st September, 37 out of 333. With regard to the Lurgan Union, which is situated partly in County Antrim and partly in County Down, I am of opinion that it also should be dissolved, and that the dispensary districts of Drumerray, Ballyhenry, Drumming, and Lurgan should be added to Belfast Union. I would direct attention to the proximity of Lurgan Workhouse to Belfast Workhouse; they are not more, I should think, than about six or seven miles apart, and it seems to me wasteful to have both institutions fully equipped for workhouse purposes. Of course, in the event of the abolition of Newtownards and Lurgan Unions taking place a portion of such workhouses should be retained for the purpose of dealing with emergency cases, accidents, &c. Newtownards Workhouse is certified to accommodate 1,248 persons; there are only 276 inmates at present. Lisburn Workhouse accommodates, I believe, 1,040, and at present there are only 243 inmates. (2.) I doubt whether any portion of either Newtownards or Lurgan Workhouse would be considered suitable, according to modern ideas, for the purpose of a lunatic asylum; but this is a matter I leave to medical authorities to decide. (3.) I am of opinion that Newtownards and Lurgan Workhouses could be utilized for the accommodation of a certain class of paupers, viz., the aged and infirm in Belfast Workhouse. I do not quite understand the suggestion in Query No. 3 (b) as to combining unions for the purpose of Poor Law relief; nor do I understand for what purpose or purposes such combination would be advantageous. With regard to the boarding-out of workhouse inmates I do not think that it is at all practicable for any class other than children. I should be glad to see the power to board out children largely extended, notwithstanding the objection to relieving parents of their responsibilities. I am strongly in favour of forcibly depriving parents who are unable to properly maintain their children of the custody of such children—I refer to "casuals" and the habitual pauper class, who never do anything for their offspring, but who spend their lives in roaming over the country or in dwelling in workhouses at the cost of the ratepayers. (4.) I am strongly in favour of union rating as it exists at present for all poor law purposes. To make the ratepayers of an impoverished electoral division solely responsible for the maintenance of the poor of that division is, in plain English, to tax the poor for the support of the poor, thereby allowing the richer ratepayer to escape his proper share of taxation, and tending to make the poor still poorer. (5.) Existing Poor Law Relief Acts provide for the repayment of relief by persons who are able to contribute wholly or in part for the cost of their treatment. I am not aware that any extension of this principle is required. (6.) With regard to the treatment of "tramps" and "casuals," I am of opinion that persons of this class should be detained for increasing periods in workhouses. I am aware that it may be, and is, argued that "tramps" are not necessarily criminals, and that their personal liberty should not be interfered with, but having regard to the fact that they are a burden on the State, and that their existence is a constant menace to the safety of property, I fail to recognise that they possess any rights whatever. It is certainly better to house them in a workhouse than to have them roaming over the country in a state of semi-starvation, with every temptation to steal anything they can get their hands on, and I therefore am strongly of opinion that they should be forcibly detained in workhouses.

11451. CHAIRMAN.—In regard to these cases you speak of sending to Belfast Union from adjoining unions, and for which the Belfast ratepayers have to pay, are they sick?—No. I have here a case from Downpatrick, which remained in the body of the house for 102 days.

11452. Any sick treatment?—No. There is another case, where two persons from Larne and Lurgan remained in Belfast Workhouse for 135 days.

11453. Did you look into these cases to see their object in seeking admission?—Time would not permit me to do so.

Mr. J. W.
Ross.

Jan. 11, 1904.

Mr. J. W.
Bobb.

11454. Dr. BROWN.—How many from Belfast are in adjoining unions?—I don't know; I don't think any poor person would go from Belfast.

11455. But did you make any inquiry?—I had no means of ascertaining. The treatment in Belfast is admittedly superior. I don't think you would find many from Belfast in other unions. I have been the case of a person aged sixty, infirm ward, from Lisburn, who remained thirty days in Belfast Workhouse. A woman and child from Crumlin stopped 225 days; one person from Newlands 161 days; two persons from Killybegs, 48 days each; three more persons from Newlands, 60 days, 25 days, and 18 days, respectively. There were also cases of a similar nature from Lisburn.

11456. Mr. MURKIN.—And what do you suggest regarding that?—As the Belfast ratepayers have to pay for the maintenance of the Newlands folk I suggest an extension of the boundary in that direction, and also towards Lisburn.

11457. CHAIRMAN.—An extension of the union boundary?—Yes. The proximity of Newlands and Lisburn Workhouses to Belfast seems to me an extravagance. There might be a saving effected to all the unions named by removal of the staff. Then there is the question of providing another workhouse in Belfast, for, as Dr. Bigger has pointed out in his report, the city of Belfast Workhouse is overcrowded, and we cannot erect more buildings there.

11458. Do you consider it necessary to keep a workhouse in Lisburn, where there is a county infirmary?—I have covered that. I am making a general argument. As to Query 2, we have 1,300 of that class.

11459. This is a time of year when you have more of this class?—We have a large number of them constantly.

11460. Mr. MURKIN.—As to infirmary inmates, has the question ever been decided as to the power of the Guardians. You seem to be under the impression that the Guardians can charge for maintenance or the actual cost of the inmates while in the infirmary if the Guardians so desire?—I do think that.

11461. Are you aware it is not the case in practice?—I am aware they do charge.

11462. Dr. BROWN.—What is the actual cost?—The average cost of medicine and medical treatment, £s. 10d. per week.

11463. That is not near the cost of maintenance in some cases?—That is only the average cost.

11464. Do you think £s. 6d. is enough to charge a person going in there—a stranger—for treatment of law—a person who paid no rates? Do you think that is fair to the ratepayers?—I do not.

11465. CHAIRMAN.—Would you approve of an extension of powers in this connection?—Yes.

11466. To enable the Guardians to recover the full cost?—If that is the intention of Query 3 I would be strongly in favour of an extension in that direction for special cases.

11467. Mr. MURKIN.—We are informed that it costs at least 14s. a week to provide the necessaries for a hospital patient. The Guardians don't charge anything like that at present?—They have no power.

11468. Dr. BROWN.—The Guardians have only power to charge to the extent of the average cost, and a case may go into the infirmary requiring an operation, and involving a cost of several pounds. The query is—How far, in the case of people not destitute, it would be desirable to expect payment? I say there is a system of payment in force, and the query was prompted by me.

11469. CHAIRMAN.—It is to enable the Guardians to recover all the expenditure on cases?—If that is the meaning of the query that is very desirable—to give the Guardians a discretion in the matter. I may say, with respect to the query, that it prompted the Guardians.

CHAIRMAN.—The query is a general hint to open their minds.

Mr. Morger.—There could be a scale fixed by the Guardians, with the aid of the Local Government Board.

CHAIRMAN.—Without a scale, supposing they expended £7 or £8 on an operation, they should have power to recover that from people able to pay.

11470. Mr. MURKIN.—At present Guardians cannot recover more than the average cost—and you think there should be an extension?—I do.

11471. As to tramps, what would be the maximum time you think they should be detained?—It would be hard to say.

11472. CHAIRMAN.—Would you say up to six months?—Certainly.

11473. Mr. MURKIN.—Would you think that ample?—For an inmate employed seasonably.

11474. Are you troubled with many of the vagrant class in Belfast?—A large proportion of the vagrants given apply to vagrants. With regard to the proposal to have the boundaries of the county borough and the union intermingled, I am as a rule to find any reason for that as this part of the country. Before was made to other parts, where boundaries are. I have never heard of a hardship, financial or otherwise, here. I think the hardship is with the Belfast ratepayers. A person who lives a short distance outside Belfast enjoys a ready market and high prices, and his poor rates are diverted to adjoining unions instead of coming into Belfast, where which he derives his means.

11475. CHAIRMAN.—You mean people who have business places in Belfast?—Adjoining farmers. The Baggot, for instance, which is occupied by Belfast mechanics. If they lived in the Belfast Union territory they would contribute to the poor-rate of the Belfast Union; but, instead of doing so, they contribute to Newlands. It is in Belfast these people make their money. That is certainly no hardship to them.

11476. They would have to pay more in Belfast than in Newlands?—Perhaps so.

11477. Mr. MURKIN.—Surely, the county in which they reside has a claim upon them?—"County" is only a geographical expression.

11478. Do you think it is entitled to whatever benefits there are rather than that they should go to a neighbouring county?—This is a poor-rate question affecting county rates in any way.

11479. There must be some limit, and county boundaries are well defined. The county has to look after its roads, and why should it not look after its poor also?—The Board of Guardians is not a county authority. In a case where the union is situated in two counties there would be great difficulty.

11480. Don't you see something in it to recommend it to you as a man of business that a county should manage its own affairs as far as possible?—In our county affairs.

11481. Is the Poor Law not a county matter?—I don't think so.

11482. They have to strike the rate and collect it?—They have.

11483. Is that not everything?—Is not the provision of the money everything?—It is. They collect it automatically, but they don't administer it, except in roads, and they do not come under Poor Law administration.

11484. CHAIRMAN.—We have not got the case of a large county borough until we come here; we have had a county with small towns?—That is very different.

11485. It was put forward that the County Council should be the head authority for everything in the county. Here you come to a city large and wealthy, but small in area, which makes it a difficult question here—a case in which a large number of business people live outside. The objection you seem to have to the union of Belfast being intermingled with the county borough is that so many people of the county borough live outside it?—That is one reason; and also the proximity of the farmer to the Belfast market.

11486. The union of Belfast was never formed as a being in all the people who get benefit from proximity to markets?—Quite so. The union was formed under circumstances which have considerably altered. The growth of the city has brought about these changes, and the people have been forced to go to the suburbs. So long ago the city had to be extended on the old taxation question: people living just outside the old boundary were escaping from payment of rates. I find no physical reason for the suggested change—that the union of Belfast and county borough should be made continuous.

11487. Mr. MURKIN.—Would it not simplify accounts very much?—I don't think so; in the present accounts at any rate.

11488. Would it not economise it?—I fail to see how economy could be effected, as far as I can think of anything.

11489. Don't you think one authority is better than two in a matter of that kind?—If it was proposed that the County Council of the borough should be the Poor Law administration there might be something in it; but you would always have two authorities. I have not heard any proposal to the contrary. You will always have the Board of Guardians separate from the City Corporation, I take it.

11490. Mr. Harpur.—The District Council of Castleknock is exclusively for Down, and works in harmony with the County Council of Down?—Yes; and possesses a local knowledge the county does not possess.

Mr. J. M. TROTTER, Newswaterford, examined.

Mr. Trotter.—I desire to say, in a word by way of prefix, that the statement I have to make is as from myself personally, and I wish to state that the answers to the queries submitted to the Newswaterford Board of Guardians are simply answers adopted by the Guardians. Any statement made by any other Guardian will be practically on his own behalf.

11491. CHAIRMAN.—Are you one of the Guardians nominated to give evidence?—No.

11492. Have any Guardians been nominated to give evidence?—Yes; two. When the report of the Committee was before the Guardians it was only considered for a short time—some fifteen minutes—and the views apparently held were that the Committee, having considered the matter, that was sufficient. It was merely for the Guardians to adopt a certain course. I hold views diametrically opposed to some of the answers to the queries, and I propose to give my reasons.

11493. You might mention your views?—In regard to Query 1, which is as to the question of the amalgamation or dissolving of unions, I don't think any question or difference of opinion can exist—that is, that the workhouses are too numerous. But owing to what has been said at some of the inquiries, I consider that the case has been very much altered, because, as I understand it, a recommendation will be made by you that the workhouse will be for the purpose of the infirm and destitute old, and that children will be boarded out. That being so, I fail to see any necessity for the workhouses in Co. Down as they at present exist, and I, personally, would be in favour of the workhouses, and the property of the workhouses, being disposed of, and the proceeds properly invested. To my mind workhouses in a county for infirm and destitute old would be sufficient. The question would come to us as making provision for the sick, and I would be entirely in favour of extending the principle or adopting the principle that is being urged—that is, to have district hospitals. Some call them cottage hospitals; and I think people using them who were able to pay should pay the whole of the expense incurred by them, and that in respect of the poor who at present go into the workhouses, the district should pay a certain sum against the treatment they would receive. I am of opinion that that sum would not be more than, but perhaps very much less than they cost the ratepayers at the present time, and that these patients would be better treated.

11494. Regarding the aged and infirm, you would approve of having them in one workhouse?—I would; I think the grievance in regard to this question is a sectional one.

11495. In Co. Down could you get a central workhouse?—Downpatrick would be the most central, if you consider geographical position.

11496. What about people from Newry?—There is the other consideration regarding that which I approve of. If it were more convenient for the people in Newry to go to an adjoining workhouse let the charge be a charge on the district whence they came.

11497. Would you approve of another course, which would enable the Guardians to keep the aged and infirm either in an institution or board them out?—I hardly see how you could board out aged and infirm.

11498. Take the case of one of your own unions—Rushridge—where out-door relief comes to nearly £3,000 a year; it is very difficult to keep all classes in the workhouse. Do you not think it might be better for the Rushridge people to decide whether they would keep them in an institution or adopt boarding out universally, because they are virtually putting into operation a system of boarding-out there and keeping up two systems at tremendous cost?—A patient going in to a district hospital must be charged on, say, the electoral division.

11499. I am speaking of the aged and infirm, not of the sick?—Well, I would have one institution for them, 11491. CHAIRMAN.—For public health and road business?—Yes.

11492. Mr. Harpur.—The rate is struck by the County Council of Down?—Yes; and placed to the credit of the Rural District Council or the Board of Guardians, as the case may be.

Jan. 11, 1904.

Mr. J. W. Rebb.

Mr. J. M. Trotter.

and whether few or many, I would have them over the county. I would not give a discretionary power to the Guardians.

11500. Would you give a union discretion to come to a resolution in general terms as to whether they would adopt in-door or out-door treatment for the aged and infirm, and I ask you to consider the union of Rushridge, where they spend nearly £3,000 in out-door relief?—But that out-door relief is not—

11501. It is for the aged and infirm?—That is the difficulty; but if the out-door relief means supporting the infirm and destitute old then I would be in favour of these coming into one central institution.

11502. Would you put them into Downpatrick?—Yes, undoubtedly; if it was decided to have a new institution erected. You have Lurgan and you would have to get some railway centre.

11503. For people who could travel by railway?—Yes. That is the reason I suggested Downpatrick; for the railway from Ballymore to Newswaterford will soon be made, and the facilities for travelling will be greatly improved.

11504. If you were to have a large institution for the aged and infirm it would be necessary to have side by side with it or close to it a hospital capable of treating a large number of sick?—I see no objection to making provision for these; but the question of these infirm and old is different.

11505. You want to get rid of the number of institutions?—Clearly. If you run them down to hospitals you will have a comparatively small staff, and if you lump in the same building the sick and the aged and infirm all over the country, you practically leave things as they are. I want you to get one central institution for the infirm and destitute old.

11506. The difficulty I am getting to you is this: you are moving to one central institution in the county for the aged and infirm; that is a class of all others, who are poor and destitute. These people will soon get sick, and when they get sick would you propose they should be moved back. They might be incapable of removal, say, from Newry to Downpatrick—you would have to treat them as sick in the immediate neighbourhood of the aged and infirm?—Yes.

11507. You would have a large county hospital under the Poor Law as a sort of overflow place?—Yes; I would have such accommodation as would meet public requirements.

11508. It would of necessity be large?—I would hope it would not.

11509. You would propose that the aged and infirm, when they become sick, should go into the Downpatrick District Hospital?—Yes.

11510. And to what district would you say they should be charged?—To the old district. It would be only a transference from one institution proper to another institution proper at a different rate of charge.

11511. Mr. MURPHY.—Would you continue the same area of rating?—As regards the area of rating my opinion is that you must adopt the principle of area for taxation and for management, and the whole question is what that area shall be. I am perfectly indifferent as to what area may be adopted, but the area, to my mind, should be a fair and reasonable one, and I fail to see why the administrative county areas should not be the areas for all purposes.

11512. CHAIRMAN.—For the administrative county?—Yes.

11513. You would be strongly in favour of that for the sick, at any rate?—Yes.

11514. And for the aged and infirm?—Yes; I would adopt the principle of administrative county areas for all purposes.

11515. Including out-door relief?—No; I will modify that slightly. For all purposes I think the areas should be co-extensive, but for out-door relief purposes I would not make the whole of the administrative county the area for that charge. I would break that up; it is absolutely necessary it should be broken up, for otherwise you will not have sufficient control, and I consider that the out-door relief may be administered in such a way as to press most heavily on certain districts. It was felt by some, and by me very strongly, that the out-door relief was going up, and we wanted to know where. We had, in Newtownards Union, the figures gone into, and taking three years, and comparing one and a half years with another one and a half years, we found the out-door relief went up by £519 lbs. 6d. We further found that in the urban district of Bangor, where the population had gone up considerably, that the out-door relief was actually down. Now the system adopted in Newtownards is thus, as far as my observation goes. There is an application for out-door relief, and if the Guardian for the district from which it came recommended it it is passed as a matter of form. I think an application for out-door relief so recommended should not be questioned. I would not question it for one.

11535. You would accept infallibly the recommendation of an individual representing the locality?—I would, even if I doubted the case. I would hesitate questioning it, because I would say the individual Guardian of the locality should know best all the circumstances of the case, and I would not say one word against it.

11536. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Even if it were a union charge?—Even so.

11537. Why would you do that?—Because any one who adopted such a position would find himself absolutely of no value either to his own district or to the union.

11538. How would that work out as a guide to follow?—In this way; the Guardians might put their heads together and decide to block, say, Mr. Thomson's recommendation, and it might be carried to such an extent that Mr. Thomson could not look at the minute book of the Guardians.

11539. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Would it be fair to other portions of a district to allow one man to have a voice as to the use of the general money for a particular locality?—I think it altogether fair, and absolutely necessary, that there should be different areas for taxation for out-door relief, because otherwise there would be no adequate control over out-door relief.

11540. You would revert to the old system of electoral division relief?—Clearly. In connection with that I would make the expenditure in connection with the hospitals just the same.

11541. Electoral divisional test?—Yes.

11542. CHAIRMAN.—For hospitals?—Yes.

11543. I don't see why you propose to make the hospitals the same?—The hospital, in the sense in which you refer to it, is different to what is passing through my mind. Where it would come in would be where people who are not destitute poor, but contributed something towards the expense of going to the hospital or infirmary. At present the patients, or some person on their behalf, paid only the average cost of treatment, which I took upon as a very great injustice. The Newtownards Guardians had a question put to the Local Government Board whether they could not charge a larger amount than the average cost, which I felt was totally inadequate to charge certain people who were both willing and able to pay.

11544. You would be in favour of a fair extension of the law to enable them to charge?—Yes; and I would extend it to the case of a poor person or persons who could contribute something. I would apply that charge to cases in which the persons might go to the district hospitals, which would practically take the place of the present infirmaries. But in the case to which the Chairman refers, where a person is brought from, say, Newry to Downpatrick, or Newtownards to Downpatrick, or Bangor to Downpatrick, I would make the expenses a county-at-large charge.

11545. Are you in favour of making every in-door as well as out-door expenditure an electoral division charge?—I don't think it would be worth it.

11546. I don't see why you seek to bring in the sick?—It is the sick who are able to pay something.

11547. And you seek to bring in only those?—Only those.

11548. Would you include the destitute sick?—I would make the destitute sick a county-at-large charge—administrative county instead of union-at-large.

11549. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—And rely to the paying persons you would limit the electoral division charge?—Yes; add to the out-door relief. As to Query No. 3, the answer of the Newtownards Guardians was that the workhouse in the dissolved union should be used as an auxiliary asylum. I am entirely averse to that. I look on an auxiliary asylum in a county as meaning two sets of officials. An auxiliary asylum would not be equipped as well as the principal asylum, and that entitles the patients would not have the same benefits. I would be more in favour of extending the asylum.

11550. Dr. BOGGER.—Has the Co. Down already arranged to do so?—They were about to expend a large amount of money.

11551. To take in lunatics from the whole county?—I think that to be the intention; but I don't know sufficiently of that to be able to say.

11552. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Do you think it would be advisable to take away from the asylum the lunatic lunatics, and put them in a place by themselves, where they would get some fresh air and exercise, free from noise and trouble?—Yes; if you had some sort of a local or subsidiary place.

11553. Could they be kept at a smaller cost?—Clearly; I am in favour of that; but if you say an auxiliary lunatic asylum that carries with it, to my mind, the idea of a separate staff.

11554. A separate staff on a less costly scale?—I don't think you could have a separate staff in the interests of the outpatients. I don't think the book would be anything much.

11555. It has been tried in the South of Ireland, where it has been found they can be kept for £10 per annum?—That is a question on which you will get the information. I would like to see the expenses laid down; but I would not advocate, here or anywhere else, anything that was not calculated to benefit the position of these people, for whom every consideration should be shown. In that connection, some time ago a person was going to give a large sum towards providing a central institution for epileptics, but the project has fallen through.

CHAIRMAN.—It has been renewed again lately.

Witness.—I am glad to hear it. I don't see for the life of me how a county workhouse could be converted into a sanatorium for consumption. If it could be I should be glad; but a proper site should be obtained for consumptive patients, and they should be subjected to treatment suitable to their disease. Take, for example, Newtownards Workhouse. I fail to see how it could be converted into a sanatorium for consumptive patients.

11556. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—What about Killybeg?—I don't know sufficient of it to say anything about it. As to No. 3 query, I have practically answered it. When inmates came from one union to another the union from which they came should pay. The only difficulty I see in connection with that would be the boarding out of children. There is no difference of opinion as to the necessity for boarding out children as far as possible, in the interests of the children themselves, and for the benefit of the country at large. I do disagree with some of those who have given evidence. Mr. C. Macanaball gave evidence as to providing a little cottage, and giving sufficient to keep old people who had gone past their day for work. I am wholly averse to that sort of thing, and I don't think that plan should be adopted at all. There may be, and I make no doubt there are, cases where people suffer hardship—people who have lived respectable lives, and are entitled to better treatment than the workhouse; but I say, on the other hand it would be practically impossible to draw the line between those who are really deserving and those who are not, and I am fearful a Guardian who gave expression to his opinion honestly and truthfully against perhaps some two old people, getting the contempt of the people of the locality. It would not work out in practice.

11557. It would be difficult to find a standard to meet requirements?—I would not attempt it. As to Query 4, the answer of the Guardians is that Article 15 in the old system might be abolished, and that the dispensary books should be inspected by a dispensary committee. That is really the reply to that question. Now I consider that the whole Poor Law administration should be amended. The law, as I am informed by the Local Government Board, is that a member of the Board of Guardians has got no right to go into the clerk's office and ask to see the minute book of the Board of Guardians, unless when the Board is sitting. In other words, that the Board of Guardians are trustees for the ratepayers nominally, but practically had no power except in meeting assembled. That is what the Local Government Board told us.

In proof of that I will tell you what took place in Newtownards. An affidavit was placed before the Board of Guardians, and it was ordered to be sent to the Local Government Board without ever having been read to the Guardians. I proposed a resolution that the Local Government Board should be asked to furnish a copy of that affidavit. I did not carry the resolution. I wrote to the Local Government Board on the subject, and they informed me it was not usual to supply copies of their documents. There is a case in point in regard to which I speak of my own knowledge, and as regard to which there was a surcharge.

11541. CHAIRMAN.—Was the surcharge paid?—The surcharge was paid.

11542. You made objection?—Yes. I give you that as a practical illustration of how the Guardians have no control. Say, for instance, one Guardian, or two Guardians, want certain information, and the majority of the Guardians, as their wisdom and judgment think it is desirable that they should not have the information, they have only to say "No." I hold every Guardian has a right to inspect every book and document in connection with the business of his Board, the same as in the case of two or three members of a firm, where every member of the firm has a right to investigate all books and documents, with this proviso, that any examination or inspection shall be reasonable, and shall not interfere with the officers in the discharge of their duties.

11543. Mr. MURMAGHAN.—Did you press the question?—As far as I could.

11544. CHAIRMAN.—You pressed it with such success as to get a surcharge made and paid?—This was subsequent. I have not addressed any member of Parliament on the subject.

11545. Except Mr. Murmagan?—No. The law should be altered. The responsibility should be either with the Guardians as a board, or the Local Government Board should act, because the Local Government Board are all powerful.

11546. You propose that each of the Guardians should have the same power of inspection and overhauling as the Board of Guardians, as a whole?—Certainly. Why should a member of the Board of Guardians have a lesser privilege or right than the ordinary Local Government elector has in connection with the books of every Urban Council, Rural Council, and County Council?

11547. He has his powers in that capacity?—Not as regards a Board of Guardians.

11548. Mr. MURMAGHAN.—You want the Guardians put on the same footing as the Urban Council?—Clearly so, for they are equally, if not more important. I wrote in the Local Government Board on the subject, because I was confident regarding the law.

11549. I hope they supported the law?—Oh, yes; they support the law where it suits them. They wrote me on the 24th December, calling my attention to the provisions contained in Section 29 of the Poor Law Relief Act.—That no Guardian shall have power to act in virtue of his office, except as a member at a meeting of the Board of Guardians, and also pointing out that under Article 10 of the Union Accounts Order "there is no provision giving local government electors a legal right to inspect documents belonging to Boards of Guardians." That section refers to the duty of the clerk to the Urban Council sending to the clerk of the union a copy of the poor rate portion of the rate book, which shall be open to the inspection of ratepayers at all reasonable times. Agreements are not open for inspection—agreements under which payments are made. That seems to me to be a really business. Payment is made under an agreement, and I may happen to know that that agreement is not being carried out either by the law or the spirit, and yet I, as a Guardian or ratepayer, have no right to see that agreement. That is the law as carried out in Newtownards.

11550. CHAIRMAN.—Your suggestion is that the existing law should be changed in order that individual Guardians should have more rights and privileges as regards inspection?—Precisely. With regard to Query 5, it is practically answered in the other. You would require a rearrangement of your hospital accommodation, except as regards the fever hospital; and it is all-important. On last Saturday I saw by the newspapers there was a communication regarding the fever hospital. That has been considered time and again. There is an epidemic of small-pox in Glasgow, and communications are received at Newtownards and Bangor "to take precautions against it." I think there should be in every county proper accommodation, and I look upon it as a very serious responsibility that the representatives of the people are not discharging their duties, and that proper arrangements in this respect are not made. The cost would be comparatively small—the cost of constructing an isolated hospital. They needed an officials for such an institution, except in the case of an epidemic. Look at the risk the people run without such a hospital, apart from the expense. As to Query 6, a more economical system would be to go back to the system of clerical division. It won't work against the deserving poor.

11551. Mr. MURMAGHAN.—There is something to be said against the present system?—There is everything to be said against it. There is every reason why the rich should assist the poor, and the strong should assist the weak; but there should be a limitation. And if you go in for extended areas why not have national taxation instead of administrative counties or smaller areas. That is where, to my mind, the abuses might be. Take Bangor or Malpas for one-door relief and some other purposes. Clearly, to my mind, the urban district should be the area, and in other cases it should be electoral division.

11552. You are aware that many poor leave the country and go into the towns to find work, and afterwards become chargeable to the towns?—The towns have benefited more largely than the rural districts.

11553. The only benefit the towns have got is that of union rating, and in the matter of roads?—I am not so sure of that. If people leave the rural district and go into the towns they can have their families educated and put to learn trades, and then they can enter the mills and factories. In that way Belfast, for instance, benefits. They are a source of revenue and profit to those who employ them, and if, after many years, they become destitute, I say the towns have every right to pay for their keep.

11554. That may be in the case you instance; but take the case which happens frequently of a farmer who has been, perhaps, foolish or extravagant. He has to go to the town, is unable to provide for himself and gets outdoor relief. Would it be fair to tax the town for the support of that man?—Certainly; because that is an exceptional case.

11555. Take the case of an agricultural labourer. He becomes incapacitated. A farmer won't employ a man who is not strong enough to do a day's work. He has to go to the town. Would you put the burden of his support on the town?—I would take the benefit the towns generally has derived, and I would not compare his hardships in the town with those of the labourer in the country, and those of the small farmer. The people in the town know nothing of the lives of the people in rural districts.

11556. The poorer class in rural districts are comparatively happy compared with their fellows in the towns?—I live in country and town, both. The people in the country work harder, and sometimes can hardly earn what will provide the necessities of life. You find the people in the town leading a very different life. I agree with you that there may be more happiness in the country, but that is because the people conduct themselves in a different way from those in the town, where the people are paid better for their services.

Mr. MURMAGHAN.—In the country the people are free from the mental worry and absolute destitution felt, say, in Belfast.

Witness.—You don't suggest that the labourer in town or country has much mental worry?

Mr. MURMAGHAN.—In the country the people have no absolute dread of hunger; in town they have, which is mental worry of a very severe kind.

Witness.—You think the labourer in the country has no mental dread of being provided for?

Mr. MURMAGHAN.—Not of absolute hunger.

Witness.—And that man goes from his position of happiness in the country to the town to have a mental dread of going to the workhouse?

Mr. MURMAGHAN.—He has to leave the country by ill-health or increasing years.

Witness.—I must put you there right away. Say that a person living in the town becomes destitute; unless he has been in the town for a certain length of time he will be a charge on the district from which he came.

Mr. MURMAGHAN.—There is no qualifying period now.

Mr. J. M. Thomson.

Jan. 11, 1904.

Mr. J. M.
Thomson.

Witness.—I take it this Commission will recommend what should be done—firstly, in the interests of the ratepayers, and secondly, and equally in the interests of the destitute poor and sick, and that you will formulate or recommend that which will result in economy to the ratepayers, with benefit—at least without loss or hardship to the destitute poor or sick. It is viewing the Commission from that standpoint that I have expressed myself as I have done. But to keep the ratepayers right you must of necessity curtail your areas of taxation for out-door relief.

11567. CHAIRMAN.—If it were thought that the electoral division would be too small an area what would you think of the dispensary district?—Adopt some other name; and instead of adopting the whole of the dispensary district divide the present dispensary districts into two parts, and call them "Dispensary, North," and "South," and so on, or call them the urban and rural portions. A dispensary district might be made up of three or four electoral divisions. In that case you could alter the boundaries and recast them.

11568. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Your view is, not to let the town have the benefit of the union rating?—As it works out in Bangor, the rating there for Poor Law purposes, before the 1896 Act was passed, was, perhaps, 7d. or 8d. in the £ at most.

11569. CHAIRMAN.—For Poor Law purposes only?—Yes; that would include the public health—7d. in the urban district and 8d. in the rural, and under the union rating it was about 1s. in the £. In making this statement I have not been informed one way or the other as to whether, in a rearrangement, it would work out favourably one way or other. I consider the principle right, and whether in actual practice it would work out in favour of Bangor would not influence me.

Mr. GEORGE DUNN examined.

Mr. George
Dunn.

11571. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the Newtownards Board of Guardians?—Yes; I may say, before you ask me any questions with regard to the statement made by Mr. Thompson of nothing being done by the Newtownards Guardians with regard to an isolated hospital, that there has been nothing left undone that was in their power to do. An arrangement was made by the Bangor Urban Council and the Newtownards Urban Council and the District Council, and two members of each were appointed to consider the matter and bring it to an issue. Through the illness of some of the gentlemen they could not get a meeting. A meeting was summoned for last Friday, and I was the only member of the six who put in an appearance before Mr. Clithero. One of the Urban members for Newtownards, sent a letter stating that he had received a telegram that his mother had taken suddenly ill, and another member of the Committee—Mr. Conroy, Chairman of the District Council—had been laid up for a week. The recommendation of Dr. Clithero was put before the Guardians on Saturday last, a contractor has been written to, and in a short time I hope steps will be taken to provide an isolation hospital.

11572. What are the views of your Board on the question of amalgamation, or the breaking up of unions?—Having regard to the decrease in the population of Ireland, and the enormous expense of keeping up the different workhouses, we consider it essentially necessary that there should be amalgamation of unions; and in the county of Down, that three workhouses would be quite sufficient, as, for instance, Newtownards Workhouse having been built to accommodate 1,200 persons, and having an average of 254, it is quite apparent that amalgamation is necessary.

11573. What do you look on as Co. Down workhouses?—The existing six or seven in the county.

11574. Banbridge, Downpatrick, Kilkeel, Newry, and Newtownards?—Yes; and Lisburn and Lurgan, and Belfast is partly for Co. Down.

11575. Your idea is that Banbridge, Downpatrick, Kilkeel, Newry, and Newtownards should be reduced to three?—Yes.

11576. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—You don't consider the question of Lurgan and Lisburn?—No, we have that with the Commission. Having heard the evidence in the different parts of the county you can arrive at a better conclusion than we could in our isolated district.

11577. As regards the breaking up of unions what or whether Holywood, by being joined in Belfast, would be in its favour or against it, or whether Holywood would be benefited by being joined to Newtownards. My principle is that you should adopt areas for taxation in administration, and once you adopt the principle you will find you are not wrong, although there might be more expense in the working of it out in actual practice as regards out-door relief. I am confident that the Commission, when it completes its taking of evidence, will be able to formulate a plan far better than anything I can propose; but no plan you may formulate will be adopted in its entirety, or satisfy every person. As to tramps, I don't think the law as it stands has been carried out to the extent it might be. As I understand it tramps can be called upon to do a certain amount of work.

11578. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Only for a few hours. That is so.

11579. Don't you think the power of detention should be extended?—I think the feeling is that there are very few tramps would work these hours in the day. If they did three hours' work at breaking stones for three or four days in the week, they would have no reason to tramp about. If you do away with two or three workhouses in a county there will not be the same facilities for tramps going from one workhouse to another. A suggestion has been made as to tramps being made to report themselves, and I think that is a splendid idea. It would be well to have them under police supervision, and masters of large workhouses should be in a position to send them to the police barracks, and to get a ticket or intimation that they had been there and had reported themselves to the police. That would give the police a knowledge regarding tramps who committed crime, and it would be of great benefit.

are the views of your Board?—The vacant workhouses could be handed over to the County Council or other public bodies to be utilized as they thought best. We would recommend strongly one in the county as a sanatorium for consumptive patients. We think Kilkeel would be a proper one for this purpose; but regarding this question we do not specify any unions.

11580. What is your reply to Query 3?—We recommend any scheme that would tend to avoid the separation of old couples, as we are strongly of opinion that such should be allowed to remain together.

11581. CHAIRMAN.—You urge the boarding out of children?—Yes. With regard to the recommendation put forward that there should be provided a neutral situation for them we think that would be a repetition of the present system, and that it would be far better to get a home in the rural district, and let them attend the ordinary National schools, which are the basis of public education.

11579. You would rather have them attend these schools than have them brought to an institution?—Yes.

11571. As to Query 4, what is the answer of your Board?—Rule 5 of Article 25 of the General Rules for the government of dispensary districts respecting the examination of dispensary medical officers' books, we consider unsatisfactory, and we recommend a return to the old system of dispensary committees for the better examination of the books, records, &c. Our reason for that was this: when this law came into force doctors' books were sent to the workhouse, and signed by the Guardian of the district who was present, and the Guardians came to the conclusion that it was only a farce passing a thing they knew nothing about. The old system in Newtownards was this: we met once a month, and if there was any abuse of the system they knew it; but at present we have not all opportunity of finding out. We do the next best thing—we send the relieving officer to the dispensary to go over the books.

11572. As to the examination of the books the only thing you want is the old dispensary committee back again?—That is one of the things we want.

11573. The dispensary committee used to appoint the medical officer?—We don't touch that at all.

11574. It is for efficiency in the work you make the recommendation?—Yes.

11575. Mr. MURKIN.—And to give the Guardians knowledge of how the doctor is doing his business?—We have one of the hardest working men in the Co. Down. It would have that effect.

11576. CHAIRMAN.—What is your Board's reply to Query 61.—The treatment of the sick in this infirmary is of a satisfactory character. There is not available means for the proper treatment of insane, idiotic, or puerile in an ordinary workhouse.

11577. You recommend they should be sent to asylums?—Yes.

11578. Have you any insane or idiotic people in your workhouse at present?—Only one or two insane and epileptic. We think no institutions could be better for the insane than the asylums, which are set apart for their treatment. As a matter of fact, the Down County Council added to their farms sixty acres, which are bringing in a large revenue at present.

11579. You are a member of the Asylum Committee?—I am.

11580. What is the reply to Query 71.—We are of opinion that it would be very desirable to introduce a system of payment for the treatment of persons who are not destitute. This matter was discussed, and we were told all we could charge an ordinary patient was an ordinary outlay, which is 1s. 11d. a week. We are of opinion that it would be better, and that the public would be better pleased—if, when they went into the workhouse hospital they would pay what they thought would be right and fair. We have diphtheria and scarletina patients, and all we can charge in respect of them is 4s. a week.

11581. You think that within reasonable limits the Guardians should have absolute discretion to charge whatever expense was been de incurred?—I don't think it fair that the ratepayers should have to keep up people who were quite willing and able to pay for themselves. Jan. 11, 1904.

Mr. George Deane.

11582. The only other question is as to tramps. What have you to say regarding it?—That has been a serious question with us. We recommend that tramps or casuals admitted, say, on Monday, be detained in the workhouse over Tuesday, and discharged on Wednesday; but if admitted twice within two months that they be detained two clear days, and that in each case a task be given; and we strongly recommend that for the making the breaking of a certain quantity of stones each day, or other approved of useful work, and the task for the females be left in the hands of the master and matron, the Guardians having the power to authorise the master to discharge a casual the day after admission, if he (the master) considers he is a bona fide workman seeking employment. Provided the casual or tramp does not perform the task set him, the master should have the power to bring the delinquent immediately before a court of summary jurisdiction to be dealt with for insubordination. It is from Belfast we get all our trouble with tramps. We have from thirty to forty from Belfast. They come in the morning and return in the evening. If this question could be dealt with satisfactorily it would be a great relief to the Poor Law.

11583. Is there anything else you would like to say?—Not that I know of, at present.

11584. Mr. J. M. Thompson.—Does your statement as to the examination by the relieving officer of the dispensary apply to the Newtownards Dispensary only?—I am speaking only of the Newtownards Dispensary.

Mr. J. H. DICKSON, Deputy Chairman, Newtownards Board of Guardians, examined.

It has been recommended to do away with the workhouses at Newtownards and Lisburn. That is not my idea; I think it would be better to do away with Banbridge and Killadeen Workhouses. By joining Newtownards to Belfast we would be largely increasing our rating, for the expenses of the Belfast Guardians are very heavy.

11585. Mr. MURKIN.—Is Belfast not large enough?—I think it very much too large.

11586. You have heard that the Belfast Guardians have no ground on which to erect more buildings?—Yes. As to dispensary districts, I think if there is a redistribution of unions there should also be a redistribution of dispensary districts. With regard to Mr. Thompson's statement as to inspecting documents, I have been a member of the Newtownards Board of Guardians for twelve years, and I have never been refused an inspection of documents.

11587. CHAIRMAN.—Mr. Thompson has seen a good deal thereof?—He has only been a Guardian for two years.

11588. During that time he has managed to see a good deal?—Yes; more than the ordinary Guardian. The officials are most willing to show anything they can to members of the Board. I have always found them so.

11589. Mr. MURKIN.—No doubt Newtownards is proud of having such a member as Mr. Thompson?—I will make no comment.

11590. You think it would be better to revert to the old dispensary system and have an examination of the books at the dispensary?—Yes.

11591. Instead of at the workhouse?—Yes.

The Sitting was adjourned.

Mr. J. H.
Dickson.

Jan. 13, 1904.

TWENTY-THIRD PUBLIC SITTING.—WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 13TH, 1904.

At the Courthouse, Banbridge.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURNAHAN, and Dr. COBY BIGGER.

Mr. T. B. WALLACE.—I act as Solicitor for the Banbridge Board of Guardians, and the Board have nominated a committee to act with me in this matter, and to come before you to-day and give any evidence or assistance that may be considered necessary. I propose to call Mr. John Johnston, who is a County Councillor, and a Guardian of long experience.

Mr. John
Johnston.

Mr. JOHN JOHNSTON EXAMINED.

Mr. WALLACE.—The County Council of Down sometime ago met and discussed this matter with representatives from various unions, and they have adopted a report. Our Committee have met and fully discussed and gone into that report, and they have substantially adopted it. They propose to come here to give evidence with regard to some matters in the report; but in the main they approve of it.

11562. CHAIRMAN.—Query No. 1.—This is the County Council report I have here now. The answer of the County Council to the first query is:—"The County Council has, through a special committee, had interviews with, and representations from several Boards of Guardians wholly or partly comprised within the county. The County Council would point out that the state of the county in all its conditions, both material and economic, differs essentially from the state of affairs existing at the period, now sixty-five years ago, when the previous Poor Law system was inaugurated. At that time the population of the county was over 360,000; it is now about 265,000. There were no railways then; at present the county is fairly well covered with a network of railways. It was then considered necessary to provide in seven unions, wholly or partly contained in the county, accommodation for 4,656 inmates. Taking the total of these seven workhouses, the number of inmates at present in these institutions is only 1,617. In the three unions wholly within the county (Downpatrick, Newtownards, and Kilkeel), the 1838 scheme provided accommodation for 2,677 inmates. There are now 534 in all, counting all classes in both hospital and workhouse. From these figures Belfast Union has been omitted, the county generally since the inauguration of the present Poor Law system having decreased in population 43 per cent., whereas the city of Belfast has in that period increased in population by 500 per cent. The valuation of the city has increased from £579,100 in 1851, to £1,304,436 in 1901. The County Council, whilst making no definite proposals as regards dissolution of any union, submit that the time has come when some amendment of the arrangements made prior to 1838 should be effected, and suggest that so far as possible the unions should be coterminous with the counties." Do you agree with that view, that the unions should, as far as possible, be coterminous with the county?—Yes.

11563. "Any one with a map of the County Down before him showing the boundaries of the unions and population of the workhouses, will have no difficulty in seeing where boundaries can be rearranged and amalgamations effected with advantage to the poor, and also to the ratepayers. The County Council would specially point out that the city of Belfast has recently extended its area from 5,956 acres to 16,304 acres, taking in by this extension all lands surrounding the city that were not of a purely rural character. The purely rural portion of Belfast Union should, with the exception of the townlands of Cregagh, Ballynacorney, and Carrickmore, be detached from the present union and attached to that of Newtownards. The portion referred to is entirely similar in its interests to the adjoining rural district, and has no similarity of interest with the great city of Belfast, which requires an institution of the size and extent of that at present existing in that city, and which is being continually added to." Virtually, your view would be that the county borough of Belfast should be the area of the union?—Yes; we think Belfast Union is quite large enough for Belfast itself, and should be separated from the county.

11564. "The County Council would represent that the portion of the Lurgan Union situated in the county of Down should be detached from that union and joined to that of Banbridge. This portion consists of seven electoral divisions, and the district in question is nearer to the Banbridge Workhouse than much of the present mountainous portion lying to the east of Banbridge, and has much better means of communication with the workhouse, both by road and rail, than the portion of the union above referred to." You want to take portion of the Lurgan Union?—That is a portion known as the Moora district, and it is all in the County Down; it is the portion of the Lurgan Union in the County Down.

11565. You would take all the County Down part from Lurgan?—Yes.

11566. Then the report goes on: "The County Council further recommend that the portion of the Banbridge Union situated in the county of Armagh, consisting of the electoral divisions of Ballyshel, Malnahood, Mullighbrick, and Tandragee, should be detached from Banbridge Union and added on to some union or unions in the county of Armagh. The large towns of Lisburn and Newry are situated almost half and half in the neighbouring counties. The County Council does not make any definite recommendation as regards these unions, but recommend that some system of amalgamation should, if possible, be effected, whereby the County Down unions should be entirely subordinated within the county. Considering the great reduction in the population and the growth of railway accommodation, the County Council would draw the attention of the Commission to the attached map, showing the boundaries of the unions of the county and the existing railways, from which it would appear that if considerable modifications in the boundaries of existing unions were made great advantage would accrue to the administration of the Poor Law." Have you anything to say about either the union of Lisburn or Newry?—Lisburn is about half and half in the County Down and the County Antrim, seeing that they are so closely divided we left that an open question.

11567. And you are not disposed to say anything about Lisburn?—No.

11568. And as regards Newry?—The same thing. The only change that we ask in the County Down is that the Moora portion of seven electoral divisions should be added to Banbridge, and the four shires of Banbridge Union situated in Armagh should be given up to Armagh.

11569. You would give up the Tandragee portion to Armagh for the purpose of keeping within the county?—Yes.

11570. Then as regards Query No. 3, the answer is: "In this county the question of auxiliary inmate systems has been settled by the County Council, who are making large additions to the existing system including, which will meet all requirements as regards accommodation for the inmates, and the greater number of inmates have already been removed to the system from the workhouses. It is the unanimous opinion of the County Council, and every person that has been consulted, that should any workhouses be closed, the site of which would be suitable, it should be made into a sanatorium for consumptives, an institution for which there appears to be a great need, and which should have wards for pay patients." As regards lunatics there is sufficient room in the County Down Asylum at Downpatrick for housing all the lunatics in the county.—They are adding very largely to it.

11601. And as soon as these additions are made there will be ample room for all the lunatics.—Certainly; and not only that, but a large number of lunatics have been removed from the workhouse already, and a provision made for extending the buildings very considerably.

11602. That we are aware of: that a considerable number of lunatics have been taken from the workhouse. As regards an institution for consumptives, you suggest Kilkeel, or some suitable place?—Something of the kind is very desirable, and not only should we have it for the poor and paupers, but certain wards for pay patients, who could be admitted on reasonable terms. We would like to take in a class who could not afford to go to a sanatorium and pay a very high price.

11603. You would take them in for what they could afford to give, from 1s. to 30s. a week?—That is the idea.

11604. That is an idea that the Commission would view with favour themselves?—And we would go further—whether the union be dissolved or not we think a sanatorium ought to be provided.

11605. Your answer to Query No. 5 is: "There appears to be an almost unanimous opinion that, so far as possible, children should not be brought up in the workhouse, and that arrangements should be made for separate accommodation for aged married couples to live together." That is two recommendations: that all the children should be excluded from the workhouse, and better provision should be made for aged married couples to enable them to live together?—Yes, as far as possible. A difficulty arises with regard to the children. At present epileptics or deserted children can be boarded out, and in this union every child that comes under that clause is boarded out.

11606. We saw three that were not; but we were told that they would be?—Yes; we put out all we can.

11607. Would you be in favour of the law giving the Boards of Guardians or the governing bodies a discretionary power to declare parents unfit for the bringing up of their children, and to take their children from them?—Yes, sir; having that discretion it would require to be worked pretty carefully; it would require something like that to carry out the recommendation.

11608. Do you see any other change that would carry it out; say an amendment of the law, enabling the local bodies to transfer any of the children that they may deem fit to be under their control?—I do so, and, I believe, a good many others, would not like to see children placed in what we call a better position than honest working men's children.

11609. That would never be done in the case of boarded-out children?—According to what length it might be pushed.

11610. Would your idea be that these children should be reared to become farm labourers?—Yes; but I would not go the length at all of saying that they should be kept at the expense of the State or the ratepayers, and placed in a better position than the children of ordinary decent people who are labourers or artisans.

11611. That would seem to be an absurd arrangement?—It would have a tendency to make people say, "If we send our children to the workhouse they can be reared better than we can rear them." But, subject to that being safeguarded, I think it should be done.

11612. That would be a matter for the discretion of the local body, would it not? Do you think any further safeguard would be desirable—would you leave it to the discretion of the local body, or do you think there ought to be any further check, we will say such as an order of the magistrates in petty sessions—do you think that before children are taken from a parent the Guardians should get an order transferring the children to them in loco parentis?—I can scarcely answer whether that would be necessary or not; but suppose it was left to the Guardians, with power of appeal to magistrates or some other court.

11613. Yes?—I would agree with that qualification.

11614. Mr. MURKIN.—You don't think the Guardians would have any desire to take away from a person a child if they thought that person was able to provide for the child?—I don't think so; but just to safeguard it; and perhaps the Guardians might act without having full knowledge. I think it would be better to have them safeguarded in some way.

11615. CHAIRMAN.—Is it your idea that aged married couples should be maintained together in workhouses or cottages outside?—We left that an open question; as a matter of fact the Banbridge Board of Guardians are going as closely to carry out that idea as possible, because they give, and some people think perhaps too freely, out-door relief to old people: we don't like to bring them into the house and separate them.

11616. You have a great number of old people in the house, though?—I think there are very few who are separated; the house is made up altogether of old people and persons on the infirmary.

11617. I suppose there are persons who would have no one outside to look after them, if you gave them out-door relief?—We don't like to give out-door relief unless there is someone to look after them.

11618. Take the large number of old men and women whom we saw this morning in your workhouse, who are not in hospital or in the doctor's charge; would you be in favour of still further extending your out-door relief by virtually boarding them out with people who would be bound to take care of them, for a sum less than it would cost for them in the workhouse, with the object of doing that part of the workhouse which is devoted to the care of people who are not sick. You would get out the children and the aged and infirm: you would have nobody except persons who came in to the hospital sick or to have illegitimate children?—I understand the question very well, and I hardly know what to say.

11619. Do you think there would be any danger of abuse; do you think that people who are distinctly above the rank of destitute would be tempted to try to get aged relatives provided for in that way?—I think there would be a little danger.

11620. Do you think the local body would be strong enough to cope with that danger?—I would scarcely like to give an opinion; I have not thought it out.

11621. Mr. MURKIN.—The milk of human kindness is too strong in Banbridge?—I don't know that, sir.

11622. CHAIRMAN.—Query No. 4—the County Council have no suggestion to make. Had you any discussion on the question of chargeability?—That is a question there is a considerable difference of opinion on.

11623. Naturally, at the County Council you would have differences of opinion?—No, no; I refer to the Guardians when I speak here; a member of the Guardians would like the chargeability to be returned to electoral divisions.

11624. That is, the rural men would?—I don't know whether it is confined altogether to the rural men; but in working it out I may admit that for a very considerable time I thought it was a mistake to change the chargeability from electoral division to union-at-large, and I am beginning to change my mind now.

11625. What division do you represent?—A rural division, three or four miles out—Banagh.

11626. That is where your property is?—No; it is just touching; my own is Quilly.

11627. It is rural?—Yes.

11628. Therefore, really all your interests are rural?—Yes.

11629. Still you are inclined to prefer the union at large?—Hardly any man would, I think, are worth consideration. Not very long since there was a very serious outbreak of typhoid fever at Lanelwala, in Banbridge Union, which cost the union £1,000. Under the old system that would have come off one or two divisions. That is a very serious thing.

11630. Are you referring to the actual expense of curing the people?—The actual additional cost to Banbridge was £1,000. Had that been under the old system of electoral divisions that £1,000 would all have been charged to one or two divisions.

CHAIRMAN.—When the rate reached a certain point would it not have been spread over the union?

Mr. Wylie, Clerk.—No; under the old system it would be an electoral division charge.

CHAIRMAN.—Under the Act of 1875.

Mr. Wylie.—We never had such a case before.

CHAIRMAN.—I did not understand that point. I thought the chargeability, whether the sum was large or small, would have gone to the electoral division.

CHAIRMAN.—No; there is a safety valve to prevent its smashing everything.

Witness.—I am very pleased to hear there is.

Jan. 12, 1904

Mr. John Johnston

Jan. 12, 1904.

Mr. John
Johnston.

11531. CHAIRMAN.—Is your view modified by hearing that?—Yes; what might the turning point be?

11532. I think it is in the £ in-door; if it went over 6d. you would have it spread over the union—I was not aware of that.

11533. Mr. WALLACE.—How long are you a Guardian?—I became a Guardian in 1877; but there were a few years I was not a Guardian during that time.

11534. CHAIRMAN.—We were talking about the question of chargeability.—The point you have raised has rather upset me; I scarcely know which side to take.

11535. Some witnesses have been in favour of not interfering with in-door expenditures or establishment charges, leaving them to be union charges. They suggest that the other expenditure should be divisional or dispensary districts. What would your view be of making the maintenance of the sick a county charge in the same way as asylum maintenance. Very few people become sick under the Poor Law who are not really sick; therefore you will have just the cases of necessity coming in to be dealt with, and of necessity only. Would you think at all well of making their support in the hospital a county charge. It might reduce your expenditure in some ways; you would have a system of county nurses, instead of telephoning to Belfast for a nurse, and they would go from one place to another as their services were required, wherever there was an epidemic, and you would not have these very high fees for occasional nurses.—If I thought it would reduce the expenditure I would go for it; but I am not sure it would.

11536. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Do you not think that by widening the area you lessen the power of supervision, and therefore have the matter open to the danger of extravagance?—I think there is very considerable danger of that.

Mr. Wallace reads Sec. 3 of the Act of 1895.

Witness.—That would refer to indoor expenses only; but in our experience we pay not only for indoor, but considerably for out-door, because when members of a family were brought in suffering from typhoid their families had to be supported outside on out-door relief.

11538. CHAIRMAN.—Was the cause of that outbreak a defective supply of water?—I believe it was.

11539. Would it not be cheaper to get a good supply of water?—They have been trying since, all they can.

11540. Dr. BROWN.—With reference to the idea of chargeability for hospitals, what benefit do you receive, in Banbridge, from the county infirmary in Downpatrick?—I don't think we receive any at all. I scarcely ever heard of a patient being sent there.

11541. But Banbridge pays its proportion to keep up Downpatrick. Would it not be well to have all hospitals on the same basis?—And the County Council pay towards Newry. Neither of these hospitals comes under the Poor Law system.

11542. But they come off the ratepayers, and come within the scope of this Inquiry?—There is another in Lisburn; but I think it all comes off the County Antrim.

11543. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—How many workhouses do you think would be sufficient for Down?—I would not like to answer that question.

11544. It appears on this list before me that there are about 600 inmates in the County Down workhouses; half of these are in the infirmaries, the remainder children and lunatics?—Does it take in Newry.

11545. Banbridge, Downpatrick, Kilsed, Newry, and Lisburn; there are, in all, 900 people. Of that number 200 are children, and 50 inmates. That reduces the number to 750; 360 of these are in the infirmary. That would leave between 300 and 400 of the class known as infirm and aged. Do you not think that one house could accommodate 300 or 400 people?—It might accommodate them; but I think it would be a very inconvenient thing to drag the aged and infirm people from one end of the county to the other. I think there should be far more than one place in the county.

11546. But the idea is to retain a place for the sick. Get the children banded out, as far as possible; put the lunatics either in an asylum or the asylum; few remain but the infirm. What great knowledge would there be to send that class to some central place. We find that they remain in the houses for years and years, and are rarely visited by their friends. Do you not think that would be a desirable change if it could be done without any great extra costs?

CHAIRMAN.—The same evils as in lunatic asylums.—Yes. But there is a difference between lunatic and aged people; the lunatics are not supposed to know much of what they are doing; but old people have the traditions of home, and don't like to be sent so far away.

11547. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Did the County Council express a view as to the number of workhouses that would suffice for Down?—They did not.

11549. In what way. As has been indicated?—I would doubt whether there was much economy in it.

11550. You would be getting rid of a staff which is a great expense, besides the cost of fuel and the repair and upkeep of the house. It is by doing something on these lines that you can effect efficiency and economy?—I would rather not express any opinion further on that point.

11551. There was a suggestion made by a witness at another place that it would be well to have paying patients in hospitals made electoral division charges instead of union or county at large charges?—I don't think it would be worth while making.

11552. The suggestion was that out-door relief and paying patients in hospitals should be confined to an electoral division charge?—I disregard altogether that about out-door relief. You may get a division here with the smallest valuation having the largest out-door relief, and it would be a great grievance to change the system. Sometimes a person comes and settles down in a division. They may have been away for their lifetime, and they must get out-door relief, and it would be unfair to charge that division with their support.

11553. What are your methods in giving out-door relief? How do you proceed—some Guardians make application, then what occurs?—The relieving officer should look after the case as soon as possible.

11554. Do you consider the question at every meeting or only once a month?—Every meeting. And I would just say that I think there are far too many meetings of the Guardians; and I think we have too many Guardians. We have thirty-four Guardians in Banbridge Union; and I think they would feel the responsibility far more if they were fewer in number, and would do their duty better. Because there are so many it is not worth my while to stand, or you to stand: they don't attend, some of them, unless there is something they want doing.

11555. The number on out-door relief in Banbridge is very large. Is there any special reason for it?—The special reason is, that the Guardians do not like to press the old people to come from their own homes to the workhouse, and they are carrying out by out-door relief pretty much this system that you want yourself, of boarding out old people outside; that is practically a good deal of the working of the Banbridge Union.

11556. CHAIRMAN.—You did not think that was put forward as an expression of opinion by the Commission?—Oh, no.

11557. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Asking a question does not indicate necessarily that we approve of it; we want local opinion?—Oh, no; but the question was asked about boarding out old people. I say the system in Banbridge Union is practically putting that into force, to a considerable extent at all events, and that accounts in a large measure for the large sum spent on out-door relief.

11558. Do you think the Asylum Committee is enlarging the asylum to an extent sufficient to accommodate all the lunatics in the County Down?—Yes; I have no doubt about it.

11559. There is a large number insane in Newry, and there are fourteen or fifteen in Banbridge?—I think £20,000 is being laid out in enlarging Downpatrick Asylum.

11660. I suppose the Asylum Committee considered that matter fully when they sent these answers to the queries?—Yes; in fact, I was one of the committee that prepared those answers.

11661. Dr. Brown.—I think it was discussed, and considered that that was the cheapest way of doing. The Chairman went into the relative cost of keeping lunatics in the workhouse and the asylum, and taking of the asylum grant, they come to the conclusion that that was the best thing to do?—Yes; but it was not only on account of the cost. Another point was that they were better provided for and taken care of by an efficient staff of doctors and nurses.

11662. And then the numbers were ascertained by the County Council that were in the different workhouses?—Yes; and provision made to receive an extra number if required.

11663. As a matter of fact, they have taken nearly all the male lunatics out of the workhouses?—At any rate, the feeling was that it was better for the lunatics (not workhouses were not proper places for them, and that they could not be properly attended to without a great deal of extra nursing.

11664. Mr. MURKIN.—Better under existing conditions; but would not they be better provided for under a change—an intermediate system. Supposing there was an institution with a considerable amount of land, where those people could be kept employed, away from the noise and excitement of the violent in the asylum. Do you not think it would be better to have them apart from the noisy ones, and engaged at an occupation beneficial to them and helpful to the ratepayers?—I think the asylum people are carrying that into effect so far as they can. They brought a large farm of land at Downpatrick for the purpose of giving employment to the inmates.

11665. Hereafter lunatics could be kept at a lower rate than dangerous or suicidal. If an unoccupied workhouse were taken, having a good deal of land about it, and the institution brought up to a reasonable standard, do you not think it would be well to get this class to a place like that?—Certainly.

11666. Preferable to enlarging one asylum for the whole county?—It is a question of degree; there would be a difficulty in classifying when a person is dangerous and when he is not; and who is so good a judge of that as a doctor and a nurse.

11667. Do you wish to have epileptics, idiots, and dotty people placed in conjunction with those noisy people. Don't you think something should be done for humanity sake to take them away?—And we are doing that.

11668. Large institutions are not considered desirable; when an institution has reached a thousand it has about the maximum?—I did not know what the opinion of experts was; but I have already expressed the opinion that I don't like too great gatherings, and I referred to the Belfast Workhouse.

11669. Dr. Brown.—You mentioned something about a consumptive sanatorium?—It has not been very fully considered; an expression of opinion has been given that something ought to be done, but it has not taken any form.

11670. That opinion is very generally held by representatives and ratepayers?—I believe it is.

11671. Do you know, is consumption prevalent in this district?—I do not; but I think there are very few families that do not suffer from it less or more.

11672. As far as you know the representatives of the ratepayers would be strongly in favour of a consumptive sanatorium being established?—It is an idea that, I believe, is growing.

11673. And would pay their share of it?—I think they would. Some of the Councilors would take their chance of whether they would be re-elected or not. Perhaps I should say that in making any changes for hospital accommodation there is a strong feeling to have accommodation for paying patients at moderate charges.

11674. CHAIRMAN.—Would you be in favour also of giving Guardians or the managers of any hospital power to fix what sum ought to be paid by any person who could pay at all?—Yes, sir.

11675. Something from 1s. or 6s. a week up to the full cost—would you be in favour of giving the managers power?—I would; I scarcely know who else should have the power.

11676. At present they have not. You would be in favour of having that power given by law?—Yes.

Mr. THOMAS LOCKHART examined.

11677. CHAIRMAN.—What is the view of the Guardians about the tramps. You think it is a nuisance that requires to be abated?—Certainly it does; I am very confident as to that opinion.

11678. You think it is bad for the ratepayers and bad for the poor people themselves?—I am quite sure of that.

11679. Have you personally, or have the Guardians as a body, any definite view as to what might be done?—The Guardians have had that matter under consideration very often since I became a Guardian; but in face of the law restricting the penalty only to a hen's work in the morning the hands of the Guardians were tied.

11680. But now that an amendment of the law is under consideration have you any suggestion as to what should be done?—I have not.

11681. Would you be in favour of extending to the Guardians the discretion which the Guardians in England have of detaining of tramps for a day or two?—I would.

11682. Do you think that would be sufficient?—It would be a help no doubt.

11683. A reduction in the number of workhouses would be a further difficulty in the way of the tramps?—It would, certainly.

11684. Some witnesses have expressed the opinion that it might be useful if the Guardians and the constabulary would co-operate, and if the duty of preventing vagrants or tramps who are habitually so were placed on the police?—Is not that power already placed on the police; we have been doing that occasionally.

11685. But you have been working through your workhouse master?—Decidedly.

11686. If some extra duties were put on the police to help the Guardians?—It would be a good idea, I am sure.

11687. They could collect information as to the men walking the road: they are in a specially good position for collecting information and evidence?—Yes; I would be certainly in favour of giving the police some extra power.

11688. Mr. MURKIN.—Some people think that if a severe law was enacted in regard to these tramps that perhaps they would become a danger to the public by going to farmers' houses at night, setting fire to barns, or robbing him rosets. Do you see any danger of that?—I don't think they would.

11689. Have you many tramps at Banbridge?—A tremendous lot.

11690. CHAIRMAN.—You had fifteen or nineteen this morning. They were a very pitiable sight?—Strong, healthy men doing nothing.

11691. Mr. MURKIN.—Witnesses suggested at other places that it might be well to make tramps go to the police station and get a ticket, which would entitle them to a night's lodging. Do you think it would be better to keep them under the eye of the police rather than of the relieving officers?—I think it would. Relieving officers are inclined to be too lenient.

11692. With regard to unmarried mothers, would you extend the law so as to enable the Guardians to take children away from parents who failed to take proper care of them?—I certainly would; I think there was a recommendation with regard to that by some witness somewhere else, that immoral mothers should not be allowed to retain the custody of their children.

11693. The mother at your house spoke of the hardship she often sees of children brought to the workhouse in a half starved condition?—Yes; we have met such cases; and I would be inclined to take such children from the hands of their parents and provide for them elsewhere.

11594. CHAIRMAN.—You heard the very interesting evidence that Mr. Johnston gave us in great particularity; it would be quite unnecessary to take you over the same ground again—I could not add anything to it.

11595. Is there anything in which you differ from him?—There was one question raised as to the aged and infirm being taken to some central place. I would not at all agree with that; I think they are better provided for at home. Old men and women would not care to leave their own home to go away.

11596. Do you think it would make any matter to a woman from Drogheda whether she went to Newtownards or Banbridge?—If any person went so far being ill—

11597. We are not talking of the ill at all, but of the old and infirm?—Most of them come into the workhouse to die.

11598. They don't come in a dying condition, but rest their work, mostly owing to old age or disease?—Some of these people stay a very short time. If a man or a woman come in for two or three days, and we have them sent to Downpatrick, how are they to get home?

11599. The cost of transport would come in then; but I don't think, in your aged and infirm, you will find such short intervals between admission and discharge?—We have it here.

11700. These would be townspeople hopping in and out?—There are some from the country, too.

11701. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Your idea is not to do away with any workhouse, or, if so, provide for these people at home?—People must be taken somewhere.

Mr. MURKAGHAN.—It is a question of how to do it best.

CHAIRMAN.—We visited recently a union in which were inclusive from a workhouse which had been closed—Gortin—and they were better pleased to be in the new union they went into.

Mr. MURKAGHAN.—It is fourteen years since it was amalgamated, yet there is no complaint whatever on the part of the Guardians, or anybody else.

Witness.—I was afraid, when I heard the suggestion, that that difficulty might arise.

CHAIRMAN.—They don't like it at first; they move in a wrench to an old person; but once it has taken place the view from one workhouse is so similar to that from another, the order of architecture is the same, and it is difficult for them to realise that they have been moved.

Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Guardians who, in 1886, were opposed to the amalgamation of this particular workhouse, are now quite pleased with the change.

Mr Arthur
Atkinson.

Mr. ARTHUR ATKINSON examined.

11702. CHAIRMAN.—The Commission will be very glad to hear your views on the question of old married couples and tramps?—My notion with regard to the old people is to treat them with kindness. I don't approve of the Boards of Guardians constituting themselves a Divorce Court; our system is not the same as in England; and what has increased our out-door relief to a great extent is that we do not wish to separate men and wife who have lived a number of years together.

11703. Are you sure that has increased your out-door relief?—To a great extent. I am speaking for my own division—the Urban. An application is made through myself or some of my brother Guardians for out-door relief for old people that are past their labour. We have no alternative but to bring the case before the Board. Our Board is very generous; they do not act harshly towards these old people; the figures are a proof of that. If there was a provision made in the workhouse to extend the comforts of the aged people and improve the surroundings, that they could live in quarters of their own, that the aged people could assist one another, it would do a great deal of good, and, I believe, would relieve out-door relief. Give them more liberty; don't make the place like a jail.

11704. Do you know how many married couples you have in the workhouse at present?—One.

11705. Do you happen to know how many cases are on out-door relief, or were during a recent period—how many married couples?—I do not.

11706. I have a record of it here. Your average weekly number of persons is 786; your number of married couples with children who were on out-door relief is 37, that is in the Banbridge relief district, and in the Drogheda relief district, 14. Then without children you have a great deal more—58 in Banbridge district and 48 in Drogheda.

Mr. WILSON.—Mr. Johnston points out to me that these two classes don't take in all; there are widows.

CHAIRMAN.—We are talking of the separation of married couples. Indeed, I find I have added two years together. It is the half of what I said. There are 138 single women on out-door relief and 86 single men in Banbridge, and in Drogheda there are 145 single women and 53 single men. The number of married couples is much smaller than I said; it is 58 in Drogheda and 41 in Banbridge.

Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Seventy-one only.

Witness.—It is these seventy-one that arouse my sympathy. Where there are children there must be a doctor's certificate to show the bread-earner is not able to earn. That must be temporary; and we say it is not worth touching them.

11707. CHAIRMAN.—They are the proper cases for out-door relief, in every one's opinion, where the breadwinner is temporarily incapacitated?—That is my opinion; and in the case of old married couples I would try to make the homes in our union more comfortable for them.

11708. What would you do for married couples that become destitute—would you maintain them with out-door relief, as at present, or give them quarters in the workhouse, or give them cottage houses?—I would leave that to be decided locally.

11709. What is your view?—I don't like to break up a home; I would rather build up a home. Sometimes we have to act cruelly to be just.

11710. You speak of old married couples without children. There is not much building up of homes there?—They have little homes; but the out-door relief they get is not sufficient to maintain them properly.

11711. What do they get?—3s. to 5s.

11712. That pays their rent for them?—And then they have to provide coal, and live on charity to a great extent. It is a degrading position in which to place respectable old people.

11713. Then the out-door relief is really not a provision for the destitute, but something to supplement the deficiencies of the poor?—That is my own opinion; and I would like to see that altered that there should be some consideration given to them.

11714. You would rather give them larger relief outside in their own homes?—If we could establish something like local charity, 5s. for the deserving poor; and there could be something supplemental added by Government grant, or from other funds, 3s. or 4s. more.

11715. That would be really an old-age pension scheme?—Yes; that was my idea.

11716. You would throw that to the extent of 5s. a week on the local rates, and try to raise the balance off some more extended area, either the county or the United Kingdom?—That is my opinion.

11717. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Do you not think there would be some difficulty in distinguishing the deserving—who would be the judge?—We have no difficulty in distinguishing that, we pride ourselves; our clergy and our local Guardians, through the relieving officer, are competent to judge.

11718. Have the ratepayers nothing to say to that?—We are returned by the ratepayer, and if they don't wish us they can turn us out.

11719. You act differently here to other places in the matter of out-door relief?—We do; our out-door relief sometimes is challenged, but it is approved of for petitions are largely signed on behalf of certain parties, and presented to the Board of Guardians, so get them out-door relief when we refuse.

11720. A petition is not a hard thing to get up?—It is not; but it shows the ratepayers approve of our action.

11712. But do you think it is a good thing to scatter public money and prostrate the people, by giving money without proper inquiry and supervision?—We exercise that.

11722. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think that all your payments are within the law?—Sometimes we have been overcharged—once in five or seven years.

11723. Do you think that a great deal of your ordinary expenditure is illegal?—We have never had our attention drawn to it that we were wrong.

11724. Mr. MURKIN.—Suppose a man dies, and leaves a couple of children and a widow; the widow young, strong, the children not babies—six to eight years old; the woman strong and able to get remunerative employment, perhaps at 2s. 6d. a day or 2s., do you not think it would be better that that woman should go and seek employment than to come to the Guardians and get 4s. or 5s. a week?—You are supposing a case that never was in existence. There is no such thing as a woman earning 2s. or 2s. 6d. a day in this neighbourhood.

11725. CHAIRMAN.—Say she could earn 10s. or 12s. a week!—That is only supposing; there is no such thing in existence.

11726. Mr. MURKIN.—If it did exist would such a case be a suitable case for outdoor relief?—No; and we don't do it either. We cannot supplement a widow woman's earnings; the law will prevent it.

11727. CHAIRMAN.—You said to me that your outdoor relief was not an adequate sum for the support of the destitute, but supplemented their other means?—That applied to the aged and infirm. Mr. Murkin referred to a person earning 2s. a day; we could not entertain that.

11728. I was going back to your statement just now. I asked you whether a large portion of your expenditure was not probably illegal, and I asked you that question having regard to what you said a couple of minutes before to me, that the outdoor relief given was not a provision given for the adequate relief of the destitute, but a provision to supplement the deficiencies of people. There is no such charitable power given to Boards of Guardians?—No, sir; and as I said in my statement, this small pittance of outdoor relief is supplemented by the charity of the neighbours around; that is not coming.

11729. Now about the tramps?—That is a vexed question; it has puzzled the brains of all the Guardians in Ireland.

11730. Well, can you settle it for us?—I would say that those stringent measures that several Guardians have put forward might be a hardship; I would be afraid it would touch a really deserving man or woman seeking employment from one town to another.

11731. Would you not have the discretion of the Board of Guardians and relieving officers—they would not be bound to administer it in a uniform way?—The relieving officer! If you had his position—

11732. I don't mean the relieving officer—the workhouse master?—Once he gets a line from the relieving officer he must admit the person.

11733. But the treatment when he is admitted; whether he is to be detained compulsorily?—If you give an unlimited discretionary power to the master to use his own discretion to discriminate between the deserving tramp and the vagrant.

11734. Would you suggest that he should have power to consult with the Guardians living nearest to the workhouse?—Our master has enough to do without leaving his own place.

11735. All he would have to do would be to send a slip of paper down to the Guardian to attend at the workhouse?

Mr. WATSON.—Mr. Alderman is the Urban Guardian, and he would not like the job of inspecting twenty tramps every morning.

CHAIRMAN.—It would only be in a case where a difficulty arose.

WITNESS.—When the tramp comes into the porter's lodge after receiving the ticket of admission, an attention out of twenty cases he is either a tradesman or a labourer.

11736. Or a stroller?—He never says that. If he is a tradesman he gives in his trade to the porter; if he is unskilled he says he is a labouring man. A man that asks a night's lodging in a workhouse should produce a discharge from the last place he wrought, endorsed at the nearest police station that it was a genuine discharge, and that discharge would state on it what the man's occupation was, and how long he was in his last employment.

11737. And the reason of his discharge?—Yes. If that man should happen to return again inside a given period he could be detected and asked where he wrought last. If each of them was asked for this discharge very few would turn up.

11738. One gentleman proposed that all the tramps should be photographed, and the photographs given to the police, who could send it along their line of route?—Some of these men are very clever, and could alter their features in one night.

11739. Mr. MURKIN.—Would you go so far as to change the law, and to give the Guardians power to turn these men over to the police?—I would in the case of the vagrants, if it could be wrought up; there is a law now which I would put strictly into force; the vagrants should be treated as vagrants, and the minimum should be a month in jail.

11740. Giving the Guardians power to detain anyone they thought necessary up to two or three days?—I would not go that far; they might punish the wrong man; a person bona fide seeking employment might be detained.

11741. Don't the Guardians always lean on the tender side?—But the Guardians are not there constantly; that would have to be left in the master's hands. We only meet once a week. If a tramp came in on a Monday night he would be detained until next Monday before we meet again.

11742. CHAIRMAN.—Have you any other suggestion to make about the tramps?—That would be a good idea that they should produce a discharge initialled at the police station.

11743. And if they had no such document?—I would hand them over to the police to treat them as vagrants. Then with regard to the children of tramps, I would take them from them, for they are only cultivating a new generation of tramps. They make use of these children to solicit alms, and then as soon as they get the money they go and drink it, and in nine cases out of ten they come into the house; they know they have a home to come to.

11744. In the interests of the children, and for the good of the community, you would take charge of the children from them?—I would; for I believe this is a disease, and could be stamped out.

Mr. ROBERT FRYER examined.

11745. CHAIRMAN.—We would like to have the benefit of your views?—My Council—the Urban Council—appointed myself and Mr. McIlroy to attend here before you. On the whole, my Council quite agree with the answers that have been given by the County Council.

11746. Do you think the Banbridge Workhouse ought to be closed or kept open?—My Council think it ought to be kept open.

11747. Have you considered what workhouses ought to be closed?—We considered that question, and my Council were not in favour of closing any workhouse. In the first place, with regard to administration, the idea that was suggested by a question of one of your members, of doing away with all workhouses save one—I did not quite gather whether it was intended by that question to do away with all the Boards of Guardians save one.

Mr. MURKIN.—Not necessarily; you may still have the same management.

WITNESS.—That is, the Guardians for Banbridge could still—

Mr. MURKIN.—Administer the Poor Law in their own particular area.

WITNESS.—Following up that question, would it be intended that, although the Banbridge Workhouse would be closed as a residence for old people, still the buildings would be used for other purposes.

Mr. MURKIN.—That would be a matter for consideration. When we put a question you must not infer anything by it more than that we want to get the views of local people on the subject. You must not take it that because I throw out the suggestion that one workhouse would be enough I have any fixed idea on the subject.

Witness.—My Council are not in favour of closing any of the institutions.

11748. Then you don't agree with the County Council, because the Council are say some of the houses might be closed?—As far as I know the opinion of my Council they do not.

11749. CHAIRMAN.—Is there any change at all you would suggest?—They would support the proposition put forward by the County Council of taking the Co. Down part of the Lurgan Union.

11750. Keeping the counties together?—Keeping the counties together, they think the final arrangements could be more easily managed.

11751. Mr. MURKIN.—Could you suggest any improvement in the way of economy by retaking the present workhouses and existing staffs?

CHAIRMAN.—Suppose, for instance, Banbridge were selected as the county workhouse, would you be in favour of closing up all the rest?—My Council were not in favour of closing up any workhouse. The particular question you asked me was not put before my Council.

11752. Would Banbridge be in a fairly central position to act as the county workhouse?—Yes, it would; and it is very favourably situated with regard to railways; we have direct communication with Newry, Belfast, and Ballymore, which is being extended to Newcastle, Downpatrick, and Newtownards, and we would be connected with almost every portion of the Co. Down.

11753. Except Killead, which is connected with no place?—No; and is hid behind the mountains. There was one point my Council was very unanimous about, and that was that there should be a sanatorium for consumptives. All the newspapers in our district would be anxious for that.

11754. And if no workhouse was suitable they think some good place in the Mourne or other district should be selected?—They do; they were strong on that point.

11755. Mr. MURKIN.—Did they express a choice as regards an auxiliary asylum or asylum proper?—They did not; that was not discussed.

11756. Have you any suggestion to make on the subject of tramps?—My Council thought the tramp nuisance was a thing that should be suppressed if it could possibly be done, and they were in favour of taking the children of persons known to be tramps away from them. These children are being trained and brought up in the habits of their parents—they think tramping is just a habit; and if the children could be taken from the parents it would be a good thing.

11757. You would be in favour of giving the Guardians power of taking children from dissolute parents?—That is confined to the case of tramps.

11758. CHAIRMAN.—Not in the case of dissolute people who go into the workhouse?—That was not considered.

11759. Would you make any distinction?—It would be liable to abuse.

11760. Would you approve of the reservation that was discussed by Mr. Johnston, that if people were dissatisfied they would have a right to go to petty sessions for an order upstopping the decision?—That might be a check; but it would not be sufficient.

11761. Mr. MURKIN.—You don't think the Guardians are very anxious to get the care of these children if they could avoid it?

CHAIRMAN.—They would only act from a sense of conscientious duty?—I dare say they would.

11762. Mr. MURKIN.—Is it not the inclination of the Guardians to get rid of the children as much as possible?—Yes, it should be. I am not a Guardian. My Council were strongly of opinion that the present area of taking—union taking—should be continued.

11763. CHAIRMAN.—I should be very much surprised if they had any other opinion?—They think the poor, when they become destitute, come into towns like Banbridge, and the towns are supporting to a large extent the poor of the rural districts. They think it would not be fair to make the towns alone support them.

11764. We had very interesting evidence in Belfast. One view put before us was that if a strict account could be taken it would be found that the town benefited by the services of these people, even if they ultimately become destitute and fell on the rates. Would you agree with that, when you consider the money these people spend in the town?—These people, as long as they are useful members of the community, and able to give service, stay in the country, but once they become destitute they drift into the town and look for support.

11765. You are speaking of agricultural labourers chiefly?—I am speaking of people who get out-door relief. They will be living in the town of Banbridge, for instance.

11766. These people who get out-door relief who are living in the town are really not real residents of the town, but who came in recently?—Yes.

11768. Every part of the nation?—In an urban district, where the valuation is large, they would have more trouble and expense.

11769. Mr. MURKIN.—The rural Guardians complain that they suffer a disadvantage by the change. They say town Guardians gather together and vote the grant, while they have to pay for it?—I don't see how that can be; because Banbridge has only five out of sixty-two Guardians. They could easily out-vote us.

11770. But whatever is the cause, the fact remains that out-door relief has increased since the passing of the Act?—I think that would be due more to the lowering of the electorate.

11771. CHAIRMAN.—More people to advocate particular cases for out-door relief?—A Guardian is more amenable to canvassing for out-door relief for particular persons.

Mr. Johnston.—There is a 1940c misapprehension. As a matter of fact paupers must have lived four years out of five before any out-door relief given to them could be charged on a particular division; consequently the drifting into towns did not increase the town rates.

Mr. JAMES McILROY examined.

Mr. James
McIlroy

11772. CHAIRMAN.—You have heard the views of your Chairman. Is there anything you would like to add as regards keeping the workhouse in Banbridge?—I endorse the views of the County Council, that there might be fewer workhouses.

11773. But you think Banbridge, owing to its situation, is a desirable centre for a workhouse, no matter what other one is closed?—I do; I think it would be a great hardship for the manufacturing towns round Banbridge, Downpatrick, and Gilford, if it was closed; and the friends of the inmates would have to go a greater distance to see them. My own opinion is, that I don't think the workhouses would accommodate, under the present sanitary arrangements, the numbers that are set down for them.

11774. They would not; you are quite right?—I think that itself is misleading.

11775. The Commissioners are quite alive to that?—If paupers were taken away ten miles to another workhouse, it would only entail additional expense on the friends who might wish to see them, and the staff would have to be increased in the other workhouse; and I don't think it would lessen the expense.

11776. Mr. MURKIN.—Don't you think an average workhouse in Down would accommodate from 300 to 400?—They might do that.

11777. That is the present number of the infirm class in Down?—They might do that.

Mr. G. B. McCoswell examined.

Jan. 13, 1904.

Mr. G. B.
McCoswell

I am a Guardian for the Rural District of Gifford, which is coextensive with the township of Gifford; and I am also a Town Commissioner, but my powers are very limited. I may say I am in general agreement with the views of the County Council; and I certainly say that the unions should be coextensive with the county. I think it would be a very wise thing to include the seven electoral divisions at present in the Lurgan Union with the Banbridge Union, and that the four electoral divisions in the Co. Armagh, round about Tandragee, should go to Armagh—possibly two to Lurgan and two to Armagh. But that is a question for the Co. Armagh people.

11778. Dr. BROOKS.—How far is the most remote part of the district which would be joined, from Banbridge, of the seven Lurgan divisions?—I should say it would be seven English miles. And they might suffer a little hardship; but on the other hand there is another portion that comes within two and a quarter or three miles of Banbridge.

11779. CHAIRMAN.—Even if there were an emergency case, in which it would be a hardship for a person to be taken from within a very short distance of Lurgan to Banbridge, owing to an accident, do you think it would be a wise thing to have a legal provision that the expense of such a person brought to the nearest hospital should be charged to the union from which he came?—Yes, I think so.

11780. If you got these seven divisions, and if a man met with a very bad accident, and it was a question of his bleeding to death?—Drive him into Lurgan, of course, and charge it to Banbridge.

11781. That would practically meet all questions of inconvenience and hardship?—I think so.

11782. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you agree with the County Council as regards lessening the number of workhouses in the county?—I am hardly prepared to go into that question, though from my knowledge of them I think it would be a hardship that any of them should be suppressed. But I would rather fall in with the idea that if any alteration were made at all they should be all abolished except one, supposing the Guardians would retain their power each over their own union.

11783. You would be in favour of boarding out all the children?—Certainly.

11784. You would be in favour of having the lunatics sent to the asylum or an auxiliary asylum?—I would; and I would strongly favour harmless lunatics being sent to a place where they would be away from these institutions in which violent lunatics are confined.

11785. Some witnesses have suggested that it would be well to have arrangements that mothers of illegitimate babies should be sent to a reformatory or some place free from workhouse contamination?—I think that would be a very good thing; it would give them a chance again.

11786. If the sick and other classes were taken care of there would remain 300 or 400 infirm to provide for?—Yes.

11787. Don't you think provision could be made for them in one of the workhouses?—Yes; I think your figures are very strong. The only objection is that an old person going into that institution would be very far from his friends; and although their friends may not visit them frequently they are kept in touch with them by the visits of local Guardians. I know local Guardians are very good in that way.

11788. There are other advantages. If this class were put in an institution by themselves they could be better taken care of?—Yes; and their surroundings could be broadened by books and papers. The only objection I see is the one I have mentioned.

11789. Do you not think the advantage would more than compensate for that?—The suggestion is a very strong one. I am hardly prepared to say so.

11790. Travelling arrangements make it practicable here?—Yes. I am strongly in favour, so far as out-door relief is concerned, of going back to the old system of divisional rating. I rather think the Guardians are somewhat profuse in this union in giving out-door relief, and by returning to the old system of divisional rating you put such division on its heels. If we were rather niggardly in giving out-door relief I should be in favour of union rating; but I am more in favour of divisional rating when I see there is that relief under the Act of 1875.

11791. CHAIRMAN.—That does not affect out-door; it applied to in-door relief?—I may say I totally disagree with Mr. Fryer, in thinking the towns would suffer by old people, once they become destitute, coming in and asking out-door relief, because I find in Gifford, which amounts largely to a manufacturing town—I find that families come there to get employment, and perhaps the father will be a pretty good man, and he will give his employment for what it is worth for some time, until he becomes infirm and destitute, and in the meantime his family has grown up, and some have children of their own; and I am sorry to say I find there is a lamentable lack of spirit on the part of the children supporting their parents, and these are the cases that I refer to; I find a lamentable lack of kindness in supporting their aged parents. Mr. McMaster, chairman of the Town Commissioners, asked me to apologise for not being able to come to-day; but I think his views will be in accordance with mine.

Mr. Wallace.—The only other witness I have is one of our relieving officers, who thinks he can give some assistance in putting an end to the tramp nuisance.

Mr. G. B. McCoswell further examined.

I would be strongly in favour of a change in the law that would enable us to give supplemental relief; and I believe that is the best way to give out-door relief.

11792. CHAIRMAN.—You would be in favour of removing destitution as the test and putting deserving poverty?—Yes.

11793. That would be an old-age pension scheme?—Really? In that spirit!

11794. Do you think that ought to be confused with a question of hard-and-fast Poor Law relief for destitute people?—In view of the fact that I don't think it is likely we are going to get old-age pensions, and in many of the cases in which we give out-door relief we might be legally overcharged, though we should not be morally overcharged, I think there should be a change in the law.

11795. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you think the rates could bear the strain?—I don't think, if the law were changed, it would make much difference in this union.

Mr. SAMUEL BECK examined.

I live a short distance out of the town of Drogheda.

11796. How far is that from here?—Eight stations miles. Occasionally tramps call on me, and I meet them in the most friendly manner. I say, "I am glad to see you; come in, and I will give you something to eat, and then give you some work." I take them out into the field, and I say, "I will pay you by results"; and in about an hour's time I find they have gone and left the tools.

11797. That is a confiding thing?—They would be too heavy for them to take. And I have two beds in the loft, if they come late.

11798. Do you find many who put in a day's work?—They never do more than an hour's work.

11799. You kill them with kindness?—It has always succeeded with me. I would suggest that in each police station the police should keep a book, and any bona fide workman or woman calling on the police, the police should give them a pass to wherever they wish to go, and, passing a workhouse, they should be taken in and kindly treated; and any person going from one place to another without a pass I would bring them up before the magistrates.

11800. Your idea is rather good about putting them

3 G 2

Ans. 12, 1904.

Mr. Samuel
Parks.

to work. Then every relieving officer should have a small piece of ground to employ tramps on?—Unless he had ground, how could he test them in the line of work? I test them to perfection, and it has a grand effect on them.

11801. You have been trying that for a long time?—I have tried it thirty years, and it has a grand effect; and I send no tramp in here except under a doctor's certificate.

11802. What they come to you for is an order of admission?—I say I am glad to see them—"I have plenty of work for you"—and I give them a meal's meat first and give them a tool in their hand, and after a while they look all round them and take the nearest way out.

11803. Mr. MURPHY.—Could you not get your colleagues to adopt the same method?—He lives in the town here, and has no ground.

11804. Could he not take them up to the workhouse and test them?—He would not have time to do so.

11805. Could not the master do it?—The master has his hands full with thirty or forty tramps in the morning. The Guardians could never deal with them the way the police could. In the case of a person bona fide looking for work, and going from one place to another, I would be kind and good to that person and assist him. Dr. BRIGGS.—How many of that class do you test?

11806. CHAIRMAN.—There are a large number of persons who have to change about?—There is no doubt there are honest persons among the tramps, but they come into town here; so many of them don't come to me.

11807. Do you see many passing through Downside who are honest, well-intentioned workmen?—They all look well side to work.

11808. Do you see many tradesmen or bona fide labourers who are anxious for work?—They would ask you for work, but when you test them they won't work. In my opinion there are a few, but not very many. A fortnight ago I met a man on the road. He asked me could he get any work; that he had been working on the railway, and the work was slack, and he wanted to go to work at a new railway in Armagh. He stayed with me for a fortnight sinking weeds. He was a first-class man, and he said, "Now the new year is I will go to the railway work. He had about 2s. a day, and I gave him a free bed."

Mr. J. C. MAGINNIS, Tanderagee, examined.

Mr. J. C.
Maginnis.

11809. CHAIRMAN.—You were examined in Armagh, and your view was that the Co. Armagh portion of this Union should go to the Armagh Union. That is very strongly held by the residents?—Yes; and also that we should have divisional rating or dispensary rating.

11810. For what purpose?—Outdoor relief and the sick.

11811. You would not approve of putting the expense of the sick on a larger area than it is?—I quite agree with having a central workhouse for the whole county, where the number would not exceed 300 to 400, and give outdoor relief to those who should get it, and board out the children. If outdoor relief is given on a division that division is accountable for that, and the division will soon bring these particular Guardians to book. Our old rate for the five divisions for the three and a half years previous to the passing of the Act was 7½d.; since we became a union-at-large charge it is 10-4-6d. If we belonged to the union of Armagh our division would have saved £200 a year. If we had divisional charges we would have saved £400 a year. We are supposed to get a grant of £340, and yet we get none of the grant for our division, because we have to pay 550 odd to make up the deficiency. The old rate was 7½d.; the half of that was given back on the rural portions by the landlord, so the agricultural portion was paying 3½d. Now they are paying 7d., and they are supposed to get a portion of the agricultural grant; but the agricultural portion of our division has benefited nothing by the agricultural grant; we have to pay about 280 odd over and above our old amount.

11812. You are not benefited by the change in the law?—No; but I believe it will be a step in the right direction to have dispensary or divisional rating for outdoor relief. I don't think it will make much difference about those who are inside. I agree in having a central place for the infirm. If we have an accident at Tanderagee, that case can be brought to Armagh; and yet it is out of the way to bring a pauper, who can be brought by train or conveyance. And, also, the greater part of our division is nearer Armagh than Banbridge.

11813. How far are the borders of Armagh near Scarva from Armagh city?—Twelve miles, probably.

11814. Dr. BRIGGS.—Is that the most remote part that you wish added on?—Yes.

11815. CHAIRMAN.—What is the distance between Banbridge and the most remote part of the Co. Armagh portion of the union?—Probably about the same thing. If you take the central part of our division, as the crow flies, it is only about a couple of miles distance. The greater weight of the population is on the Armagh side.

11816. Mr. MURPHY.—How are the railway facilities?—Any part of the outlying district near Scarva can be either brought to Scarva station or by Portadown—two ways. I certainly think there should be restrictions on the tramps. The idea of getting a relief ticket from the sergeant of police and having a registration of the person he is giving it to would be a check on them.

11817. Mr. Wallace.—You say you have been paying £200 a year more monthly?—Our rate was 7½d. before the passing of the Act, and since the passing of the Act it is about 10d.

11818. Do you attribute that to your connection with the Banbridge Union or to the working of the Local Government Act?—I attribute it to both.

11819. In your calculation do you take into account the fact that you had an epidemic that cost the union of Banbridge £1,200?—I have taken into account that that epidemic made no difference in that year's rating.

11820. Do you know how much in the £ it would mean over the whole valuation?—I cannot say.

11821. I believe it would be about 2½d. in the £. If you had been as you were before how much would come off the Tanderagee district?—I have just been informed that is provided for under the safety valve in the Act of 1876. We would have saved fully £400 a year for five years, and if we had paid for this epidemic we would have had £200 to the good.

11822. So if you had been away from the Banbridge people you would have saved £400 a year?—Yes; I should say the epidemic was an accident.

Mr. MURPHY.—Anyhow you would wish your portion to be taken to Armagh, and the Banbridge people wish to give you up, so there is no question at issue between you.

Dr. TAYLOR examined.

Dr. Taylor.

I wish to tender any evidence that may be useful to you with regard to the relationship between the Tanderagee Dispensary District from a medical point of view.

11823. CHAIRMAN.—Is your district altogether in the Co. Armagh?—All together.

11824. Are you the doctor for the whole of the Armagh portion of the Banbridge Union?—Yes.

11825. You have no public appointment in the Co. Armagh—no other dispensary district?—No; here is a map (produced) which shows you the density of the population and the relative distances.

11826. Would your view be in favour of the transfer?—Yes.

11827. You agree with the Guardians and your own District Council that the transfer of the Tanderagee Rural District would be beneficial?—It would, undoubtedly. All the urgent cases that I have of accidents and had surgical cases are treated, with the exception of the very poorest, by Dr. Palmer. I have often five or six patients in the county infirmary; and the people prefer going there.

11828. And patients that would not be cases for the

Jan. 12, 1904.

Dr. Taylor.

infirmary—do you think there would be any considerable hardship to the sick in sending them to Armagh rather than to Banbridge?—It means the same thing. With a proper ambulance they could be as easily removed to one as to the other.

11829. Is it immaterial to a person whether he is carried five or six miles further when once he is in the ambulance?—Yes.

11830. Dr. Brogan.—Provided the ambulance is good?—Yes.

11831. A four-wheeler?—They have got one here now. I am rather sorry to leave Banbridge, for I had a great deal of trouble to get it.

11832. Is there much consumption in your district?—A great deal. I had a very small death-rate last year—twenty deaths; but there were seven of those from tubercular disease. I think it would be the greatest boon to people if we had a sanatorium that all cases could go to who could not afford to go to one themselves.

11833. Have you been medical officer of the district long?—Twenty-five years.

11834. Do you notice any increase in the death-rate of consumption?—For a time there was a lull; but within the last two or three years there has been, I think, an increased proportion. For about five or six years we had a great lull.

11835. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose you are aware that a great many operations in the county infirmary are tubercular surgery?—I send them a great many tubercular cases and cases of bone disease.

11836. Dr. Brogan.—Do you isolate your cases of pulmonary tuberculosis?—As far as possible.

11837. CHAIRMAN.—Is it possible?—It is not possible in the country. For the last twenty years I have been trying to enforce on them the necessity for the destruction of spits. We are now in the way of improving their dwellings; and I think perhaps that has a great deal to do with it.

11838. Dr. Brogan.—Was the typhoid epidemic in your district?—Yes.

11839. Did you find out the cause?—Water; the accidental erosion of a pipe.

11840. CHAIRMAN.—Have you not some cases in hospital at present from that district?—Yes; very remarkable cases indeed. We had, in 1890 and 1881, an epidemic of 226 cases of typhoid fever in the village of Tandragee connected with the water supply of the mills. Two or three of these cases occurred in a house from which patients who were sick were removed. A second family lived in this house, and in 1887 typhoid fever again occurred.

11841. Dr. Brogan.—Did the first family remain in the house all the time?—No; they had left for some time; and then the next family came in, and they took it at that time. I told them not to use this water, which I considered was dangerous.

11842. CHAIRMAN.—Was it pipe or well water?—Well water. It is in the middle of the demense, and the ground is saturated with animal matter, which would be likely to feed the bacilli. This family came to the house about two or three months ago, and although their neighbours told them at the time that I had forbidden their predecessors to use the water they used it, with the result that these two cases have so far occurred, and probably more.

11843. Dr. Brogan.—Would it not be a good thing to get the sanitary authority to close up the well?—It is not a public well. It is not exactly a well; it is a running stream that there is a hole in.

11844. CHAIRMAN.—It is a place for watering cattle?—I think not; it is in the demense.

11845. Are there any cattle in the demense?—I don't think they can get there. It has not been used since 1887. It is in a larch wood; a cover for pheasants.

11846. Mr. MURKIN.—Could you not cover it in?—You would have to cover the whole stream.

11847. Dr. Brogan.—Is there any other good water supply convenient?—There is; the neighbours would have given them water. But this man said it looked beautiful water, and he had often drunk worse. The epidemic at Lourdes was a matter no person could have foreseen. A few years before it occurred this water was analysed and gave an exceptionally good analysis. It was an iron pipe conveying the water. It passed near a sewer and happened to be eroded; it passed through a stableyard of Mr. Synnott's. About eight months previously the coachman and one of the stable helpers took typhoid fever, and I believe that supplied the bacilli. It was very interesting medically; the outbreak covered an area of twenty-five square miles.

Mr. Wallcut.—The Banbridge Board of Guardians have considered the County Council report, and have substantially adopted it, with such variations as you have heard in the evidence to-day.

The Sitting was adjourned.

Jan. 14, 1904. TWENTY-FOURTH PUBLIC SITTING.—THURSDAY, JANUARY 14TH, 1904.

At the Courthouse, Newry.

Present:—Mr. MEUKS (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. E. COWY BIGGER.

Mr. Alexander Gortlan appeared for the Newry Board of Guardians.

Mr. F. B. Wallace appeared for the Banbridge Board of Guardians.

Mr. Gortlan.—I appear for the Guardians of the Newry Union. I am their solicitor, and I need not tell you that we will facilitate in every way your duties. Mr. Small attended at Armagh and gave you fully his views, and if you wish him to add anything to the statement he then made, he will be glad to do so. The Chairman of the Board of Guardians here is Rathfriland, and Mr. Toman is a very busy man and not able to attend. We have, however, the Vice-Chairman here, and we have the clerk of the union, and Dr. Martin.

Mr. JOHN McEVoy examined.

11848. Mr. Gortlan.—You are the Vice-Chairman of the Newry Guardians?—Yes.

11849. And I think you are also Chairman of the Rural District Council, Newry No. 1?—Yes, the Co. Down part.

11850. How long have you been connected with the Guardians?—Six years.

11851. And you have been a Guardian during all that time?—Yes.

11852. Have you any suggestions to make to the Commissioners for improving the system?—I would be greatly in favour of an amalgamation of unions. I think at the present time there is ample accommodation in any one union to accommodate the inmates almost of three unions, as far as I can see—two anyhow. Besides I think it would be a great advantage to the ratepayers.

11853. You think it would be more economical?—I think it would.

11854. Killeel is a very small union?—Yes.

11855. It is bounded between the sea and the mountains?—Yes.

11856. And, as we know, the number of inmates is very small. In your opinion, would it be desirable to amalgamate Killeel with Newry?—I believe so; amalgamate it with Newry and Downpatrick.

11857. That is going south from this. The Union of Newry extends also near Banbridge?—Yes, within five miles of it.

11858. In your opinion would it be desirable to extend the Newry Union by taking off a portion from Banbridge?—My opinion is that Banbridge Union should be dissolved also. It is a very long narrow union; scattered very much. I think portion of it might go into Armagh and another portion goes close to Downpatrick. I think it would be very convenient indeed to be put into Downpatrick, and the other portion might go into Lough, and by doing so it would be to the advantage of the ratepayers, and I think there would be no inconvenience to the Guardians to attend, nor to the sick poor. All these divisions are within five miles of Newry.

11859. Your idea, of course, would be to make Newry the centre for all that district?—Yes, extending into the Co. Armagh; that was inquired into at Armagh.

CHAIRMAN.—We had all that before.

11860. Mr. Gortlan.—Have you any other suggestions to make for improvements?—There are a good deal of little things that I might suggest. Insane people, I believe, should be removed to the asylum, but there are some of these people that, for my own part, I should not like to have removed from their native unions—that is the imbeciles, or harmless lunatics.

11861. Assuming Killeel is dissolved as a workhouse, would it, in your opinion, be possible to utilize it in any way?—Sanatoria are greatly looked after at the present time, and it might be utilized for one.

11862. How would you propose to deal with Banbridge Workhouse?—I should think that Banbridge, or a portion of it, might be utilized for a district hospital.

11863. The remaining portion could be used as an auxiliary asylum?—Some other useful business. I cannot say what it should be used for.

11854. What do you say about boarding-out the inmates in workhouses?—I don't think I would go for that.

11855. CHAIRMAN.—Do you mean children or grown up?—I would board out children, or I would send them out to schools, that is children under fourteen years of age; but able-bodied inmates or old people I would not board out at all. I think you could not get them boarded out.

11856. Mr. Gortlan.—Is it not the fact that the Newry Board were the first in the North of Ireland to send out children?—I don't know whether they were the first in the North of Ireland.

11857. At any rate they were early in the field. What about the imbeciles?—If they were insane people I would send them on to the asylum, but there are a class of imbeciles that I think it would be a hardship to move them away. They are quite satisfied when they get their bit of food, and it would be a hardship to take them away from their people.

11858. Then, in your opinion, they should be kept in the same place as the other paupers. You have a great deal of trouble with tenants?—We have; but the very fact of dissolving the Banbridge Union would be a means of doing away with them, for it is on the boundary between Newry and Rathfriland, and it is an easy lodging-house for them. It might help to dissipate them a little.

11859. Another matter is the desirability of pauper paying who are able to pay for the relief they get in the workhouse?—I think that is a very good system. Paupers become sick by accident or something else and are not fit to support themselves, but still they are able to pay a little, and when they are taken into the union, I think the Guardians should have power to charge these paupers even more than the average.

11860. That is the average cost of maintenance?—Yes.

11861. There is no hospital for infectious diseases in this union except the workhouse?—No.

11862. There has been a great difficulty experienced in recovering payment even from men who were well-do for their maintenance in the hospital?—Yes; we had some bother with that before, and there are some of these people well able to pay.

11863. And I believe they would not pay?—Yes; they found out that the Guardians could only charge the average maintenance.

11864. You would be in favour of their being allowed to charge these people according to their circumstances?—Yes.

11865. Such a sum as would cover the cost of maintenance, and also a fair proportion of the doctor's salary and other officials?—Quite so; that would be my idea. There is just one thing in connection with the attendance of Guardians that I think might be amended. Some Guardians don't give a good attendance. A six months' limit is too long. Two attendances in the year would qualify a man to sit.

11866. CHAIRMAN.—But his constituents would call him to account for that perhaps?—But it takes three year to bring that about. I think that might be absorbed to some degree. It is scarcely fair to the constituents or to the Board, more especially in the case of one-door relief.

11877. Do you find there are too many Guardians?—I suppose a great deal less would do the business just as well, but representation is a good thing.

11878. You don't think business is impeded by the number?—I would not say so. I think the Guardians might have more discretionary power in the matter of taking children from certain parents. We have often cases of parents who neglect their children, and I think in a great many cases the Guardians should have power to take away the children.

11879. You would increase the Guardians' power to take away children from parents who cannot bring them up properly?—Yes; after proper discussion and inquiry.

11880. We had that explained at Banbridge yesterday, and one Guardian suggested that that might work badly. The facts might not be fully before the Guardians when they passed their resolution, and a suggestion was made that it would be a good thing if the parent had power to appeal to the Justices at Petty Sessions to have a review of the case—would you be in favour of that?—I would be in favour of the review of any case; very often facts are not brought out properly in the first instance. I have many times thought it a great hardship to let children remain with some of these parents, particularly of the tramp class, for they are trained up to the same life their parents are leading.

11881. Have you any views about unions being confined to particular counties. Do you think the Armagh part of your union ought to be taken away from you, or do you think a union can just as well remain in different counties?—I think so. I never saw any difficulty in that business. I would rather not give an opinion.

11882. Mr. MURKIN.—Guardians elsewhere have complained of the unfairness of allowing other counties, having the richer portions of their territories, depriving the poorer portions of their help for Poor Law purposes. Do you think it would be well, where it could be done without hardship, for every county to be self-contained, that is to say, that the Poor Law administration of the county should be in the hands of the people of the county. Would you approve of that as a general system?—As a general system it might work better, but I never studied the business. I never thought of it.

Mr. Gordon.—As a matter of fact our workhouse is in the Co. Armagh, while the whole of the town is in the Co. Down.

CHAIRMAN.—The boundary is just between the workhouse and the town.

Mr. Gordon.—It is. This is a case in which it would be very hard for you to confine it to the county, because it could not be decided in which county it should be.

11883. Mr. MURKIN.—Your District Council deal four workhouses are required in the county?—Yes; that is the prevailing opinion with all the people.

11884. The County Council think three would be enough; could you not go a little farther in that respect. The number of inmates in the county is 400; do you not think that one institution would be sufficient to accommodate 400?—I would not like to give any opinion on that.

11885. What we want to get at is a real reform, not a patch-up business. Don't you think one of your workhouses could accommodate 400 inmates?—I am sure it could accommodate them, but it would be very difficult for the Guardians and such like, and for the removal of the poor to it. I believe that would be the only drawback to it.

11886. As regards the management, it could be left to it. The Guardians might still continue to perform their duty as now. Suppose there was left in the institution where workhouses are now a hospital for the sick; and a system of boarding-out the children provided; the lunatics provided for in an asylum or military asylum; the mothers excluded, then you would have only one class, the infirm. If an institution for this class was provided in the county, where these old people could be better provided for, and have better attention, and classification at no more cost to the ratepayers, don't you think such a change would recommend itself to the ratepayers?—I believe it would help to cut down the rates.

11887. Not only cut down the rates but benefit the poor?—It would be a long stretch over the whole county for one institution.

11888. Is not Down well served with railways?—Very badly at this end.

11889. You have good roads?—Yes; but you have not good railway accommodation from here to Downpatrick.

11890. The people in Banbridge say they have excellent railway facilities there?—So they have, a great deal better.

11891. Do you think the asylum at Downpatrick will accommodate all the idiots and weak-minded in the county?—I don't know whether it will or not, but it is the place for lunatics.

11892. You think the present system of rating satisfactory?—I would be in favour of union rating; a great many are in favour of it. The electoral division I represent myself, if we had district rating, it would be a great deal better for them, for they have very little poor from it; however, I think it is the fairest way to have union rating. The poor belong to the people all over.

11893. And I suppose very often they have to come from the country into town?—Very often they do.

11894. Mr. Wallace.—Would it be in order for me to ask a question. I appear for the Banbridge Board of Guardians. The Newry Board of Guardians have already, in their opinion, practically dissolved the Banbridge Board of Guardians. They have wiped us out altogether, but before they were finally dissolved the Guardians thought it better to put in an appearance. You are fairly well acquainted with the Banbridge Union district?—I know the district as far as Banbridge, and some places beyond.

11895. And you have just said there is very bad railway accommodation into Newry?—From Banbridge? To Downpatrick, I said.

11896. Are you anxious when you say that Newry would be a very convenient and central place for a workhouse for the entire Banbridge district?—Not for the entire.

11897. What part of it?—Any portion of it lying at this side of the town of Banbridge.

11898. You would not go further than Banbridge?—I would not lay off the districts myself; but it is my own opinion.

11899. Do you know how much is that part that you would like to take in?—I think there are three divisions, known as Scarva, Glashmore, and Anneslee.

11900. Most part of Scarva is in the Co. Armagh?—Yes.

11901. And you think Newry would be suitable for that?—Yes.

11902. How would you deal with the portion in Drogheda?—I would not think of taking that; I would send it to Lisburn.

11903. That is, you would send people from Drogheda, in the Co. Down, about ten miles into the Co. Antrim, to Lisburn?—It would not be too far; we have divisions in Newry lying out ten statute miles.

11904. CHAIRMAN.—How far is Drogheda from Banbridge?

Mr. Wallace.—Six Irish miles.

CHAIRMAN.—How far is Drogheda from Lisburn?

Mr. Wallace.—Ten statute miles.

Witness.—There would be only about a mile of difference.

11906. Mr. Wallace.—Do you know the Banbridge Union extends to Ballynure and Leitrim. Would Newry serve that?—I think Anneslee would not be too far to come to Newry.

11907. How would you get a person from Ballynure to Newry?—Send the ambulances for them. It is not more than seven or eight Irish miles from here.

11908. Don't you know that from Ballynure and Keshbridge they can get into Banbridge in a few minutes by rail?—I do.

11909. And you think that district could be better served by coming in by ambulance to Newry?—Some of them might be nearer to Banbridge; but this point is the saving to the ratepayers.

Jan 14, 1904.
Mr. John
McEvoy.

Dr. S. E. MARTIN examined.

Jan. 14, 1904.

Dr. S. E.
Martin.

11909. Mr. Garfield.—You are Medical Officer for the workhouse?—Yes; upwards of twenty-six years.

11910. You, of course, know the union intimately?—I know the workhouse.

11911. And the people who come there?—Yes.

11912. In your opinion could some of these unions be dissolved? Have you accommodation in the workhouse here for far more inmates than there are at present in it?—I don't think there is anything like the accommodation there is supposed to be. In the last fact newspaper that I was reading last night it was said that the accommodation at present in Newry was for 985, and the number of inmates was 285. I think if the master had to provide accommodation for the difference between 285 and 985 he would have great difficulty, at present, in the Newry Workhouse.

11913. CHAIRMAN.—What do you think you would have room for—what is your fair space?—I don't suppose we would have accommodation for more than 500.

11914. Mr. Garfield.—Supposing the workhouse was to be relieved of a great number of these inmates and tramps and children, with accommodation for 500 don't you think you could suit the requirements of a much larger district than you serve at present?—Certainly.

11915. The workhouse was burned down some time ago and was rebuilt?—Yes; but that would not increase the accommodation.

11916. No; but was not the workhouse built on the most modern system?—It was on a modern system.

11917. It has been suggested here that Kilkeld and Banbridge would be the two unions that should be amalgamated or dissolved. What do you think about that?—My own opinion is that they could be dissolved.

11918. Would you suggest that Kilkeld should be divided between Newry and Downpatrick, and Banbridge between Newry and Lisburn?—You should divide the district so that they would take the most convenient unions on either side.

11919. Supposing that was done, how would you suggest Kilkeld should be utilised?—It would all depend on what is going to be done with the lunatics. If they are not to be taken to the asylum of the county then I think Kilkeld would make a very good auxiliary lunatic asylum; if they are all to be transferred to the asylum Kilkeld would make a good sanatorium.

11920. What would you do with my friend Mr. Wallace's clients—would you suggest Banbridge should be made a district hospital?—They certainly should have a hospital there for urgent cases.

11921. What do you say about this question of boarding out inmates?—I think the children should be removed from the workhouse altogether—either send them to Banbridge or board them out.

11922. CHAIRMAN.—From your experience of the treatment of children in workhouses, would you rather have them in an institution or boarded out in the country?—I think if there was a central institution I would as soon have them there as boarded out.

11923. Why?—They would be under better management. You run a risk in sending a child out, in my opinion; you don't know everything connected with the person to whom you are sending the child.

11924. Does not every child run a risk of having a negligent or careless parent?—If it was in a central institution, with people to watch over it, I think they would be better off than separately boarded through the country.

11925. Do you speak of their physical health or fitness for after-life occupation?—Both.

11926. Do you think the health of children in an institution is as good as the health of children outside?—No, certainly not; I believe the open air of the country would be better for a child as regards health.

11927. As regards fitness for work in after-life, do you think an institution-reared child is as useful and handy and intelligent as a child reared up in a family and taught to take its little share of work from youth?—Not as you put it; I think it would be better in a family.

11928. Then why do you prefer an institution to home life?—Because I think you would have a difficulty in getting a sufficient number of people to take these children.

11929. If you could get a sufficient number of people?—That I would be in favour of it.

11930. Mr. Garfield.—I believe there is no hospital in Newry for infectious diseases other than the workhouse?—No.

11931. The result is, that when there is any outbreak of small-pox or any other disease they are all sent into you?—They are; at least those who go to hospital are.

11932. Don't you think it is a hardship on the present system that the parties that are able to pay cannot be made, under these circumstances? Have you not had cases, particularly of small-pox—sent to do merchants in the town who sent their families there, and afterwards refused to pay what the Guardians thought would represent the full amount of the treatment? Do you not think there ought to be some charge made in the law as regards that?—I do.

11933. To enable Guardians to charge in their discretion what they think proper?—Yes.

11934. Mr. Garfield.—You remember the case too where the county court judge threw out a doubt whether the Guardians were justified in receiving people of means?

CHAIRMAN.—Mr. Small mentioned this case.

Witness.—I heard about that case. It was a question whether they should be admitted to the hospital or not.

11935. Mr. Garfield.—Would you suggest the house should be sent to an asylum?—I think it would be much better to send them to an asylum than to an asylum.

11936. Mr. MURKIN.—Why?—I think they would be better treated. The asylum is the place for lunatics.

11937. The standard of treatment would be pretty much as in an asylum?—That would alter my opinion. But then the auxiliary asylum would be practically an asylum.

11938. An auxiliary asylum, with a large amount of land, on which these men could be employed, the cost not very much larger than in the workhouse—don't you think that would be very much better?—I think two asylums would be better than one in the county.

11939. You think it is not well to have a large number of people congregated together?—I do.

11941. As there are only 350 to 400 of the aged and infirm in the Co. Down, don't you think an institution for the county would be sufficient to accommodate that number—see any Newry could accommodate 600?—That is of the sick and infirm.

11942. Not the sick; the aged and infirm—the chronic old cases?—Yes, I think one institution would be sufficient for these; there would be no danger in transferring them. Of course it would be a distance; but we have the difficulty, at present, in the Newry Union. Away beyond Rathfriland they have to be brought here.

11943. And you foresee no hardship in such a reform as that?—No except one of sentiment: of people being taken away from their own locality.

11944. Don't you think there would be the practical advantage that these people could be put in a house to themselves where they could be better treated, and better looked after?—I do; but I think there would be a difficulty in getting them to come into a place like that.

11945. If they are absolutely destitute they would be bound to go. What is your view of out-door relief?—I have never been very favourably disposed to it; I have not gone into it very deeply. I don't think the advantages are altogether equal in the expenditure.

11946. There are a large number of children in the Newry Workhouse. Thirty-six on the list below, but it was made a year ago?—A good many of these would be infants.

11947. You would be in favour of boarding out all children you could get proper homes for?—I would be in favour of consolidating—getting the different classes into different places, where they could be better taken care of. The Newry Workhouse is a jumble of everything—a sanatorium, a hospital, a National school, children's nursery, and lunatic asylum. But one of those can be brought up to the proper pitch because it is all a jumble.

11948. Under the change outlined, don't you think you could get rid of that?—Yes.

11049. Mr. Gordon.—Have you not a number of children in the unions that are not of the class the Commissioner speaks of; people that go up there with their children. Take a case we had here yesterday—a woman named McKeivitt and his wife.

11050. How many children have they?—Three or four. But I am sorry to say I think those children would be better in an institution, taken away from their parents.

11051. You would not take children from their parents because they are temporarily out of work?—I think it is a very great hardship that if a woman is brought up for being drunk and disorderly, and she happens to have a child of two years old in her arms, she is sentenced to a month in jail, the police take her to jail and send the child to the workhouse, I think that women has the best of the play; she is kept comfortably for a month; she has no trouble and bother, and the child has the worst of it.

11052. And the community will get the child later on badly reared as a criminal?—Yes.

11053. You would rather take away the child from that woman?—Yes.

11054. Do you know that large additions are being made to Downpatrick Asylum?—Yes; I filled up two acres for troublesome cases a short time ago to Armagh, and I got word that morning that they cannot receive them. Our workhouse is in the Co. Armagh.

11055. Dr. BURGESS.—Does that prevent you sending cases from your workhouse to Downpatrick?—If they become insane in the workhouse we must send them to Armagh; but if they come in insane from the Co.

Down we send them to Downpatrick, and they have never yet refused to take them.

11056. Mr. Gordon.—I believe you sent five the other day to Downpatrick?—A few weeks ago.

11057. Dr. BURGESS.—Have they taken in your male lunatics?—I think there were two males and three females sent within the last three months.

Mr. Bell.—We have thirty females and eighteen males, at present.

11058. Mr. McNEAGHAN.—Why have you so many of them?—We cannot get rid of them. They are Armagh cases.

11059. That shows the necessity of additional asylum accommodation?—Very strongly, I think.

11060. Dr. BURGESS.—Do you think a workhouse is a proper place in which to treat consumption?—I do not. I think there should be a general sanatorium for a certain district.

11061. Do you think consumptive patients would go a certain distance—at least cases that would be benefited by treatment—the early cases?—I do. And I think they would be very likely to remain to receive the benefit of the treatment, because in the workhouse, if any little thing annoys them they give notice and away they go, and they come back after a time worse than ever.

11062. Is there much consumption in the district?—There are four cases in the workhouse at present.

11063. CHAIRMAN.—Do you know the death-rate from consumption in the neighbourhood?—I do.

Mr. Bell.—I am the Superintendent Registrar. The death-rate for consumption is very high in this union, particularly in Rathfriland district, where the people carry on stitching and linen work.

Mr. JOHN KERO FORSTER examined.

Mr. John Kero Forster.

11064. Mr. Gordon.—You are a Guardian, and some time a district clerk for the Banbridge Union?—Yes.

11065. How long have you been connected with the Board?—Five or six years.

11066. You have heard the evidence of the Vice-Chairman, that in his opinion Banbridge and Killead might be dissolved?—I feel very strong about Killead, at any rate; but I am not quite so sure about Banbridge.

11067. You think Killead should be dissolved?—Oh, yes; it seems quite sensible.

11068. And turned into a sanatorium?—Yes; it is such a nice healthy place; it would be a good place for that.

11069. What do you say about Banbridge—don't you think that if they are going to do away with any workhouses they might fairly enough do away with Banbridge?—I believe strongly in having a union of unions.

11070. Mr. McNEAGHAN.—What do you mean by a union of unions?—That I believe in having less unionism.

11071. How far would you go in lessening them? Do you think one workhouse for Down, embracing the six and children, would be sufficient?—How would the Guardians get away down there to look after the business.

11072. They could administer affairs at home; they would have a hospital still?—One great difficulty we have is to get our old women and men to come into the workhouse at all; they would stay out in starvation. It is most difficult to get them into the union at home, and it would be more difficult to get them to Downpatrick.

11073. Once it is known that the new house is no larger a workhouse but a home, they will go readily?—We don't like to see them go that far.

11074. At present the name workhouse is a deterrent?—I have known cases where people were as helpless and destitute as they could be, but we had no power to take them into the workhouse and keep them there. I wish we had that power.

11075. You say there ought to be four workhouses in the county. Is it not better to have still fewer if it can be done without injury to the sick and other classes, and with advantage to the ratepayers?—I believe there would be a great difficulty to get the people to go there. The old people about here are very strong-minded and like to stay at home.

11076. If the infirm and other healthy classes were taken out of this workhouse, the hospital could be put into better condition for the sick?—As far as my own opinion goes, I believe you are quite right in that, but the people won't like it.

11077. People like anything that is good after they have tasted it?—It is seldom the taste comes back.

11078. Mr. Gordon.—Newry at present is the centre of a district which includes a good deal of Armagh and Down?—We are strongly of opinion, no matter what other places are dissolved, that Newry should be left. We have spent a good deal of money on it, and made it very comfortable for the sick.

11079. I suppose you agree that it is not right that people of means can go into the hospital and be treated for infectious diseases and get off scot free?—It is a very bad system; they should pay according to their means.

11080. Have you any remedy to suggest about tramps?—They are a great nuisance to our union, and in fact everywhere. It is a great pity to see such a lot of young women and children travelling the road and coming into the workhouse for a night and going on again. After they are known to be Seditious tramps, I think they should be put into some reformatory and made self-supporting. It would be far better than to put him in jail. A couple of months in jail does not do him much good at all. If he were a couple of years in a reformatory where he could learn a trade he would be useful afterwards.

11081. CHAIRMAN.—You would make vagrancy an offence and put him in jail to try and cure him?—It would be going to the root of the matter, because it is idleness and drink is the cause of the whole thing. Then talking about children being educated and taken from them—that would be a very good thing too. If the thing was taken up in five years you would not have a tramp at all. They would not start to be tramps. It would learn the old ones some industry, and the new ones would not begin.

11083. Their boarding-houses would be far apart?—They would be about the farmers' places and beg. Every place is their home.

11084. CHAIRMAN.—You think if there was no workhouse at all you would have that class?—You would; the lessening of the workhouses won't make a bit of odds to tramps. Of course they are rather comfortable for them.

11085. About the boarding-out of children?—I think it is a great job to get a child out of the workhouse and

Jan. 14, 1904.

Mr. John Kidd Poree.

learn industry, and be brought up with other children in a country life. It is a better thing for them always. They become good servants and step in the country.

11586. You know children that have turned out well?—Yes, and I have known two or three brought up in the workhouse and they are not worth anything; they are very stern and vicious. Children brought up in a country place are far better.

11587. Do you know whether the people with whom these children are boarded-out get to like them?—They are so fond of them as of their own children, and I have known these children give wages and money to their adoptive parents; but the Local Government Board is very particular where they are put, and sometimes we cannot get things up to a proper standard.

Mr. WILLIAM BRADY examined.

Mr. William
Bradford.

11592. Mr. Gardiner.—I believe you are the Deputy Vice-Chairman, and you are one of the oldest Guardians at the Board?—I believe I am.

11593. How many years have you been connected with the Board?—Some twenty or more.

11594. You are on the borders of the Banbridge Union?—Yes.

11595. Don't you think it would be possible to get rid of Killybeg?—I think it would.

11596. And you think you would have plenty of accommodation in the Newry Union for any you would get from that district?—Yes.

11597. I suppose you would divide it between Downpatrick and Newry?—I would leave that to the Commission.

11598. What do you think about Banbridge?—I think there is a part of it we could accommodate very well—from Scarva to Rathfriland, the direct road; the coach road.

11599. What do you suggest should be done then with Banbridge?—You would put the rest of it to Lisburn?—I would not give any opinion about that. I am only speaking about the part I am conversant with.

11600. And you think you could stand to all the wants of the poor in that increased area?—I believe I could.

11601. Have you formed any opinion about these children?—I believe the children would be much better if they were in charge of a number of competent persons.

11602. CHAIRMAN.—Boarded-out?—Boarded-out.

11603. Mr. Gardiner.—Would your idea be to have them boarded-out or in an institution for children alone?—I would prefer an institution for children alone. Farmers who are in a position to treat them fairly well, and give them a good education, and bring them up properly, refuse to accept them or take them into their charge at all.

11604. And therefore they would be better in a home or institution for children alone?—Yes.

11605. CHAIRMAN.—Have you had any experience of children that were reared in a workhouse?—Yes, Mr. President, I agree with what Mr. Poree said, that they come out lazy and useless, and children that are brought up in the country districts always turn out, with a few exceptions, useful in after life, useful to themselves and the parties who employ them.

11606. Then did I understand you correctly in thinking that you said that you would prefer an institution for children to boarding-out?—Yes.

11607. I don't exactly understand why you should prefer it when you think the children who are reared in the country are better citizens than the children reared in the workhouse?—Yes, Mr. President, they are better for the farmers, but they will not be better for themselves in future life. They will be better to be all in the one institution, reared together.

11608. How would you propose to push on these children in life if they are reared in an institution. What would you make of them?—Put them to trades suitable for their requirements in life.

11609. Would you put them in a better position in life than the children of labourers or small farmers?—According to their intellectual capacities.

11610. You would?—Yes.

11611. Do you think that is a proper use of public funds?—I think it would be useful both to the funds of the public and also to the children that are brought up. I don't think the public funds would be injured by the system of having them brought up together in an institution.

11598. It only wants cleanliness and proper food, and ordinary kind treatment?—They would like a cow wherever a child is to be.

11599. You would not like to rear a child on milk. But many a one who has not a cow could get milk about the place.

11600. But there is no rule about the cow as long as a child gets milk?—I thought there was; it is a really good system.

11601. Mr. Gardiner.—You mean, as far as possible, the Guardians always like to send out children when there is a cow, where they would get plenty of milk. I thought they would not be allowed to be sent when there was not a cow.

11602. And getting children of the lowest class in the community put into better positions than the lowest independent class outside?—I did not say that.

11603. Is not that what it would come to?—Perhaps it may. These children will be under the charge of the Guardians or whatever party they are under. The other children that you refer to, I presume, are children brought up under their parents. Well, let their parents bring them up as they please, according to their means, but when children are left under the care of a responsible party such as the Guardians, I think the Guardians have a right to look after them, but I would not go so far as to dictate to the parents of children fit to bring up their own children how they are to bring them up.

11604. Don't you think these parents would feel rather sore if they found the workhouse children being put into a better position than their own children?—They may feel sore, but would it not be a stimulus to make them bring up their children as well as the Guardians do?

11605. Their means might not enable them to do so?—Some parents don't bring up their children according to their means.

11606. Mr. Gardiner.—I suppose you agree that a person who goes into a hospital should pay the full cost for his maintenance if he is taken in at all?

CHAIRMAN.—At the discretion of the Guardians of the Hospital think they can pay up to the full cost?—We adopted a sliding scale for those parties according to their means, and when they availed themselves of the opportunity, one or two refused to pay, and the solicitor of the Board—I don't say that he objected to prosecute them—

11607. Mr. Gardiner.—He was not successful?—But you have to get your fee whether you succeed or not.

11608. What would you suggest about the tramp?—My opinion is that they should not be permitted to get a ticket going up to the relieving officer at 10 o'clock at night, and then disobeying the commands of the officer in the morning. They should not be given a ticket after 7 or 8 o'clock in the evening, and they should be detained in the house until they work compensation for what they have used in the house; and further than that, there was a resolution on the books that if they returned inside three months they were bound to be prosecuted. I don't believe that has been carried out, but I think they should be prosecuted for vagrancy. I meet them occasionally on the road here, and one of the reasons I would say why Banbridge and Dundalk should be done away with is that the tramps would have a little further to travel.

11609. Mr. Weller.—Do you want to bring Dundalk into Newry too, as well as Banbridge?—I don't want to bring them into it. I only want a part of you's.

11610. If Banbridge Workhouse was done away with, how would Banbridge and Gifford be served?—That is your own look out.

11611. All you want is for Newry to get a whack of it?—As a matter of fact we are not very particular.

11612. Mr. MURPHY.—Supposing we had a clean slate for the Co. Down and had no workhouse at all, what would you do in regard to providing it with Poor Law accommodation, forgetting local interests. There are only 400 at the most of the class known as aged and infirm. Supposing provision was made for all the other classes, don't you think one house in the county would suffice?—I think one house would be quite sufficient to contain them all; but then the difficulty would be the attendance of the Guardians.

12023. Supposing the Guardians continued, as they do at present, to manage their own affairs and provide for the wants of the poor wherever placed, would you see any objection in a change such as that?—No, I would not; but the principal reason why I appeared before you is that I think there are too many Guardians at the present time. I believe half the Guardians would be quite competent to do the work of the entire Guardians. I believe further than that, there should be a limit made to the attendance of these Guardians, and I certainly feel very sure that Guardians come in here and take the chairmen and they don't attend only when there is a motion brought forward, and some gentlemen come up and say, "I am not satisfied with that; I give notice to rescind it." And then these Guardians that don't attend for weeks or perhaps months come in and swamp the Guardians who attend regularly.

12024. Mr. Gardin.—What would you suggest?—I would cut down the number of Guardians.

12025. And then if they attended themselves for a certain time, did not attend more than once a month, would you let them go?—I think the law says once in six months.

12026. Would you disqualify them for not attending once a month?—Yes.

12027. CHAIRMAN.—Even in the highest representative assembly I believe the attendance is not as good on some occasions as on others?—That is quite so.

Mr. JOHN FRANCIS SMALL, Solicitor, examined.

12028. Mr. Gardin.—You gave a statement already before the Commission in August?—Yes.

12029. Is there anything you would like to add to that?—I wish to say I think there is a misapprehension as to the attitude of the Newry Guardians. There appears to be an idea that the Guardians have set out on an imperial policy of annexation of neighbouring unions. They did not propose to dissolve any unions. They were asked certain questions and they answered them. I believe the Kilkeel people don't want their union to be dissolved, and we don't ask that it should be, but if it is dissolved without action on our part, then we say that certain portions should be attached to Newry and certain portions to Downpatrick. If Kilkeel is dissolved seven of the electoral divisions ought to be annexed to Newry and three to Downpatrick, Bryansford, and two other divisions; the three that lie close to Newcastle. The five divisions that form the barony of Mourne and the two Banbridge divisions could very conveniently come to Newry. As regards Banbridge, we never really took seriously into contemplation the dissolution of the Banbridge Union. It is a very large one and extends considerably east and west, on one side almost to Market-lili, Armagh, and on the other side nearly to Castlewellan. It must be twenty miles across. I don't say that Banbridge ought to be dissolved, but if it is dissolved, I don't think we want the entire of it to be its union; it would be very inconvenient to us.

12030. Banbridge itself is only ten Irish miles from us?—Yes; it is a very important centre, and has very good railway connection with points that Newry is not so much with.

12031. It is only on the supposition that it is to be dissolved?—On that supposition Banbridge and the divisions between might come to Newry, and the portion at Drumgoolan might be attached to Downpatrick and Donaghmore to Lurgan. I have heard the evidence of the Vice-Chairman and other members—with most respect I agree; with other persons I would not.

12032. CHAIRMAN.—With what portion do you disagree?—I do not agree with Mr. Bradford's statement about sending children to institutions. I think the boarding-out system is vastly superior. I don't think children brought up in institutions, even where the children are selected with the best possible intention, turn out as well as children brought up in homes. There is too much repression in some and in others too much evasion of discipline. I have been about four years a Guardian now, and I was a year a Guardian some years ago. The boarded-out children, with one exception have turned out remarkably well. The people, when they get possession of the children very young, get very fond of them and treat them as their own children.

12033. Mr. Bradford seemed to think that if sent into an institution they would be taught trades, perhaps even taught?—Yes; I prefer boarding-out.

12034. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you find any difficulty in getting persons to board them?—No; this union is very thickly populated. I think, perhaps, there should be a closer view kept on the sanitary arrangements.

Mr. WILLIAM BRADFORD further examined.

There was just one point I intended to refer to. When I became Guardian first it was divisional chargeability, and now it is union. My humble opinion is that we should revert to the former for all purposes, for when it was divisional chargeability every Guardian was anxious to look after his own division; but when it is union chargeability the Guardians take very little interest in it, especially those who have the greater number of out-door and in-door recipients, they are very anxious to get on every one they possibly can. Where the division is very poor they come forward and say, "This is a case that deserves out-door relief," but if it was a divisional charge these Guardians would say, "Oh, they can dispense with it for a short time."

Mr. William

Dr. ELEANORE BELL examined.

Jan. 14, 1896.

Dr. Eleanore Bell.

I was eight years assistant clerk.

12043. Mr. GORDON.—You are a daughter of the late clerk?—Yes.

12044. So you are very intimate with the affairs of the union here?—No; the girls that were children then.

12045. I think you have already given evidence before the Commission?—I did, in Belfast; but only about the Maternity.

12046. What would you suggest should be done about the old people in the workhouse?—It is not the old people in the workhouse I am interested in, but to keep them from coming in; and I think it would be better to extend out-door relief. A central building would be very nice for old people who had no friends; but as many of them have friends, and if the Guardians gave out-door relief, they might be kept among their friends and die there.

12047. Out-door relief at present can only be given to certain people?—If the old people had kept out until they were fifty and past work I think they should get out-door relief.

12048. CHAIRMAN.—You don't think a person at fifty is past work?—No; but some people are; some labourers at fifty I would say were sixty.

12049. Mr. GORDON.—What would you do with the children?—I would keep them out of the workhouse; but I would not have an institution at all. I know about institution-reared children. I would not put a child in an institution; I know girls reared in the best institutions—I come across them in service, and they don't know anything, and don't want to know anything. I know one who says, "I can only black grates," another can only scrub floors. I know a girl who said, at 5 o'clock, "If I was in the institution I would be playing now from 6 to 7."

Mr. W. R. BELL, Clerk, Newry Union, examined.

Mr. W. R. Bell.

12050. Mr. GORDON.—Supposing there was amalgamation, could you provide additional accommodation in the workhouse?—I am quite satisfied we could provide for Kilkeel and the inmates from the Banbridge portion of the union which would come to Newry. The Guardians of this union were the first Board of Guardians in the North of Ireland to board out children, and, so far as I know, only one child of about 300 ever returned to the workhouse that had been boarded out—one girl; she became a factory girl in Banbrook, and went wrong.

12051. How long have you been connected with the workhouse?—I have been clerk for ten years, and before that assistant to my father for many years.

12052. CHAIRMAN.—You have not known any of the boys to come back?—Not one.

12053. Mr. MURKIN.—Have you a record of many?—We have a great many—about 200 during the last twenty years. I have often spoken to my father about this very matter, and he told me he had followed them since the system was adopted, and, as far as he knew, not one of them had come back; but that boys and girls reared in the workhouse in almost every case came back.

12054. CHAIRMAN.—When you say almost every case perhaps that is going a little too far?—I don't think so.

12055. Dr. Bell referred to cases who had done well—who had been working in the office?—I know the case she refers to—one boy; but he was not the usual type of boy; he was not born in the workhouse. I also think the children of violent parents should be taken from them altogether, because they are bound to grow up as bad, if not worse than, their parents.

12056. Mr. MURKIN.—Are there many of that class?—A great many.

12057. CHAIRMAN.—Have you thought of the objection that exists, that it may make it too easy for parents to get rid of their children?—I think, under all the circumstances, it would be best.

12058. I asked the last witness about the girls—what course of life they take up as a rule. Have you many girls who go to factories?—Almost all the children boarded out about Banbrook have become factory hands.

12059. They begin by being half-timers, and their earnings go to their foster-parents?—Yes; and as a rule they reside with their foster-parents, and give them their earnings until they get married.

12060. Mr. MURKIN.—And the parents treat

12061. What about the boys?—I don't know so much about the boys. I would be inclined to give most of the boys trades. Of course, farm labourers are wanted; and if they are reared in the country they could go to that; but some boys should be put further on. I knew some boys who had in the office, and they are in good positions now.

12062. Mr. MURKIN.—Won't that same opportunity be before them if they are sent out into the country?—I am sure any exceptionally bright boy would be put on to business and put himself on. Some of the highest men have risen from the lowest rank unaided. I am sure they could rise.

12063. Mr. GORDON.—What would you do with a girl from twelve to sixteen?—Those are really the most critical cases. I think they should be very well nursed. Whatever recommendation the Ladies' Committee make about the boarded-out children should be carried out by the Board. I know a girl at present in domestic service, and she would make a splendid dressmaker.

12064. CHAIRMAN.—Do you know many of the girls boarded out by the Newry Union?—No; but I know girls that have come out of homes as before.

12065. Do they turn out chiefly as farm servants?—They do. I know the girls that were in the union at school when I was in my father's office, and, really, I see a lot of them on the streets in Belfast, and going about with one or two illegitimate children—drunks and beggars.

12066. And they used to be in the workhouse?—Yes. I could count a lot of girls I knew then; they are about the same age as myself now, and they really have gone to the bad. And I know gentlemen that were reared in the Newry Workhouse—a graduate, and one illegitimate child marrying another illegitimate child.

12067. And, with the greatest attention, I might mention one particular case. A boy was placed at nurse with an old woman in Newry. He is now twenty-four or twenty-five years of age, and his foster-mother told me a short time ago that up to the present he gives her his wages every week, without keeping a penny for himself.

12068. CHAIRMAN.—As regards the agricultural part of the union, do the girls become farm servants?—They do; or domestic servants.

12069. Do they get married?—They do.

12070. And get absorbed into the ordinary life?—They do.

12071. Mr. GORDON.—Would you extend the out-door relief system?—I would, in some cases.

12072. The Guardians cannot give any relief other than to parties who are over sixty years?—Yes, or disabled from labour.

12073. And, also, there is a restriction about lunatics?—Yes; we have one case, in which the auditor suspended the relieving officer £5 or £20, for an old man in the top of Slievegallick who is rated for 1 acre 1 rood 4 mountain land—rated at 10s., and the house at £4. He is confined to bed. The doctor certifies he cannot be removed with safety to the workhouse hospital, and the auditor says the Guardians have no power to give him relief.

12074. CHAIRMAN.—Has he any family?—He has; but the people are very poor. For the last ten or twelve weeks I have guaranteed to the relieving officer that he will not lose anything by it; the Guardians, of course, will subscribe the amount. The Board of Guardians give relief to a class I think they should not; old men and women residing alone in dirty, filthy hovels in the country. The proper place for them is the workhouse; they have no friends; no one to look after them.

12075. Mr. MURKIN.—Are they couples?—No; single persons.

12076. Perhaps it is easier to give them out-door relief or let them starve?—I think they might be persuaded to come into the house.

12077. Does not the relieving officer usually try to persuade them?—He does; but I think the law should enable the Guardians to compel them to come into the house. There is this old man, O'Hara.

12078. CHAIRMAN.—These cases that we have in view

—what have the single people? Have they the use of the house free?—In some cases, yes; and no other means.

12076. A little garden, perhaps?—Very few cases.

12077. A simple house?—Yes; a very bad one at that. They go round to the neighbours to get potatoes and meat. They don't live, they exist for a time. The Guardians give such cases 1s 6d or 2s.

Mr. Smith.—A great many of these cases are reported to me afterwards as cures. The people are found dead in their beds.

Witness.—In the case of O'Hare we are giving him nothing now, to try and get him into the house. In regard to the system of rating, I believe that the present system of union rating is much to be preferred to the old system of divisional rating. In the division represented by Mr. McEvoy the average poor rate was 4d. in the £; in a poor division in Armagh the average rate was 20s. in the £. Under that system the poor people had to pay for their own poor, and had to pay 20s. in the £, and the rich people down here had only to pay 4d. That is not a fair proportion.

12080. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Would you extend that to everything?—I would.

12081. Same witness suggested that it would be well to revert to the electoral division in the case of outdoor relief and paying patients in infirmaries?—I would not agree with that. Our outdoor relief now is less than it was five years ago. Mr. Braden thinks the Guardians do not look as clearly as they used after outdoor relief, but I think they do. We give 25s a week outdoor relief. The total amount expended during the last year was £2,700.

12082. Do you think there is proper supervision under the present system?—I do; ample supervision.

12083. Do you think the hands of the relieving officer should be strengthened in some way?—I don't think so; my Board of Guardians never interfere with the relieving officer, and we have three very good men.

12084. The amount of out-door relief seems large?—The population of the union is large.

12085. What is the valuation?—£176,000.

12086. CHAIRMAN.—How much of the £2,700 would be spent in the town of Newry?—About £1,000 a year; and that is bound to be, because the poor people flock into the town from the country.

12087. Dr. BROWN.—What is the valuation of the town?—£34,000. The poor rate for the present year is 1s. in the £, and the average rate in the country is much less than that; it is slightly over 3d. on land and 7d. on buildings. In both counties the poor rate is very low in the rural districts. There is one other matter. I take a very keen interest in the casuals, and I believe if casuals were compelled to perform a certain amount of labour there would be a very large decrease in the number seeking admission to the workhouse.

12088. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—You would give the Guardians power to detain them, and make them work for a specified time?—Quite so. Under the English system they have power to keep them in for three days, and compel them to do a certain allotted amount of work. I would increase the punishment every time they came back. But I would not do that with deserving casuals.

12089. CHAIRMAN.—It would be discretionary?—Yes; and it would be very easy to know an honest man looking for work. At least I would have no trouble.

12090. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Witnesses have suggested that in the case of the habitual tramp he should be turned over to the police, who could furnish him with a bed and breakfast in a lodging-house. Do you think that would be feasible?—I would not. I would lock him up, but not hand him over to the police to give him a bed and breakfast.

12091. CHAIRMAN.—It has been suggested that these gentlemen should be photographed, and the police should communicate with other stations and exchange photographs?—That would be a very good system, if not too expensive.

12092. Mr. GARTEN.—What proportion of these casuals are deserving?—We would have, on an average, between eighty and ninety casuals in a week, and I am satisfied we would not have ten deserving cases in the week; we might not have five.

12093. In those deserving cases the Guardians should have a discretion?—Quite so; and I would treat the deserving people looking for work differently. The Guardians have here rebuilt the workhouse, and when all the workhouse will have been completed they will have spent £8,000. The workhouse was burned down; and I think it was the best thing that ever happened the Newry Workhouse, because now we have the best workhouse hospital in Ireland.

12094. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Perhaps you would not care to express a view as to what you consider would be a sufficient number of workhouses in the county?—I would; although I don't agree with the evidence of Mr. Robt. in Belfast. I don't see how you can do away with Newtownards; Belfast is quite too large at present, and should not be made any larger.

12095. CHAIRMAN.—But if you take the majority of the people out of it, children and lunatics?—I think they have sent away almost all their lunatics already; we have fifty lunatics at present. I don't see how you could do away with Newtownards. But I think three unions for Down would be sufficient—Downpatrick, Newtownards, and Newry.

12096. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Wouldn't fewer suffice?—I don't see how you could do without Newtownards.

12097. Supposing the Guardians had the power to board out in neighbouring unions inmates, would not the trouble of distance be got over in that way?—You could; but I don't see how you would send aged and infirm people from here to Downpatrick; I think it would be too far. If it were for the public good I would say the number of workhouses should be greatly reduced, even if Newry were to be abolished.

Mrs. MARY GRAY examined.

I beg to submit the following statement to the Commissioners:—I am a Guardian for the West Ward of the town of Newry, and am the only woman Guardian on the Newry Board, on which there are fifty-seven members. I think that for the due administration of the Poor Laws, and for the well-being of the inmates of the workhouses and infirmaries, it is absolutely necessary that there should be a much larger proportion of women members on the Boards or on the Committees, in which the exercise of most of the powers of the Guardians might very properly be vested. I believe that under the Local Government Act the Guardians have authority to appoint committees consisting partly of outsiders, but these committees are only for purposes of admission to the house, and even the limited authority has, in the case of County Boards, at any rate, apparently never been exercised. The division of unions into urban and rural districts, with the evidence of one set of districts ineligible for election in the other, and the fusion of the duties of District Councils and Guardians in rural districts have necessarily operated very injuriously against the election of women members. I think very few such have been elected in country districts. In Newry Union, on the recent rebuilding of part of the workhouse, large and very much improved wards have been provided for the infirm patients—wards which have been said to compare favourably with those in some metropolitan hospitals. But the same improvement has not been made in some of the accommodation given to a class just as deserving, "the old and infirm." In their case their sleeping wards are much more crowded and worse lighted and heated, and their day-rooms are cheerless and uncomfortable. Arrangements ought to be made in all workhouses to afford some competition to each of the inmates as are able to do any work. It is very disagreeable and disheartening at present to see the listless, idle way in which the inmates pass their time. This is a matter in which Local Government Board Inspectors with proper qualifications could give great assistance. The officers of the Local Government Board in reference to the nursing arrangements in the infirmaries, have in some respects created an uncertainty as to the limits of the authority of the different officials, which (so long as the different departments are contained in the same building) is undesirable, and have affected discipline. I am in favour of boarding-out children. The system has worked very well in the Newry Union. The foster parents, as a rule, become fond of the children, and adopt them. Indeed the treatment of boarded-out children contrasts very favourably with the treatment sometimes given to hired-out children. The Guardians, however, ought to provide for surprise visits to the homes of the boarded-out children as an annual inspection at the workhouse on a stated day, when the children are brought up with their faces well washed and their best clothes on, is not satisfactory evidence of their condition. There ought also to be provision made for visits by the Guardians to the boarded-out children. This task should also be added to the duties of the Local Government Board Inspectors of boarded-out children. I hope that before long the Local Government Board will place on their staff a sufficient number of lady inspectors. It is scarcely necessary for me to point out that it is just as essential to have such inspectors to look after the internal management of the workhouses as it has already been found essential to have them to see to the boarded-out children. In the case of idiots, the accommodation in Newry in some respects is not suitable. One of the day-rooms was condemned some years ago. There has been so much reference to the removal of these inmates that the Guardians have hesitated to enter upon expenditure. I presume, however, that even in the event of the removal of some, those who are herelike and indolent, and at the same time incurable, would probably be left with us.

12006. CHAIRMAN.—You mentioned the bringing of the children once a year to the workhouse. Is that general?—Yes.

12009. Do you think that is a wise thing?—It is not; it is much better to visit them.

12010. Don't you think it brings before the children the fact that they are workhouse children?—Yes.

12011. Mr. Gordon.—They have actually discontinued it?—Yes.

12012. But you say there should be surprise visits, and the inspectors should visit just as they do in other cases?—Yes.

12013. CHAIRMAN.—Do individual Guardians or committees visit these children?—Yes.

12014. Do you think they are not visited sufficiently often?—They are not.

12015. How often would they be visited?—Once a year by the committee.

12016. Where the committee know they are in good hands the less they inspect and put themselves in evidence as Poor Law officials the better, but when there is doubt you would like to have frequent inspections?—Oh, yes.

Mr. Bell.—In the Donaghue district the Ladies' Committee visits frequently.

Dr. BROWNE examined.

12017. Dr. Browne.—You are the Medical Officer of the Newry Fever Hospital?—Yes.

12018. It is really now a general hospital?—Yes.

12019. Would you tell the Commission how long ago it was changed from being a fever hospital?—I should say it is about six years since really there was any infectious case admitted into that hospital.

12020. Was the hospital established entirely as a fever hospital?—It was originally.

12021. And in that way did you receive a grant from the county?—I cannot be certain if there was a grant from the county given originally. I understand it was under a particular Act of Parliament those hospitals in Ireland were built.

12022. That was before the Poor Law. It ceased about six years ago to admit any cases of fever?—Probably it did.

12023. How did that come about?—Because it was impossible to nurse and treat an infectious case in the same building by the same nurse as ordinary cases, and it was a question, having to be either one thing or the other, what hospital it should be.

12024. And the committee thought that because there was another fever hospital there was no necessity for this?—Yes.

12025. CHAIRMAN.—And the circumstance that Downpatrick was so difficult to get at from here made the people here anxious to have another county infirmary for their part of the county?—Yes.

12026. It is a county-at-large charge?—Yes.

12027. Dr. Browne.—You get a grant of £400 a year from the county?—Yes.

12028. How do you admit patients?—They are admitted by ticket from a subscriber or one of the committee.

12029. Would any poor person get an order for admission?—No.

12030. CHAIRMAN.—Is there any definite rule?—I am not aware of a definite rule or any particular restriction. It is the practice, and it has been understood that it is for the working classes, not for the destitute or a person without any means of livelihood.

Dr. Browne.—Although they may have been respectable paupers the year before.

12031. CHAIRMAN.—It is pretty much on the same basis as the county infirmary?—I think so. Our secretary, Mr. Mullin, is here and perhaps can tell you better.

12032. Dr. Browne.—What is the area of usefulness of the hospital?—There is no particular area; just for the neighbourhood round about. They come in from the Co. Armagh.

12033. Are they treated just the same?—Yes.

12034. Although your grant is entirely from the Co. Down?—Yes.

12035. CHAIRMAN.—But you have subscribers in the Co. Armagh?—Yes.

12036. Dr. Browne.—Do you think that is fair to the Co. Down?—I don't think so. I think the Co. Armagh might assist us.

12037. Then it is more for the immediate neighbourhood of Newry?—Yes.

12038. Would a person from Banbridge be eligible?—I don't think so.

12039. Although the county-at-large pays a large sum?—

CHAIRMAN.—What is the greatest distance you have ever had people in from?—They come from Kilskeel and Rathfriland and Mayo Bridge.

12040. Dr. Browne.—The Kilskeel people are as near Downpatrick as here?—But there have been persons admitted from as far off as there.

12041. From Banbridge you don't admit any?—We would admit them, I am sure, if there was a person here from Banbridge.

12042. CHAIRMAN.—Have you ever excluded any person owing to their locality of residence?—No.

12043. Therefore for all practical purposes there is no limitation?—There is.

12044. Dr. Browne.—Can you not admit anyone?—I can admit anyone who comes up with a ticket.

12045. Any agent case?—Yes, with or without a ticket.

12046. Do you also take cases recommended by outside doctors?—Yes, from any doctor in the county.

12047. In your absence, would the superintendent admit that case?—She would, if there was a line that it was recommended to the hospital by a doctor.

12048. Do you do many operations in the hospital?—Sometimes there are.

12049. CHAIRMAN.—You have got a new operating-room?—We have.

12050. Dr. Browne.—What assistance do you get?—I am assisted by the medical men of the town, Dr. Stewart, Dr. Connelley, and Dr. Martin. They are very kind in assisting me on every occasion without fee or reward.

12051. Do you admit pay patients?—There is no actual rule; it has always been considered that people who are able to pay should contribute.

12052. CHAIRMAN.—We heard to-day that Mr. a week at the highest payment you ever get?—Yes; except we could accommodate a patient with a private ward, which is seldom done. Then we would expect a guinea a week.

12053. Dr. Browne.—Do you get a large proportion that pay something?—I am sorry to say there are not a large proportion who do it. Some of them are very willing, and do subscribe a little towards their expenses.

12054. What is your nursing staff?—A lady superintendent, a head nurse, and three probationers.

12055. They receive three years' training?—They receive three years' training or one year's training, according as they come for it.

12056. You are not hampered in the way of instruments?—We have a large supply of instruments, and are practically allowed to get any instruments required.

12057. Are you hampered in the way of funds at all?—Since this increased grant we have been, certainly, fairly—12058. How do you mean increased grant?—The original grant was £200; the County Council increased it to £400, and since then we are fairly solvent.

12152. CHAIRMAN.—But anything beyond necessities, have you had to get those provided by subscriptions and special wards?—Yes.

12153. Dr. BROOKS.—Do you take in all classes of medical and surgical cases?—All classes of medical and surgical cases. They are mostly surgical accidents and operations; but, of course, there are also a variety of chronic cases, such as chronic ulcers.

12154. CHAIRMAN.—You don't keep those people in very long?—No.

12155. Dr. BROOKS.—Do you find a large number of tubercular cases, bone disease, requiring operative interference?—Yes.

12156. Mr. MURKIN.—Am I to understand you to say that the very poor of your locality don't find assistance into your hospital?—They have never been refused; the poorest person coming has always been admitted, if a suitable case; but I have understood always that it was more for the working classes—the better-to-do working classes—that the hospital was never intended. At the same time the poorest man has never been refused.

12157. Do you think it is a proper distribution of public money given specially for the benefit of the very poor, to close the doors of the institution against them?—The doors have not been closed. Jus. 14, 1901.
Dr. Beattie.

12158. You say in practice?—Not in practice; but I think it was understood, as half the funds of the hospital were subscribed by the inhabitants of the town, it was primarily subscribed for the working men, and not for the pauper.

12159. That may have been the original intention of the founder; but since the county has come to the relief of the institution by a contribution equal to half the outlay, don't you think the poor ought to have as ready admittance as any other class?—I think so.

Mr. Small.—Dr. Beattie's hospital is largely a voluntary hospital, and they can make their own terms, and won't receive contagious cases; our hospital is the only one in which contagious cases can be received, and there is no doubt about our power to charge.

Mr. R. A. MULLAN examined.

12160. Dr. BROOKS.—Could you tell us why the hospital was changed from being a fever hospital to a general hospital?—As I understand it was built under the Grand Jury Act for the purpose of providing accommodation for fever patients after the Famine.

CHAIRMAN.—Oh, long before.

Witness.—It was built about fifty years ago.

12161. Dr. BROOKS.—But you were in existence before that, I understand, in two or three locations?—It was in a very small way originally, in another part of the town in a house; but the accommodation was very small. Then the necessity for it as a fever hospital, practically ceased after typhoid ceased to be a prevalent disease in the country, and then it afforded facilities for the sick poor and accidents.

12162. What about your up-keep—what is your average yearly expenditure?—The total money received would be about £700 a year.

12163. Does that keep it going?—It keeps it going with difficulty; between £700 and £800.

12164. How is that made up?—With private subscriptions—£245.

12165. And paying patients?—That includes them. The paying patients for the year ended 31st of December, 1902, were 245 12s. 10d. Then the employees of the merchants contribute by boxes in the parks, 234 12s. 10d.; church collections, £28 15s. 11d.

12166. Then you have £400 from the County Council?—Yes; it was originally £200 granted by the Grand Jury.

12167. Have you the number of patients last year?—For the year ended 31st of December, 1902, 1,622.

12168. How many were your intern patients?—246; 136 men and 110 women.

12169. Mr. MURKIN.—The average number daily—what would that be?—I could not give it to you.

12170. I understand it is something like from twelve to fourteen?—I have not the figures.

12171. Dr. BROOKS.—Have you the site free?—No; it is held under two leases. It is the property of the Marquis of Downshire, and it is conditional on its being retained as a hospital that we are entitled to hold it.

12172. What is the yearly rent?—£30.

12173. CHAIRMAN.—Of course it is a valuable property?—It is; but it is no use to us as a security; we tried to raise money for an extension. We had to go into debt for the purpose of meeting current expenses.

12174. Dr. BROOKS.—How do you propose to raise the £1,600 you have asked for?—We applied to the County Council to borrow it for us, and they arranged to raise the money from the Board of Works. They have got authority for the loan, and the plans are being, at the present time, approved of. Mr. R. A. Mullan.

12175. Your hospital intends to pay this back?—They will deduct from the annual grant such a sum as, with interest and sinking fund, will repay the loan.

12176. CHAIRMAN.—How do you propose to raise enough income in the future?—We will have to make some special effort; the Ladies' Committee are very much interested, and will try to get up a bazaar to pay the loan off; but at the present time it is an absolute necessity on account of the sanitary condition of the hospital.

12177. Dr. BROOKS.—I think you intend to make extra provision in the way of staircases?—We do for floors; and also the position of the lavatories and baths is objectionable in the centre of the house; we intend to place them in annexes. Formerly part of Newry was in Armagh, and we received contributions from the Great Northern Railway and Bewbrook, and we did not feel justified in excluding patients who were sent in by subscribers. A subscriber of £2 gets four tickets. He signs them, and the doctor admits a patient if he thinks him suitable. We did not consider we were justified in admitting a class of people who could be dealt with by dispensaries or in the union. It is really for the deserving poor, who are not subjects of charity. A large proportion of working men contribute to their employers' yards, and in the chapels and churches, and we did not consider we were justified in taking in those of the poorer class. We prescribe medicine, and they get the prescriptions filled in chemist's shops in town on favourable terms. If the applicant was not able to pay for the medicine we thought they were subjects for a dispensary, and did not give them a ticket. As regards the question of Armagh and Down contributions, Armagh declined to contribute, but the County Council of Down could, through the Local Government Board, compel the Armagh Council to contribute.

12178. CHAIRMAN.—Are you sure of that?—I am. We have looked into that; we considered it very carefully in connection with the question.

12179. Would you kindly let our secretary have a statement of the grounds on which you think you can do that?—I will. The hospital is very largely aided by.

12180. And popular in Newry?—Very popular. Dr. Beattie is very popular, and the matron is very kindly and attentive.

12181. And it is an institution highly valued in Newry?—Yes; it is contributed to by all creeds and classes. I believe it is a most excellent institution.

The sitting terminated.

TWENTY-FIFTH PUBLIC SITTING.—FRIDAY, JANUARY 15TH, 1904.

At the Courthouse, Downpatrick.

Present:—Mr. MILES (Chairman), Mr. MURKAGHAN, and Dr. CONY BIGGER.

Right Hon. THOMAS ANDREWS, P.C., examined.

Right Hon.
Thomas
Andrews

12179. CHAIRMAN:—The County Council of Down have considered the queries that were issued by this Commission?—They have, sir.

12180. And their answer to the first query is to what effect?—The answer here is rather prolonged. I believe it has been furnished to you. If you wish I will be very glad to read it to you, or I will answer any questions upon it.

12182. You would not have had a substantial majority you think for any recommendation?—I won't go quite that length. I think we would have had a substantial majority, because I think it is so apparent the workhouses which should be closed, if you decide to close any; but our answer to that was if you, gentlemen, spread the map before you and had a list giving the population of the workhouses, you would be in as good a position to judge that matter for yourselves as we would be.

12183. Do you wish yourself to offer an opinion as to what workhouses might be closed?—On the whole, I would prefer not; if you were in a position to tell me how many workhouses you would allot to the Co. Down.

12184. That, of course, we are not in a position to do until we hear the evidence?—If you did I would have no hesitation in telling you those which I personally think should be retained.

12185. We may come at it in another direction. Would you be in favour in each union of having a hospital?—Undoubtedly; that I can answer for the County Council. We are quite unanimous on that point.

12186. That would dispose of the sick in each union?—Quite right; and if I may mention, sir, where you are on the hospital, we have a strong opinion that it would be very desirable that there should be a ward allotted to pay patients. The thrifty poor object naturally to go into a pauper workhouse even when they are sick, and it would be of immense importance to them that they should get over that little loss of prestige, and get a ward open to them when infectious disease is in their family or neighbourhood.

12187. Or even ordinary disease?—Or even ordinary disease, especially infectious.

12188. Now we have dealt with the sick. The next class we may take up would be children. Would you be in favour of excluding children from the workhouses as much as possible?—I would, and I think I may answer that for the County Council.

12189. Is boarding-out the best system?—On the whole I am inclined to think it is. There are only two systems; one which prevails in Limerick at the Gl'n schools. I had the pleasure of being through those schools and thought very highly of them, and in fact I may say I came away rather impressed with the idea that when a good opportunity was afforded I would recommend that system to the Co. Down. I have, however, since then had considerable difficulty in retaining that opinion, if I have not dropped it altogether, and at present I would be rather disposed to recommend the boarding-out system. The Gl'n schools are beautiful; they seemed to me to be admirably conducted. They are exclusively under the charge of one religious body—a religious body which differs from my views, but I am bound to say I think they are admirably conducted.

The children were taught trades, such as shoe-making, tailoring, and basket-making, carpentry, and a number of other trades. It did occur to me afterwards, although I don't like taking an ungenerous view of things, that perhaps too much was being done for them there. As a general rule, the parents of children who are in workhouses have been thriftless people; some of them criminals.

12190. Nearly all illegitimate?—A good many of them illegitimate; and I can imagine a poor, honest, working labourer who with his wife have been struggling all their lives on a limited income of 12s. or 15s. a week to rear their family and bring them up properly—I can imagine them feeling very sore that the children of those who have been thriftless are taught trades, and occupy those trades, and make it much more difficult for the honest labourer to get his children pushed forward beyond what I may term labouring.

12191. You would not be in favour of placing the worst class in the community—a dependent class—above the lowest independent class?—That is my difficulty; but at the same time I am not going to say anything against Gl'n schools, and if it was decided to adopt anything of the kind, I would not be so sorry to do it. But the difficulty, on more mature consideration, has forced itself on me which I have endeavoured to show you. And the boarding-out system I believe is a great many of the workhouses—certainly in the New-wards Union—seems to work remarkably well.

12192. And the children generally become agricultural labourers?—Exactly.

12193. And that is the class we are most in need of in agricultural Ireland at present?—Yes.

12194. Children being one to another class, that is the mothers of the children, the girls who come in and have illegitimate children in the workhouse. If some plan could be devised for closing the workhouse doors against that class, would you approve. A scheme like this, that has been suggested to the Commissioners, that different religious bodies should have penitentiaries or refuges for girls who fall for the first time. As soon as a girl in the neighbourhood falls she generally has to go to the workhouse some three or four months before her confinement; that instead of going to the workhouse she should go to one of these penitentiaries at the expense of the rates, and in some of these penitentiaries they actually have maternity wards attached, and in cases where they have not maternity wards attached, that the girl should go to the nearest maternity hospital, and as soon as she is discharged, after a fortnight, or whatever time, from that hospital, she should go back to the penitentiary with her child, and the religious influence of the management there, and her own religion—should be directed to reform her and give her a fresh start, care being taken of the child whatever would be thought to be the best way, by board-out as soon as the child reached say the age of a year or two, as soon as it could take whatever food was going in the house it was sent to, you would approve of such a scheme?—That question has not been before the County Council. For myself, it has some authority now on me. It seems to have a good deal that is taking in it, but wherever we get into these religious questions we get rather involved.

12195. Each girl goes to her own religion?—It would strike me, speaking without having time to reflect on it, that it is a good arrangement.

12196. The drawback that strikes people is that it makes it rather easy for those people to get rid of their children?—A great many of those girls are married with promises of marriage, and I would be very loath from having any opinion that they should be harshly dealt with.

12197. You would be willing to run that risk?—I would. When you first began to speak I thought you

Jan. 15, 1904.

Right Hon.
Thomas
Andrews.

were rather going to leave them to those religious bodies independent of the rates, and I would be opposed to that, because I think the rates should support them as well as any other afflicted class.

12202. Without having thought the thing over, your opinion would be favourable to such a plan?—It would.

12203. That would take away the class that, above all others, taints the workhouse. That class getting about the house and getting more brazen with each successive fall, appears to be the class that taints the workhouse work. If you could get that class out of the workhouse and the children, would you also be in favour of sending lunatics out of the workhouse to an asylum or auxiliary asylum?—Certainly; our County Council are unanimous on that. We are making extensions of the asylum here—our contracts amount to £250,000—with a view of having the least insane person out of the workhouse and put into the asylum.

12204. Of the ordinary inmates you would have only two classes remaining, the ordinary able-bodied men and women, which is a small class, very small indeed if you take away the mothers of illegitimate children. Would you see any objection to writing aside one workhouse for a large area, a central workhouse for putting these people in?—That would be classifying patients and putting each class into a separate workhouse.

12205. There are only about 4,000 able-bodied people in the Irish workhouses?—Then you would have to take them out of their country.

12206. You would have to take them out of their country?—That would be the able-bodied people alone.

12207. Merely the able-bodied?—Put them into one workhouse where they would have to work.

12210. The most difficult class is the aged and infirm. Have you any idea what you would do with them. We have had evidence during the present week in Down, and one of the proposals made was that one workhouse in each county should be set aside for aged and infirm inmates?—Again, without having given much consideration to it, I don't quite like that. I think there is a great difficulty in taking these poor people from their own locality. There is very considerable difficulty in inducing them to go into the workhouse at all. They prefer to stay at home and almost starve rather than go into the workhouse. They may be induced to go into one that is in their own locality, but I believe the majority would starve rather than go to one some distance away, and it strikes me that the effect of that would be to increase the outdoor relief. These people would stay at home, and the relieving officer would report that they were starving, and the Guardians, rather than let them starve, would give them out-door relief. I don't like the idea, but I do like this idea, if you allow me to say so. I think it would be only common humanity, that the old married couples should be allowed to live together.

12211. That would be possible if you had a central institution?—Would it not be possible in one ward in a workhouse?

12212. We have an open mind on all these questions, but we see the difficulty of effecting economy on any appreciable scale if you are to keep all the aged and infirm and sick at a union in their own union. The risk it seems absolutely necessary to keep?—It is. I feel no doubt you will have to break up some workhouses.

12213. And in those cases where the workhouses would be broken up, the aged and infirm would have to be taken to a distance?—They would, but probably not to a great distance, to the workhouse nearest to them.

12214. If you put a central workhouse the difference would be very small?—The further you take them the less they like it.

12215. Even in their own county. Do you think the difference between taking a man to Newswater and to Downpatrick would be prohibitive?—I think they would object to it, but if it cannot be avoided, it cannot. Perhaps for a moment I might call your attention to the idea the County Council had with regard to the idea of a reduction of workhouses, namely, that the first workhouses from which we would wish to be separated would be the border workhouses, Belfast, Lismore, Lurgan, and Newry.

12216. You think a county should be self-contained?—We think each county should, as far as possible, be self-contained. If some of the workhouses must go, as indeed I think they should go, the first to go should be the partnership workhouses with which we are in partnership with other counties.

12217. Then you are faced with the difficulty that some of the largest workhouses are the border workhouses like Newry?—The reason we did not speak more formally about that than we have done is because we did not know the circumstances of the Co. Armagh, the border county; but if Armagh is not worse situated for the closing of Newry than we are, then we think Newry should go.

12218. Remaining for hospital purposes?—Yes. I am sorry to be wholly opposed to the evidence given you in Belfast, namely, with regard to the closing of Newtownards Workhouse and putting it into Belfast. That, I believe, was done with a view to classification, when Newtownards should be provided over by the authorities in Belfast.

12219. As an auxiliary workhouse for the Belfast Union it was intended?—I think that the paupers in rural districts such as Newtownards would have the greatest possible objection to be forced into a city workhouse, where the associations of the paupers and their entire up-bringing have been different from the rural districts, and I don't think the country poor would gain in any way by being put alongside the city poor. The Belfast Union Workhouse is a very overgrown establishment. I live in a fairly large village; at least it looks so. Coover, where I live, is a village with four long streets, every house occupied. That village only contains 2,100 people. Just think of Belfast Workhouse containing, I think, 3,600. To go to increase that would, in my mind, be highly objectionable.

12221. You think it would be a mistake to herd together the destitute of the city and country districts?—That is it precisely, and, as I said about the infirm, I think the paupers in rural districts would in many cases rather starve than be forced into huge establishments like Belfast. I think some of them would border on starvation, and possibly sink under it, and I think again that that would tend to the increase of outdoor relief.

12222. As regards the workhouses that would be closed, the view of the Council was that if additional accommodation for lunatics was necessary, one of the workhouses might be made into an auxiliary asylum?—We don't require that, for the reasons I have given; we are making ample provision here.

12223. Mr. MURPHY.—To what extent will that provision be?—We have calculated that it would be more than ample for the present.

12224. How many will the asylum then accommodate?—I believe it is 800.

12225. And in the institution at present, how many are there?—A little over 600.

12226. Then you are making accommodation for 150 more?—Say 200.

12227. Do you think that will suffice for all the needs of the Co. Down?—We know it will more than suffice for the present.

12228. And for the immediate future?—And for the immediate future; that is a point we have gone into and are quite sure of.

12229. Dr. BROWN.—This is the first county in Ireland that has adopted that principle?—I am very proud that it is.

12230. Just kindly give the Commission some of the points that led you to that decision. I suppose you considered the advisability of whether you should put them into an asylum or, perhaps, get an auxiliary asylum with a lesser grant?—We went fully into that; it is a matter I take considerable interest in myself. The figures are not just present to my mind at the moment, but when we took into consideration the expense of converting one of the present workhouses into an auxiliary asylum, and getting the limited capitulation grant, and the expense of keeping a separate staff for

Jan. 15, 1864.

Right Hon.
Thomas
Anderson.

the auxiliary asylum, we came to the conclusion that it would be as economical to extend the present asylum and put them in there, and it would be ever so much better for the inmates themselves.

12227. Mr. MURKIN.—But if the capitation grant applied to both conditions, then what would you think?—Even so I would much rather have them in what we may call the present institution.

12228. Do you see that it would be more advantageous to have these harmless lunatics put into an institution by themselves—a sort of farm home, where they could be occupied during the day, be to themselves, with healthful surroundings of a country life, and if the capitation grant was 4s. all round, don't you think that would be a better system?—I won't answer the question generally for the whole of Ireland, but if you will be good enough to go up and look round the asylum, I think you will find it a very perfect institution, and I think you will find it has all the health-restoring properties which are so necessary for the inmates, as well as for those who are bodily afflicted. There are a large number of wards there, and I cannot see any difficulty in putting those who are only mildly insane—I cannot see any difficulty in classifying them in a large institution like ours, and I think with the admirable physician we have there and the large staff which is liberally provided by the Committee of the County Council, I think they are better there than they possibly could be otherwise, and they can be provided there with the work of which you spoke better than they could be in any old workhouse converted into an asylum.

12229. Even with regard to the epileptics?—That is a medical question; I am not prepared to answer.

12230. In other places we have had put before us the desirability of not having too many of these classes in one institution, and the desirability of having harmless lunatics put into a farm home, where they could be occupied. That recommends itself to me personally, and I would like to get from you an expression of opinion. How much will the new buildings cost you?—We are building a male and female wing and farm-steadings. We have provided something like 100 acres of a farm there, which will give employment, I believe, to all the farm labourers who are accommodated in the asylum, and all able to work on it. That standing and the wings will cost £20,000. We have our contracts made.

12232. I have no doubt about your own particular county, but would it not seem to you a useful thing to separate the harmless lunatics from the violent?—There can be no two opinions about that, unless the large institution to which you refer was so large as to provide separate wards, and if so, I don't see much difference; but I would rather not answer abstract questions about operation of which I know nothing.

12233. CHAIRMAN.—The next suggestion of the County Council was that one of the workhouses might be turned into a sanatorium for consumptives?—We feel very strongly on that subject; we feel it is very much wanted.

12234. Had you killed or some workhouse like that in view?—Yes.

12235. The Council were quite unanimous about that?—They were quite unanimous. That was in the report I read to the Council, and they took no exception to it.

12236. Query 4. The Council made no suggestions about changes in chargeability. Were they all satisfied that for Poor Law purposes the union was the best area of charge?—That was not much gone into. I think that is the prevailing opinion. There is another question I have observed discussion about—whether there should be district or union rating.

12237. It has been suggested for the sick that a county rating might be better. It has been pointed out that county infirmaries are a county charge, and some portions of the county get no benefit, or very little, from the county infirmary, and it has been suggested that it would be fairer the sick all over the county should be a county charge?—I don't think I have any strong view on that. I would be rather inclined to let each union support itself.

12238. What about the county infirmaries. Now we are bringing up the workhouses to the level of the county infirmaries, and many workhouses have got ahead a little of some county infirmaries. What would you think about leaving county infirmaries the area of the county-at-large?—I see a difficulty there, and it is a point I have not thought of before. We have in Downpatrick an excellent infirmary, and we have in other, which I have every reason to believe is well managed, in Newry. They, of course, are county charges, and I have not heard any complaints of them.

12239. We have received complaints in every county, not anything hostile to the institutions, but mostly on the question of rating?—I think it will largely depend on how perfect you make the hospitals you will have in connection with the present workhouses.

12240. They are becoming levelled up very much—they are becoming district hospitals—and if one operated from the workhouse they would be places where any poor person, or even a person above the rank of the poor, ought to be glad to go. Some medical witnesses suggested that each county should have its forces, making the county infirmary as far as possible the chief hospital for performing special operations for any people that could be brought there; that nurses should be trained there, and that those nurses should be county nurses to be drafted as required in emergencies. At present if any workhouse wants a nurse they have to send to Belfast, or wherever the nearest large hospital is, and get a special nurse at a high cost. If those nurses were trained in the county it is thought it would be more economical?—Nurses appear to me to be getting nowadays pretty much on an equality all over, and I greatly doubt if you train a good nurse in the county infirmary that she will in any way feel bound to go to the workhouse hospital where she would be paid less, when plenty of other positions are open to her.

12241. If she gets a better position she will go, but if her position is made a good one?—She will be more likely to remain.

12242. Dr. RYAN.—Is the objection to the county infirmary being made a county charge that some of the remote districts are receiving no benefit from it, and at the same time are maintaining their own hospital?—Yes; I think the benefits of Downpatrick and Newry infirmaries are too little known. I don't think it has been made sufficiently known that this infirmary in Downpatrick is as admirable a little hospital as it is. It seems to me to want nothing that any larger hospital almost could have, and it has an extremely clever medical man, and another, junior, associated with him. I think if that was more known over the county it would be taken more advantage of. I have been myself sending several patients to it from my own district.

12243. You can see the difficulty of a patient from Glend and Banbridge coming to Downpatrick?—Yes. If you multiply these infirmaries all over the county, then you won't require the hospitals in connection with the old workhouses.

12244. We are speaking of the workhouse hospital?—I know. And the grievance you think is because the infirmaries are a county charge, and yet it is only the districts immediately surrounding them that get the full benefit. I admit that, but I don't see any way out of it.

12245. CHAIRMAN.—It has been suggested that the district hospital, when all the other classes are taken out of the workhouse, that that hospital to be called the district hospital should be made a county charge. You will have a very small number going in during the night, so that there would not be any danger of increasing the numbers?—It may be quite right, and at the moment I think possibly it might be a proper charge, but not having considered it before, I have not a strong opinion, but I am inclined to think well of it at the moment.

12246. Mr. MURKIN.—Would not the widening of the area have a tendency to lead to superciliousness?—Undoubtedly.

12247. Dr. BIGGER.—It does not do that in the county infirmary?—It does not.

12248. Mr. MURKIN.—But the county infirmary at present is limited by law to a certain area, and the point does not arise, but if you make a change in the law the point would arise?—I think there is the danger you speak of.

12249. CHAIRMAN.—Then looking at the grants distributed out of the Imperial funds, a large union like Belfast will get many thousand pounds and small unions in the West of Ireland, like Belmullet, where 10s. in the £ over the whole union does not raise £50, will get a very small portion indeed, and they are really unable, owing to their poverty, to keep their workhouses as it ought to be kept on the lowest scale of property. Would you be against a redistribution of the grants in a way that would take into consideration the exceptional poverty of some districts, and distribute the grants according to necessity, rather than according to the principle that those who have should get more?—I think it would be a difficult matter to settle. It is a very big question. The way you put it seems to have an element of justice about it, but at the same time I think it would be vigorously opposed in other neighbourhoods; at the same time it is not a point I would like to give a strong opinion on.

12253. Along most of the western borders—Doonagh, Moyra, Galway, and Kerry—there is so much poverty among the rangers, and the valuation of the lands and premises is so small that they are really unable to raise enough to keep their hospital as it ought to be kept.—Would you relieve them, to a certain extent, by diminishing the number of workhouses?

12254. It is rather difficult to do much in that way, for take Clontarf: it is forty miles from one end of the union to the other, and practically there is no one in that workhouse except the sick, and that is the way along the whole west coast; no one goes to the workhouse except the sick. The infirm get chimney-sweep accommodation, and stay there. The numbers are small but relatively the staff is large—that question you have not considered?—Not sufficiently to give you any evidence of value.

12255. You don't consider that any additional hospital accommodation is necessary?—Not if, as we recommend, that the hospitals should be retained in connection with the present eight workhouses. I think with the two infirmaries that should be sufficient.

12256. One query is, how far it would be possible to get contributions or payments in aid of expenditure from inmates who go in, or their friends. At present the law enables the Guardians to declare the patient to have been expended by way of loan and to recover up to the average cost, but in some institutions, such as the Latham Infirmary, a very large sum of money is recovered every year for the county. The governor, who signs the recommendation, mentions how much he thinks the patient could contribute, if anything, and people have got into the habit of paying. A very large sum is recovered each year by the county infirmary—I think that is highly proper.

12257. But they have not got any legal right to recover it. Would you be in favour of a change in the law that would enable Guardians and governors of county infirmaries to fix in their discretion how much might be paid for a patient and to recover it?—It is a new question to me, too. It would seem to me to be sufficient to be able to say that when a patient applies, or relatives apply for him, "On inquiry we find your means are so-and-so; we think you should pay so many shillings a week, and if you don't we won't admit you."

12258. That means negotiations at a time when perhaps admission is urgent, and there is no one person to carry on such a negotiation?—I think those who it can be shown can pay should be made to pay. We do that at the asylum.

12259. In Enniskillen the doctor started that system, and he recovers as little as a shilling a week. Every little makes up the total, and he then really recovers a substantial sum?—And it helps to take off the thumb of pauperism. I approve of it.

12260. Even if a labourer's child comes in he takes for granted that child would take 6d. or 1s. a week to keep, and he thinks that much should be paid by the father?—Quite so.

12261. Dr. BOGHER.—Your county infirmary patients do pay?—Yes.

12262. CHAIRMAN.—Have you any view about the tramp question?—I cannot suggest any cure now that would be of value. It is a frightful nuisance, and one that every ingenuity should be applied to stop. There is a perfect army of these people begging from door to door, and getting their hotels in workhouses.

12263. One suggestion that was made to us was that when the tramps were going about with children the Guardians should be empowered to take their children from them, if they thought it desirable, subject to an appeal to justices in Petty Sessions, if the parent committed there was any unfair interference with the control of the children?—It is an extremely difficult question to begin forcibly to take children from their parents and relieve the parents of them. I don't say if the parents are vagrants or criminals.

12264. They are really hereditary vagrants?—Yes; it would seem to be better for the children and cheaper for the community. At the same time I see a great difficulty in doing that, and I would rather not express an opinion on it.

12265. The English system is that the Guardians should have power to detain the tramp for a certain time, increasing according to the number of times he comes in to take advantage of the workhouse, and to make him work?—Very proper.

12266. That would be a considerable way to reduce it?—Yes.

12267. If the number of workhouses was reduced they would have fewer resting places?—Yes.

12268. Some farmers feared they might rest in their barns or haggards?—I would not allow that to deter me. I don't think there would be much of that, and that is for the farmers and police to look after.

12269. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you think anything ought to be done to strengthen the hands of Guardians in recovering from the fathers of illegitimate children the amount of maintenance?—I think that would be highly proper; the fathers get off far too easily, and I think if there was such a power you would have fewer cases.

12270. They have such a law in England, and perhaps if something of that kind could be applied here you think it would be desirable?—I do.

12271. CHAIRMAN.—In England the girl herself can take proceedings; in Ireland she cannot?—I would be quite willing to go any length with you there.

12272. Mr. MURKIN.—Your Council recommended that there should be fewer workhouses on the county; you think that there would do?—The Council has not expressed an opinion on that subject.

12273. If they are to be fewer some of them must go?

—Yes, and if they are to go we think the first that should go would be those on the border line, of which there are four; Belfast to be separated from the county, and the portions of the Co. Down which now lie between Newtownards and Lisburn Unions, and Belfast we think should be thrown into Newtownards and into Lisburn if Lisburn be retained. My own feeling is that Lisburn should go. I don't think our Council would probably be unanimous with me on that; a large majority would be with me. But if you, gentlemen, said to me: "We have quite made up our minds that there shall be only three workhouses in the Co. Down, and if you asked me which were the three that should and if you asked me which were the three that should be retained, I would have no hesitation in saying Newtownards, Drogheda, and Banbridge. If you took the map before you and had to begin to draw to arrange the workhouses for the Co. Down, you could not do better than mark them out at equal distances and within easy reach of all parts of the county. And if we are to have three workhouses retained, I certainly think these should be the three, and the county would be very poorly supplied with less than three.

12274. The number of the infirm class to go into an institution, suppose we call it a home for the aged, or a county farm, would not in the Co. Down be over 400 or 500. It is generally agreed that children should in all cases be taken away from the workhouse, and the inmates also removed. Taking away all other classes would leave 400 infirm in the Co. Down; would not one workhouse, properly equipped, be sufficient for 400 people?—I really don't think that a workhouse should have less than 400.

12276. You say there is one objection to concentration, and that is, a sentiment that the people don't like to leave the locality in which they are residing and have acquaintances. Still at the present time they have to be removed twelve or fourteen, or sixteen miles, and twelve, or fourteen, or sixteen miles in country places in Ireland almost means emigration, so that really there is not so much in sentiment when you go to test the matter. Would you be in favour of giving Guardians power to arrange with neighbouring unions for the support of the poor of their own particular area, supposing it was too far to send them to the county workhouse, and if they found it more economical to board them in a neighbouring workhouse?—Do you mean to board them in a workhouse of another county?

12274. If they so desired, and if the railway facilities were good, to give the Guardians the power if they found it more economical and better to send an odd case to the neighbouring county?—So long as it was permissive, I don't see any objection to it, but I do think the more our county can be administered and ruled within itself it is very much better.

12275. We had not a very strong feeling in that regard yesterday in Newry?—You would not expect them to have that feeling there, because that would simply extinguish their workhouse.

12276. But the idea is good if it could be carried out without hurting any particular interest?—Yes, and fearing there might be hurt to any interest was the reason we did not state it strongly in that report.

12277. Mr. H. C. Weir.—I represent some witnesses, and would like to ask a question with reference to the alteration of the boundaries of Downpatrick?—I think you could get that better answered by some of the Downpatrick Guardians.

12278. I would like to get your opinion as chairman of the County Council. There are three electoral divisions of Downpatrick, which lie on the other side of Strangford Lough, and are separated from the rest of Downpatrick Union by that arm of the sea. Is it your opinion, or would you think that in any scheme of amalgamation or abolition of workhouses, those three electoral divisions should be taken from it and added to Newtownards on account of the inconvenience to the poor, especially the sick poor, in crossing the ferry and coming into Downpatrick?—That is something that both Newtownards and Downpatrick would be retained as at present.

Col. Sherman
Crawford.

I was really only one of the witnesses, and Mr. Andrews has gone so fully into the matter, I only corroborate everything he has said, and, as an ex-chairman of the Newtownards Board of Guardians, I entirely disagree with the evidence given in Belfast. Every Co. Down inmate in Belfast ought to be removed to his own county.

12283. CHAIRMAN.—Was there any other point?—I don't know whether all the infirmaries in Ireland are situated the same as the Downpatrick Infirmary. It is on the lowest Government rate allowed by the Act, and the rest is supplied by private contributions. I would be afraid, if you made it a district rate, it would swamp the private contributions.

12284. That would have the effect of putting the whole expense on the county?—It would stop private contributions more or less.

12285. Dr. BIGGON.—Downpatrick and Newry are on the same basis; they raise double what the county gives them?—By the Act Downpatrick Infirmary is bound to get £300 a year, and the rest is made up by private contributions. I am greatly interested in the question of the children. I agree entirely with what Mr. Andrews said. My experience is that no matter how good the child was that was educated in the workhouse, there was always an inclination to drift back again.

12287. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—When a woman and her husband come to the workhouse with their children, what would you do. Would you, in the first instance, let them come two or three times, or have some standard or other by which to test whether those people ought to have charge of the children or not?—When children come to the workhouse with their father and mother it is to the advantage of the children, I think, that they should be separated from their father and mother.

12288. You think, as a rule, they are vagrants?—Yes.

12289. And you would leave it to the Guardians to say whether those children should be removed?—I would hardly leave it to the Guardians, but I would say when children reached a certain age they should be removed from the workhouse, and with regard to the tramps, I think they should not be allowed to leave until they had performed sufficient labour to recompense. And the reduction in the number of workhouses, which, no doubt will take place—

12290. Yes?—I have no doubt that if the union be diminished that there will have to be a very large re-arrangement of boundaries, and I think it likely in that case that Downpatrick would get a very large addition from the Kilfildist district, and I think, on the whole, that there would, especially to the sick, be a gain in their being connected with Newtownards. They would have a longer distance to travel from Pottery to Newtownards, but they would save crossing the ferry. But I cannot express any opinion of that kind from the County Council, and I would rather you would get the information from some of those who are better qualified to speak.

12291. Do you know that the passage of the ferry is sometimes so difficult that boatmen won't take it, and the ambulance cannot be ferried over?—I am rather ashamed to say I have not crossed that ferry in my life, but I see a postman here whom I have heard express very great fear from some of his passages across there, and I would not wonder but he would speak very fully on that subject.

Mr. H. MCGURK.—I certainly will. I may say at the very beginning that Mr. Weir has a particular object in asking these questions.

CHAIRMAN.—You might let that develop itself.

12292. Mr. MCGURK.—Am you aware what it has cost the Downpatrick Union for the last twelve months to bring the sick poor over the Strangford Ferry?—I am not.

12293. Are you aware that it is only twelve journeys, and the amount 12s. 6d. a journey?—I don't know anything about it, but it would not be a question of expense that would prevent us from giving every facility to the sick poor; but I don't want to express any strong opinion on the question at all.

Colonel SHARMAN CRAWFORD examined.

12290. CHAIRMAN.—Will diminish their facilities for travelling?—They only follow the line of the workhouse at present, and if these were broken up the tramps would be reduced.

CHAIRMAN.—The only thing is that in Ireland before there were workhouses there were far more tramps.

12291. Dr. BIGGON.—If the Banbridge Workhouse was done away with, what would happen if a tramp came there and looked for some assistance?—I don't know, I suspect the tramps only follow the line of workhouses.

12292. Something would have to be done for him when he would go to the relieving officer?—In that case perhaps it would be better to take him into the house.

12293. CHAIRMAN.—But if there were no workhouse for him; that is what we are assuming. The only institution in the neighbourhood would be a hospital for the sick; the last-up is the only other public institution?—Of course it is a very difficult question.

12294. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Some witnesses suggested he should go to the relieving officer and get a ticket for a night's lodging and breakfast, but if he came often turn him over to the police and prosecute him?—A very good idea.

Mr. James ANDREWS.—I appear, instructed by Mr. Weir, and with your kind permission, I wish to ask one question of Colonel Crawford with reference to the alterations that might be made in the boundaries of Downpatrick and Newtownards. The proposal that we wish to make is that the lower portion of the Ards, the Pottery part, should be thrown in under the new arrangement as part of the Newtownards Union.

Mr. Daniel MCGURK.—I represent the Downpatrick District Council, and may I be permitted to ask, through you, who this body is that is instructing Mr. Andrews?

Mr. ANDREWS.—I appear on behalf of several gentlemen, and I propose to call a few of them at a subsequent stage of these proceedings. Dr. McLaughlin, the dispensary doctor at Strangford.

Mr. MCGURK.—Who do you appear for as making a special case in reference to this small area?

Mr. ANDREWS.—These are some of the gentlemen I appear for, I don't propose to call them all, as I may consider these I call will be able to give you sufficient evidence of the necessity for the change. The names of those I propose to call are Dr. McLaughlin, Captain Somerset Ward, Mr. James Hutton, Mr. John Greer, &c., and Mr. Henry Dobbin. Their evidence will be very short, because it is confined to this one point.

CHAIRMAN.—This seems a natural matter for us to inquire into, and our rules about locus standi are very wide.

12295 Mr. Andrews.—Colonel Crawford, you are aware that the great probability is that the unions in Devon will be reduced, and in any alterations of the unions that may be made, do you consider that it will be beneficial that the lower portion of the Ards which at present belongs to the Downpatrick division should be thrown into the Newtownards Union or otherwise?—Personally, from the geographical situation, I am strongly of opinion as a private individual that it would be an advantage for the poor, both the sick and the aged and infirm, that they should go to Newtownards instead of going to Downpatrick. It is called a ferry, but the tide runs six or seven knots, and it takes a robust person to get across there on a winter's day without ill effects. If I was a sick person I would sooner go to Newtownards than Downpatrick.

12296 Mr. McGee.—You have never experienced the sickness I have never been sea-sick in my life.

12297 Mr. McGee.—How often have you driven from Portadown to Newtownards?—Very often, and if I was in the ambulance I would be all right.

Jan. 15, 1904.

Col. Sherman
Crawford.

MR. WILLIAM HEALY EXAMINED.

I don't think I need occupy your time, because our Chairman has expressed my views.

12298 CHAIRMAN.—You have nothing additional?—No.

12299 Mr. McCarty.—Might I ask Mr. Healy about this new apple of discord. What do you think about it?—Really I could not offer an opinion. I think matters have gone along so quietly heretofore that I don't see any necessity for a change.

12300 Mr. McGee.—Was this matter brought before the special committee of the County Council at all?—This matter was not brought before us at all.

12301 CHAIRMAN.—You did not go into localities at all?—No.

Mr. Andrews.—I asked Colonel Sherman Crawford not as a County Councillor but as a private individual.

Mr. McGee.—It seems such an important matter that I thought the County Council should have given an expression of opinion on it.

CHAIRMAN.—You think it an important matter.

Mr. McGee.—Well, seeing that these gentlemen have brided Mr. Andrews on the subject, it seems important.

CHAIRMAN.—If necessary we can give you an opportunity of producing further evidence on it. As there is no further evidence on behalf of the County Council, we will hear the Downpatrick Board of Guardians.

Mr. William
Healy.

MR. CHARLES GIBSON, Chairman, Board of Guardians, examined.

12302 CHAIRMAN.—You have been present during the consideration of the previous witnesses. I don't know whether you wish me to take you through the entire matter?—I prefer simply offering my opinions, and I may say these are the opinions of the committee of the Downpatrick Board of Guardians, on two or three items. With reference to the first query—the amalgamation of unions—on that point we have considered the matter very fully indeed, and we are of opinion that it would be inexpedient in the interest of the destitute poor to dissolve any of the existing unions. We consider that this matter was very carefully indeed considered at the time the unions were formed. Having regard to the large extent of the Co. Down, and the nature of the country, it would be nearly impossible, considering the interests of the destitute poor, to dissolve any of the existing unions with advantage. In the first place, if you consider that from Downpatrick to Banbridge, taking a line as the crow flies, you would have twenty-three statute miles. By the road it would be much greater. Just on the borders of Downpatrick Union there is a large chain of mountains. Taking that chain of mountains into consideration, and the impossibility of conveying the sick poor from one side to the other, it would be altogether inexpedient to dissolve any of the existing unions.

12303 Owing to the distance and the chain of mountains existing?—Exactly; and also, when I am speaking of that question, it would be a proper thing to mention a question that has been raised here with reference to the cutting off of the Portadown district. I have been a Guardian in Downpatrick for the past twenty-one years.

12304 What part of the union do you reside in?—The electoral division of Banbridge, about four miles from Downpatrick. During these twenty-one years I have never heard the slightest objection to the convenience of the poor across the ferry, and I did not find any difficulty arising. Also I may mention that we would object to the cutting-off of this district and adding it to Newtownards, not only in the interests of the poor themselves, because they are much more convenient to Downpatrick than to Newtownards, but we would object still further in the interests of the ratepayers, because if you look at the charges for the whole county, you will find that the ratepayers of Ardara and Portadown are very much better off; their poor are better accommodated at Downpatrick than at Newtownards. The union charges for Banbridge are 134; for Charlestown, 108; the union charges for Downpatrick, 65; for Kilnab, 124; for Hillborough, 104; for Meira, 154; and for Newtownards, 116, so that the transfer of these three divisions, as proposed, from Downpatrick to Newtownards, would mean an addition to the rates in those three divisions. And also there is another point that Downpatrick Union itself is a large union—it occupies nearly one-fifth of the county, it is large enough to be worked with economy, and it is not too large for administrative purposes; in point of fact Downpatrick is a centre, having a radius of ten miles right round, and it is quite possible to transport the sick poor easily, and cheaply, and economically, and having such a centre it would be inadvisable to destroy a really effective working centre, which is now only coming in to be effective, to destroy that by cutting off any portion of it, that is supposing the unions remain as they are, as I really hope they will. With reference to the children, I would wish to say that I do not think it is exactly the proper way of dealing with orphan and deserted children to board them out. To my mind the difficulty you have in sending the orphan and deserted children out to the country districts is that the people who really could and would look after them, and educate them properly in every way, will not have them; consequently the people who will board them out will be a class of people who really desire nothing more than to make money out of them. To meet the requirements of that, my view is that you should establish in the Co. Down three large institutions or schools, worked on the same system as industrial schools—one for the Episcopalian, the second for the Presbyterian portion, and the third for the Roman Catholics.

12305 Where would you leave the other varieties?—Let them take their chance. I only recognise the three.

12306 Mr. MURPHY.—Would not these children you talk about, for whom you are not able to find homes good enough, would they not find homes just as good as their parents could provide for them in the class they came from?—Oh, yes.

12307 Do you wish to lift them above the children of honest people and put them in a condition of life better than children outside the workhouse. You said that the difficulty in regard to boarding-out the children was that it was hard to get a suitable home for them, that the people that took them took them to make something out of them, and that they were not of a respectable condition of life suitable for the care of these children?—Quite so.

12308 Do you not think that the homes that the Guardians would find for these children, supposing they did board them out, would be homes just as good as the homes the parents of the children came from?—Oh, yes.

12309 Then do you think it would be a proper thing to raise the lowest class of the community at the expense of the rates to a condition better than that of the respectable independent class?—You did not catch my answer directly. My answer applies only to orphan and deserted children and I do hold that it would be desirable, when you do incur the expense for the education of an orphan child, to raise it as high as possible.

Mr. Charles
Gibson.

Jan. 15, 1904.

Mr. Charles
Goss.

12310. Higher than the child of the ordinary citizen?—I can scarcely say it would be higher than the child of the ordinary citizen.

12311. It is not permitted to the small reaper to send his child to an institution to learn a trade. Don't you think if the State provides for these waifs a suitable home, where they will have the same accommodation as the children of humble people outside, that the State is going far enough?—I rather think not. I think it is the duty of the State to provide, as far as possible, for orphan children; either give the power to the Board of Guardians to avail themselves of existing orphanages, or industrial schools, or else provide accommodation in the different counties.

12312. Have you many children in your own workhouse?—School children, 17—7 boys and 10 girls.

12313. Have you many boarded-out?—I think we have one. No, it is not boarded-out, it is adopted.

12314. Then you have not adopted the system of boarding-out?—We never did.

12315. Then you know nothing about its value?—We had one child boarded-out.

12317. But still it is an institutional life; the children don't have the opportunities of knowing the ordinary affairs of life, and don't know the advantages of home. They are strangers to the world when they go out of the institution; they have to begin to learn the very rudiments of existence if you keep them in an institution until fourteen or sixteen years of age. Do you not think it would be better to send these children out amongst the population and let them do the daily work of the household. Did you ever think over the question?—Yes, I never had any experience, but I have arrived at the conclusion that industrial schools should be established rather than boarding-out; of course it is only my view.

12318. Do you speak the view of the Guardians?—I speak the view of the majority of the Guardians of the Downpatrick Union.

12319. Dr. Brooker.—Have you any experience of any children brought up in an industrial school?—Yes, slightly.

12320. Can you remember some of them?—I can scarcely recall a particular case.

12321. How did you come to form your opinion?—From visiting industrial schools in Belfast and the neighbourhood.

12322. But it is not in the school we want to know about them, but their after existence?—Well, I have no experience of their after life.

12323. Have you any experience of children that have been boarded-out?—No; but I have a good deal of experience of children who have been reared in the home.

12324. Have you any knowledge of the relative cost of keeping children under the two systems?—Yes.

12325. What is the cost in the institution?—I believe they could be maintained in an orphanage or institution for 5s. a week.

Dr. Brooker.—I think you will find the average is over 60s a year.

Mr. McNamee.—5s. a week?—I believe they can be maintained at from 5s. to 6s.

12326. Dr. Brooker.—Do you know of any institution in which that actually is the cost of keeping the children?—Yes.

12327. Chairman.—What institution is that?—Foolage, Ballynatoagh.

12328. Dr. Brooker.—Is it assisted from some other grants?—It is assisted from nothing but charity.

12329. Therefore it costs more than 5s. a week?—They will actually take children at 5s.

12330. Chairman.—You mean it would not cost the same more?—No more.

12331. Mr. McNamee.—Your reason for disagreeing with any change in the present system is due to the fact that when these workhouses were established things are now as they were then. Do you think the same number of people are in the country now as there were?—Certainly not.

12332. Do you think the railway travelling was as convenient as at present?—Certainly not, but you must remember that you cannot remove poor people either to hospital or otherwise by rail.

12333. But on the understanding that there is to be in every place where there is a workhouse at present a hospital better than the present one for the accommodation of the sick, and considering that in some of the unions of the Co. Down there are very few of the aged and destitute class—what is known as the infirm class—calculating them all they don't amount to over 200 or 400, do you not think that one institution in the Co. Down would be sufficient to provide accommodation for those 200 or 400 aged and infirm?—Of course it would.

12334. Suppose you take care of the children and lunatics, you have nothing left except the tramps and the aged and infirm, and why should these big huge institutions be kept scattered over the county if there is no need for them?—You have a class going in that we are troubled with very much in Downpatrick Union, that is army pensioners.

12335. You think the ratepayers should be compelled to keep up a house for the accommodation of the army pensioners?—Certainly not.

12336. Then you get rid of that class?—But I do not think that it would be possible to remove, as you speak of, all the aged poor to the central institution, because in the first place these poor people will not go.

12337. There was not much trouble coming down here to Downpatrick to-day if a man had a ticket in his pocket?—Quite so.

12338. What trouble would there be if the military officer provided a means of conveyance to the applicant?—I fail to see where the advantage comes in.

12339. The advantage comes in in getting rid of a staff of officials, and getting rid of the cost of the upkeep of a large institution, which, for long alone, in the average amounts to 4300s a year!—If you gave equal accommodation to the sick poor, but you cannot. You cannot get the aged poor to remove out of their district. You could not get an aged person from Newtownards or Donaghadee to come to Downpatrick Workhouse; or a person living at Carrickfergus, how would you transport him to Downpatrick?

12340. I have the advantage of living in a union where there was a workhouse amalgamated, and I know paupers who have to come twenty miles, and there is no inconvenience expressed, and the Guardians representing that special case say it was a very good thing to have the amalgamation; they see no hardship at all in the matter!—Perhaps they are easily pleased.

12341. Mr. Andrew.—If there was to be any redistribution made of the unions, do you consider it would be in the interests of the sick poor of Ardferry and Portaferry that that portion of the county should be thrown into the Union of Newtownards, and it should thus be necessary for them to undertake the long-petuous voyage across the Lough?—In the interests of the sick poor, undoubtedly it would be very advisable to send them to Downpatrick instead of a long journey of nineteen miles.

12342. You don't speak in any medical capacity?—Not at all.

12343. But just as a jolly gentleman who likes a good sea voyage. I hope it will be a long time before it is necessary for you, as a sick patient, to make a journey across the Lough?—I have an idea, a pretty accurate one, that the reason that prompts this question is not exactly the interests of the sick poor.

12344. You have never been across the ferry yourself?—I have not.

12345. Mr. McCortan.—You live as near as Mr. Hutton, or some of these gentlemen who are raising the question?—Yes.

12346. Does Dr. McLaughlin live in this area?—He is one of our dispensary doctors; he is on the Downpatrick side.

12347. Captain Somerset Ward does not live in this area?—He lives in Strangford, and was one of our official Guardians, and never objected to the sick poor crossing the Lough for twenty years.

12348. It is a political move to alter the complexion of Downpatrick Union?—Certainly. The real secret is that seven National Guardians come from Portlough.

Mr. HENRY McGRATH examined.

Jan. 25, 1894

Mr. Henry
McGrath.

12348. CHAIRMAN.—Would you wish to state your view on the question we have been considering?—In addition to being a member of the Downpatrick Board of Guardians, I am also County Councillor for the district.

12349. What district is that?—Downpatrick, the town, and the entire district of Lecale. I take exception to some remarks made by our Chairman, Mr. Andrews. He did not do so intentionally. I admit the County Council as a body did not recommend the disbursement of any union in the county.

Mr. F. Andrews.—I said so.

Witness.—What the County Council did, they fell in with the principle of Mr. Andrews' recommendation, that every union should be conformable with the county. If the principle could be carried out in its entirety with the other portions of your inquiry, and that is, that where geographical changes are to be made, that they should be made with a view to relieving the economical expenditure of the rate and advantage accruing to the sick poor in addition. I pointed that out to Mr. Andrews at the time, and the sub-committee did not deal with those two other portions of your inquiry. They did not deal with the question of how it would affect the ratepayers or what advantage would accrue to the destitute poor; we were not unanimous about that. Another objection I took to Mr. Andrews' proposition was this: about a sanatorium for consumptives. It was mentioned we considered one was absolutely necessary, but we did not recommend that any union in the county should be closed for that purpose. About amalgamation, I do not think it would be any advantage in the county of Down. Mr. McHughan thinks we are largely served by railway communication. We are on the portion you travelled over this morning, but in the central portion of the county we have very inadequate railway communication. I believe there is one being promoted from Ballymore to Newcastle, which will open up the back part, but in the mountain part there is no railway accommodation, nor in the Ards, so that to bring patients to these centres, as one witness suggested, it is not possible.

12351. There would be a local hospital according to the suggestion in each union?—Well, I would follow it as regards the infirm. To bring the infirm from Newry to Banbridge or Downpatrick by ambulance would be a very serious matter, and would entail death.

12352. Do you think the ordinary run of infirm people would not be capable of a railway journey of twenty or thirty miles?—But there is no railway from Newry until you come to Newcastle.

12353. Dr. BROWN.—From Banbridge?—Of course from Banbridge there is. The same argument would apply to other portions, to bring the sick poor. I think, about amalgamation, there are other questions that have been forgotten, and that is this, that no matter whether you amalgamate unions, you must retain dispensary districts, and dispensary doctors, and midwives, and relieving officers. It would be most inhumane to bring the relieving officers for the whole county every week to these centres, and the report book of the doctors and midwives.

12354. CHAIRMAN.—Would you be in favour of a dispensary committee for the examination of such books?—Yes, I think that was a mistake in the Act; the old dispensary committees should have that power or a committee of the Guardians, but you must retain the doctors and sick nurses. Then if you intend to retain the hospitals you must have a casual ward for transients going about.

12355. That does not quite follow, but you don't see how you could do without it?—No; and if you have a casual ward you must have the doctor to go there, and a porter to look after it. My feeling is you could not get the destitute poor conveyed at all to it, and I don't see that there would be much financial advantage, and I have failed to see any recommendation for the whole county where any particular individual or witness has insisted the general public that these geographical changes would be an advantage to the sick poor or the rate.

12356. Mr. McCURRY.—While you are on change of view, you might explain the question raised here?—I was rather surprised that Mr. Weir and Mr. Andrews got up and raised the question of cutting off these three divisions and adding them on to Newtownards. The eastern portion of the Ards, Portaferry, is seventeen or eighteen miles from Newtownards Union, and there is no railway communication. It is six miles only from Downpatrick. Of course there is the ferry, to connect with, but then we have this advantage in the ferry: we have a Royal grant, granted in the reign of Queen Anne, 56 acres of land at either side for the support of two ferry boats, and these convey the ambulance across at the expense of 4s., and they are so constructed that they are not so much subject to the rise and fall of the tide like the ordinary ferry boat. They are a very broad boat, and no sea can disturb them very much.

12357. Is the ambulance horse taken over also?—The horse also. Captain Somerset Ward, who is one of the instructing witnesses, I saw his two horses coming across this morning quite early. There never has been an accident occurred in that boat during the lifetime of the oldest individual in the Co. Down.

12358. Dr. BROWN.—Is it always able to go across?—Always.

12359. Day and night?—Well, after night it is dark. I travel that ferry four times a week on an average, and I travel always by night.

12360. CHAIRMAN.—How long does it take?—It depends on the tide; five minutes or a quarter of an hour. The ambulance crossed twelve times last year, and ten times on an average for the last five years. We pay 15s. to the man who horses the ambulance and 4s. for the ferry.

12361. Dr. BROWN.—What is the population of that district?—4,548.

12362. Had you only twelve admissions to the workhouse from them. Is that about the same ratio of admissions as the rest of the population?—I think so.

12363. Do you not think the ferry is a detriment?—I am sure it is not. Ninety per cent. of the population of 4,500 are in favour of retaining the Downpatrick Union. Dr. MacLaughlin and Captain Ward live on the other side—he does not live in the Ards—and Mr. Hutton lives out of the district, and out of the 4,500 there are opposed to it Mr. Greer and Mr. Dunnean, and I am sure you won't see Mr. Dunnean here. The seven Guardians of the district are entirely in favour of being retained in Downpatrick. It is entirely a political matter altogether, with the object of wiping out the Nationalists, which I do not think they will succeed in doing. I wish to point out a matter that should strike the most violent and enthusiastic supporter of this scheme: the union rating in Downpatrick is 5d.; the union rating in Newtownards is 11d.; the valuation of Ardara is £8,311; the valuation of Portaferry is £2,774, and of Quinlan £26,074—a total of £30,759. If we had to pay our proportion of the union rating in Newtownards it would have cost these three divisions last year £638 more than we did pay, and then we will be joined on to a union which has a large number of loans to pay off, and in Downpatrick we have only a small loan in Portaferry, and portion of the asylum loan in Downpatrick.

12364. Mr. McCURRY.—Do you think that if any candidate stood on the policy of amalgamating either of these three divisions he would poll many votes?—I would wonder he would be at the bottom of the poll. I could get you 75 per cent. of the ratepayers of Portaferry in opposition to this scheme.

12365. Mr. McHUGHAN.—Do you think the Poor Law system of Down is in such a condition of efficiency that it could not be improved?—I do not.

12366. You say amalgamation would not improve it?—I don't think it will. In the first place, I would follow Mr. Andrews' idea about the improving of the district hospitals.

12367. That is going on at present, and that means more cost?—You cannot improve them without further cost. I would carry out the recommendations of the 60th section of the Act, and make the workhouse hospital into a district hospital. We are very badly supplied with hospitals in the county at present. We have only the Downpatrick Infirmary, and we hardly get a patient beyond the fifteen miles radius, and we have Newry, and they only serve a very small area, and the other is Lisburn. Up to the present we have not contributed anything to Lisburn; the others are the workhouse hospitals. I say we should carry out the 60th section and make each hospital attached to a workhouse a district hospital.

12368. Don't you know there is a feeling of dislike to the name of workhouse?—I do. I would call them almshouses.

12369. Don't you think it would be better to separate the sick from the aged and infirm. We found the aged and infirm in Newry sitting about in a big room. Don't

Jan. 15, 1894.

Mr Henry
M. Gresh.

You think these people should be away out in the fields?—Certainly I do. I would keep the sick in the hospitals.

12375. What would you do with the class I refer to, people who don't care to work yet could do a good deal?—That is the able-bodied?

12376. They are classed as infirm and aged, ranging from fifty to sixty-five or seventy years of age; these you have in every house. Don't you think these men would be better away on a farm than cooped up in that little yard or house?—Certainly; I see with you entirely.

12377. How are we going to get at that if you continue the present system. Don't you think it would be a better change to improve the infirmary in every place where there is a workhouse at present. Take away from that infirmary the children, the lunatics, and this class to which I refer, of which there are only 400 in Down, that class we see in every house doing nothing, sifting their time?—These most doing be employed on farms.

12378. Leave the sick in the infirmary, take the children and board them out, take the lunatics to the asylum or auxiliary asylum, then you have nobody but tramps and this class I have referred to?—You must keep a place for the tramps.

12379. I won't deal with them; they are a small and changing class?—They are not small with us; there are thirty or forty a week here.

12380. They don't cost much when you go into figures. I want first to deal with this particular class that I would put in a workhouse, and have one workhouse for them alone?—I would not do that at all with them. I would try and compel them to go and work on farms, where they are required at the present time. There is a perfect dearth of labour at present.

12381. You cannot make a man work any more than you can make a horse drink?—Don't you intend to make him work in your workhouse? I think he should be made work on the farm just as well as on your labour colony. If he is a sturdy individual and won't work in the workhouse, you could deal with him by law.

12382. In that way we will be getting rid of a considerable expense and effecting a very great economy, and, at the same time, raising the standard of efficiency?—I don't think you get rid of much expense. You must have the hospitals and nurses for the hospitals, and you would still have to have a casual ward and a porter and some sort of a master to look after it.

12383. I am trying to get at this difficult class that you don't care to take away from the workhouse?—I would take them away from the workhouse and force them on a farm, where they are wanted every day.

12384. A farmer won't want a man of sixty-five years of age?—He will, but he cannot get them.

12385. CHAIRMAN.—Mr. MURTAGHAN refers to men to far past their labour as not to be taken by a farmer for a day's work?—What good will that man be on your labour colony?

12386. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—They won't do much, but they will take away the name of workhouse from the locality?—You will have to support the men there.

12387. Yes, but one staff will be less expensive than seven?—Will that reduce the number of workhouses in the county to one. You would have the sick poor in the hospitals, you would have the labour colony, and you would have the children in institutions.

12388. Besides that preferably?—Well, then you have another class—your commissioners and responsible men, who have been unfortunate in business. What are you going to do with them?

12389. Have a system of classification at the colony and let them go there?—I would have a sort of almshouse built outside for the purpose of keeping those respectable married couples together. We have that in this union at present at Killybegh and they have not the surroundings of the workhouse attached. Lord Banger keeps up something of that nature on his estate, and they seem happy and comfortable.

12390. You would be inclined to retain the hospitals for the sick?—Yes. We should apply to the workhouse the test they have in Denmark—divide into the necessitous of every pauper who comes in and classify them accordingly. It seems very hard that the sempstress I have spoken about should be cooped up with a woman who has been breeding illegitimate children all her life. Now if they were classified according to their antecedents in life, they would be in different houses.

12391. CHAIRMAN.—At all events if they were in the same institution they should be kept separate?—About the imbeciles. Insane epileptics are being taken into the asylum, and they have a fine opportunity, if they are able to work, of having the advantage of open air. There are about 100 of them working on the farm, they seem very healthy and happy and better than in the workhouse. For the same epileptics, I think there should be a labour colony for the province of Ulster.

12392. There are 400 for the whole of Ireland?—But I should say one institution for the whole of Ireland, unless, as in Scotland, we board them out. Then they are a source of revenue because in their healthy moments they can work.

12393. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—There was a proposition made by a philanthropic lady lately to build a hospital for Ireland, and the Guardians over the county did not approve of it?—If you could improve the status of the Guardians; besides being Guardians of the rate they should be Guardians of the poor; and that is what many of them forget they are.

12394. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—If there was a central institution where these people were sent, do you think it would be necessary to maintain a governing body for the dispensary and collateral matters of that sort in connection with the District Councils?—You would have to have the same dispensary districts and doctors, and the same supervision over them, and you would require to meet weekly or fortnightly to see that the directions had been carried out.

12395. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Supposing the area was continued as it is, could not the Guardians do as they do at present, meet as District Councils, and let after the affairs of the union?—They are not necessarily the same body.

12396. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Each of the Boards could send their governors to this institution?—Yes; but you must have your weekly meetings to look after the dispensaries. I think outdoor relief has not been given with a liberal enough hand.

12397. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Do you give much in this union?—Last year we paid £700. Under the old regime, if they were able to be removed at all, they did not get outdoor relief; now we have been giving it with a more liberal hand. The relieving officers are charged from giving coal. They can now give food, lodging, medicine, or medical attendance, and it is within the province of the auditor to exchange for coal. It seems very harsh on the destitute poor. Some auditors exchange for ordinary food—bacon and butter—things that are and sugar and oatmeal are the only necessities.

12398. CHAIRMAN.—You would like to have but added?—Yes, I think there should be more liberal outdoor relief given.

12399. Are you speaking for yourself personally?—I am speaking for the majority of the Guardians.

12400. That is a matter in your own hands?—We must obtain a certificate of the doctor, which has to be produced every week, and it is very difficult for the doctor to go round and see every recipient of relief weekly.

12401. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—You don't need to do that?—It has been the rule with the Downpatrick Board of Guardians that the relieving officer must produce a certificate from the doctor that the person cannot be removed.

12402. It is not necessary?—I would suggest we should apply the 39th section of the Local Government Act, whereby we can appoint committees for the admission of paupers. I think there should be some district committees for the purpose of looking after outdoor relief to aid the relieving officers. We can relieve a destitute widow with two or three legitimately born children if they are destitute, but there is many a widow who keeps her home intact with very small means, and if we had power to aid her with a supplemental grant.

12403. CHAIRMAN.—You mean poverty, not destitution, should be the test?—Yes.

12404. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Would not that be far more necessary if there is this central institution for the infirm, especially that the casual infirm should not all be driven into it?—I mean that outdoor relief should be given in a more liberal spirit; it is given much more liberally in England.

12405. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—It is given much more liberally in Banbridge?—Yes; and I am very much pleased with the way they give it in Northampton, in Wigan and Wakefield they give 2s. 10d. and 3s. 6d., and the rate is ten outdoor to one indoor; and in Cornwall it is 11s. 6d. against 3s., and it is cheaper there than here.

12406. The Guardians have a good deal of power?—The Downpatrick Board feel they have not sufficient power.

12402. Mr. McCORTAN.—Are you aware that in Bantock there is a 260 acreage pending, and does not your Board live in fear?—Our Board fear things they should not fear. About the question of tramps, I would suggest there should be a register either at the police barracks or at the workhouse, of where labour is secured, and they should be faced to go there and work. Colonel McCree suggested they should be photographed, and perhaps that would be a good idea, but they should be registered somewhere.

12403. And if they refused to go to work?—The other morning at the workhouse I saw ten or twelve able-bodied men coming out. When they are brought before the Board they say they cannot get work; they don't want work. If there was a register of work kept, and they refused to work, then deal drastically with them.

12404. CHAIRMAN.—Farmers would give in their names when they required labour, and then the relieving officer or the police would send the man to him?—Yes.

Dr. NICHOLSON examined.

12407. Mr. McCORTAN.—You have heard the matters that have been put to the witnesses by the Chairman and his colleagues on these issues that they have to inquire into. Have you any opinions to express?—I don't know that I have any, but I think the district hospital should be retained.

12408. CHAIRMAN.—You think it would be necessary that a hospital or infirmary should be retained for the treatment of the destitute or sick poor?—Certainly.

12409. Is that the only part that you professionally are interested in?—Yes.

12410. Dr. NICHOLSON.—With reference to consumption, do you find that there are a large number of cases?—Our numbers have always been very very few; in the last year there were six only.

12411. I mean to say in the district?—It is not very prevalent in my experience.

12412. What is your opinion with regard to the establishment of a sanatorium for a portion of the county or the whole county?—Of course it would be desirable.

12413. CHAIRMAN.—You could send a number of cases from this part of the county if such an institution were opened?—I think they would be very few.

Mr. MATTHEW KING examined.

I am Vice-Chairman of the Killeshel Board of Guardians.

12425. CHAIRMAN.—What did you wish to say for Killeshel?—I think it would be a great grievance on the sick and destitute poor if Killeshel was abolished, because it is in such an isolated position, and it is a very nice place for a workhouse. The majority of the people live on the mountains slope.

12426. If it were closed as a workhouse, would it be a suitable place as a sanatorium for convalescents?—Oh, yes; at the present time there is a very fine hospital connected with the workhouse, and a very good doctor; there are three trained nurses, a master and matron, and the patients are very well looked after.

Mr. McCORTAN.—In fact the army pensioners come down from all parts of Ireland. The last day I was there there was a pensioner from Cork.

12427. Dr. BROWN.—How many have you altogether?—Forty-one or six; they are permanent; they pay about 4s. a week.

12428. CHAIRMAN.—Why is your place a favourite resort for these workhouse?—It seems they are fairly well treated. The master is an old pensioner himself.

12429. Dr. BROWN.—What is the number of inmates in Killeshel?—I think about eighty. It is such an isolated place; it is twenty-one miles to Downpatrick, and twenty miles to Newry.

12430. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—While there might be a suitable place of a hospital there, do you see any great need for what is known as a workhouse?—They are nearly all infirm people in the workhouse; very few in hospital.

12431. According to the report in January last year, half the inmates were in the infirmary—thirty in the infirmary and thirty-eight in the body of the house. Supposing the infirmary was retained there and you retain all the privileges you have at present, do you 12405. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Do you think the farmers would care for that class about their doors?—When I get them in the potato season I am very glad to have them. I had a tramp last year, and I offered 2s. 6d. a day, and he would not come for that. He went to another man, who offered him his food and 1s. a day. "A shilling a day," he said, "that will only be six bottles of porter for me." We tried the cold bath and stone-breaking, but the master of the workhouse told the Board he would require a superintendent for each tramp to make him work.

12406. Mr. ANDREW.—Mr. McCORTAN has expounded his views so fully that I think it unnecessary to question him. We have seen his skill as a lawyer, and if report is to be believed, he is equally famous as a navigator. He considers discretion is the better part of valour, and when the ferry is a bit stormy he prefers to remain by his fireside?—I absolutely take exception to Mr. Andrew's remarks. I cross that stormy water five times a week.

Jan. 15, 1904.

Mr. Henry
McGrath.

12414. The few that are there, are they a danger to the public health of their families?—Not in my experience.

Dr. Nelson

12415. Are they cases of phthisis?—Yes.

12416. Are they living in small houses or in better-class houses?—I have not much experience of cases in small houses.

12417. Mr. McCORTAN.—Would your hospital require enlargement if the ages that Downpatrick was supposed to serve was enlarged?—Yes; we cannot do much more than accommodate our present numbers.

12418. Your accommodation is exceeded at the present time?—Not exceeded; we can meet all demands.

12419. In regard to this other question, have you ever known of any deterrent on the sick coming from Portaferry?—No.

12420. How long have you been medical officer of this union?—I am not quite sure; upwards of twenty years, at all events.

12421. And the sick from that district have availed themselves of Downpatrick in all cases?—As far as I am aware.

12422. You have never known of any bad effects happening from being conveyed in the van across the Lough?—I don't recollect any.

see any hardship in sending what are called the able-bodied by some, and aged and infirm by others to a central house?—I don't think there are any aged or infirm except army pensioners.

Mr. Matthew King.

12430. There are fourteen or fifteen?—I really think they should be removed.

12431. Is not that a reason why Killeshel could be done without as a workhouse but still retained as an infirmary?—What advantage would that be?

12432. It would cut down the cost?—I question it very much.

12433. You have a workhouse staff and infirmary staff at present?—But if you divide our union among two or three other unions you will have to employ two or three relieving officers; what staff would you get rid of?

12434. The master and matron, and you would get rid of a great deal of the cost of the house which you have to pay now?—My experience of all these amalgamations is that it increases the cost.

12435. You are not speaking from experience?—I am, indeed.

12436. In what way?—All these amalgamations and retrenchments increase the expense in the work of the county. On the asylum they have spent £20,000 in the last three years.

12437. That is not amalgamation; that is enlargement and improvement?—Just bringing the inmates out of the workhouse into the asylum.

12438. That is not putting anything more on the ratepayers, because the inmates taken from the workhouse can be kept at a cheaper rate in the asylum than in the workhouse, considering that £10 a year is given as a capitation grant?—And how much would it come to erecting a central building in the county for those inmates?

Jan. 14, 1904.
Mr. Matthew King.

12439. You have four or five; any one of them would be suitable, or could be made suitable?—It is very strange; the old workhouses were not suitable to make an auxiliary asylum out of, and it was recommended that a new building should be built in Downpatrick, and now you suggest to fix another workhouse up for some other building.

12440. When workhouses can be made suitable for infirmaries they certainly can be made suitable for pauper inmates?—Some years ago there were two rooms proposed to be fixed up for treated women, and we could not have all two decent rooms for the inmates of the whole lot building.

Dr. BROWN.—That was only to get the women accommodated close to the infirmary; the rest of the building was empty.

Dr. J. P. MacLAUGHLIN examined.

Dr. J. P. MacLaughlin.

Before I give any evidence I wish to disclaim anything political in coming here, and secondly, I do not come here as an official of the union, but as an individual who has had abundant opportunities of observing, for the long space of twenty-six years, the difficulties and dangers of crossing that ferry. I have heard it stated that for years the ambulance was taken backwards and forwards over that ferry. But since the Local Government Act things have been improved, and the present ambulance is a splendid machine, but I consider it dangerous to put it into a ferry boat crossing that arm of the sea. On account of its size the centre of gravity is very high, and in a strong wind it is like a sail. I should not think the freeboard of the horse boat is more than 14 or 15 inches. The tide runs in there at the rate of five or six miles an hour, and when there is a strong wind it kicks up a heavy sea.

12441. Mr. Andrews.—You live quite close to the ferry yourself?—Yes.

12442. And you are a pretty skilled yachtsman, too?—I would not take £50 and go into that ambulance or any machine to be locked up and cross the ferry. I have seen patients come over quite frightened. As far as the cutting-off of Portadown is concerned, it is nothing to me personally; I don't care. I will give the present Board of Guardians, who have now a Nationalist majority, the credit of having done two or three very good reforms in this union since they came into power. First, the midwives and the houses, two things I have been advocating for years and years.

12443. So that it is entirely for the interests of the sick poor you advocate this change?—Yes, I think the boats are not fit for the purpose. I was witness to a boat taking nearly four hours. She started from Portadown at 1 o'clock, was carried up the Lough, and got into the arm of the bay, and I assisted myself in drawing the rope.

12444. At all times of the day there is a strong tide?—Yes; sometimes you get the wind against the tide.

12445. CHAIRMAN.—The time you saw this boat in difficulties there was no ambulance on board?—The ambulance was on board, and the man in it. It started at 1 o'clock and got in at 5 o'clock. Two horses are not sufficient to drag that enormous boat across.

12446. About what is the length of it?—I should say the horse boat was 27 feet or 30 feet on the water line, and 8 feet beam.

12447. Has it a flat bottom?—A flat bottom.

12448. Was the horse in the shafts at the time?—No; the boat is brought up alongside the slip, and a wooden rail is laid, and the ambulance is run in and lowered with ropes. The horse is taken out and put alongside the ambulance.

12449. Mr. McCutcheon.—Of course the ambulance is taken across the way all other conveyances are taken across?—Of course.

12450. You will pardon me for assuming that it was political motives induced you to volunteer, but it is curious that you are associated with these gentlemen from other parts of the union?—Yes; but I can assure you that it is only as a man I am here.

12451. Shall I open your name out as instructing the solicitor?—I only come here as a witness. I am not instructing anybody that I am aware of. I am here as a ratepayer.

Mr. Andrews.—I don't appear on behalf of any political body.

12452. Mr. McCutcheon.—Am I to cross your name out as instructing the solicitor?—I have nothing to do with instructing the solicitor. I am simply a witness, living above the ship, and seeing what is taking place.

12453. None of your sick have to face this ferry?—No.

12454. Who is the dispensary doctor whose sick have to face it?—The doctor on the Portadown side.

12455. Have you ever had any conversation with him about it? You won't venture to assert that he will agree with you in this matter?—I presume he gives in order to the relieving officer to remove a patient, and knows no more about it. I live on the near side.

12456. You were out yachting on the day this episode occurred?—The day the horse boat was carried up the Lough I was out in my own district seeing patients.

12457. Now we must take it on your assertion that it is the interest of the sick poor of another district, and not your own, that brings you here?—I came here to speak about this horse boat. It is a matter of no concern to me. I am a land of passage.

12458. If you could get rid of Mr. McGrath you would have a happy life?—Since there has been a change in the complexion of the Board the medical officers have had a good deal of peace. Under Mr. Green's chairmanship I have no complaints to make. With regard to the consumptive cases, would you allow me to say that I really think something should be done with regard to them. I have seen a family of five swept away in five months, and it is awfully hard to know what to do for them.

12459. CHAIRMAN.—You refer to small houses where there is no possible separation?—Yes; patients expectorating, and the walls, and floors, and everything saturated with bacilli; if something could be done it would be a great benefit.

12460. You would be glad to see an institution for the county, or for a district, where you could send consumptive cases for treatment?—Yes; I have a couple at present, and cannot get them to keep the doors or windows open.

12461. Dr. BROWN.—Do you think it is on the increase?—I don't think so; the population has decreased considerably.

12462. Would they go ten, or fifteen, or twenty miles to a sanatorium?—I have no doubt they would in the early stages; it is generally in young people it breaks out.

12463. They cannot isolate them at home?—No, it is impossible, and the hacking cough at night disturbs the rest of the family.

12464. Mr. McCutcheon.—Has there ever happened any accident in connection with bringing the sick poor across?—No; that I heard of.

12465. And except for the day the horse boat wandered up the Lough a bit, this is the only particular instance you can illustrate your complaint with?—What I mentioned was the difference in size of the ambulance to what it was in the olden days. It was then a very much smaller machine than the present one.

12466. Your apprehensions would be quieted if you had these six Councilors sent away north?—I don't care where they are sent.

Mr. J. R. McCutcheon examined.

Mr. J. R. McCutcheon.

I am Chairman of the Town Commissioners. I come here to endorse what the Chairman of the County Council has said, and to express my adherence to him of a sanatorium for the Co. Down.

Captain the Hon. SOMERSET WARD examined.

Capt. the Hon. Somerset Ward.

12467. Mr. Andrews.—As we know, you are the agent for Lord Bangor and Lord Dunleath, and you have had considerable experience of crossing here?—I live at the ferry; it has come under my own observation that there are times when the horse boat cannot cross the ferry at all. Mr. McGrath stated just now that he saw one of my horses crossing the ferry this morning. That is perfectly true, but he did not state—perhaps he was not aware—that I drove over from Ballyvaughan yesterday and came to the ferry about 1 o'clock, and the horse-boat man told me he could not cross until later. He made two attempts to cross the ferry with my horse and had to put back both times, and I had to leave my horse in Portaferry. If an urgent case had come to Portaferry, perhaps a case of infectious disease, it would be a serious matter if that person was kept in Portaferry all night. I thought I would come here and state the fact of what actually took place yesterday. On another occasion I drove over from Ballyvaughan and the horse-boat could not land at Strangford at all—had to go up the Lough and land at Castleward pier—so there are occasions when it would be absolutely impossible for that horse-boat to cross the ferry at all, and I don't suppose the horse-boat man would attempt to cross the ferry if there was any danger of capsizing with the ambulance. But what I feel is this, that there might be occasions on which it was very important indeed that a sick person should be taken across and the horse-boat could not take him across, and he would be detained in Portaferry without any place to go to, and if it was a case of infection it might be a serious matter for the town of Portaferry.

12458. And the case you gave us of yesterday's experience is an illustration of similar difficulties that have occurred to you?—Oh, yes; there are many occasions when the horse-boat cannot cross the ferry. I remember seeing a case in which the horse-boat must have been two hours crossing the ferry. With a strong westerly wind and a flood tide the horse-boat has to row down an immense distance towards the bar before it can cross; on this occasion it had to row down a very long distance and was swept up along past Strangford, and had to come back again, and I am sure they were more than two hours crossing. It struck me it was a very serious matter for the poor man in the ambulance.

12459. CHAIRMAN.—How long ago was this?—Some time last year. Jan. 15, 1904.

12470. How used they cross over in the old time before the new ambulance was got?—I don't know. I don't know they had not paid particular attention to the ambulance crossing. Capt. the Hon. Scarsden on Ward.

12471. You were a Guardian: how did they cross then?—The same way, only it was a smaller ambulance; but I feel perfectly confident that the man in charge of the horse-boat simply would not bring the ambulance across. There are days when the horse-boat itself could not get across.

12472. Mr. McGowan.—The whole of this difficulty can only be met by sending those six men about their business—I don't know anything about that. I don't pretend to give an opinion as to how it is to be met at all.

12473. Send them in portulans infidelius—I have nothing to say to that matter at all.

12474. If there was a provision that one hospital could send an emergency case to another hospital and be responsible for the charge temporarily, I suppose that would and the whole of this serious question?—Certainly; if there was any arrangement made so that the sick person should not be obliged to cross the ferry except in good weather.

12475. Taking ordinary normal times, people travel from Portaferry this way to Belfast?—There are many few days when an ordinary boat cannot cross, but the horse-boat is a different thing.

Mr. McGowan.—I have to thank you for your courtesy in intimating that you would not close the inquiry absolutely without giving us an opportunity of calling witnesses from that district.

CHAIRMAN.—Certainly. If there was a probability of its being decided contrary to the opinion of the majority of the Guardians, I think we will give you an opportunity.

Mr. JOHN GREEN examined.

12476. Mr. Andrews.—What do you wish to say with reference to the difficulties of crossing this ferry?—The evidence I wish to give is as to the difficulty of a boat going across the ferry carrying the poor and sick. I know from experience. For the last thirty-five years I have been managing the boat, and instead of its being a matter of five minutes, I have known the boat take from half-an-hour to five hours; inside the last three months a man went across in the ambulance who was five hours on the water. And the men have told me repeatedly that they declined to let the new ambulance or boat the boat at all; it is unwieldy and top-heavy. In my time we had to pay for one cart that went bodily out of the boat by the roll of the sea, and another time a cart-load of cement went, and a short time ago a bread-cart.

12477. CHAIRMAN.—Are the trustees responsible for that?—Well, no; the men are bound to navigate the boat, but they are not responsible for what occurs after.

12478. Mr. Andrews.—I presume there is a strong tide now?—There is a tide as the rate of eight or nine miles an hour, and when the wind is against it there is sea, and it is nearly impossible to keep a top-heavy cart in the boat. I brought this matter before Colonel Forde and General Montgomery when the Local Government Act came in, to see if a charge could not be made with regard to the sick coming across the ferry; and if he lived I think he would have brought this matter up. There is a strong tide, and they must row nearly a mile to get up. I say it is bordering on absolute cruelty to put a poor person in that boat at this present time.

12479. Mr. McGowan.—This would be the district hospital: you say a poor person should not be sent to this district hospital?—I don't know; I don't wish to offer any opinion.

12480. You say that the whole of that must go into Newtownards Union?—I would certainly say I recommended that to Colonel Forde. Mr. John Green.

12481. Is that the only remedy?—I don't care where the poor go so; they should not go across that ferry.

12482. That is the only remedy to divert administration and everything?—No. I am not interested in the political aspect, but the poor and sick should not go across that ferry.

12483. Should not a poor person have the option of going into another district hospital and let his district pay for him?—I don't give an opinion on that.

12484. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think it would be desirable to have a cottage hospital at some mid-point?—That was raised forty years ago to have a hospital in Portaferry, and the ambulance was adopted instead.

12485. Mr. McGowan.—Would the cottage hospital at Portaferry meet the case?—I think there would be no difficulty in going to Newtownards; they have a beautiful ambulance, and it is only two hours.

12486. Mr. Andrews.—Is not portion of this district nearer to Newtownards than to Downpatrick?—Yes, a good part of it; part of Ardara.

12487. Mr. McGowan.—Then it is part of one electoral division?—No, part of the three electoral divisions. You could go a great deal faster with the poor to Newtownards than to Downpatrick.

12488. What about the administration of the relieving officer. The relieving officer has districts on each side of the Lough?—I believe he has.

12489. You would say the Guardians of Portaferry should travel to Newtownards every Saturday?—The evidence I wish to give is with respect to the carriage of the poor across the water.

12490. And if that is remedied that is all you want?—Yes.

Mr. JAMES HYTON examined.

12491. Mr. Andrews.—You are an ex-Chairman of the union?—Yes.

12492. And you were a Guardian for twenty years?—For twenty-one or twenty-two years.

12493. Can you just tell the Commissioners what proposal you would make?—I wish to explain my position, as I have been accused here of being a political leader, which I deny absolutely. And it has been said also here that this matter has not been discussed or complained of at our Boards of Guardians. That is Mr. James Hyton.

Jan. 13, 1904.

Mr. James

not exactly correct, for our late chairman, Colonel Forde, often and often in my hearing has said he thought it a most cruel thing to bring the poor across that ferry. This thing almost has originated with me. I have had a conversation with Colonel Forde on many occasions about this matter, and on reading the evidence given before you on this Commission it struck me there was an opportunity now of remedying this mistake, this geographical error. It is perfect murder to bring a sick person across that ferry. I have gone across it a few times, but not for many years, and the less the better.

12494. Do you wish to make any proposal with reference to any Districts that you think should be substituted?—There are other districts that lie into the Downpatrick Union that would be more convenient. There was one division made application some years ago to get connected with our union—Glendrummond.

12495. Does Saintfield adjoin that?—The railway runs through it into Downpatrick, and there is another division belonging to Kilkeel, Maghera.

12496. You think those might be well substituted for this other district?—I think so.

12497. Was there an observation you wished to make with reference to the question of rating?—Yes. I differ from the majority of the Board of Guardians in regard to the rating. My opinion is that it would tend to the ratepayers' interest certainly to have divisional rating, as it used to be.

12498. Can you give your reason for that?—There is a feeling of the ratepayers when it is a union rating that there should be more money spent on their districts than otherwise, and there is a laxity in the expenditure of the ratepayers' money under the present system.

12499. Mr. McCortan.—This geographical question would not arise if the sick poor had their option, on emergency, of going to the other district hospital. If you take them away and don't put them across the ferry, I don't care where you put them.

12500. Their geographical green might remain?—

Yes.

Mr. Andrews.—Mr. Donnell, our other witness, is not in attendance.

CHAIRMAN.—If this question of transferring the lower part of the Ards to Newtownards from Downpatrick comes before us so that we have to decide which union it should belong to, personally, I think, and my colleagues have not expressed any dissent, I think it would be desirable to have some more evidence, but it is very possible the whole thing may be decided without that being necessary.

Mr. Andrews.—Of course if there is further evidence being given by Mr. McGrath, we should get notice.

CHAIRMAN.—Certainly.

Mr. Green.—Would you take it from me that the Downpatrick Board are, generally, in favour of union rating.

The sitting terminated.

TWENTY-SIXTH PUBLIC SITTING.—MONDAY, FEBRUARY 27th, 1904. Feb. 5, 1904.

At the Courthouse, Dundalk.

Present:—Mr. MACKE (Chairman), Mr. MURTAGHAN, and Dr. COTT BIGGER.

CHAIRMAN.—Our next course is, first, to obtain evidence from the County Council, and we shall be glad to receive evidence now from any County Councillors who are here deputed by the Council.

Mr. M'KEE.—I am instructed to appear on behalf of the Guardians of the Ardee Union, and I would be obliged if you could have our witnesses examined to-day, and for this reason, that to-morrow is the Board-day of the Ardee Union, and they will be engaged there.

CHAIRMAN.—I expect we will be finished without any difficulty to-day unless there is some evidence more than is usually presented. I should not think there would be any difficulty in finishing.

Mr. M'KEE.—I don't think the other unions which are interested are professionally represented or intend to be represented to-day, and I would ask you to hear me state our views.

CHAIRMAN.—We always like to hear first the views of the County Council, as the central and chief local authority in the county.

Mr. JOSEPH DELAN examined.

I am one of those deputed from the County Council, but the Chairman of the County Council is coming also.

12501. CHAIRMAN.—As you are here it may be more convenient to take your evidence. The first query that we put to the County Council was: "Whether, having regard to the extent, population, necessities of the sick and destitute poor, and economic condition of the county of Louth, and the facilities of locomotion and proper administration of the Poor Law therein, it would be expedient to dissolve any of the unions wholly or partly contained in the county, and if so, what arrangements, whether by amalgamation or otherwise, should be substituted therefor." What is the view of the County Council?—Our opinions differ. Mr. Hingham, the Chairman, is in favour of amalgamating some of the unions; my opinion is the very contrary to that.

12502. You have in your county three unions, Ardee, Drogheda, and Dundalk?—Yes.

12503. You say your opinion would be against breaking up any of the three unions?—Yes.

12504. But the County Council was divided on that question?—Yes, opinion was divided upon it.

12505. Was there a division on it?—No; it was merely an expression of opinion.

12506. And no poll taken?—No, there was not.

12507. I may take it that the County Council has not expressed any view?—No; their opinion being divided, they did not express anything very definite upon it.

12508. They left that altogether?—To the individual unions.

12509. And the evidence given before this Commission—what is your own view, you are against amalgamation?—Yes; so long as the system remains anything like what it is, I think the three unions are required for the necessities of the poor.

12510. Supposing there were some great change made in the system?—I don't see any changes proposed which would do away with the difficulty of a number of aged and infirm in each district who would want to be provided for, and I think it would be a great hardship on them to draft them to one central place. To remove them from the workhouse they are in at present, which they did not enter very willingly perhaps, but which was more or less a home to them, they would feel it a great grievance to be compelled to leave all the surroundings of their life. In Drogheda, Ardee, and Dundalk the aged and infirm population of each workhouse are practically more or less in their own homes.

12511. They are close to their own people than they would be if deported to a central workhouse?—Yes; I think it would be a great hardship on them to be sent to a central workhouse.

12512. What is the benefit of being in their own neighbourhood?—It is mostly a sentimental one, but one which must be considered.

12513. Are there any practical advantages?—They are more in touch with their own people, and are able to get a little kindness from them occasionally.

12514. Have you made inquiries about the number of visits that are paid, not to the sick in hospital, but to the aged and infirm?—I have not. I know they are often neglected, but there are many people whose friends do look after them to a certain extent; but in general they have a feeling, whether it is reasonable or not, that they are not so cut off from their homes, and their ties with home are not so cut off as when they are in another place. And I don't see that anything would be gained in economy. There is no scheme suggested that would produce much economy in their care, or much more efficient care than they get in the three present workhouses.

12515. What you are considering is the closing of one workhouse, and the inmates going to another workhouse conducted on exactly the same lines as hitherto?—Yes.

12516. And you would be against that?—Yes.

12517. I think I would be against that myself, but supposing an entirely different system were adopted on it—With all the suggestions made no one has been able to suggest any really different system; if there were it would affect one's views, perhaps, but I have read of none yet.

12518. If you take the different classes of inmates in the workhouse, the class that is most important, the sick; of course you don't contemplate transferring them to any place. It would be a cruel hardship to oblige sick people to go to long distances, so assuming now that the sick were left where they are, then the other classes you would have would be the aged and infirm. Passing these over for a moment, you would have the lunatics. Do you think they ought to be removed from the workhouses?—No. I think if there could be a central institution for them, it would probably be an advantage; but I don't think there are enough in any one county to make material for a central institution.

12519. Here you send your lunatics to Dublin?—Yes. The County Council have been at different times talking about revising their lunatic system of maintenance, and considering would it ever be possible for them to have a county lunatic asylum.

12520. It is a very small country?—It is, but we have a good thing, I believe, in the Richmond population; but I think if that question ever is taken up, and it ever is found feasible or possible to have a county asylum, then it would, of course, be right and necessary to provide in that asylum not merely for the lunatics at present in Richmond, but also for all the harmless lunatics and insane epileptics of workhouses, and it would be very desirable to transfer them from the workhouses to that institution.

12521. Is it your opinion that at present the workhouse is not a suitable place for lunatics?—Yes.

12522. Therefore you would be in favour either of removing them to a central asylum, or, failing that, to an auxiliary asylum?—Yes.

12523. The next class you would have would be the children?—I think they should be boarded-out or dispatched in some way, rather than be maintained in the workhouse. It is not always found possible to get desirable and willing foster-parents for them.

12524. You are a Guardian, are you?—No. I am not, but I am connected with Ardee district. I know there

Mr. Joseph.

Mr. Joseph
Delane.

they have but a small proportion boarded-out, and I think they would be inclined to board more out if they could find suitable homes for them.

12525. Are you aware that there is a boarding-out arrangement in connection with the Armagh Orphanage?—I don't understand it.

12526. In this county, I think?—I am not acquainted with it.

12527. The Cardinal, I think, has one?—Yes, but I only know of it in a vague way. But I think—and every one thinks—that if the children could be provided for somewhere else it would be very desirable, and if foster-parents cannot be found for them they ought to be sent to an industrial school.

12528. It is very largely a question of price; if a little more is offered you will find the demand for these children greatly increased?—Perhaps so.

12529. What do you pay at Ardee?—I think 2s. a week. I think they have only six.

12530. That is a little low?—It is. I think every Board of Guardians is in favour of having these children out of the workhouse.

12531. Then the women who come in to give birth to illegitimate children?—That is a difficulty, and no one seems to know how to get over it.

12532. We have had a great deal of evidence in different places, and a scheme was outlined by some witnesses. There already are in existence, under the management of religious bodies of various denominations, homes or refuges for the reclamation of girls after their first fall. Would you be in favour of an arrangement by which the Guardians, instead of sending these girls into the workhouse to remain there three or four months before their confinement and some weeks afterwards, an arrangement by which these girls would be placed under religious influences of their own denomination?—Yes, I think it would be very desirable.

12533. And the Guardians should pay?—Yes.

12534. That would be likely to reclaim girls and diminish the illegitimate population?—Perhaps so.

12535. Are you aware that we find a great many mothers with two, three, four, five, or six illegitimate children. If steps were taken early it is only reasonable to suppose that would be diminished to some extent?—Yes, it is to be hoped so.

12536. Then you have in the workhouse a very small number—if you exclude those women who come in for child-birth—if you exclude those you will have a very small number of able-bodied men and women in the workhouse—for all Ireland it is about 4,000; would you be in favour of putting these people in some central institution for a province, where they would be obliged to work hard for their maintenance? You don't include in these the aged and infirm at all?—No, certainly not.

12537. No, certainly not?—Well, I think that class you refer to, the able-bodied, I don't know how you could depict them to advantage, except at great cost and without much material advantage to themselves, to a central place. As a rule they come in only for a week and go out again; that is my experience of Ardee.

12538. You have very few of that class in rural districts, but in towns you have large numbers?—But they should not be encouraged. If there was any system by which they could be made earn their way it would be very desirable. I have not taken that into account in expressing an opinion against amalgamation, because I don't know how you could manage to deal with the casual cases—with the ins-and-outs.

12539. That is really a chronic condition of destitution. They go out to look for work and come in?—It seems to me you require these local workhouses to provide for them; if you give them outdoor relief it will probably be mis-spent.

12540. What class of people have you in your mind?—Able-bodied men of indifferent character.

12541. Are they men of intemperate and thriftless habits?—They very often are.

12542. Would you object to these men being put under restraint in some central institution with a view of really putting them on a better basis?—No; I would not object to it.

12543. Are there many really honest hard-working people who are in that condition?—No, but there will always be a few.

12544. Owing to the falling away of employment?—Yes; all the people who are taken on casual employment there will be a certain number thrown idle every winter, and the people who are most inefficient must necessarily go to the workhouses.

12545. Have you many such cases going to the workhouse?—Not many; perhaps there would be a dozen families.

12546. Hardly so many in Ardee?—It seems to me if you abolish a workhouse you have no means of providing for these sort of people.

12547. On the 1st of January of the past year you had not a single one of that class in your workhouse?—No; they are a small class, I admit.

12548. Your twelve families would mean a population bigger than your whole able-bodied wards?—I don't know, but it seems to me you must have some provision for them in case they should come. There will always be a number left more or less destitute in winter.

12549. In Ardee a place where employment has fallen away lately to some extent?—To a considerable extent; there is less and less slitting.

12550. It is really a case of the people not being able to be supported by industry?—It is.

12551. Then if all these classes go from the workhouse—mothers, children, inmates, and shops—where no other persons left to consider except the tramps and the aged and infirm. Now, the tramps; do you think it would be any hardship on them?—I have very vague ideas about the tramps. I don't see what can be done with them. Though the present system is not at all satisfactory, in our union they give us very little trouble.

12552. And very little expense?—Very little expense.

12553. But they are an undesirable class of the community?—They are, but I am afraid it is not possible to eliminate them.

12554. They are useless, but there are a few honest-looking for work?—Yes, that is the difficulty. If they could get a note from their original home saying what they are, and if they could then obtain lodging from an outdoor relief authority, or any other local authority.

12555. And failing that, do you think they could be safely dealt with by the police as vagrants?—That would cost a great deal more than at present.

12556. But it may put a stop to it?—If it would put a stop to it I think it would be well, but if it does them under the surface instead it might do more harm than good; if it led them to avoid the place.

12557. If they were consigned for a tolerably long period to some central institution for able-bodied, where they would be obliged to work on a farm or in some other way?—If a system of that kind could be carried out it would be desirable.

12558. It would break them from their present habits, and a great many of these people have children, and they are raised as chronic tramps?—Yes, that seems to be one of the evils of the system. It is rather a permanent, but I think it would be worth making the experiment.

12559. Now then the aged and infirm are the only class left?—It is chiefly that class I am considering in saying I would oppose the dissolution of the workhouse. That is the most important class in our country workhouses except the sick.

12560. You have forty-five sick in your workhouse and forty-four aged and infirm. These aged and infirm are people who are able just to hobble about and do a few little things; the women are useful in mending and knitting; the men are not very much use?—Yes; they carry coals, and do some work of that sort, and work in the garden.

12561. But they are not invalid, except that they are broken down by age?—Yes, or rheumatism.

12562. Do you see that there would be much hardship in sending these people to a central institution?—It seems to me that there would.

12563. Suppose Ardee, or any other workhouse, were selected as a large workhouse for the aged and infirm of the district?—I imagine they would find it a good deal of a hardship.

12564. You are not aware of any case where this experiment has been tried?—No, I am not, but it seems to me—

12565. There is a wrench undoubtedly. I have superintended myself the removal of inmates from one workhouse to another in two cases, and there were most heartrending scenes, as if they were leaving their homes, but the next time I visited the new workhouse, I found these people pleased with the change—they were having a better time?—Apart from that consideration, could they be any better treated or cared for?

Feb. 8, 1904

Mr. Joseph
Dolan.

think that would apply, because in the small workhouse of Ardee the maintenance there is smaller than the others; the workhouse costs less than the others.

12565. That is what makes me think it might be possible for them to have better times elsewhere?—If that is due to the inferior treatment given, but I don't think it is.

12566. Mr. MURKIN.—High valuation?—I think it is economy in administration in general, but I don't think the economy applies to the food.

12567. CHAIRMAN.—It is the valuation, I expect?—Certainly. I think their treatment in Ardee Workhouse is fully as good as in any of the others.

12568. We have been there, but it did not strike us as anything special?—No, there may not be; but I imagine they get the same treatment as far as food and cleanliness goes.

12569. Any change, at all events as regards the part of the COUNTY you are acquainted with, ought to provide for the treatment of the sick in the immediate neighbourhood of their own homes?—Certainly. I think it would be a most disastrous thing to abolish a hospital anywhere it exists.

12570. Some of the people who come in to receive treatment in the hospital are people who could afford to pay a little?—Sometimes they are.

12571. And sometimes a considerable amount. Would you approve of an amendment of the law that would enable Boards of Guardians to, at their own discretion up to a certain amount, require the friends and relatives of patients to pay for them?—Yes.

12572. That would be discretionary with the Guardians; not a hard-and-fast rule that would operate severely, but if the Guardians thought a man could afford to pay from 5d. to 1s. a week up to the actual cost of treatment, do you think it would be a good thing to give that discretion?—I think it would.

12573. That is tried in some county infirmaries and has worked exceedingly well—Lisburn and Enniskillen. They get very large sums indeed in Lisburn. I think they more than pay the doctor's salary. Now as regards rating, what is your view about the area for rating?—I think the present system of union rating is the fairest. I heard some people advocating district rating; that is a question between a town and country district. I have no opinion on that. I am not interested in that.

12575. You think it would increase outdoor relief?—Yes. A great many who would be better for entering the workhouse would remain out at a hardship to themselves rather than go to the central workhouse, and they would suffer in that way. On the other hand, if outdoor relief could be given on a more liberal scale to deserving people, it would be a great benefit, and a great many of the old, who go to the workhouse unwillingly, would be happier outside on outdoor relief, though I don't think they would be better off. If they get a little more than the present rate of 1s. 5d. or 2s. it is not enough to feed them for the week.

12576. That is a matter for the Guardians; they don't need any change?—No, that is so. I heard a suggestion that if there were district nurses, which I think everybody recognizes as a very useful addition to the Poor Law system, if they were made part of the Poor Law system.

12577. CHAIRMAN.—One for each dispensary district?—Yes, I think that would be a proper area for one.

12578. It is a natural thing to have one under each doctor. You would be strongly in favour of that?—Certainly; and perhaps that nurse's duties might include an occasional visit to the old and infirm people.

12579. Of course, and in the training of nurses in the future, efforts might be made to get midwifery training for those district nurses?—Yes, so that we might dispense with the midwife.

12580. Still there would be always a danger; there are a great many cases they could not attend and look after?—Then it would be better to retain both.

12581. Would you be in favour of having the training of the nurses carried on at some central place in the county, say at the county infirmary, and then, if there was a sort of reciprocity or interchange between them, that all the nurses could be trained there, and it would be unnecessary for the Guardians to send to Dublin, or Belfast, or elsewhere. They would get a nurse as they wanted her at much less cost?—I have no opinion on that question. I never entertained it.

12582. Mr. MURKIN.—You say you have never seen any suggestion put before the public as regards any reform of the system?—I mean anything more desirable than those general things.

12583. It has been suggested that certain classes mentioned by the Chairman might with profit be removed from the workhouse?—Certainly.

12584. If, for instance, those four classes mentioned by the Chairman were removed from the workhouse, you would have very few left?—Very few; but in a workhouse like Ardee you would have forty-five, one-third of the present population, and you would have, of course, the hospital.

12585. Do you think it is worth while keeping it there with a staff for forty-four or forty-five inmates. Don't you think there is a good deal of waste in that?—There is, but I don't see you would save anything by abolishing it. The waste on the building was incurred long ago.

12586. The building could be utilized for some other purpose, such as a lunatic asylum or some institution?—Certainly, if the building were utilized; but I don't see that there is any suggestion for utilizing all the buildings.

12587. Our business is to go through the country and get suggestions from men like yourself, who know the wants and needs of the county in which you live; and the suggestion has already been made that in some counties one workhouse would do for the class known as the aged and infirm; that is a very large class, perhaps the largest of the six. Do you not think that one house of that kind, modernized, brought up to a higher standard, would be sufficient to accommodate all the aged and infirm in the Co. Louth. The whole number would be only 333. Would not almost any house in Louth accommodate 333?—Yes, I think either of the three workhouses would.

12588. You would see no objection to that if it could be done without incurring additional cost to the ratepayers?—I think it would cause additional cost, and I don't think it would produce more efficiency. In a case like Ardee, it would equalize our rates with those of Dundalk and Drogheda, which are much higher.

12589. Suppose you had the management of your own particular union, and arranged with the central workhouse of the county for the maintenance of the people from your area at a certain rate per head, how would that affect you financially?—Unless the rate per head were higher than it is with us.

12590. Don't you know that when a thing is done wholesale it can be done much cheaper than when it is done piecemeal?—Yet Dundalk and Drogheda Workhouses have double the population of Ardee and the maintenance costs more.

12591. How about the valuation. It is not the population affects the rates. High valuation and small numbers relieved bring things down?—The cost per head of the inmates of Ardee Workhouse is less than the cost per head of the inmates of Drogheda and Dundalk, though in each of these there is practically twice the population of Ardee.

12592. If you look into the matter you will find that valuation has a great deal to do with the rating?—But not with the cost per head of maintenance of the inmates.

12593. If those inmates in your houses were put in a central institution they could be maintained at a price. I would think a great deal less than at present. Would you object to pay that?—Certainly not. If they would be as well done for, and it would cost no more, or even if they were better done for, I don't see why we should object to its costing more; but if they were only as well done for, and it should cost more, then I would object.

12594. Do you see anything feasible in such a proposal as establishing some central institution for a particular class?—There is a good deal to be said for it but for the hardship on the aged and infirm of transporting them from what have been their homes. If by giving them really better accommodation you could make them prefer their new homes to the old, the difficulty would be got over.

12595. Of the few workhouses that have already been done away with, I am very well acquainted with one, and there is no complaint whatever over it, and the Guardians who opposed the amalgamation originally are now quite in favour of it and say it has brought them a benefit in the reduction of the rates, and their

Feb. 8, 1904,

Mr. Joseph
Dolan.

is no complaint from the locality that the people have to go too far?—You could hardly effect a reduction of the rates in this case.

12592. What is the rate in your union?—The rate for union purposes is 11d. on buildings in Ardee; in Drogheda, 14d., and in Dunsink, 18d., and equivalently less on land, 5d., 3d., and 7d., and it has been in that proportion for the last three years.

12593. I think you will find on inquiry that the valuation has a great deal to do with that?—Yes, I know it has.

12594. Now you say you think it would be necessary to have some place for the accommodation of these inmates. Do you not think the fact that a workhouse is here and there over the county as a sort of attraction for these men?—It is.

12595. Do you not think they say: "Well, if I get broken down or am hard up I can get into the workhouse for a fortnight." Perhaps if that workhouse was not there so convenient they might not put their trust in it?—Yes; but you must provide for them by outdoor relief.

12596. Do you give much out-door relief in your union?—They do a great deal, but it is under very rare circumstances that they can give relief to a family if the father is able. If he is only incapacitated by destitution they cannot relieve him, and he must go to the workhouse to get relief. We have always such cases in Ardee; a number of people who have no qualification for relief except destitution, but that is not enough under the law.

12597. Would you be in favour of a change in the law to empower the Guardians, in a case such as you instance, to give temporary outdoor relief?—Yes.

12598. CHAIRMAN.—You would give relief for destitution?—Yes, as well as for drunkenness. That class suffers a hardship under the present system.

12599. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—If the Guardians were empowered to give outdoor relief in the case you have instanced, don't you think it would relieve the situation considerably?—It would, but it would not relieve the difficulty about the underswearing. That class of people if they got out-door relief would drink it.

12600. Would you be afraid of outdoor relief spreading if Guardians got that power?—I think they had better take the risk of the abuse and of its spreading than run the risk of starving people. I would be in favour of increasing the amount given in deserving cases to the old people.

12601. CHAIRMAN.—You would leave the area of charge as it is?—Yes.

12602. Dr. BROWN.—Was there a proposition before the County Council to convert Ardee Workhouse into a consumptive sanatorium?—No; it was mentioned vaguely by somebody, hardly seriously. It was not considered to any extent.

12603. I thought the proposition was made by the Dunsink and Drogheda Board of Guardians?—It has been made, but I heard nothing about their having a conference.

12604. You have done nothing in Ardee for that class of people?—I believe there was a special ward allotted to them for a time. I don't know whether it is in existence at present or not, but if there were any means of making better accommodation for them it ought to be done certainly.

12605. Have the Guardians taken any steps to provide that?—I don't know.

12606. If you are a member of the Board?—No, I am not; but if there was a county system or inter-county system of having a sanatorium for consumptives, it would be very desirable.

12607. In that case would Ardee be suitable?—It would require a medical man to say that. I am afraid none of the existing buildings would be held by sanitary authorities to be good.

12608. You mentioned the union having very low rates as compared with Dunsink and Drogheda; probably one of the reasons is the difference in valuation, but another reason that strikes me is the wretched condition in which the workhouse has been kept for so many years?—If that is your opinion—

CHAIRMAN.—I am afraid that is our opinion. Witness.—I must leave it to the members of the Board. I am not here to defend them.

12609. Dr. BROWN.—While respectable people might go into a hospital in the district if it were suitable, you could hardly expect them to go into Ardee Infirmary or fever hospital in the condition in which it is?—I think there was a big scheme of improvement contemplated by the Guardians, and they postponed it on hearing of this Commission.

12610. Did they bring it forward for the purpose of deferring it on account of the Commission?—I don't think so.

12611. What is the most remote part of the union from the workhouse of Ardee?—I am not very sure. I suppose there are many places from seven to ten miles. I don't know whether there are any less. There would be about a seven miles radius. I fancy there would not be much more; seven Irish miles.

12612. Then how many miles are you from Dunsink and Drogheda?—Ten from Dunsink and seven from Drogheda—Irish miles.

12613. For instance, a person six or seven miles from Ardee, would it make much difference if they were removed to Drogheda or Dunsink?—It might not to the outlying people. It is Ardee parish and a couple adjoining is I am considering, and it is mostly from that neighbourhood that the occupants of the workhouse do come.

12614. CHAIRMAN.—You have direct railway to Dunsink and Drogheda?—We have. It seems to me that would a constant stream of corpses, transporting them from place to place and sending an attendant with them if required.

12615. I don't think that expense would be necessary?—Perhaps not; it would depend on their disposition.

12616. You could easily give them a form of ticket that would not be paid for until it was used?—Yes.

12617. Dr. BROWN.—If there was a proposition to erect a sanatorium for the county do you think the County Council would join in it?—I fancy they would.

12618. Has the matter been discussed at all by them?—No; but I think they would be inclined to forward any scheme like that.

12619. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Of course you are of opinion that an infirmary is absolutely necessary there?—Oh, yes; and if there could be small infirmaries in other districts. I would be strongly in favour of having a district nurse in each dispensary district.

12620. Mr. M'TYER.—You reside in Ardee?—Yes.

12621. And I take it you have a pretty extensive and accurate knowledge of the prevailing conditions there in regard to union management?—In a general way, as an outsider.

12622. You were formerly a member of the Ardee Board of Guardians?—For a short time.

12623. With regard to these points the Chairman has asked you on, it has been suggested that the difference in Ardee in the rating between it and the neighbouring unions is due to the fact that the valuation is higher, and that therefore the rate would appear to be lower, whereas in fact it is not; is there any reason to suppose that the rating in the Ardee Union would be higher than the rural districts in Meath, for instance Navan, Kells, or Carrickmacross?—No; I think to the contrary; that is a question I did not consider before. As far as the valuation of the land goes I am sure that the land in Meath is valued at least with the land in Louth, probably higher; certainly I don't think there is any excess in the valuation of Louth land, and certainly not in the buildings of Ardee Union.

12624. Taking the five adjoining unions to Ardee, namely—Dunsink, Drogheda, Kells, Navan, and Carrickmacross, is it not a fact that the rates in every one of these unions are, at least, about 75 per cent. higher than in the Ardee Union?—I don't know what the proportion is, but I know it is higher in every one. I admit that the question of the different valuations of different unions would very much affect the rate, but I don't admit that that accounts for the low rate in Ardee.

12625. CHAIRMAN.—I understood your point; you say that owing to your contracts and other things the maintenance rate per head was lower?—Yes.

12626. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—But in proportion to your expenditure is your valuation not high?—I don't think so.

12627. For instance, in Dunsink they have about three times as many inmates as you have?—Yes.

12628. Is the valuation of Dunsink Union three times as great as that of Ardee?—No; it is not.

Mr. MURTAGHAN.—That is the point; it must be proportionate valuation to get at a proper knowledge of the circumstances.

12629. Mr. M'TYER.—Taking the other test as regards the cost per head of the inmates, is it not a fact that the inmates of the Ardee Union cost substantially less per head than the inmates of the neighbouring unions?—Yes; all the figures I have seen go to show that.

12536. Is that also, in your opinion, to any want of efficiency or to any want of proper dietary or management of the union?—No; I think the dietary and management and care of the poor are just as efficient and humane as in any of the others.

12537. To your knowledge has it not on repeated occasions won the praise of the Local Government Board Inspectors?—Yes; I have heard that different times.

CHAIRMAN.—Are you referring to Dr. Smyth's report?

Mr. McJannet.—Generally, Dr. Smyth took exception to some details.

Witness.—Mr. Bourke's reports were in my mind.

12538. Mr. McJannet.—In regard to making separate provision for consumptives, is the number very small in the union?—I don't know.

12539. As regards the County Month portion of the union, is it not a fact that there is no railway accommodation or no means of locomotion in that part?—No; there is none whatever; the population is sparse, and there is no railway in that part.

12540. Mr. McJannet.—Many poor in that part of the county?—I am not sure; there are not many. There is one town, Drumcondra, which, I dare say, supplies a fair number.

12541. Mr. McJannet.—Don't you think it would be a hardship to the poor in that part of the union if Ardee Workhouse were abolished?—Yes.

12542. CHAIRMAN.—A good deal of the Month part is nearer Drogheda than Ardee?—I don't know that it is actually nearer; it may be as near.

12543. Mr. McJannet.—I am not sure that it is. All the northern part is much nearer, but there is part about Collier; I imagine it is as near Ardee.

12544. CHAIRMAN.—At all events it is what you might call a long haul?—Perhaps so.

12545. Mr. McJannet.—You think that it would be an injustice to the outpatients to amalgamate with any of the adjoining unions?—I imagine it would add a great deal to the rates.

12546. CHAIRMAN.—If it led to an increase of the rates you would be strongly against it; if it led, on the other hand, to a diminution of the rates would you be in favour?

Mr. McJannet.—And an improvement in the treatment?—If it led to a real improvement in the treatment I would be in favour of it, regardless of the rates, but if the rates were reduced I would be still more in favour of it. If it could be shown that there was no hardship to the poor in transporting them, and it would entail a reduction of rates, and they would be as well treated in the other, I would be in favour of it, but these points seem to me to be all questionable.

Captain W. de Salis FIDELITY EXHIBITED.

12547. Mr. McJannet.—You are Chairman of the Ardee Board of Guardians?—I am.

12548. And I believe you have been so for about fifteen years?—Fourteen years.

12549. On the question of amalgamation, what is the view of your Board?—Dead against it; unanimously against it.

12550. Does that represent the opinion of all the outpatients of the district as well?—Essentially; I have had a great deal of consultation with them.

12551. Mr. McJannet.—On what ground?—On economy and inconvenience.

12552. Mr. McJannet.—First, as regards the financial aspect of it. At present, as a matter of fact, are the rates in the Ardee Union very considerably lower than in any of the adjoining unions?—I should think 75 per cent. lower than any of the adjoining unions all round.

12553. Then, as regards the cost per inmate in the union, how many inmates are there in the house altogether?—An average of 150.

12554. I believe about fifty are in the hospital?—About that.

12555. And there are about fifty pauper?—That is about the average.

12556. And the remainder are made up of children and epileptics?—Yes.

12557. That is about the average of them?—There are hardly any able-bodied.

12558. Are the able-bodied so scarce that you have to pay hands to do the work of the union?—We have to get the garden tilled by outside labour.

12559. You think it would be a very serious inconvenience to the poor to be amalgamated with any of the adjoining unions?—Indeed it would be; Ardee is in the centre as near as possible of the union, and it would be very hard to send people away from that.

12560. And, generally, it is in a very central position for the county?—You could not get more so.

12561. Is it about six or seven miles on an average from the edge?—I don't suppose there is any part of the union more than seven miles, except Duncannon, and that is a very small part.

12562. As regards the inmates themselves, would you consider it a hardship and grievance to them to be transferred amongst a lot of strangers?—They would object very strongly to it.

12563. Of course there is no suggestion of abolishing the hospital?—I should hope not; it would be impossible to do it.

12564. It is absolutely necessary. That being so, would it be possible, do you think, to utilise the remainder of the house, keeping the present part of the building which is used for hospital purposes; would it be possible to utilise the rest of the premises for any other purpose?—It would be no use for anything else.

12565. Would it require a very large outlay of money to fit it for a lunatic asylum?—You could not make a lunatic asylum of it; there are no grounds; we have only about four acres.

12566. So it would be necessary to acquire additional land?—You could not get it; it is not there.

12567. As regards the County Month part of the union, I believe there is no railway accommodation?—No.

12568. And it would be a matter of great difficulty to transfer any of the poor of the district to a distance?—You could not do it; you would have to bring them to Ardee and then send them on by train.

12569. If the Ardee Workhouse was abolished, would the nearest union be about twenty miles from any of the points in the County Month part of the union?—Hardly that; I suppose the lower part would be fifteen miles away.

12570. Do you find the tramp nuisance a very great question of Ardee?—It is not as bad as it used to be; it has reduced considerably from what it was; but it is a nuisance, of course.

12571. How many not many applicants in the week of the tramp class?—No; it has been a great deal less than it was the last couple of years.

12572. Roughly speaking, what would be the annual expenditure in the year?—It is about £3,000 or £4,000.

CHAIRMAN.—We have all those figures before us; you need not go into statistics as regards distances, expenditure, or the number of inmates.

12573. Mr. McJannet.—Generally speaking, has Ardee Union been efficiently and economically administered?—I hope it has been; we have always had a very fine character there; we were said to be a model union, and I believe it has been worked very well.

12574. Has there every year, in your recollection, any serious complaints made against the management of the union by any of the Local Government Inspectors?—Never that I remember; the only thing is that a lunatic got away through neglect on the part of the Master; that is the only serious complaint we have had of the union.

12575. That is a great number of years ago?—I attended the Ardee Union nearly every Tuesday for the last thirty years.

12576. CHAIRMAN.—Have you done much in the last thirty years to improve the union?—We have; a great deal. We are trying to keep it up to date as far as we can.

12577. Mr. McJannet.—Have you improved the sanitary accommodation?—We have, and we were going to do more when we heard of this inquiry, and we postponed matters to see what would happen.

12578. It is not true, as suggested, that you merely proposed it for the purpose of deferring it?—Certainly not; everything was arranged to be done, and would have been done last summer.

12579. CHAIRMAN.—What was going to be done?—The drainage system was to be renewed altogether.

12580. Mr. McJannet.—Was there some suggestion of having new conscriptive wards?—There was a suggestion for a new ward.

Feb. 8 1904.

Mr. Joseph Dolan.

Feb. 8, 1864

Capt. W. de
Mills, M.P.

12681. Special accommodation for a slight runn—
There was, and consumptive wards.

12682. Was there some improvement of the hot water system too?—I believe there was.

12683. And bath?—I think there was; there were several things.

12684. CHAIRMAN.—Do you know where the fever hospital water supply is got from?—I don't know.

12685. Are you aware that it is from a well under the fever hospital?—I am.

12686. Dr. BROWN.—And the soil pipe within a few feet of it; are not these matters that could have been attended to several years ago?—The fever hospital is generally empty as a rule; this last month there have been some cases there.

12687. Does that mean that there is no fever ever in the district or that persons won't go into it?—There have been very few cases there; the greater part of this year it is empty.

12688. It should be avoided if there is fever in the district—Of course it should be; it is very easy to make it all right.

12689. Mr. MURKIN.—You said your rates were 75 per cent. lower than the adjoining unions?—I believe so.

12690. The previous witness said your rate was something like 11d., but in the neighbouring unions it was 14d. and 16d.—I think that is a mistake.

12691. Those were figures read out by that gentleman, who seemed very well informed and a very excellent witness?—I think I know as much about it as he does.

12692. CHAIRMAN.—What do you think the rates are?
—Ardee is about 1s. 3d.

12693. The last witness said 11d.—He is wrong there.

12694. He was more in your favour; what are the general ones?—1s. 8d. and 1s. 9d.

12695. Mr. MURKIN.—The witness said it was 11d. on buildings.

12696. Mr. MURKIN.—Would the fact that your rates are low not be due largely to the sparseness of the population—the fewness of poor in your union?—I don't think so.

12697. You have no large towns in your union?—Not larger than Ardee.

12698. Nearly all the poor come from towns; we find very few people living in the country coming to the workhouse; my experience is that the great mass of the population of the workhouse come from towns?—Of course they do.

12699. That may be a reason why your rates are so low; that once would still exist if Ardee joined its parishes with some other unions?—The Ardee ratepayers would have to pay for that.

12700. You have a large number of children in the workhouse considering the extent of the union and the number in the house; the last report says you have thirty?—I suppose we have about that.

12701. That is a very large number for so small a workhouse; do you not think those children would be better boarded out?—They are too young, most of them.

12702. They can be boarded out from three or four years of age?—They are very young children.

12703. Do you not think it is an unhealthy place for children to be reared in?—No doubt about it; it is a mistake.

12704. Would you not favour the boarding out of these children?—Certainly, if you can get a place for them.

12705. If you had the children out of the house and the lunatics away in a proper place—I suppose you would favour these harmless lunatics being sent to some place where they could be better treated?—There are very few of them.

12706. You had only six; but even so, would it not be better that they should be in some place where they could be better looked after?—It would.

12707. If you had them out and the children out you would only have about 100; the half of that would be sufficient?—You could not talk of getting some of the small children out.

12708. CHAIRMAN.—They can be boarded out as soon as they can eat what is going—these years old?—The difficulty is getting good foster parents.

12709. If you offered a sufficient amount; you board them out at present at a less cost than you keep them in the workhouse. If you brought up the rate for the outside a little more do you not think you would then get them?—I don't think you would.

12710. Other unions don't experience your difficulty.

12711. Mr. MURKIN.—In some unions there is great competition for these children?—There is very little with us.

12712. Still you believe in the principle of boarding them out?—Certainly; I think the workhouse is the worst place children can be.

12713. Except put from the point of view of local trade, don't you think it would be a benefit to have only one central place for the aged and infirm?—I don't think it would.

12714. Why, don't you know the name of workhouse reder stinks in the nostrils of the ordinary man?—
No doubt it does.

12715. You cannot get rid of the name as long as you keep the institution; don't you think it would be better if you are going to have a reform to have one that would be a service. Suppose Ardee was chosen as the place for the county workhouse?—I would not favour Ardee being chosen as the county workhouse at all.

12716. CHAIRMAN.—What you are concerned about in Ardee is you don't want to pay for the destitute of Drogheda and Dundalk?—We do not; we don't want to pay for those large towns.

12717. You have no county patriotism?—I don't know that.

12718. Mr. MURKIN.—That would not necessarily come about, because you could make arrangements to pay the cost per head of the inmates that you would send to the county almshouse for instance?—
Yes; but there is no county almshouse.

12719. Suppose there were, we are trying to get the knowledge from local men to guide us as to how the system could be improved or reformed, and these suggestions have been thrown out in other places.
What we would like to know from you is would it appear to your sense of propriety to have, in this county, which is a very small county, one place for the aged and infirm—what large class that frequents the workhouse—and to distribute other classes in other ways—the boarding out of the children, the sending of lunatics to an asylum, and the providing of some home for the mothers of illegitimate children?—I don't think you would improve matters at all.

12720. You think the workhouse is such a perfect system?—No; I don't say that at all. I would be very sorry to say that.

12721. What suggestion would you make for its improvement then?—I would make none; I will not start a new system of my own.

12722. CHAIRMAN.—Then your view is to leave things as they are?—My view is that Ardee could not do better than it is at present, and it is the view of the whole district.

Very Rev. Canon

ROBERTS examined.

Very Rev.
Canon Rogers

12723. Mr. MURKIN.—You are the Catholic Parish Priest of Ardee parish?—Yes.

12724. And also the Chaplain to the Union Workhouse?—Yes.

12725. And you have been so for a considerable number of years?—Upwards of twenty years.

12726. What is your view about amalgamating Ardee Union with any of the adjoining unions?—Well, I would like to know how the amalgamation would go; I would like to know what is meant exactly by amalgamation; I look upon it as fatal to take away the hospital.

12727. CHAIRMAN.—Yes; it is generally conceded that it would be undesirable to oblige the sick to go long distances?—I would like to know, then, what the proposal is.

12728. That is what we are here for—to try and get proposals?—If it means classification and separation, and that means the benefit of the poor and the saving of the rates, I think it would be a good thing.

12729. The centralization of certain classes of inmates in different workhouses?—

Mr. MURKIN.—And the distribution of other classes?—My experience is bounded entirely by the Ardee Workhouse, which is a small institution, and with regard to the different classifications spoken of to-day—for the infirm poor and the lunatics and the children—taking them separately, for instance with regard to the children, I would be for sweeping them all out of that at once. Then the barracks, the workhouse is no proper place for them. Then we have only the infirm poor and the hospital patients. Well, seeing that the hospital is remaining, the question resolves itself into what shall we do with the infirm patients. I speak from experience; I know it is very difficult to get the infirm poor to go into the workhouse as things are, and possibly it might be very difficult to get them to go a distance from home, but at the same time I recognize that is entirely sentimental, and the idea of its being a workhouse is an obstacle to their going in.

12736. CHAIRMAN.—That would be against any amalgamation?—But if you have a central place administered, and equipped, and up-to-date, and free from the taint of workhouse associations, I would not hesitate to say that the people would refuse to go, and I presume the cases would be better treated than they are at the present time.

12737. Mr. MURKIN.—All present they are cooped up in a little room, without any occupation, and it does seem a very odd thing indeed to see so many handed that way without any object in life, simply waiting for their meals, and passing one day after another in idle gossip?—It is.

12738. CHAIRMAN.—But the sick ought not to be obliged to go?—Certainly not; I think it would be advisable to interfere with them; on the contrary, the hospital ought to be retained and up-to-date in every way.

12739. As far as a local hospital can be?—Yes. You mentioned something about an orphanage.

12740. Yes; I heard something of it in Armagh.—The orphanage system is this, that there is an orphanage committee to work it.

12741. It meets once a month in Armagh?—Yes; and, of course, the accounts are audited. The clergyman of the district—i.e., or any of my assistants in my own parish—if we find we have a case of a lone father orphan we bring the case before the committee; we must prove that they are really lone father orphans; we must then be in a position to name some persons who will take charge of the orphan or orphans, and the person who will take charge of them must be of a good character and have a small holding of land in order to keep a cow and supply the orphans with milk. There must be a guarantee that the children will attend school, and there is an inspector appointed whose business it is to go round once a year—a lady. She sends in a yearly report, and visits the orphans in their homes and the schools. She reports then to the committee her opinion, and says whether the orphans were well clad and comfortably looked after, and what the attendance at school was, and everything generally about them, and makes any complaint or comment she thinks necessary. She gives the number of attendances at the school, and if the committee consider the attendance is not what it ought to be the orphans are withdrawn and must be provided for in more suitable homes.

12742. You have had experience of that system; what is your opinion?—It is in existence nine years, and is working well.

12743. It originates in a fund left?—In a fund left for charitable purposes, the same to be designated by the Catholic Priests of Armagh; and in order to avoid the expense of sinking money in buildings this system was devised on the lines, I think, of the Protestant Orphan Society, but it is entirely a boarding-out system; the children are sent from three years old up to fourteen, and the person taking charge of an orphan is paid 2s. 6d. a week.

12744. And your inspection is frequent?—The report is only sent in once a year.

12745. The lady inspectors is a resident of the diocese?—Yes.

12746. Mr. MURKIN.—You occasionally see the children yourself?—I do.

12747. How do you think they are treated?—I think they are treated very well. There were cases that we considered were not sufficiently well treated, and we removed them to other homes.

12748. Do you find you can board out all your orphans?—Yes, although I have no children in my parish under the doocoon scheme.

12749. But you are aware all the same?—Yes; I am a member of the committee myself.

12750. When you are attending the meetings have you heard of complaints about the difficulty of getting suitable homes?—No; the condition is that before the orphan is put on the list the home must be secured.

12751. Are you able to get enough orphans to absorb the funds?—Yes; as a rule we have none to spare. With our present resources we have between thirty and forty orphans.

12752. What is the annual fund at your disposal?—The interest of about £10,000. It costs £5 a year for each orphan.

12753. Mr. M'IVER.—You hold no brief for the Ardsle Guardians, but speaking as an impartial outsider, is the Ardsle Workhouse efficiently and well administered?—I know it is a most popular union with the poor; and my experience is that they prefer to go to Ardsle rather than any other union in the county.

12754. You visit them and see that yourself?—Yes; and I am there for thirty years.

12755. Don't you think it would be a hardship if the destitute poor round Ardsle district, and more particularly in the County Meath part of the union, were obliged to travel a long distance to get to the union workhouse?—You see, the guardians propose that the institution they sketch out will not be a workhouse—it will be a kind of sanatorium or home—and I suspect if that were brought home to the poor they would go even a distance more freely to it than to the workhouse, because there is a taint in the workhouse. That is one of the difficulties we have to contend with, no matter how well the workhouse or hospital is administered.

12756. Of course, there is no question of abolishing the hospital accommodation?—No.

12757. And having the hospital accommodation there is it not then necessary to have a medical man and a trained nurse?—Yes.

12758. And a clerk and porter and some helpers?—

CHAIRMAN.—You would certainly want a doctor and chaplain and nurses, but what else—would you want a solicitor?

Mr. M'IVER.—By all means a solicitor. Would it not mean practically the whole existing staff of the union?

Mr. MURKIN.—You have that staff at present in the infirmary without touching on the body of the house. You have an additional staff for the body.

12759. Mr. M'IVER.—Is any extra expense involved in the rest of the house?—Merely the maintenance of the patients.

Mr. MURKIN.—What about the upkeep of the buildings and the fuel?

CHAIRMAN.—The master's salary and the matron's salary.

Mr. M'IVER.—You would want a master to supervise the hospital.

CHAIRMAN.—Not at all; they are very much in the way.

Rev. Canon A. L. FORD examined.

12760. Mr. M'IVER.—You are the Rector of Ardsle parish?—I am.

12761. And you are the Protestant chaplain to the workhouse?—Yes.

12762. What are your views as to amalgamating with the adjoining unions?—My views are rather peculiar—I should like to wipe out all the workhouses in the country.

12763. CHAIRMAN.—Perhaps you are not so peculiar as you think?—But, facts de sacro, I would rather see Ardsle Workhouse maintained, if not on the present lines, at least in something of the present form, for several reasons. I should like to emphasize the opinion which has already been given, that it would be a very considerable hardship on the poor of Ardsle to have to go to Dundalk or Drogheda. It may not seem at first sight so difficult, and the suggestion that a ticket should be given to the applicant to enable him to get his train fare would do away with part of it; but it is not probable that on all occasions the ticket would be given. For instance, in the Ardsle Union—I don't suppose the Press will give me away, and I don't suppose the Guardians would like to be given away either—but there is a superstition that the Ardsle Union won't take in male tramps, and no male tramps come in consequence.

Very Res.
CANNON FORD.

Rev. Canon
A. L. Ford.

Feb. 4, 1894.

Rev. Canon
A. L. Ford.

12757. Mr. MURKIN.—Is it only a superstition?—They would be hoaxed, I fancy, to take them in. Then belief arose only a few years ago, and the tramps all at once from a very considerable number down to a very small number, until at present there are only about sixteen, whereas formerly there were sixty, even up to 100.

12758. Is that a salutary superstition?—Well, it is and it is not, for this reason, that occasionally you have exceptional cases, and I think exceptional cases should be provided for. I would not provide for the habitual tramp—a sort of a tramp tourist, who goes from one place to another, and has all the workhouses tapped out and the distances, but I think provision ought to be made for persons who are honestly seeking for work.

12759. An extension of out-door relief, would not that be good?—I would extend the out-door relief certainly, but the difficulty is to know how to apply it with proper safeguards. I believe the extension of out-door relief with proper safeguards would be a very admirable substitute for a group deal that goes on at present.

12760. Mr. McIVER.—Can you give the Commission your experience of how the Ardee Union is managed?—I have been a chaplain of three workhouses in the course of my ministry, which extends over a quarter of a century, and I think that, taking them on the whole, the Ardee Workhouse, with all its difficulties, and I don't say that it is absolute perfection, is considerably in front of the others. I was chaplain of Dundalk Workhouse for a time, and my recollections of Dundalk Workhouse are certainly not of the most rosy or favorable character. I was chaplain of Newry Workhouse for fifteen years, and there things are managed on a larger scale, but I really think that the poor are more comfortable here.

12761. CHAIRMAN.—Have you seen it within the last year or two, since they rebuilt the hospital?—No, not since they were burned down.

12762. Then I would not compare them—I am afraid you would have to give way to Newry at all events!—If you burned Ardee Workhouse and let us rebuild it we would have a very good hospital, too; but at the same time I think the sick are very comfortable in the hospital, and speaking for those that have been there, members of my persuasion, they have testified to the great care and kindness which have been shown them while in the house, and they certainly seemed to be clean and comfortable. I don't see how you are to do away with the hospital, because at the present minute you have fifty-one patients in the hospital.

12763. We have not received any suggestions that the hospitals should be closed?—Then, as regards the infirm, there are sixty-five infirm—thirty-two male and thirty-three female—in the Ardee Union, and, as one of the Commissioners has said, their position is certainly very sad. I don't think that life in a workhouse for the aged and infirm is anything to be desired. The question is whether you would make it better by having a central place occupied by the infirm—I don't think it would be less expensive.

12764. Mr. MURKIN.—A sort of farm house, where these people would have a little occupation?—If it could be done without serious expense that would be ideal.

12765. CHAIRMAN.—Where an old couple would not be separated if they chose to be together?—That would be admirable, but it would mean a very considerable expense on buildings. Any workhouse building, as far as I know, does not seem to be at all suitable for such a purpose.

12766. If you had nothing in the house but the aged and infirm don't you think the present buildings would be suitable for classification?—You would have to divide your buildings into flats.

12767. Are they not divided into flats at present?—For the most part they are in large dormitories; there would be nothing of the separate system—providing a sitting room or kitchen for a couple of old people.

12768. Some light partitions might be put up?—Yes.

12769. Mr. McIVER.—As regards the boarding out system, is it adopted to some extent under the Ardee Board of Guardians?—I know very little about that—no children I have any interest in have been boarded out.

12770. Don't you think it would be difficult to get the same sanitary or moral surroundings, where they are properly housed and cased, as in the institution?—I don't believe in bringing up children in the workhouse; and I took very active steps when I was chaplain at Newry to get all the children put out, and all my children were put out. There was one difficulty which Canon Rogers did not mention. The Ardee Society with which he is connected is a copy of the Orphan Society, as he said, which has been working in the County Armagh and County Louth—the Protestant Orphan Society. But there is one thing that we don't teach, I don't know whether the society does, I should fear it does not, we don't teach illegitimate children at all, and you would have that difficulty.

12771. CHAIRMAN.—We have had suggestions from various quarters that they should be dealt with by the people who have charge of the penitentiaries or reformatories—of course, boarded out at an early age. In some cases I should make a difference—a difference between what I should call the result of a sudden temptation and the result of a constant habit. I have known both cases—cases where they have simply used the workhouse as a resort.

CHAIRMAN.—They all drift into that, unfortunately, if some steps are not taken.

12772. Mr. McIVER.—Is it the prevailing view of your parishioners that it would be a hardship to be amalgamated with the magistrates of Dundalk or Drogheda?—If amalgamation meant the sweeping away of Ardee and an increase of the rates, the cost of the transit of paupers by rail, and probably an increased cost per head, I think the ratepayers would feel it very considerably. The Ardee Workhouse has been fairly suitable for the paupers of the district; it has been worked on economical and fair lines; the buildings are some of them old, and they might be very considerably improved; some improvements have been made, as I know, during my chaplaincy, and some more ought to be made, but I think that any amalgamation which would mean additional hardship to the poor and increased rates, would not meet with favour, at any rate in this district.

12773. CHAIRMAN.—The district generally is in favour of letting things remain as they are?—No, we should like to see things improved.

12774. But I mean the workhouse to remain?—Yes, the workhouse to remain, but improve it.

12775. Mr. MURKIN.—But if it did not mean all these undesirable things you suggest—if it meant no increase in the rates, if it meant an improvement in the condition of the poor, would it not be well to attempt a reform on those lines?—Anything that would improve the condition of the poor, that would lighten the moral atmosphere, that would enable children to be brought up apart from the contaminating influence of idleness, would meet with my hearty approval.

12776. Dr. BRIDGE.—Do you think it would be an advantage to separate the hospital from the workhouse?—I think so.

12777. Do you think more patients would avail themselves of hospital treatment?—I think so; and if it were made distinctly a hospital and not regarded as a workhouse, it would be very much more useful, but if it were made a hospital I would like to see it properly equipped as a hospital—modernized, and brought up to date.

12778-79. You would hardly agree with the Chairman that it does not require any improvement?—As a hospital, I should like to see it made more a hospital. At present it is more like a sick infirmary, and the system on which it is worked is practically the system of the rest of the house.

Mr. McIVER.—I intended to examine a witness as to statistics, but I find that is not necessary; but I will examine the clerk as to reports of Local Government Inspectors about the union.

CHAIRMAN.—We can get those. If you wish us to go into them, we will certainly get the original documents and read them.

Mr. McIVER.—It was merely to correct an impression which I thought prevailed, that the Ardee Union was not properly managed.

CHAIRMAN.—We are speaking of our own opinion, and no matter what we read we could not alter the opinion we formed.

Dr. MICHAEL COLLIER EXAMINED.

Feb. 4, 1904.

Dr. Michael Collier.

12780. Mr. M'FEE.—You are a medical practitioner in Ardee?—Yes.

12781. And you are the doctor to the workhouse infirmary?—Yes.

12782. And have been so for many years?—Yes.

12783. About how many patients on an average have you in the infirmary during the year?—About fifty.

12784. It is scarcely necessary to ask you if you would consider it a retrograde step to abolish the hospital accommodation in the district?—Yes; I don't believe that could be done.

12785. You require two buildings, I take it, for the hospital—you want a separate building for infectious diseases and another building for ordinary cases?—Yes.

12786. Assuming the hospital would be kept on, in your opinion would it be possible to adapt the remainder of the building to any public purpose, such as an asylum or sanatorium?—I don't believe it would be suitable for an asylum—there would not be sufficient ground for recreation for the inmates, unless there was more ground acquired.

12787. Are the buildings as at present suitable for an asylum?—No, they would have to be fitted up.

12788. Would they require a large expenditure of money?—They would.

12789. And do you think as the union is at present what that it is a well-managed institution; broadly speaking, we don't claim that it is perfect, but on the whole it is well and efficiently managed?—I consider it is.

12790. And do you think it would be a hardship on the poor of the district to have to travel a distance of a mile of this sort?—That is the prevailing opinion.

12791. And is the opinion of the ratepayers and of the Guardians unanimous against any amalgamation with the adjoining unions?—Yes.

12792. For financial reasons, and reasons of convenience as well?—Yes.

12793. And, generally speaking, it is a good healthy district about Ardee?—Yes.

12794. And the workhouse is in a favourable position from that point of view?—Yes.

12795. Would you consider it more healthy than putting people together in large towns, such as Drogheda and Dundalk?—I would say so.

12796. There never has been any serious epidemic outbreak of disease there?—We have had very little fever for the last ten or fifteen years. When I was appointed first there was a great deal of fever in the district—typhus, typhoid, smallpox, and even diphtheria; but for the last ten or fifteen years we have had very little fever in the entire union.

12797. CHAIRMAN.—You had a number of scarletina cases?—Yes we had a great number this year; that is general.

12798. Mr. M'FEE.—I believe I am correct in saying there has not been a single case of typhus for the last fifteen years?—Yes.

12799. Was there a good main drainage scheme carried into execution some years ago?—There was in the town of Ardee.

12800. And that has endorsed very materially to the health of the district?—I should say so.

12801. There has not been any outbreak of disease in the workhouse that could possibly be due to any defective drainage system?—I had an outbreak of summer diarrhoea last summer, and I believe that was due to defective sewers in the building.

12802. Is the water supply good?—The water supply is good. It has been analysed by Sir Charles Cameron on two different occasions, and found to be perfectly fine.

Mr. M'FEE.—These are all the witnesses I intend to call. The case that I have been instructed to make here on behalf of the Ardee Board of Guardians is that public opinion is unanimous against amalgamation with any of the surrounding unions. The board have carefully considered the matter with a very full attendance of all the members, and they have unanimously resolved to take steps to prevent any amalgamation with the adjoining unions. This opposition is not due to any vague sentimental or selfish reason, but we claim it is based on solid, substantial, and good ground. Fifthly, as regards the financial aspect of the case. An examination of the figures will show that the rating in the Ardee Union is very considerably less than in any of the surrounding unions—less not only this year, but for many years past. I find the rating in the £ in the Ardee Union is 1s. 6d., in the Drogheda Union it is 1s. 8d., and in Dundalk it is 1s. 9d.

CHAIRMAN.—These are, of course, for all charges?

Mr. M'FEE.—These are for Poor Law expenditure.

CHAIRMAN.—Are these union charges or do they include district charges?

Mr. Dringdale, Clerk.—Purely Poor Law expenditure.

CHAIRMAN.—And medical charges?

Mr. Dringdale.—Yes.

Mr. M'FEE.—The Navan Union is 1s. 9d., Kells 1s. 8d.; these figures cannot be controverted, they are unimpeachable facts, and they show that we, living in Ardee, have a distinct advantage over the inhabitants in the adjoining unions, and we claim that unless some very good, substantial, and sufficient reason is shown for depriving us of that advantage that it would be an injustice to us to take it from us. These figures clearly show that the rating is 75 per cent. more in any of the neighbouring unions than it is in ours; and we say that we should not be deprived of the advantage without very good grounds; we should not be involved in any costly or doubtful experiments in the management of Poor Law administration. It may be said that these figures are fallacious.

CHAIRMAN.—These are figures from the County Council.

Mr. M'FEE.—Yes, from the last returns. It may be said, perhaps, that these are fallacious, that they represent an advantage that does not exist in reality, and that it due more to a difference in valuation in the unions. I don't think that can exist, but even assuming it does, we come to another test, and that is, the test of the cost per annum. As regards that, too, I think we have a very distinct advantage. In the Ardee Union the average cost per head per week of the inmates, including all salaries and house expenses—

CHAIRMAN.—What does it include?

Mr. Dringdale.—Workhouse expenditure, diet and clothing, salaries of officers, and all establishment charges. It does not take in the medical charities or registration.

Mr. M'FEE.—That is 3s. per head in the Ardee Union, in the Drogheda 4s. 3d., and in Dundalk 5s. 1d., in Kells 11s. 6d., and in Navan 9s. 3d. These are again figures that cannot be controverted, and which bear the highest testimony to the efficiency of the administration and the care with which everything is attended to, and the economical and proper working of the establishment. Then we have the diet scale here, and it shows clearly that this economical working is not due to any defect in the diet—any inferior sort of diet.

CHAIRMAN.—Was the suggested dietary scale of the Local Government Board adopted?

Mr. Dringdale.—It was.

CHAIRMAN.—Then you need not go into that.

Mr. M'FEE.—Then, coming to the question of local convenience, nobody suggests—and the suggestion would be an absurd one—to abolish hospital accommodation for the district. Reading the signs of the times, the tendency is towards a greater multiplication of smaller hospitals than to centralise ones. Therefore, I take it that there can be no suggestion from any quarter of abolishing the Ardee Hospital.

CHAIRMAN.—We have not received any.

Mr. M'FEE.—That being so, it is, of course, necessary to carry on the establishment. You must have two buildings for a hospital. You must have a separate building for infectious and contagious diseases, and you must have another one for the ordinary cases which crop up in every community. The witnesses who have been examined here, and the testimony is worthy of your careful consideration, say that it would require a very large expenditure of money to adapt the remaining part of the house to altered circumstances—to fit it up as an asylum, sanatorium, or any other establishment you like. At present it is reasonably useful, and it is reasonably adapted for the requirements of the district; it fulfils its purpose well, and it has from time to time won the commendation and the praise of Local Government Board Inspectors, with one exception, perhaps; but that is the exception that proves the rule, and that was more in matters of detail than anything else, it was not due to any default in principle or any serious complaint as to the management. Then there is another reason that suggests itself—that it would be a hardship to the present pauper inmates of the union to have them transferred. I am not inclined to place too much reliance upon this circumstance. You have mentioned that in a case under your own notice that although the patients were very much anxious to be disturbed in the first instance, afterwards they settled down, so that I don't think there is very much in it; but for all it is worth, I put it to you, would it be fair to transfer those fifty poor old men and women from the surroundings they are familiar with, and place them in a position where they get out of touch with their old friends? They feel it as a hardship in their old years it is an argument, at all events.

Feb. 2, 1864.

Dr. Michael

CHAIRMAN.—Unless there are some counterbalancing advantages.

Mr. McFarr.—But there is another reason. That is, to leave such a large district without a refuge for the poor or destitute. The Ardee Union is conveniently shaped; it is compact; the area is 26,000 acres, and with the exception of one part, which is next the sea-side it is a radius of six miles in all directions from the workhouse, so that it is easy to cover and easily got at from all parts. If you abolish the workhouse what happens. The poor of the district then have no place to go to except to tramp all the way to Dundalk or Drogheda, Navan or Kells. In the County Meath part of the union there is no railway accommodation; the population is very sparse, and it would be an utter impossibility for them to be able to get to a union. I don't see how it is to be done. I think there are great practical difficulties in the way, and if you abolish the Ardee Poor Law Workhouse for proper accommodation is a repeal of the Poor Law Acts for the district and a great hardship and injustice on the poor and destitute. We would welcome by all means any proposed change in the Poor Law administration, we are not so retrograde as not to welcome any change for the better in the administration, either in the differentiation of cases or any other means you like; but we say it would be a hardship to the ratepayers and the poor to amalgamate us with any of the adjoining unions. We have managed our affairs well in the past, and have justified our claims to manage them well in the future, and to be left undisturbed. We are not to be taken as going against any change for the better, but we say we have an advantage in rates which should not be taken from us, and we claim home rule in the respect. We have every respect for the enterprising citizens of Dundalk, but we say we are managing our affairs well, and have no desire to be thrown in with them. These are the arguments that suggest themselves to me, and I thank you for the courtesy and patience with which you have heard me.

Mr. JAMES HALIFORDY EXAMINED.

Mr. James
Halifordy.

I was asked to come here as one of the Town Commissioners of Ardee.

18803. CHAIRMAN.—You have heard what has been said here to-day. Do you agree with the general evidence that the Ardee people are against amalgamation?—Yes.

18804. They think it would raise their taxation, and that matters are well managed as they are!—Yes, and it would not make the expenses any the less. The only thing I would say is that if buildings are necessary to those people—the consumption and epileptic—and union should provide those buildings for itself.

18805. You would not like to go shares with Dundalk and Drogheda?—No, sir, they would run as I agree with all the other evidence.

Dr. HERSCULES H. MACDONOCHIE EXAMINED.

Dr. Hercules
H. MacDono-
chie.

18806. CHAIRMAN.—You are Surgeon of the County Infirmary?—Of the Louth Infirmary.

18807. I think you are also a member of some of the public bodies?—I am a Poor Law Guardian for the district of Dundalk. I am also surgeon to the prison and to the Great Northern Railway.

18808. You have seen the queries that have been circulated by the Commission?—I have.

18809. And you have heard the evidence which was given to-day?—I have heard a great deal of it.

18810. Now, without going into details, is there anything that struck you on which you would like to give your opinion?—There is one little point as regards the expenses of Ardee and Dundalk. I think if you take the standard year 1867 you will find that the cost of the paupers in Ardee Union was slightly higher than the cost in Dundalk. I think it was £1,412 against £1,341 in Ardee; so that that does away any misconception which may arise.

18811. If they give one year telling in their favour you wish to give another year telling in your favour?—I merely mention that as the standard year. I may mention that the Board of Guardians appointed a committee to deal with these queries, and we sent in our report, and that, I think, has been forwarded to the Commission, and if you would allow me to go through that report briefly, I think perhaps it would be the best way.

18812. Dr. Brown.—With regard to the improvements at Dundalk, were they paid out of the rates, or was there a loan for the building of the addition to the fever hospital?—That was a loan.

18813. And the disinfection and the ambulance.

Mr. Feigin, Clerk.—The disinfecting chamber and ambulance were paid for out of the rates.

Witness.—I declare you are aware there have been very extensive improvements in the last ten years in the Dundalk Workhouse. There is a great deal more to be done, but very large capital sums have been expended, and also sums from the rates.

18814. CHAIRMAN.—Before you go into the Guardians' matter, were there any questions you would like to mention as regards your infirmary. Our reference takes in questions with regard to all public institutions, not merely the workhouses?—Well, of course, we are a little cramped for funds, but that rests with the County Council.

18815. They cannot give more than a certain amount?—But we are not getting our full amount; but still the County Council have behaved very generously to us. They have increased our annual grant in the last five years.

18816. Would your view be that the rates should pay for all necessary expenditures in treating the sick, as far as there is a deficiency after their own contributions?—Do you mean as regards the union?

18817. The county infirmary?—I think the county infirmary ought to have funds to meet their legitimate expenses from the rates.

18818. That is their strictly necessary expenditure?—Certainly.

18819. And anything above that would be got by subscriptions and contributions?—Influents are working on rather the reverse. We have a union small funded sum, and we have annual subscriptions, and then we get a grant from the County Council every year to supplement that up to about what our income would be necessary.

18820. In this county you do get considerable subscriptions?—Yes, but they have fallen off. I cannot say they have fallen off in the last two or three years, but they have fallen off considerably since the Local Government Act.

18821. Is that owing to the fact that subscribers are no longer members of the governing body?—Quite so. I am afraid they take up an opinion, which I have tried to combat privately as much as possible, and that was that it was being supported altogether out of the local rates.

18822. Do you think that that would be a desirable system?—I think it would, perhaps, and to do away with what I might call idiosyncrasy and, which we get from the private subscribers.

18823. Would you not continue to get that for special objects, greater comforts?—Not to any large extent. We have got considerable benefactions, and there is a most excellent guild of the ladies of Dundalk and the neighbourhood who meet, and they have a small subscription, and they send in a certain amount of work,

Feb. 3, 1904.

Dr. Horatio
M. MacDon-

and this is divided between the patients in the hospital and the district nurses in the town. It is entirely a local private charity, and they have given considerable sums to the hospital. Only six months ago they gave as a sum large enough to buy a very fine operating table; and then we have done up some of our wards in the infirmary entirely by private subscriptions without coming of the rates at all.

12824. Mr. MURTAGH.—You would not like to dole these off?—Certainly not.

12825. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think it would dole them off if you had the necessary expenditure safe and sure?—I have never yet been refused any legitimate request by the governors of the infirmary. There is nothing but the best of feeling, and anxiety to do what I recommended for the good of the hospital.

12826. As regards the nursing, would you be in favour of your infirmary being a training school for nurses for the county or any other area?—I am afraid our establishment would not be large enough for housing the nurses or giving them constant employment. We always used to have one probationer who did not pay, but we trained her, and we have had two or three, but never more than one, at a time. They got a most excellent training, for they had to act as a nurse and had twenty-five or thirty beds to look after, but we should not have sufficient material to make a training school.

12827. I mean for the ordinary nurses as distinguished from the higher class?—I don't like any distinction between higher and lower class nurses.

12828. But still you have them in fact, I suppose?—Well, we have not at the infirmary; we got the very best nurses we can get for money.

12829. But of the higher class nurses in Ireland there is a comparatively small number, and there are thousands of nurses necessary for the country; they cannot all be trained for three or four years?—Well, I am afraid the Louth County Infirmary would not be a suitable field.

12830. You have as few hospitals to consider; you have only one at Ardee, Drogheda, and Dundalk. Now if you take up the Guardians' part?—That is in doubt, in the interests of the epileptics, idiots, chronic lunatics, and consumptives of the Co. Louth, that the existing unions of Drogheda and Dundalk be allowed of their charge, and proper accommodation provided elsewhere. That was the first, and I take it, the most important recommendation we made.

12831. That means either at Richmond, Portrane, or an auxiliary asylum?—Some place.

12832. Had you any feeling as regards auxiliary asylums?—I am afraid I cannot speak from actual experience of them, but I know that they are extremely expensive.

12833. The auxiliary?—Of course we only deal with Portrane and Richmond.

12834. I was thinking more of the experiment tried in the Co. Cork at Youghal?—No, I cannot speak of that.

12835. Mr. MURTAGH.—The number in Dundalk at present is considerable?—I think we have forty-nine, of which twenty-two are imbeciles, seventeen lunatics, and of these nine are epileptics. The accommodation is only three wards and five cells and passages.

12836. You think they ought not to be there?—I don't think you could put them in a worse place than a Poor Law hospital with the infirm and aged.

12837. You have a similar number in Drogheda, I think?—I cannot speak of that. I fancy they are pretty much the same. Up until a very short time ago our few hospital accommodation was extremely limited, but now we have got a really beautiful hospital, and that has been done by the Poor Law Guardians without any pressure from anyone. They felt it right to do it, and they did it very well and very economically. To reply to Query 3.—That is a desirable to adopt a classification of inmates which will differentiate between the deserving and the undeserving poor. It is perfectly well known that there is a very large class of inmates come into unions which are in the neighbourhood of towns. A great number of these are closest of the criminal class. We are troubled here with three or four families. When the fathers are not in the union they are in jail generally, and nothing can be worse than the up-bringing of the children. They are what you would call the undeserving poor.

12838. What would you suggest in regard to those children?—I have always tried as a magistrate to have those children taken away from such parents and sent to orphanages.

12839. Do you think it would be well to give the Guardians power to take the children away from such parents?—I think it would be an excellent plan, and I think the powers of the Guardians ought to be enlarged, so that those cases of truancy could be dealt with by the chairman, who is an ex-officio magistrate, that he would be able to deal with them judiciously up in the workhouse without having them summoned and brought to Petty Sessions.

12840. The Chairman of the Board of Guardians is not necessarily a magistrate?—Here he is.

12841. CHAIRMAN.—In any case he would not have the clerk of Petty Sessions or any of the officials. It would be rather an extraordinary proceeding to deal with a man and deprive him of his liberty in a board-room?—I don't think so, it can be done elsewhere; you can deal with a man in prison without bringing him to Petty Sessions, but I must see some extension of powers is wanted to enable Boards of Guardians to deal with this truancy question, in a place like Dundalk it is a great nuisance. It is on the high road between Dublin and Belfast. We are worse of than Ardee which is not on the road to anywhere except Kells or Navan.

12842. So you would approve of a change in the law enabling the Guardians to take these children from their parents?—I certainly would. The reply to Query 3 was "the detention of criminals and tramps until 12 o'clock noon"—I think at present we can detain them until 11 o'clock.

12843. The general suggestion is that the Irish law should be assimilated to the English law, which gives these power to detain them a very much longer period, according as a man comes back oftener?—Certainly, that would be most valuable; some extension in that direction. I don't know whether your Commission have the power of recommending, but we find it rather hard sometimes the deportation of paupers from England and Scotland here.

12844. We saw cases in Belfast Workhouse where a number of Scotch people were there in receipt of relief and could not be sent back to Scotland?—As between unions in Ireland, it would be impossible to devise a scheme fair to every one, but if we got English, or Scotch, or Welsh paupers we ought to have the power of deporting them altogether. I think I ought to mention that since this report was drawn up there was a discussion at the Board about the question of district as against union relief.

12845. Mr. MURTAGH.—Divisional?—The general idea was that the towns ought to pay for their own.

12846. CHAIRMAN.—You mean the rural district as against the urban district?—That is it, practically.

12847. Mr. MURTAGH.—And in the rural district electoral division against electoral division?—No, I don't think so; it was the town against the country.

12848. It has often been put before us that an electoral division charge was a better method, especially as regards outdoor relief?—That I might safely say, although I am opposed to it as being a town Guardian, still I think it is only fair to state that the opinion of the Board would be in favour of that. There is a good deal to be said on both sides, and we had not the matter threshed out, but there is no doubt the opinion of the majority of the Board was in favour of that.

12849. You have no opinion of your own on the point?—I should not like to express an opinion without going deeper into the question.

12850. Some persons have suggested an intermediate system—to adopt the dispensary area as a suitable one?—Yes, but a large portion of the two dispensary districts in Dundalk are in the rural district—one goes out to Blackrock, the other goes out a good way in the other direction, although they are both in the town, and a large portion is rural.

12851. Do you approve of the system of amalgamation of workhouses in Ireland?—Oh, I think, certainly, for many reasons.

12852. Would you wish to express your view as to how many would meet the needs of the Co. Louth?—I should think two ought to be ample, that is if they were to remain as at present. Very large capital expenditure will be required to put either Dundalk or Drogheda in its proper position for maintaining lunatics, imbeciles, epileptics, and consumptives; there would have to be a very large initial expenditure. I thought myself that that could best be met by removing all that class to other places, and my idea was to keep them under local control by making Ardee the centre for receiving imbeciles, such lunatics as could not be sent to Portrane, idiots, and consumptives. Of course that would also entail the expenditure of making these premises suitable, but it would have the benefit of retaining them under local control, and the rates, which would go in their support, would be spent locally.

12853. CHAIRMAN.—You would suggest leaving the Ardee Workhouse, as far as it is not wanted for the sick, made an auxiliary lunatic asylum?—And a place for convalescents, too.

12854. There would not be room for both?—Then I think it ought to be increased.

12855. Do you think it would be desirable to have three classes—clean, lunatic, and convalescent—close beside each other?—Well, of course, it would not be ideally perfect, but I think if proper accommodation were made for the convalescents you could take them out of the main body of the house. You would have to build for them. I don't think any workhouse in Ireland, as at present constituted, is suitable for the reception of convalescents. We have not very many here, because there is no accommodation for them really. If there was accommodation for them we should have a considerable quantity from the surrounding districts.

12856. There is a good deal of convalescent?—There is in some of the districts, but I think it would be only fair, if the rates are to support those people, that the rates should be expended locally; that is why I should like to see a relieving station, if we may call it so, in the county kept and accommodation provided for these various classes. Of course nobody has ever suggested that there should not be a district hospital under the County Council for Ardee. That, I take it, is absolutely essential.

12857. Dr. BROOKES.—Under the County Council?—I think the County Council have power under the Local Government Act.

12858. Why not make all the hospitals under the County Council and supported out of a county rate?—The county infirmary is practically under the County Council, from which they get the larger share of their grants, and the largest number of the members of the Board are from the County Council, but I think there is a distinction between a district hospital and a union hospital. I think there are powers under the Local Government Act of placing it under a separate committee.

12859. CHAIRMAN.—And you think that committee ought to be a committee of the County Council?—Well, nominated by the County Council and gentlemen and ladies residing in the neighbourhood. We have found the greatest benefit from having ladies amongst our Guardians.

12860. Dr. BROOKES.—That would be similar to your county infirmary?—Well, it is open to that objection, perhaps.

12861. I don't mean that it is an objection; I think it would be an advantage. Then there would be two hospitals under the County Council and two hospitals under the Board of Guardians?—I think it is very important to disassociate hospitals, which are solely for the treatment of the sick, from the Guardians and the workhouse.

12862. Would you suggest that they should be under the County Council?—I would suppose that the district hospital in Ardee should be under the County Council.

12863. CHAIRMAN.—And a district hospital in Drogheda?—I don't think that is required, because you have that demand provided for in the county infirmary. Of course you could not have a divided authority in Ardee, the Guardians having control of one portion of the building and the County Council of another; but still I think it would be quite feasible to disassociate a scheme by which a district hospital could be called a district hospital and worked on the lines of a district hospital.

12864. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—And why not managed by the district?—Certainly.

12865. What have the County Council to do with it?—They have to supply the funds.

12866. No, the Guardians supply the funds?—There is no difference of opinion, I think, between us, it is a mere matter of detail, but it is always better to disassociate the actual legitimate medicine and surgery from the Guardians.

12867. CHAIRMAN.—If these various undesirable classes were removed out of the workhouse it would be practically turned into a district hospital?—Oh, certainly; but I am afraid we will always have the poor with us, and we must always provide for them.

12868. But they might not be in buildings adjoining the hospital. If the able-bodied were in a provincial building and the infirm in the county building, then you would have the sick in the local hospital, that would make the hospital more popular and perhaps more efficient?—I think it would, but I think it is a considerable objection to establishing what might be termed a lunatic asylum.

12869. Do you think it would increase the rates?—I think it would increase the rates, but I don't think any one would object to that if the poor people got better comforts and had better accommodation. I don't think a small increase in the rates would be objected to except by a few people, who would grumble at anything extra; but I think it ought always to be guaranteed that whatever funds were raised for them should be expended locally.

12870. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—There are only about 20 of that class in the whole Co. Louth. Would not a workhouse in the county accommodate those 20?—Would not any house be large enough to accommodate those 20?—I don't think Ardee would.

12871. The smallest house in the county is supposed to accommodate double that number?—The house at Drogheda would accommodate about 350. It was built to accommodate 500, but the cubic space is entirely sufficient at present.

12872. Then we are told that the farthest distance is only fifteen miles from the extreme point of the union to the workhouse?—I should think the extreme limit in Ardee would be from Drogheda to Ardee—that would be fourteen miles—and from Omagh to Drogheda, though not as the crow flies actually fifteen miles, involves a much longer journey by rail, so on the question of amalgamating Ardee with Drogheda we have larger distances already in our union than would exist if portions of Ardee was thrown into Drogheda.

12873. You have already longer distances?—Certainly.

12874. That would get rid of the distance question?—I don't think there is anything in the distance question at all. Of course various savings could be effected and the Guardians would reason. The only difference would be that they would have to come into Drogheda and Drogheda instead of meeting in Ardee.

12875. Not necessarily; they could stay in their own place and meet at District Commissioners?—Yes; but I mean as Poor Law Guardians.

12876. It would be different if they all had to come longer distances, such as would be necessary from Ardee to Drogheda?—From Ardee to Drogheda is already single—you have a railway—much simpler than coming from Omagh to Drogheda.

12877. The cost of transit is something; the Guardians would not care to undertake the expense of going often, but if the management continued as it is in the locality?—That would get rid of one objection, but I think it would be better that we should all meet together as far as the Guardians' work is concerned.

12878. Dr. BROOKES.—With reference to the district hospitals, do you think that these district hospitals should be so equipped so that major operations could take place in them?—Certainly.

12879. CHAIRMAN.—They are all now so equipped?—I am afraid not.

12880. Dr. BROOKES.—Would you think that if they were equipped operations would be performed?—It will equipped there is no reason why they should not.

12881. It takes a considerable amount of practice to keep a man efficient in major surgery?—It depends upon what we call major surgery; merely taking of a leg or an arm does not want so much skill.

12882. Appendicitis or obstruction of the bowels?—These would probably be sent into the county infirmary.

12883. Do you think there ought to be better arrangements for sending cases into the county infirmary from the smaller hospitals?

CHAIRMAN.—Some sort of connection between the district hospitals and the county infirmary—making them more systematic?

12884. Dr. BROOKES.—There is no connection between them at present?—No, but we get patients from all over the county.

12885. Sent from other hospitals; you were quite recently sent a case of cancer?—Oh, we have got some cases.

12886. Do you think it would be very well if there was a better system?—It would be very well if it could be worked, but there are considerable difficulties in the way, but they are not insuperable. You mean mentioning them?

12887. If all the hospitals were on the one basis and looked to the one institution—a large equipped hospital in the county as a hospital to which the larger operations should be sent?—That is practically what exists at present.

12898. Have you any statistics in the county infirmary of the distances from which patients come?—Yes, every year we have a report of how many come over five miles and how many inside five miles. We can have those for you. The proportion is much greater within the five miles—all the serious accidents—and, of course, we get a great number up from Gosnold and along the line. I can get the numbers for you.

12899. The larger portion of the district is outside the five miles?—Of course it is.

12900. And you could not say from memory how many patients you get from there?—I could not tell you from memory, but I can get you the figures for the last few years.

12901. Mr. M'Four.—I understand you are in favour of the scheme of amalgamating Ardee Union with Dundalk?—No; I was in favour of a scheme by which Dundalk and Drogheda could get rid of certain classes of patients, giving them to Ardee.

12902. You would send us all the under-shedding?—I don't know what you would call under-shedding. I am afraid we would have to keep our under-shedding, which are the semi-criminal population, ourselves; but the consumptives, imbeciles, and epileptics are the most to be rid of all classes.

12903. And you would send those to Ardee for comfort?—Yes, under proper conditions.

12904. You have said very fairly that any scheme you suggest would entail a very large capital expenditure?—If we had to supply our own beds, imbeciles, epileptics, and consumptives with proper accommodation, it would.

12905. Don't you think it would be necessary to acquire additional land around Ardee Workhouse; at present there are only two acres?—I thought there were four acres. Of course the consumptives would be able to walk about the place; it would be desirable to have more ground, but I should not think of equipping it as a regular sanatorium, where you want considerable ground under control, where they would be surrounded by walls to prevent their escaping.

12906. Would you think there would be any objection from the medical point of view to aggregating those different classes together?—I think the consumptives would have to be housed separately.

12907. Don't you think the consumptives might be in danger of infecting the other patients with consumption?—Unfortunately, they are all crowded together in the workhouse now.

12908. There are very few consumptive patients?—You have very few. I am glad to hear it.

12909. How many consumptives are there in Dundalk?—We have not any room for them, but we have half a dozen or so; we could have twenty or thirty if we had proper accommodation.

12910. What would you think of a central large workhouse for the whole county at Ardee?—Well, it would be a very desirable thing, but I am afraid it would be open to a great number of objections.

12911. I don't quite understand your suggestion as to a district hospital at Ardee?—I suppose you know the Local Government Act; in that you will see the County Council have perfect power to establish district hospitals, and the Guardians can also establish district hospitals.

12912. You would not advocate establishing two hospitals?—Not in Ardee.

12913. You have two in Dundalk?—We have the union hospital and the county infirmary.

12914. Would you think it would be a desirable change to put the two hospitals into one in Dundalk?—No; we would have to build a very big hospital.

12915. Everything you suggest entails building?—I did not suggest building two hospitals; it was you suggested it.

12916. You have two hospitals in Dundalk, and you don't think it would be desirable to put them into one?—They are for a different class of cases altogether; one is more for chronic cases—the union hospital; and we only treat acute cases, non-infectious cases, and operative cases in the infirmary.

12917. Would you recommend the present hospital in Ardee to be abolished altogether?—No; I don't think Ardee would do without a hospital; it ought to have its district hospital.

12918. In your suggestion to build and equip a hospital under the control of the County Council?—That would be one way of building a district hospital; the present hospital could be renamed a district hospital and worked by the Guardians.

12919. That would only be a change of name; a rose by any other name would smell as sweet?—I hope it would smell sweeter.

12920. Is that your only suggestion?—Rename it and equip it as a good working hospital.

12921. Would you advocate giving control to the County Council?—Or the Guardians.

12922. There is only one hospital in Drogheda?—That is all. I think there is a small cottage hospital outside.

Mr. MATTHEW DUFFY, Chairman Dundalk Board of Guardians, examined.

12923. CHAIRMAN.—Have you been present during the meeting?—Yes; I have been here all day.

12924. Is there anything you would like to add to the general evidence that has been given or to qualify it?—I thoroughly agree with what Dr. MacDonnell has said with regard to the epileptics. I don't wish to say anything with regard to the abolishing of Ardee Union, because it is rather a dangerous question to go into than what I see. I did not give it sufficient consideration. Then, as regards the classification of the inmates, I agree with Dr. MacDonnell's opinion too. As to query 7 I think we have a scheme with regard to paralytics; I think it would be desirable that we should charge a lesser sum to poor people instead of the set scale laid down.

12925. It is a discretionary scale; they may charge as much as they think the people can pay without hardship?—Yes; but as low as 5d. or 1s. a week. Is that discretionary too?

12926. Yes?—Then, with regard to query 8, we detain the tramps until eleven o'clock. I would like to keep them for two or three days and compel them to break stones. We find them back in Dundalk every five weeks nearly.

12927. Does the master not prosecute them?—There was an order made to that effect, but it was never carried into force; in some cases you cannot do it.

12928. But the people who come back after three weeks or a month?—They generally come from the town; they should be looked on as vagrants, and I think the Guardians should have power to prosecute them.

12929. Those are not vagrants; they are what are called idle and out-of-control?—Yes; but if the Guardians had power to prosecute them and keep them in for two or three days and make them break a certain quantity of stones, it would prevent them coming in. With regard to the rating, it is a question that the country Guardians have taken very much into consideration—instead of union rating that it should be district rating.

12930. What started this?—The outdoor relief list.

12931. It is a little bit heavy in the towns?—Yes.

12932. Are you a town Guardian or from the country?—Country.

12933. And your friends in the country think you are paying too much for the town outdoor relief?—We think the town Guardians might use a little more discretion in giving the outdoor relief.

12934. Are the countrymen able to vote on that?—Yes; I had a vote on it last Monday.

12935. As each case comes up whether relief should be given or not, are not the countrymen there to vote?—Yes. But except when a very great hardship comes up it is not always made public by the board, and then it is afterwards it is found out on the revision of the outdoor relief annually. It was reduced by £220 in the year, and I found £180 of that was in one district—Dundalk. That was what raised the question.

12936. Mr. MURKIN.—What is the annual amount of outdoor relief in the union?—Over £2,000. As a matter of fact the district Guardians, with one exception, are in favour of a change in the rating.

12937. But the town Guardians are in favour of leaving things as they are?—No. I have a resolution here, proposed by Dr. MacDonnell and seconded by Mr. Peter Hughes, both Dundalk Guardians—"That this Board are of opinion that the question of union and district rating requires to be reconsidered."

Feb. 2, 1904.

Dr. Hercules H. MacDonnell.

Mr. Matthew Duffy.

Feb. 8, 1894.
 St. Matthew
 Duffy.

12622. CHAIRMAN.—But it never went back as far as electoral divisions?—No; I think the feeling was in favour of two ratings—union and district rating.

12623. Did many of those people who were getting outdoor relief in the town belong to the country originally?—Some of them.

12624. I suppose the towns think that is rather a reason why the country should pay part?—Yes; that question has been raised too; but I know one case where a man was carrying 38s. a week—a Dandalk man—and was getting 5s. 6d. a week outdoor relief. I could give several other instances.

12625. These would be distinct abuses—not defects in the law of rating, but defects in the administration by the Guardians?—Quite so; that is the reason you want to clear away from the Dandalk Guardians if possible. They would be more careful if they were paid out of their own rates.

12626. You don't think it is necessary to carry that beyond town and country?—I don't think it would be. 12627. Mr. MURPHY.—But there are some unions in which there are farmed towns that are not urban districts; how would that come in?—You would have to deal otherwise in those districts; Ardee is a rural district.

Mr. MICHAEL O'NEARA examined.

Mr. Michael O'Neara.

I am a member of the County Council. If you would allow me to just state what I have to say I will shorten the matter. In the first place, I go in very strongly for better classification of the inmates of the workhouse. I think there is a separation of the different classes urgently needed. The inmates, imbeciles, and epileptics should be put into a separate asylum, and the children. I think the Guardians should have enlarged powers with regard to outdoor relief; it would tend greatly to keep down rates.

12628. CHAIRMAN.—What would you make the test for eligibility for relief?—Poverty, of course.

12629. Poverty; not destitution?—Destitution first.

12630. Destitution is the last extreme of poverty; would you make it a milder form?—I would make it milder, and I would make eligible those who at present cannot receive it—those who have half an acre of land.

12631. People who have labourers' cottages?—I don't know; I suppose there might be a distinction made in that case.

12632. You would be letting in that class?—There is a discretionary power in the Guardians to prevent any abuse; they are supposed to do their duty honestly, and I think as a rule they do. The law as it exists excludes a great many deserving people, and three people if they get a little relief from the rates would be excluded from the workhouse; they cost 3s. in the workhouse; if they got 2s. they could support themselves outside.

12633. If they were refused relief outside do you think they would come in?—To come in is the last thing they would like to do.

12634. It is not so much on the ground of economy you recommend the change, but humanity?—Both humanity and economy.

12635. If they would come in it would be a saving to give them a smaller amount outside, but if they would stay out and only come in in the last resort then there would not be any economy?—Well, but there would be cruelty in it; but both on the ground of humanity and economy I think the present powers of Guardians ought to be increased, and, of course, that would be done by an alteration in the law; it would be a great saving to give a person 2s. a week instead of 3s.

12636. If that were the result?—I think it would tend greatly to that result.

12637. If by refusing 2s. you have to spend 3s. it would be great economy to give the 2s., but if you refuse the 2s. and he does not come into the house?—The cruelty and hunger, and hardship follow.

12638. Can you tell us any cases without mentioning names, in which hardship resulted from refusing to give outdoor relief?—Many cases.

12639. One, please?—In one case they had to suffer hunger and hardship by not getting relief.

12640. Did they live in the town or the country?—In the country.

12641. Had this family land?—They had a small portion of land, and, of course, were excluded from getting relief.

12642. Had they any stock?—No; I may say not; perhaps a few hens.

12643. How much land had this family?—In some cases one acre.

12644. But in this particular case?—In the particular case I have known they could have several acres of land and yet be in want from the fact of not being able to manage the land.

12645. Have you one particular case in your mind?—Yes; this particular case had several acres of land, and yet from her inability to manage the land, and it being poor land, she was in a state of starvation, and her children.

12646. There do you think that if a person cannot manage a farm or several acres that the Guardians ought to come and maintain her?—You might have some reason to refuse a person with several acres.

12647. That is the case you mention?—I have other cases. In this particular case the land was poor mountain land, incapable of producing any profit, and therefore no matter whether she managed it properly or not.

12648. What would she sell her interest in that?—There was a person offered her £30 for it.

12649. Did she take it?—She did not. Owing to her impoverished condition her brother took her in and supported herself and her family and he could not support his own family.

12650. Would you think it was a case for giving relief out of the rates when a person had land for which she refused £30?—I consider there could be a good many worse cases. Then about the amalgamation of unions, I consider amalgamation quite necessary. Of course the Ardee Guardians are not to be blamed for expending the cause of their own district and trying to maintain the Ardee Union as it exists. But at the same time it must be remembered that when these unions were built the population of Ireland was double what it is at present, and surely if it took three workhouses then two ought to do now, or perhaps one. Well, I don't think one, under existing conditions, would do, and the number of cubic feet for each inmate is owing to our advance in—12651. Hygiene?—Hygiene; thank you for the word! If Ardee Union were converted into an asylum for the epileptics, and imbeciles, and imbeciles of the county I think it would be a great improvement; these people would still consume a great deal of food and the Ardee people would have the benefit of it in their neighbourhood. I have visited the two schools and found only seven or eight pupils in each school. I suppose it takes £120 a year to pay the two teachers, and I think it is an extravagant use of money paying £120 a year to teach fifteen or twenty children; if there was a central place established that all the children could be sent to. 12652. Or would you board them out and teach them to become farm labourers?—That is a very good system.

12653. Have you plenty of labourers in your part of the country?—Abundance.

12654. What part of the country is that?—Omagh, in fact all the small farmers are labourers.

12655. You are aware that in a great deal of the country there is a scarcity of labourers?—I am aware of that.

12656. Do you think it would be a good thing to rear up those boys to a healthy life as farm labourers?—It would be a good idea, but it would be better to keep them together and equip them for the battle of life.

12657. Would you be in favour of educating those walls whom we would like to treat kindly, but would you be in favour of educating those so as to make them rise above the lowest independent class of ratepayers in the community?—It would be treating them very generously.

12658. Do you think it would be fair?—It would not be fair if the cost was very much or increased the rates. It would not be fair to the poor ratepayers.

12659. Who would have their sons left behind?—I don't think it would be fair if it cost a great deal.

12660. No matter what is cost, if it could be done for nothing, do you think it would be fair to give them a better prospect in life than the children of independent ratepayers outside?—I think it would be a very invaluable thing to give them the best possible education if it did not press the poor ratepayers outside.

12967. I was thinking of the competition; you would be putting forward these poor little children in life as a better position than the children of ratepayers outside could have?—That could not be expected. Those that are not boarded out I certainly would like to educate them, but those that could be comfortably boarded out I would prefer that. Those are the principal points I wanted to draw your attention to. I have a great many complaints in the workhouse—as I am a member of the Board of Guardians—that the Master was overworked and had too much to do, and there were a great many complaints about the messing of clothing, and some Guardians said it was owing to the great amount of duty the Master had to do; and some suggested if an assistant should be appointed to take special charge of the stock of the house.

12968. We are rather on another line—to see how we can get rid of the Master?—I fell in with your idea; and if out-door relief was increased I think we might abolish the workhouse.

12969. Mr. McFiee.—You say when the Poor Law Acts were passed the population was twice as great as it is now?—Almost.

12970. So that going on a strictly mathematical basis if we had then three unions in South, we should now only have one-and-a-half?—Yes; but I qualified that by saying that they lack now more to the healthy states, and give them a larger amount of cubic feet and air.

12971. I suppose you would put one at Dundalk and half a one at Ormskirk?—No; we would put one at Dundalk and one at Drogheda, and make Ardee a general institution for imbeciles and lunatics.

12972. You say you consider it a great waste of public money to be paying for the education of the children?—Certainly not; that is a misconstruction.

12973. £250 a year?—I said £120 a year is an extravagant amount of money to spend for the education of about twenty children.

MR. PETER HUGHES EXAMINED.

12980. CHAIRMAN.—In what capacity are you giving evidence?—As a Poor Law Guardian of Dundalk. The only evidence I wish to give is as regards rating between the urban and rural districts. My view is that the rating as it at present stands is fair. For this reason, that the towns are made the dumping ground for people who are done with their labour in the country. They generally come into the towns.

12981. On the chance of employment?—Yes.

12982. And if they don't get it?—They fall on the rates.

12983. And you think the union ought to bear it?—Certainly; and as regards the giving of outdoor relief, 12974. Don't you know that that is an Imperial contribution?—Not altogether.

12975. How much of it?—Half of the teacher's salary is paid by the Treasury and the other half by the rates.

Clerk.—The whole of it.

12976. Mr. McFiee.—You are coming here to give information to the Commissioners and you don't know your own business?—I plead ignorance on that point.

12977. From the ratepayers' point of view you are anxious to keep down rates?—Doubtedly.

12978. But you would like to increase the salary of the officials?—I did not say a word about that.

12979. I thought you said you wanted another Master?—No, an assistant; that is, if things are not changed; but I hope there will be a radical change made soon, and that all the Masters can be dispensed with. I wish all lawyers could be dispensed with, too.

12980. Don't you think it would be an injustice to the ratepayers of the Ardee Union to have their rates increased?—I am not quite prepared to say that the result of the change would be increased rates for the Ardee people.

12981. But assuming it would be, don't you think that unless some considerable advantage would be gained it would be an injustice to the ratepayers?—Even if it were an injustice to the ratepayers of Ardee it would confer a great boon on the ratepayers throughout the county, and all the inmates of the workhouses in the county, which would more than counterbalance such a thing.

12982. If you could pay your rates out of our pockets you would like it?—I would like nothing but what is just. I would leave injustice to the lawyers.

12983. Would not somebody have to pay it?—Yes.

12984. Would it not be a case of robbing Peter to pay Paul?—Not necessarily. What we should look to is the greatest benefit for the greatest number.

12985. Those are your views about Poor Law administration?—A small part of my views. I don't like to occupy too much time.

I don't know of any abuses in Dundalk Union at least, for the simple reason that there always a greater number of rural Guardians present than there are of urban ones. They are watching; they won't let anything be done that is irregular; the chairman himself self makes all the orders when he hears the evidence. I have not heard of any case where there was 18s. a week earned by a man getting outdoor relief.

12990. That case was quite new to you?—Yes; I never heard of it.

12991. It was never raised in the boardroom?—Not until I heard it to-day.

MR. BEVERED HAMILL EXAMINED.

I am Chairman of the Urban District and I am also a Guardian. I agree with Mr. Hughes. What he says is quite true. A number of the country people come in here, and they are thrown on the rates, and it is only fair it should be a union charge.

12992. CHAIRMAN.—A great many of them are weary people?—Most of them are. I know cases myself where they have come into Dundalk, could not get employment, and, of course, were destitute, and they had to get relief.

12993. You think it would be unfair to put them on the town?—I do.

12994. Would there be people who were working in the town for a number of years?—A good many of them are new arrivals.

12995. When a man has been working for twenty years, he and his family living in the town, would you think it fair that their support should be charged on the town?—Where there is a man working twenty years in Dundalk he generally has a permanent employment.

12996. That class of people don't often come?—Very seldom, except through their own fault. Most of the cases of outdoor relief in Dundalk are people who have just come into the town lately; some, through sickness, are thrown on the rates.

12997. Was there any other point you wish to refer to?—With regard to the classification and wards in the workhouse, I think it a great hardship for poor people, who, perhaps, from no cause of their own, are compelled to go in there, to have to mix up with the outcasts. I think there should be a separate ward for these people to end their days together.

12998. You know the workhouses don't at present afford room for that?—I think that should be increased accommodation for that.

12999. If different classes of inmates were sent to different workhouses, the aged and infirm to one workhouse, you would be able to put what you might call the deserving in one part of the building and the undeserving in another?—I think that is one of the things that should be changed.

13000. Would you approve of having the infirm sent to one institution?—It might be too expensive.

13001. I mean subject to economy resulting from it?—Yes, I would.

13002. Because in anything that we recommend we will have to view economy?—I don't think the imbeciles or those suffering in that way are properly treated in a workhouse.

13003. You would rather have them in an auxiliary asylum?—I would. I believe they would be better treated. They are a lot hampered for space at present in Dundalk.

13004. There is room for some of the slayers, but you cannot make fresh classes in the building?—No.

Feb. 6, 1904.

Mr. Thomas
Berghan.

I entirely disagree with the last two witnesses.

13005. CHAIRMAN.—You are a rural Guardian?—Yes.

13006. What district do you come from?—Naggards-town.

13007. What is your view of the area of charge for outdoor relief?—I disagree with the proposition they put forward as regards outdoor relief, that is, that it is men that go in from the country that are put on outdoor relief. These and again cases come up where Guardians apply and get outdoor relief for men with their children earning 10s. to 14s. and 16s. a week and their parents living with them, and we were supposed to give outdoor relief. That is a thing I cannot understand that we should do. These men here come up and say it is men coming in from the country—young men that are rubbing up the labour. They are coming in to Dundalk to work, and these two men say these are the men that are on the rates; no such thing at all. You know it yourself that it is not the young men who are coming into Dundalk that are going on the rates. It is men that have spent their good years in Dundalk, and gave their labour to the Dundalk people, and then they are thrown over on the rural districts. I think we have every right to complain that we should be connected with Dundalk at all on that account. I think there should be a rural and urban rating.

13008. Mr. MURKHAM.—Your position is that you provide these men, bring them up until they are fit to earn a living for themselves, then they go and give their labour for the best part of their days to the town of Dundalk, and Dundalk, having got their labour, should support them when they become incapacitated?—Certainly so.

13009. CHAIRMAN.—Do you know any cases from your own district, without mentioning the names of young men, or comparatively young men, coming here to work, and who afterwards become destitute?—Not that I know. I don't know any, but I know plenty of young men who get married in our district and come into Dundalk to work; and I very often asked them to stop in the country, when there was plenty of work, because we were starving for labourers in the country, but they like to come into Dundalk, and it appears they would rather come in and work for 2s. or 3s. a week more than we would give them in the country, but they have their perquisites in the country, and they get nothing like them in the town at all. They have potato ground and milk and fire sometimes, that they have not in Dundalk.

13010. And good healthy air?—Certainly so, and plenty of employment.

Mr. THOMAS SCRAGHAN examined.

13011. Mr. MURKHAM.—You don't want to encourage their coming into town?—I do not.

13012. CHAIRMAN.—Have they got good comfortable houses?—They have. There are a good number of cottages, and there were contracts for new cottages given last Monday, and it is to be hoped there will be more. I did not care how many, for it is a great accommodation to have the people living in the country. There about boarding out children. It is a thing I would not tolerate if I could help it, to have any child reared in a workhouse, no matter what a cost. I would like them to go out; if it does not pay us to-day it will pay those who come after us. There is one case. The Master was asked what did a certain family that frequented the Dundalk Workhouse cost the rates, and he said it was over £3,000. I believe it is true. The father and grandfather and the children from one to the other were all reared there, and they are going there still. I would wish to put before the Guardians also that all the children belonging to these people, the ins and outs, should be left under the Guardians, to take them without their will, and send them to some school or reformatory to have them made better people.

13013. Or boarded out?—Or boarded out, that they would not be reared up in the workhouse to be a burden on the rates. Then the tramp question. I did not hear many going into the tramp question. It is becoming such a terrible plague that I am afraid we will be flooded out of the country altogether by them in a few years more.

13014. It is not as bad as that?—It is very bad.

13015. The numbers are not as heavy as that?—I have a right to know it passing along the road. There is one case of a tramp, and it appears he was in the workhouse above the night before. It occurred the week before last. He went on by Louth, and went into where there was a woman washing, and said, "I want money." The woman said, "I have no money, will you do you?" "No, I will not have bread; give me a pair of boots." She went and got her husband's second pair of boots for fear of being smashed by the ruffian and gave them to him. I have that from the husband and woman on Saturday night. Then there was that case—I suppose you saw it in the paper—the Monaghan case, where this tramp had his arm tied behind his back, pretending he was maimed in arm, and was begging all day and got drunk at night, and the police took him. He got good for nothing on the people. These are the class of people I think an eye should be kept on, and not allow them on the rates.

13016. You would lock them up?—Certainly so.

Mr. P. B. FIDGIAN examined.

Mr. P. B.
Fidgian.

I am the Clerk of the Union of Dundalk. I wish to inform you that the exceptional expenditure during the last ten years on our workhouse would at least reach £20,000, none of which was paid out of loss but all out of the rates, which would in some way account for our being in excess of Ardee.

13017. CHAIRMAN.—That would be the reason to a considerable extent?—To a considerable extent, although, as Dr. MacDonnell pointed out, in the standard year we were 2½d. per head under Ardee. I have been asked also to mention to you that the Guardians would like that sec. 7 of the Act of 1883, whereby people must now enter the workhouse before being sent for external treatment, might be amended, so as to enable these people to be sent on a doctor's certificate; they also suggest the extension of the Casual Law Act of 1862 to this country.

13018. That would meet the last witness's view?—To a large extent. The only difficulty as far as I could ascertain that we had here in putting in force the existing Act would be in proving that people left one union for another for the purpose of obtaining relief.

Mr. JAMES MCCARTHY examined.

Mr. James
McCarthy.

I am here from Drogheda, and I simply desire to say that we have no burning desire to amalgamate either with Ardee or Dundalk.

13019. CHAIRMAN.—You are not in favour of amalgamation?—In the abstract.

13020. But when it comes to your own union, do your Guardians think that anything might be done?—They think that it would be extremely difficult, and neither make for efficiency nor economy. We think it is quite possible and desirable, so to speak, that there should be a large extension of outdoor relief, if it could be protected from abuse; an extension in this sense, although it might be regrettable—that sons or daughters or nephews or nieces should be subsidised to maintain their aged relatives at home instead of in the workhouse.

13021. That would be virtually boarding out the aged and infirm people?—Of the decent and deserving poor, and then a concentration of the useless would be possible.

13022. You would be rather afraid that might be liable to abuse?—Yes, that is the danger.

13023. A great many poor families who would not dream of seeking the workhouse might like to apply for a grant in aid of their parents or old relatives?—Yes, and in some cases where it would be nearly impossible for sons or daughters or nephews or nieces of parents to maintain them at home they would struggle to maintain them if there was a grant.

13024. You would be in favour of that amendment of the law?—Yes.

13025. And would the Guardians of Drogheda be in favour of that?—was it discussed?—It was privately discussed, but they saw so many difficulties in the way that they did not desire to place their opinions before you.

13026. Retrograde Union comes near you?—Yes, but it is dearer to the North Dublin Union, in Dublin. We are altogether in favour of educating the children or nursing them outside the workhouse; as a matter of fact we do it. We are one of the four or five Meath unions who have a joint school in Trim, but it is rather a costly experiment, and I quite agree with some observations that fell from you to-day, that it is, perhaps, more desirable to rear the children of waste and strays as agricultural labourers than to give them a higher education, which would probably bring them into competition with the children of respectable ratepayers. It costs something like 6s. per head per week in the Trim school to rear those children, and we can board them out, to my mind, with equal efficacy at 3s. 6d. or 3s. a week amongst the decent labouring classes or perhaps the small farming classes of the country.

13027. I suppose those people are glad to get that little sum of money?—In many cases, yes. As a matter of fact, there was a competition for children in Drogheda Union, before we joined the Meath Unions in the Trim school. I think with much greater economy and with perhaps equal advantage to the children, they might be boarded out. Those are my own opinions. In case you decided to amalgamate the unions and provide for the respectable poor amongst their own families and connections, you might abolish the present system of relieving officers and replace it by district nurses, who would be the pay-mistresses of these people district nursing.

13028. Who would be the paymasters of these people?—The district nurses.

13029. That would be too heavy a job for a district nurse?—It is not a heavy job at all, and many of us think they would give a better idea of a healthy locality than the present relieving officers.

13030. You could hardly expect her to take money about and be a paymaster?—We don't think it would be heavy.

13031. Have your relieving officers large districts?—They have.

13032. How many have you got?—Four; but now, in the age of bicycles, we think it quite possible for a woman to supervise the district. Some of us do. I have not heard the suggestion from any other union, and I would like to place it before you.

Dr. LIVERY examined.

13033. CHAIRMAN.—You come to tell us something about your hospital?—Yes, sir; I think it would be advisable that union hospitals should be segregated from workhouses proper, and they should also change the name, and go under the name of district hospitals.

13034. And take them away from the supervision of officials who look after the ordinary able-bodied?—Yes; have them as far as possible distinct and separate.

13035. Numbers of people have very strong objections to go to them as they are; at present the name is not exciting. About the location?—I don't consider workhouses are suitable places for them.

13036. They cannot be cured?—They cannot be; and they are very much overcrowded on the female side. Of course, we have no consumption accommodation.

13037. I suppose the best plan for that would be some central institution serving a considerable area. You would not think of one for a small county like Louth?—You could either have a county institution or an inter-county—a number of counties joined.

13038. As far as you are aware, is there much phthisis about this district?—A very great deal. It is a very alarming, the amount of it.

13039. Dr. BURNES.—Is it on the increase?—I think it is. Of course, I have not very long experience, but in my experience I think it is on the increase.

13040. Do you find it possible to have cases isolated at home?—Some could; but they don't do it. You may instruct a person to carry on an open-air treatment, but the next time you go there you will find they are afraid of the draught.

13041. Do you think if they were in a sanatorium for a few months they could carry out the treatment at home?—The education would be very beneficial to them.

13042. If they once saw they were improved by the treatment?—They would be tempted to continue it.

13043. Mr. MURKHAM.—Is it not characteristic of that disease that those afflicted with it don't think they have it?—A medical man would very soon tell them they had it. But, to begin with, I would make consumptive a notifiable disease, not to the local authority, but to the central authority; and if a patient could not carry out the treatment in their own home I would give them the option of carrying out the open-air treatment or go to a sanatorium; I would compel them to go to the sanatorium.

13044. That might be a large order?—It is a very alarming disease. One case in the district tends to spread it about.

13045. Dr. BURNES.—Do you refuse patients admission to the union hospital suffering from consumption?—We don't encourage them to come in; we don't refuse them; we have not the accommodation for them.

13046. If you were asked about a case going in, would you say you would not take it?—I would recommend them not to come.

13047. Have you told the Guardians that?—I don't think I have.

13048. Would it not be well to inform them how you stand at present with regard to consumption?—They are quite aware of it.

13049. Do you know that some months ago they proposed to build wards for consumptives?—It was before my time.

13050. Some person proposed that they should wait and see could they get some disused building in the county?—I don't think consumptive wards in connection with the workhouse would be suitable. It would be better to have them separate and distinct, and treat it as a highly infectious disease. I also think that consumption is not only a local but a national evil, and the State should contribute to the upkeep of any such establishment.

13051. Have you an operation room?—We have not.

13052. Do you think one should be in connection with the infirmary?—I would not say in connection with the infirmary here, considering we have a county infirmary; but if there was not a county hospital there certainly should be.

13053. You think the operation cases should be transferred to the county infirmary, where they could be performed easily?—Yes, in this particular union.

13054. CHAIRMAN.—There would be very few cases you could not transfer?—Very few; we might say none.

Feb. 8, 1906.

Mr. James
McCarthy.

Dr. Livery.

The sitting terminated.

Feb. 21, 1904.

TWENTY-SEVENTH PUBLIC SITTING.—WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY

10th, 1904.

At the Courthouse, Naven.

Present:—MR. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. COEY BIGGER.

Colonel NUGENT T. EVERARD, D.L., EXAMINED.

Col. Nugent T. Everard.

13055. CHAIRMAN.—Would you prefer to answer questions asked by us or to make a statement?—Perhaps if you would allow me to answer questions in the sense in which the Committee of the County Council appointed for the purpose decided they should be answered, so far as they were able to arrive at an agreement. I presume you have the queries here?

13056. I have.—In answer to the first question, we state we are of opinion it is expedient to dissolve one or more unions in the county, which would be effected by amalgamation.

13057. Do you indicate the unions, or prefer not to?—We found it impossible to arrive at a unanimous conclusion as to the unions that should be dissolved, and we thought it would be for the Commission, after having heard the evidence, to decide that particular point. Then as to the second query, we answer that as under Section 75 of the Local Government (Ireland) Act of 1893 it is expedient to have an auxiliary asylum in the county without the co-operation of the counties of Westmeath and Longford, which counties, with Meath, form the asylum district of Mullingar Lunatic Asylum, we consider, even if the law were changed, we are not prepared to say it would be desirable to have an auxiliary asylum without the co-operation of the adjoining counties.

13058. I don't see exactly why you think it would be impossible to have an auxiliary asylum?—That is our reading of Section 75.

13059. But we are not tied to the existing law. We can recommend changes in the law?—We speak of the law as it stands, and we have found that the counties in the same district decline to entertain the opinion. Perhaps it would be better not to go into readings of the Act. We have an opinion here.

13060. We can suggest reforms of the Act?—The reason why we think, even if the law were changed, it would not be desirable to have an auxiliary asylum for the Co. Meath alone is, in the first place, the number of lunatics and idiots in our present workhouses consists of too small a number.

13061. Is the Mullingar Asylum overcrowded?—It is, but we would not suggest—

13062. You would not be restricted to Meath lunatics: you could have them from elsewhere?—I am taking it for the county only, because the other counties in the same district decline to be associated in an auxiliary asylum. The number of lunatics and idiots in the five unions of the Co. Meath, that is those that are really in the Co. Meath, number only 105, and therefore the expense of an adequate staff, with a qualified medical officer, would be altogether out of proportion to the number of lunatics to be confined in that auxiliary asylum.

13064. But if the capitation grant were raised to 4s. 1—If it were raised to 4s., there could be no further objection on that score. There is another point, as you ask for amendments in the law as to the admission of lunatics and idiots. As you are aware, that question has been before the House of Commons, and if you will just allow us to read a portion of Mr. Gerald Balfour's answer, which was given on the 30th of February, 1896, to the question: it is as follows:—"It is true that in some workhouses lunatic epileptics are sent to the lunatic wards, and the Local Government Board often pointed out to the Guardians this is not a desirable arrangement. It has been frequently explained, in answer to questions in this House, that destitute persons of unsound minds are sent to Irish workhouses without either legal warrant or constraint, and if unable to take care of themselves they are detained and not allowed to take their discharge." That is a point which, it is admitted, requires amendment, because there is nothing to prevent an unsound person from being brought into the lunatic ward of a workhouse and left there as a person unable to take care of himself. That is not supported necessarily by any sworn evidence, and I need hardly say when once a lunatic or supposed lunatic is brought into the lunatic wards of our workhouses, there is no doubt there is very little chance of his ever getting out, because the mere sense of injury from being placed among a lot of lunatics and idiots of the various kinds kept there would be very likely, if he had any tendency that way, to derange his intellect. In any event I think there is no case, or hardly any case, of recovery and discharge from any of the lunatic wards of the workhouses, so far as I am aware.

13065. Don't you think the best way would be that no patients should be admitted into the workhouses at all?—Certainly. That is one reason why I am in favour of an addition to the Mullingar District Asylum.

13066. Or the provision of an auxiliary asylum, if it can be managed at a more economical rate?—If possible. Then, in answer to the third question, we state that, with or without any dissolution of a union, it would be possible, by an arrangement for the maintenance of any class or classes of paupers in the workhouse of another union, to make better provision for classification and treatment of the lunatics chargeable to said union. I think we may extend the classes of lunatics and idiots from the consideration of this question, because I have already dealt with them. You have first of all the sick, then you have the infirm, and then you have the question of vagrants—

13067. The children?—The children are provided for in this county by a district industrial school, so that is why we don't take them into account. The boarding-out of pauper children is practised in all the unions, is the best of my belief. With regard to the sick, I don't think any of the workhouses are provided with a proper operating-room.

13069. Do you think, for instance, that the sick will come from Oldcastle to Naven?—I do, for the simple reason that there is no part of Meath, as far as I can measure it on the map, more than six miles away from a railway station, and every railway station is connected with Naven.

13070. You cannot take the sick by railway; there are a great many ordinary medical and surgical cases you cannot move by railway?—I think they can be as easily moved by railway as at present, but—

13071. If put on the railway at the door of their own houses and taken to hospital it might be possible, but you could not move them in practice by rail between widely-separated places. That is never permitted by surgeons if it can be avoided?—To be put on rail?

Feb. 20, 1904.

Col. August T. Newell.

13072 Removal by rail is not a recognised way of conveying the sick to hospital?—I am afraid I have not noted that way myself.

13073 Very likely, where there is no choice?—There happened to be no choice. But what I would suggest, in addition to the provision of one large district hospital for the Co. Meath, is that we should have district nurses appointed who could render their first aid.

13074. In the people's own homes?—Yes; under first aid in cases of accidents, so that patients could be safely carried with a broken leg, put temporarily in slings, and could be safely removed, whether by road or by rail, to the central hospital. As a matter of fact—I speak under correction, of course—nearly all serious cases of accident are treated in the county infirmary or sent to Dublin to the hospitals there, because there are no facilities for serious operations in the workhouse hospitals.

13075. A great many big operations are carried out in workhouse hospitals, although the facilities are not as good as they ought to be?—I dare say they are, but it is quite impossible that they can be carried out with a fair chance of success, owing to the insanitary surroundings. Then in regard to the infirm, I cannot see any difficulty in those people who have become infirm through age being brought to a central workhouse by rail.

13076. Certainly there is no difficulty?—By rail or otherwise; and I think perhaps this would be an occasion on which I should mention the enormous accommodation which there is in the workhouses of the county. I have taken the five which are actually in the county—Dunmurry, Kells, Navan, Oldcastle, and Trim, and these five have accommodation for 4,607 inmates.

13077. That is enormous?—That is what they were built to accommodate.

13078. That, of course, is not their present accommodation?—The actual number in those workhouses at the commencement of the year 1901, which is the last return furnished by the Local Government Board, amounted to 351, and of these 106 were lunatics and idiots, which, at any rate, it is to be presumed we shall eventually remove. Therefore it would leave about 245 to be dealt with, which could be accommodated in almost any workhouse within the county. I think I have answered number 3. Number 4, that inasmuch as an amalgamation of unions will tend to increase the already overmanned Boards of Guardians, we are of opinion that there is necessity for such a change in the law as would reduce the present numerical strength of our Boards of Guardians. You are aware we have two Guardians appointed for each district electoral division. Of course that number would be entirely unnecessary if the unions were amalgamated, and we would suggest that one should be appointed in each district.

13079. What you suggest is really that there should be a county workhouse for the aged and infirm, and another county workhouse for the sick?—That would be my opinion individually. As I have already mentioned, we could not particularise.

13080. You would keep up two workhouses, one for the sick and the other for the feeble and healthy?—Yes, with the addition of district nurses, and of course the fever hospital would have to be maintained; but I am of opinion that as it is so very seldom need it should be sufficient to have a caretaker and his wife, and telegraph to Dublin when necessary for any nurses. That would not be a very heavy charge on the individual unions.

13081. Could you give us any evidence as to what places the central institutions will, according to your scheme, be placed in?—Of course Navan, that is the most central, and Kells also, or Trim. Kells is served more by two railways than Trim, but either of those would make a very good second. I am leaving out of account Droghda, because that is more Louth. As to question Number 5, whether any extra accommodation is wanted, we think not.

13082. For hospital?—For any purpose.

13083. That was meant for hospital?—Then as to question Number 6, whether any administrative and financial changes are desirable, we thought that was rather a hypothetical question.

13084. That would include any idea that might be floating in the minds of people?—There are two ways by which the system—

13085. You could then discuss anything about the area of change, if you think any amendment would be desirable under that head?—There are two systems absolutely distinct. You can amalgamate two unions by dissolving one of the Boards, or dissolve both Boards and then having a union of the two, but there is another way, and that is by combining several unions for distinct purposes, in which case you would retain the Boards as they stand for local purposes, such as giving out-door relief. Then, as far as the payment by patients is concerned, we think that they should be made to pay according to their means.

13086. That is that the Board should have authority to fix how much they could pay without hardship, and recover it according to law?—Yes, that is the meaning of our answer. Then as to the treatment of our vagrant poor, generally known as tramps or casuals, our answer is that the labour test should be rigorously enforced; and we did not go into the question of labour colonies. They have had some experience of those colonies in Scotland, and they have answered admirably well and are almost self-supporting, but that hardly comes under your present at present.

13087. Oh, it would?—I think that would be extremely important, if we could obtain direct evidence supported by figures as to the financial working of the scheme in Scotland.

13088. I am glad you have mentioned it; we will look it up?—But I think that the easy distances our workhouses are placed from one another is a great inducement to vagrant life.

13089. Short stages?—Yes, short stages, and practically no labour put; and the both test is not always applied. In fact in some workhouses I dare say it would be impossible to give every one a bath without running great risk of the vagrant's life, because they have no means of heating the water sufficiently.

13090. I knew it would be impossible in most workhouses?—So I think some very great change in the practice, at any rate, would be required.

13091. Would you approve of an assimilation of the law to the English law, which enables Boards of Guardians to detain vagrants in the workhouse for a certain time in accordance with the frequency of their visits?—I think there is a great deal to be said both for and against that question—making them do work.

13092. They could have the discretion; they need not enforce it?—We find a great many who would like to live in the workhouses altogether.

13093. Of the tramps?—Yes.

13094. That is quite true?—A great many of them who only come out at times; they think they can do more business outside.

13095. But still most of them are people with a taste for a vagrant life?—That is quite so; and, unfortunately, it is hereditary.

13096. Would you be in favour of an amendment of the law that would give the Guardians the power to detain these people if necessary, and even go so far as to take their children from them and bring them up separately?—Certainly, I think the children of vagrants ought to be taken from them, and they ought to be brought up, at any rate, with the opportunity of learning a trade or calling of some sort. I am not altogether in favour of the system at present practised of the district school, because I have seen other systems that are more successful; that is where the district school is only used as a place where they learn trades, but they live in what are practically cottage houses in small companies under a respectable woman, who looks after them.

13097. And in these out-door employment?—No; that is for learning the same trades that they learn at present at the school, that is baking, tailoring, shoe-making. But they have some conception of what a home life is. They live in small numbers under somebody who is capable of giving them the care and attention of a mother.

13098. Do you think that that cottage home system is an expensive one?—It is found not to be more expensive. I object altogether to the barrack life, which, I think, quite unfit a man in after life to care about a home of his own.

13099. Do you apply that system to your own school at Trim?—I am afraid that some of them have come back to the workhouses, but a great many of them have been respectable, and are making respectable members of society; but it has not had a sufficiently long trial to say what would be the average result.

13100. Had you anything to say about a county infirmary?—No, nothing, except that it supplies a great need in the county, because the more respectable classes object, I dare say for sentimental reasons, to go into the workhouse hospital, and a great many for the reason that they think they are better treated in the county infirmary, that is to say, there are more facilities ties for classifying them, and certainly there is a better opportunity of operating successfully in the county infirmary.

13109. Dr. BACON.—Has it quite sufficient means: are its funds large enough?—No, I think they ought to be increased.

13110. What is the county grant?—I think it is £1,200.

13111. Are there many subscribers outside that?—No, very few now; since the Board consists of elected members by the County Council the donations have fallen off. They seem to think it ought to be supported entirely by the county rates.

13112. Do you receive money from some patients?—Not very much. You will have more evidence from the medical officers. I am not prepared to say how much, but I notice very often the pay wards are nearly empty.

13113. Do you not take payment from the ordinary patients not in pay wards?—No; the same qualifications for the workhouse apply to the county infirmary, that is to say no ticket can be given to any man who is able to pay.

13114. You have no special wards set apart for consumptive patients?—No, that is a very great need. There is one reason why I think we ought to have, at any rate, a grant for buildings, to be able to add one.

13115. Do you think it would be in connection with the county infirmary, or would it be in connection with the district hospital?—I should prefer it being in connection with the district hospital, because the accommodation is not very large at the infirmary, and I don't think it would be easy to add very largely to it, the space being limited.

13116. What I mean to say, would it not be better to have one sanatorium for the whole county, separate and not in connection with the county infirmary, separate and distinct, on a good site?—Yes, for the reason you don't propose to have two, and there are a large number of consumptive patients who could not afford to pay anything.

13117. Would it be desirable to get them into hospital, so that you might prevent the spread of disease?—Certainly.

13118. Consumption is a very infectious disease?—Very.

13119. You mentioned something about district nursing. Do you think you would have the district nurses in connection with any hospital?—I don't think it is necessary. The district nurses can be appointed now if a certain sum is guaranteed or collected in any district.

13120. That is the jubilee nursing you are referring to?—Yes.

13121. Do you think it would be a benefit to have them in connection with the district hospital, where you could perhaps get the patients to come into it more easily if they thought their cases could be treated there?—I think it would be. I think it would be very desirable.

13122. Where they could be relieved, and so on; where the nurses could change with the district nurses, some system like that?—I think it would.

13123. Mr. MURKIN.—You say you think one district hospital and the infirmary would do for the county of Meath?—As far as the accommodation at present stands it would be absolutely ample.

13124. No doubt as far as numbers, but would it not be a disadvantage for the localities not to have some hospital in their midst. For instance now, if you take places like Drumshaghlin, Kells, or Odoonville, would not some hospital be needed for the sick in these districts?—I have suggested that cases of serious illness ought in any case be brought to a hospital, but that cases less serious could be treated in their own homes if you had district nurses; and any serious cases, I won't say all serious cases, but a large proportion of the serious cases, are brought at present to the county infirmary at Navan.

13125. But would the homes of these people be suitable for the purpose of nursing?—That is hardly a question I could answer directly, but I think there are certain cases that could be treated in their own homes. It is not every home where you could treat serious cases, but I think, under the direction of a district nurse, sanitary provision could be made in almost any home.

13126. Do you not think it would be necessary to retain hospitals in the places where they are now, hospitals of an inexpensive character?—I don't know exactly where you could draw the line; if you have a central hospital, which is within at any rate fifteen or sixteen miles at farthest from any portion of the county, and buses of rail coming from all parts to that centre, it seems hardly necessary to have more than that one.

13127. But there is a difficulty in moving the sick, especially if their illness is very acute?—Of course there are some cases that could not be moved a mile.

13128. Would it be fair to those localities to take away from them the accommodation for the sick that they have at present?—That would be against all change or centralization.

13129. CHAIRMAN.—As regards sick people?—As regards sick people.

13130. Mr. MURKIN.—Can you really centralise the sick?—I think you could.

13131. If some inexpensive system were retained in the place where the hospitals are now, do you not think it would be better than to compel the sick to go to some central point in the county?—I think it would be too expensive, if you were to have every modern improvement, as in a district hospital.

13132. CHAIRMAN.—Not so much as that. Every modern improvement would be very expensive, but with the dispensary doctor to look after the small hospital, that would be for urgent cases?—That is what I call a cottage hospital.

13133. A district hospital—say under forty beds; say about thirty beds?—That would be an economy on the present system.

13134. The cost of locomotion is considerable, the danger is serious, and every locality should have, as far as possible, equal advantages?—I think a small cottage hospital would be useful for the first treatment, and then, as soon as they were sufficiently recovered, to be moved, they could be moved to the district hospital. I agree it is so far as the cottage hospital might be an auxiliary to the central hospital.

13135. Almost every witness we have heard has insisted that there should be accommodation for the sick in the place where the accommodation is at present, and I may say you are the first one to advocate a central infirmary for the county, and I was just wishing to know why it was that you hit upon that idea?—Because the means of communication are ample.

13136. And the county is not large?—The county is not very large.

13137. Districts like the Hill of Down would have to go to Dublin before they could come here?—There would be a difficulty there. It would be a long railway journey. If you take Carlow: that is something about half the size of Meath, and one workhouse is sufficient for that county.

13138. Dr. BIGGER.—It has three hospitals?—I was not aware there were three.

CHAIRMAN.—And other unions have part of the county.

13139. Mr. MURKIN.—How you had such experience of the colony system?—No, I have only heard a general report about them. I have never seen one of them, but I have heard a very favourable report.

Yes. We have had some testimony in other places in regard to it.

13140. CHAIRMAN.—Would your idea be that the Co. Meath should be one Poor Law Union, that all the unions, even such as Drogheda, that have portions of the Co. Meath, should come into what you might call the county union?—No; my idea is outside Drogheda altogether.

13141. You would only take in those workhouses that are really in the county?—Precisely.

13142. That would exclude Odoonville?—No.

13143. A great deal of Caran is in Odoonville?—Of course if it would be more convenient for the inmates of the Odoonville Workhouse to go to Caran, that would answer the same purpose.

13144. You don't take the county as a unit?—Not altogether.

13145. You concede it would be a considerable convenience if it were taken?—I think it would. My idea was we should maintain the present Poor Law Board for certain purposes, such as the administration of outdoor relief, and they should combine, as they have done in the case of the Trim district school, for the purpose of centralising their sick, and their infirm, and also their idiots and imbeciles.

13146. Does anything else occur to you?—Nothing else.

Dr. L. FISKEHAM examined.

13133. CHAIRMAN.—You are Medical Officer of the Workhouse, and also one of the surgeons of the County Infirmary.

13140. You heard the evidence of Colonel Everett just now as to having one hospital for the unions that are wholly contained in the Co. Meath. Do you think that would be a good idea?—In the main I would agree with most of the evidence of Colonel Everett.

13143. So far as regards the removal of the sick each long distance?—I think that the removal of the sick can be very well accomplished.

13145. You think it could?—I do; and talking about taking in the Oldscote Union or part, the people who are not very ill can quite well come half-way from here to Oldscote, and vice versa.

13148. Would you put them into an ambulance to do that distance. You think if you had a really good ambulance they could go the rest of the way without much injury?—Certainly, I think so, if you have a proper ambulance. As a matter of fact they may have to do that now, or very near it, in out-of-the-way districts.

13144. Dr. BROWNE.—How far?—I would say about six or twelve miles.

13145. Have you any ambulance doing that at present?—Not quite that distance, but they have to come from Slane at present, eight miles from Navan.

13146. With an ambulance?—With an ambulance. Not a perfect, but a fairly good, one; and they come.

13147. In connection with the workhouse?—Yes.

13148. CHAIRMAN.—You think they could come from Dunshaughlin to Navan; how far would that be?—That would be a long journey—seventeen miles—but they are much nearer Dublin there.

13149. But they would not have any right of admission in Dublin. They are in Dunshaughlin Union there?—Of course very bad cases, I don't think, could be removed for long distances. What I would be in favour of is, in each district where you have a fever hospital at present, maintain that hospital as a small hospital.

13150. As a general hospital?—Not as a general hospital, I won't say, except you may maintain it for acute cases.

13151. If a fever case comes in there after an hour's notice?—Some acute cases are contagious diseases. You may look on pneumonia and most of these things as contagious acute cases. We have sometimes cases of consumption, chronic consumption, and unspurred pneumonia; that is a contagious case that should be put in a fever hospital.

13152. Say a case of lueria: that could be operated on locally, and that it would be necessary to operate on locally to save life?—It is only in cases like that that the difficulty arises, acute appendicitis or acute lueria, and these cases, that is where the difficulty arises.

13153. You would be hardly willing to go as far as Colonel Everett and say that one hospital for the county, so far as these unions are concerned, would be sufficient?—Quite sufficient with the ambulances and fever hospitals maintained in the districts in which they are at present.

13154. But you would take in some general cases into those when there were no fever cases?—Yes, certainly.

13155. How would you get them out of it when fever cases come in?—You can always have your wards out of it.

13156. You would have a male on one side and a female on the other. You would have both wards occupied?—You may have four wards, for instance, a male and female on the contagious side, and a male and female on the non-contagious.

13157. You would at once get into a big hospital?—Not at all, a very small hospital; if you had four cases on each side, that is eight between male and female; that is sixteen cases. If you had provision for sixteen cases.

13158. Dr. BROWNE.—How many wards would you have?—Two on each side. Two for infectious.

13159. CHAIRMAN.—You would have typhoid and scarlet in the same ward?—So you may.

13160. You would not object to it?—I don't object to it very much.

13161. Dr. BROWNE.—Do you mean to say you do that now?—You may have to.

13162. CHAIRMAN.—You would not approve of it?—I would not approve of it as a rule.

13163. Dr. BROWNE.—Did you ever hear of any well-regulated hospital doing that?—No.

13164. You are advocating it, are not you?—I am not advocating it as a rule.

13165. CHAIRMAN.—You would put up with it?—I would put up with it.

13166. Dr. BROWNE.—Do you think it a desirable working system?—I won't say I would recommend it.

13167. Would you allow a patient suffering from typhoid fever to go into a scarletina ward?—Certainly I would if I had no provision otherwise; not as a chance.

13168. CHAIRMAN.—But if you recommend us to start a ward which would be the only accommodation for all sorts of infectious diseases?—No; I recommend you to have two for infectious and two for non-infectious.

13169. Dr. BROWNE.—That would be four wards on each side. You cannot put male and female together?—

13170. CHAIRMAN.—You could not have any classification of infectious diseases if you had only one ward for male and one for female?—That is another way to look at it. You would want more certainly.

13171. Great difficulties would arise in practice in having general cases treated in an infectious hospital, don't you think?—Of course they would, except you could make provision for separating.

13173. Dr. BROWNE.—But as a medical man, could you recommend such a scheme?—You may make provision in the small hospital; certainly, if you could have four wards or three wards on each side, it might be ample. Remember we have now the fever hospital often vacant for weeks and weeks.

13174. CHAIRMAN.—It is very often vacant, and then a number of cases come in?—Of course that is the case, but very seldom are we obliged to utilise the upper wards in the fever hospital here. Sometimes, of course, we are.

13175. We are rather thinking of country hospitals, say in Dunshaughlin or places like that, where they would have no such accommodation as you have in your very good fever hospital here?—That is just the thing. Our union is a large central place; still we have not very much fever.

13176. Is there anything you wish to say about the infirmary?—Nothing.

13177. You find the funds sufficiently ample?—Of course the funds are very small, and there are a great many things we would like to get, and we would be better able to do if we had more funds.

13178. Would you approve of having the entire necessary expense of the county infirmary placed on the rates, leaving subscriptions, and such like sources of revenue, to provide for what you might call desirable, but not necessary, improvements. What is your net expenditure per annum here at present. You get £1,800 a year from the county. What do you spend about altogether, one year with another?—I suppose we spend about £1,800 a year.

13179. I suppose you really have to cut it tight?—As far as possible. Then, of course, when we want anything extra we have to make a sort of collection—they won't give us anything from the County Council—by bazars and that sort of thing.

13180. Mr. MURPHY.—If the support of the infirmary were put entirely on the rates, then, of course, the management would have to be different?—Of course that is a matter I don't know what difference there would be in the management.

13181. The people that pay the money would like to have the distribution of it?—Yes; a very proper arrangement, I would say. But as a matter of fact the management is mostly in the hands of the County Council at present.

13182. About two-thirds, and it provides four-fifths of the money?—I think only three or four of the old governors are on the Board. All the rest are appointed by the County Council.

Mr. JAMES TUTT examined.

Feb. 10, 1904.
Mr. James
Tutt.

13183. CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the Guardians of the Oldcastle Union?—Yes.

13184. What is the view of your Board of Guardians?—Without going into it, unless you wish me to go into the question.

13185. As regards the amalgamation of unions?—I wish to tell you, if you permit me, that on the 22nd of April last year there was a committee appointed to inquire into the very high expense that was then apparent, and we went into it very carefully, and found that the cost of each inmate would be 5s. 11d., or thereabouts, making a total of £15 6s. 7d. per inmate per year.

13186. For food and clothing only?—Yes. And then we took account of the officials in the house, which would add on £10 1s. 6d. per head more, making a total cost of £25 8s. 1d. per head in Oldcastle.

13187. For the sick or for average inmates?—Average inmates. On that occasion we then recommended that it was so high we thought the best thing to do would be to have amalgamation, and that report is adopted. But since, I may tell you, they have changed their opinion very much, for and against. They think it very expensive to have people to come here from Ros, that is a district six miles from Oldcastle. To have them come here would be a great hardship and tear them away from their friendly surroundings.

13188. You mean the sick?—The sick poor; and generally speaking, we are in favour of boarding these people out if it could be so arranged.

13189. Boarding-out the sick and infirm?—Yes, to their friends, and these, of course, who have no friends they would be supposed to go to a central place; and I may remark that each union thinks themselves central, and they think that is the place all ought to go to.

13190. Oldcastle considers it is a good centre for Meath?—To be sure, and so would all the rest, I suppose.

13191. Is your Board of Guardians in favour of dissolving Oldcastle, if you are left the power of boarding-out your aged and infirm?—If it would be a saving they would.

13192. Would they be in favour of any change practically which would mean a saving to the rates without hardship to the sick and poor?—They are of opinion lately that there would be no saving at all by amalgamation. They have changed their ideas.

13193. Did they consider the question of such an amalgamation as was suggested by Colonel Everest, virtually having one workhouse for the sick and one workhouse for the non-sick for the entire Co. Meath?—They would look on that as practically impossible.

13194. Why do they think that?—For the reason that you could not bring them such long distances. The expense would overcome the benefit.

13195. Do you think sick people would be likely not to leave their own houses at all if they had to go such long distances?—It would be tearing them away from their friends, and where there would be sick poor, it would make them feel so much worse; they would think when taken away they were not going to see their friends any more, and it would be a hardship in that way.

13196. You think it would really deter people from having the advantage of a hospital?—Yes, they would not come. They would sooner stop at home in their own beds and the there.

13197. Mr. MURKIN.—That applies particularly to the sick?—Yes.

13198. That is when they want to see their friends and parents; they won't see them?—Yes.

13199. It would not apply to the aged and infirm?—No.

13200. CHAIRMAN.—I want to find out exactly what you would do. You would leave a place for treating the sick in Oldcastle?—Certainly.

13201. Except that, you would be willing, if economy would result, to have a central institution for those persons who are not sick?—Yes, I believe that is the general opinion.

13202. As long as the sick people could be looked after?—Yes. Of course the remark that was made there about having district nurses would come in with these people if we adopted the boarding-out system—that they would go round and see after the old people. I think it would be very advisable if they did.

13203. You think if there were a central institution for the aged and infirm, that it would be only fair to give unions at a distance, like yourselves in Oldcastle, the alternative of boarding-out the aged and infirm with their funds, if they had any?—Yes.

13204. Mr. MURKIN.—By that method you would get rid of a good many persons, the staff of the workhouse proper?—Yes. For instance, the average expense of the keeping of the workhouse; you do say with £10 1s. 1d., that the official cost.

13205. And the firing and repairs, and a great deal of the expenses in connection with a large institution, such as a workhouse is?—Yes; the expenses referred to we find are £1,790 13s. 3d. for expenses connected with the workhouse for provisions and necessaries and clothing.

13206. Dr. BROWNE.—How do you make up your £15 per head?—The average cost per head per week would be exactly five and twopenny three farthings, which would bring it up to £15 6s. 7d. for food and clothing, and then the officials.

13207. The establishment charges?—Yes.

13208. What do you include in establishment charges?—The master and clerk—all the salaries.

13209. The whole of the clerk's salary?—Yes.

13210. And the upkeep of the house?—Yes, and everything, would bring it up to £10 1s. 6d.

13211. Mr. MURKIN.—That is 4s. a week for the latter charge and 6s. for the other?—Yes.

13212. Ten shillings a week?—Yes.

13213. That is higher than the upkeep of some of the asylums?—Indeed it is much above it.

Mr. E. B. PARNON examined.

Mr. E. B.
Parnon.

13214. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Rural District Council, and Guardian of the Edenderry Union?—Yes.

13215. What is the view of the Edenderry Guardians as regards the Co. Meath part of their union?—The view the Edenderry Guardians take is this, that we object to that portion of the union situate in Meath amalgamating with any unions in Meath unless there was a general amalgamation all over the country. Of course we should lose our share of the rate in that part of the union in Meath for establishment charges, and they had the option of amalgamation when the general Act was passed and they did not.

13216. Unless there were a general amalgamation?—Yes.

13217. You would take Kildare and King's County to be a whole unit if Meath was to be one?—Yes. The union is divided in valuation—about $40,000 in King's County, somewhere about the same in Kildare, and about £15,000 in Meath. Of course if the Kildare portion went into Kildare, and the King's County portion went up to Tallamore somewhere, and Meath was here, it would be a different thing, but if Meath amalgamated here—

13218. And only left you the balance?—Yes.

13219. Your rates would become higher?—Yes, but I may say that in any question of amalgamation we should strongly object to amalgamation unless the standard rates were taken into consideration. For instance, our standard rate is 1s. 0d.; Tallamore is 1s. 10d. If we were to pay a large portion of the Tallamore rate when amalgamated in the King's County, where the standard rate is very much larger, we would lose all the advantages of an economical rate that we would gain in amalgamation.

13220. You think if there were a big amalgamation the standard rates should be revised?—Yes, we think our standard rate should be retained, which is a very important matter.

13221. But if your firm is broken up and you enter into a new firm you could not carry your old percentages with you?—No, but if we went into a new firm we would not take the bad debts of that firm, but should insist on some arrangement being made before we went in. That I think is a very important thing. By economy and strict management in the Edenderry Union we have kept down the standard rate very low. We would lose all the advantages. That is of great importance.

13222. Your rates are lower than in the adjoining union?—Very much; considerably.

13223. That would make you opposed to amalgamation unless the result of amalgamation was that you would have to pay a still lower rate?—Yes, quite so.

Feb. 10, 1906.
Mr. F. R.
Payton.

13234. That might happen if a large number of establishments were broken up?—Yes; but we think in the question of amalgamation the standard rate should be taken into consideration.

13235. How would you take it into consideration. How could it be done. Suppose the paupers from your part of the Co. Meath come to Navan in future, how would you apply the standard rate?—It would be rather difficult. I should charge Meath in accordance with the more establishment charge of the union—the valuation; then I should simply charge them for the number of paupers. It could not be called a capitation grant, but per head, the number of paupers coming from Meath, and what I would suggest is they retain the question of out-door relief.

13236. You would keep up your Board of Guardians at Edenderry. You would get them to pay to Navan a capitation grant at the present rate for the maintenance of your paupers, even though they might cost more at Navan?—Yes, if the net result was advantageous.

13237. That would not be advantageous to Navan?—Yes it would, because it would increase the area for establishment charges. If you increase the area you lessen the amount of establishment charges which Navan and the other unions have to pay. The establishment charges remain very much the same. That is our argument. They would be able to make provision for a greater number of paupers in some of their unions. The more establishment charges would not rise then. I should suggest that Meath pays simply their portion according to the numbers they send of in-door paupers.

13238. That they should board them there at a fixed rate?—Yes.

13239. How would you come to the fixed rate?—I should take an average all over the county for the fixed rate of maintenance.

13240. You might have to pay more, of course, per head?—No, I would not object to that, provided the standard rate was maintained.

13241. I don't quite see what you mean by standard rate here?—In the calculation of the equivalent grant we get half the standard rate in the poor rate of our own union.

13242. Your standard rate is 1s. 0d., say 1s. 1d. The other people get a grant at a higher rate, and you would object to get more from the Government?—No, I should not. What we do object to is that we should pay—we might get more from the Government—we would still have to pay out larger half. We could not get more from the Government now because it is settled.

13243. Unless it was put into the pot again?—Yes, that is different, but still there is the general principle. It would be hard on them now to have to pay half of 1s. 10d. instead of half 1s. 0d. You see my point?

13244. I do?—I am somewhat of a student of Poor Law. If you will allow me, it seems sometimes people suffer more the real importance of the Poor Law in not quite studying what effect any change which might take place would have on the morality of the population. For instance, you might say boarding-out is a very good thing. I dare say you are perfectly aware—that that I mean to teach you—there are three objections to the Poor Law. One is that by providing for the old and infirm you prevent thrift in the population, because none takes any trouble to get by for old age.

13245. You cannot get much thrift out of a few shillings a week?—No, but there is some money saved. There are a certain number of people who would save money. The second is young relations very often support parents out of their wages. Therefore it has been suggested that the Poor Law is a bad thing in blighting the natural affections that would come into play. In Ireland there are many cases where the young do support the old. The effect is it makes use of money which could be made use of in a more profitable way. Speaking from the human point of view, I should be in favour of boarding-out, but when you come to consider whether it would have a bad effect on the people, increasing pauperism, it is doubtful.

13246. What are the classes of children you would send out?—I am not at children. I am assuming the boarding-out of old people. The standard of living is low in Ireland. If you offer special facilities for every time they get old, don't you think it would be a great temptation to people. Would not it be likely to lead to very much increased pauperism?

13247. You think that unless it can be safeguarded it would be very dangerous?—What I would be inclined to suggest is that paupers should go to one central workhouse, and that the out-door relief, and many duties hitherto done by the Boards of Guardians, should be given to the District Council. Why could not the District Council deal with out-door relief, and in-door paupers go to some central workhouse in the county?

13248. That has been suggested before to us?—The question of children I have taken a great deal of interest in. Of course the real question is—I don't know whether you can advise me as to whether the English Act of 1880 can be put into force in Ireland—I don't think it can—that allows Boards of Guardians to take the guardianship of children.

13249. They can in certain circumstances pass a resolution placing themselves in loco parentis in Ireland?—All the arguments are in favour of boarding-out. I only deal with a certain proportion of the children. Any one who has read anything of the system of Poor Law in New York, France, and different places—they have had it often in France—knows that a very large proportion of pauperism can be traced to children. In New York I believe they have had three generations of paupers—children, grand-children, and great-grand-children paupers.

13250. We have seen four generations of the same family in one workhouse?—It is very difficult for me. For one thing I am a Protestant in religion. I don't know how it would be looked at from the Roman Catholic point of view. In France, which is a Roman Catholic country, or at least has been, the State takes possession of the children. I take it it would be open to you to advise that the law would be altered in that way. I am strongly in favour of the law being altered so that children could be taken possession of. When the children are habitually on the rates, I think the Board of Guardians should take them away from their parents and bring them up properly. With regard to Trist Industrial School, I tried to get Edenderry Union to join, but they would not. As regards the barracks system, that Colonel Bernard spoke of, in Dr. Barnardo's Home—I don't know the statistics, and so on—but it is found of the children trained in these Homes, only 5 per cent. who went to the colonies went to the bad, so that is rather as much in favour of homes as it is of boarding-out. As regards classification, I always felt very strongly, of course, on that, that there should be separation between good and bad.

13251. As regards children, do I understand you to be in favour of a boarding-out system or of institution management?—Well, provided the institution was carried out on the Barnardo's Home plan, I would almost be disposed to do that.

13252. But those homes are almost exclusively used for collocating purposes?—Yes; for bringing up the children.

13253. And sending them to the colonies?—But they are brought from the worst slums in the towns.

13254. We have no such population in this country?—Of course the boarding-out merges them with the population, but it is rather difficult to get good homes. I know some persons are rather against the boarding-out system, because it is difficult to get good homes.

13255. We had very interesting evidence some days ago as to the action of the Cardinal Archbishop of Armagh, who started in his diocese the boarding-out system in connection with an orphanage. Instead of sending the children to an orphanage he started the boarding-out system, and it worked extremely well?—Our boarding-out system so far has done very well. We have not had the children out long enough to know whether they will come back to the workhouse, but it is satisfactory so far. I could not give any definite information, but I suppose the boarding-out is more practicable than the homes.

13256. You have not visited Trist School?—I have, and gone into the system.

13257. How does it impress you?—Very favourably; and they kept statistics—

13258. You think such an institution as that would be worth maintaining?—I do. One thing is, I think, the pauper children should have some special advantage in entering the world. Of course if you succeed in merging them in the population by boarding-out, well and good; but supposing, as I should say, they are always looked on with some amount of slur as pauper children, certainly those children should have the advantage of some trade. Of course I am aware that the many offer special facilities.

Feb. 10, 1904

were boarded out in their older life, and that they eventually became as their own children?—I cannot really give my own ideas. I have not had lengthened experience. I should not put my opinion against lengthened experience, and I could give way on that point. One point I always felt strongly, if it could be done without any real danger of increasing pauperism, as it should be compulsory on Boards of Guardians—a great many of these things should be compulsory—I don't think a respectable man or woman—I think we are all agreed about that—who have maintained themselves in respectability all their lives, it should not be optional to any body of men, Boards of Guardians or anybody else, that they should be put in the workhouse and put on the same footing as a person who has led a bad criminal life; it should be compulsory they should have some special treatment at a certain age.

13250. In a central institution, such as Colonel Evershed mentioned, you could have some classification between respectable people and people who had not led responsible lives?—Yes, with due regard to old age, because it might increase pauperism if it was not fairly advanced.

13251. Not to make them too comfortable?—Not to make them as the pauperism in New Zealand, which is fifty-five years old. That is rather too young. I should say sixty or sixty-five years of age. With regard to hospitals, district nurses would no doubt be a good thing, but there are so many houses that have not got good sanitary arrangements that it might be rather dangerous.

13252. You would not like that they should move the night in their own homes in the neighborhood?—No; I have heard doctors say that many patients that their lives because people could not come to see the sick people. It would be well to have people nursed in their own homes, but the sanitary arrangements are so bad; but I would not depend entirely on a hospital situation so far away as Navan, nearly twenty miles away from some places. I think there should be some institution rather nearer. The lunatics should be treated specially.

13253. In lunatic or auxiliary asylums?—Yes.

Mr. LAURENCE WARD, A.P., examined.

Mr. Laurence Ward.

13254. CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the Dunshaughlin Guardians?—I am.

13255. What is the view of the Guardians as to the continuation of the union and the workhouse?—I think I can tell you this best by reading a resolution passed by the Board with a view to having it read here to-day. This resolution was proposed by Mr. G. P. Murphy, and seconded by Mr. Lynch, who is chairman of the Guardians:—“Resolved—that the Dunshaughlin Board, having fully considered the terms of reference contained in the warrant of appointment of the Poor Law Reform Commissioners, our Board are unanimously of opinion that the circumstances of this union, and the interests of the destitute poor, as well as those of the ratepayers, and finally the convenience of those constituting the Board, are such as to make any of the proposed changes most undesirable on the score of economy and general convenience. The Guardians, therefore, enter an emphatic protest as their reply to the proposals submitted, as far as this union is concerned.” That resolution expresses all our thoughts.

13256. On the grounds of economy, they think there would be no economy?—That is their opinion.

13257. If they found there would be a very considerable economy, would that modify their opinion?—I am sure it would.

13258. Do you think they would then change their mind and go in for amalgamation?—I am sure they would if they thought there would be a considerable economy; and if they did so the only thing would be to try to lessen the hardship of the poor and convenience the men who would represent them.

13259. If the hospital were maintained at Dunshaughlin for the sick, so that no hardship would be inflicted on the sick, who could not go to a distant institution, except by traversing long distances, would that meet the objection as to the convenience of the poor?—I think it would, except on the score of out-door relief. I think there would be a great difficulty in distributing the out-door relief. We will suppose our workhouse to be merged in Navan, or Trim, or any of those places; the distance representatives would have to go would be very very long. Some of them might have to go perhaps twenty-two or twenty-three miles—drive eight or nine miles to a station and then come by rail. I think you would find very few men would go that distance to attend. Then how would you carry out your system of out-door relief. You would be obliged to place it almost entirely in the hands of the relieving officer. That would not be very desirable.

13260. It would be too economical you think?—I am afraid I could not agree with you on that point. They would have to make bad fellows of themselves in some cases, and it would not be very convenient to relieving officers to do so.

13261. Still where it has been in the hands of relieving officers the expenses have been very much lower?—Yes, but the Guardians of the district know the persons who are entitled to out-door relief.

13262. They know the persons who wish to get it?—Yes, and they know the persons who ought to get it and who ought not to get it, and it would be putting the relieving officer in a very awkward position.

13263. He could stand that awkward position very well if his salary depended on his doing the right thing?—I dare say he could. That was one of the great difficulties with us. We thought it would be very difficult to get the representatives to attend Board meetings owing to their having to travel so far.

13264. Did you consider the question whether the District Council, if maintained, as distinguished from the Guardians, could discharge any of these duties?—Our Board did not go into that question, but a majority think it would be a very difficult matter to get representatives to go far distances. We find that. If a man had simply to come to the workhouse for the sake of saying such a one ought to get out-door relief, I think you would have a very small attendance.

13265. Suppose the District Council were maintained at Dunshaughlin?—Yes.

13266. Mr. MURPHY.—Suppose no change were made in the method of administration at all. Suppose the Guardians looked after the business in future as they do now. Suppose they had the control of the out-door relief and the power to pay to a central institution the cost of maintenance of the paupers for the particular union, do you think the Guardians would see any objection to that?—That is leaving the paupers removed to a central institution?

13267. Let the able-bodied and the classes known as aged and infirm be sent to a central institution, retain still the hospital at Dunshaughlin for the sick, board out the children?—Yes. As a matter of fact there are very few children there. They go to Trim School.

13268. Provided they were there, and the lunatics removed, you would have no other class but aged and infirm. Could not that class be sent to some central institution having attached a considerable quantity of land, where these people, instead of being housed up for the greater part of the year in smoky, ill-ventilated rooms, could have pure air and be occupied with something suitable to their strength. Would not that be preferable to the present system?—I think it would.

13269. The Guardians still maintaining their own management, paying their own expenses, still saying what out-door relief could be given and what refused?—And would they then have representation at this particular Board where those paupers would be removed to?

13270. No, but they would have representation in a particular union, and paying as much per head for their own people in a central union?—If the expenses would be very much less, I don't see any objection.

13271. You would get rid of considerable expense. You would get rid of the staff of the workhouse proper, as distinguished from the infirmary, the cost of food and various other expenses in connection with the repair and upkeep of the larger part of the house; that would be an immediate saving?—It is my idea if, say, Dunshaughlin Union were merged in Navan, Kells, or any of these places, I think you would find the representatives of these places, where there are large towns, would be very lavish in their expenditure. They would go in for having improvements adopted, and the ates for it would be heavy. Instead of lessening, our expenses would probably increase. They would go in for everything modern.

13272. CHAIRMAN.—You would rather keep up in the old-fashioned way?—No. I would have the modern to some extent.

13273. Not as far as Navan?—No, I don't think so, because I think they would be very lavish in their expenditure. In Dunsborough the number is generally about fifty in the infirmary. The house was built to accommodate 400, and we seldom have more than 100 in it, and of course our difficulty is removing the people; and we think that the expense would perhaps not be lessened at all.

13274. If you had the infirmary there you would not have to remove any class but the aged and infirm, and there would not be any great difficulty in that?—Yes, but I would not be in favour of removing them to a central hospital. I think that would be inconvenient owing to the question of distance.

13275. You think that it would be likely to keep the sick people at home?—Yes. I agree with Mr. Tuite that dragging them away from their homes would probably kill some of them, they would get so lonely.

13276. Mr. MURKIN.—Suppose the infirmary were retained and the change could be made without any additional cost to Dunsborough Union, would you be in favour of such a change?—Yes, if there was a guarantee there would be no additional cost, I think it would be an improvement.

13277. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose you mean if there was evidence. You could hardly have a guarantee?—Yes, as nearly as one could go to it. We have a great deal of accommodation there. We have a very large fever hospital, in which there are seldom many patients. We have built a new isolation hospital this year at a cost of something like £220, and it has never been used, so in the matter of hospital accommodation we are very well equipped; we have got plenty of buildings.

13278. Mr. MURKIN.—All you want is the people?—Yes.

Mr. WILLIAM LYNCH examined.

13285. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the Dunsborough Board of Guardians?—Yes.

13286. Do you agree with the evidence that Mr. Ward has just given now?—Yes.

13287. Is there anything in addition to what he has said you would like to put before us?—I think one word we would want to retain in case of amalgamation is the maternity ward.

13288. That is a sick ward?—And we want to retain a fever hospital, an infirmary, and a maternity ward. The maternity ward is very largely availed of by poor people around the district. It is very well equipped. We have a trained nurse and a certified midwife.

13289. That is in the main body of your house, in the north wing?—Yes. It is over our chapel. So on the basis of economy I don't see what we would gain by amalgamation.

13290. If a very large scheme could be adopted, and if, as a result of that, economy would come, do you think your people would object to amalgamation if they were left local accommodation for the sick?—I don't think they would; but I don't see what advantage it would be, or what buildings would be left, that any one could make any use of. In the first place you must have a fever hospital.

13291. But keeping the fever hospital and the infirmary?—Then you want a maternity ward.

13292. That is part of the infirmary?—Then you must keep the same staff officers.

13293. Oh, not?—You want the nurses.

13294. You don't want a master, matron, and the other officers?—I don't understand how they could be done away with. You would always want some authority there.

13295. You would have very good authority. You would have the doctor and head nurse. That is two 13270. Dr. BROWN.—How many wards have you in the hospital?—I could not tell you exactly. Mrs. Leonard is here. I am sure she will tell you. Of course, speaking about tramps, like everybody else, we don't know what to do with the tramps. Some of these men are very decent. You might inflict great hardship by imprisoning them, or anything of that sort. I know some of them are very respectable men going about in search of work. It is hard to know what to do. As a body they are a very dangerous lot.

13280. CHAIRMAN.—If you had full discretionary powers, like the Boards of Guardians in England, do you see any objection to that?—You could detain them in the workhouse by way of punishment if you thought fit. You would then be in a position to take stronger steps under the Vagrancy Acts if you thought they were bad cases, and you would have a discretion to let the honest seeker for work go about?—Our workhouse is a sort of half-way house for them between Dublin and Navan. Under the present system they cost us very little; probably not more than twopenny each at the outside for a night's lodging.

13281. A 2s note would go a long way towards covering the annual expenditure?—If we kept them for a few days it might increase our expenditure very much.

13282. Mr. MURKIN.—They would do more than twopenny worth of work?—I believe, if by any possibility the militia and short-service system could be abolished there would be fewer tramps. I presume that is a suggestion that could not be acted upon.

13283. Mr. McKENRY (solicitor).—You heard Colonel Broward speak about the reduction in the number of Guardians in each electoral division from two to one: how would it operate?—I am afraid it would not operate very well. A lady Guardian has informed me if a lady and gentleman were contesting a seat, the gentleman would go out altogether, and that would not be desirable.

13284. CHAIRMAN.—You would have to provide for ladies specially?—Yes.

They have in the county infirmary here?—It is quite different to these. It would be much larger.

13296. This would be much smaller?—The average in our infirmary is fifty.

13297. They are not all acute sick. A great many of these are merely infirm sick when the doctor puts on diet and keeps on as sick people, though they are not really sick?—They could not be moved anywhere else. They are not fit for a general ward.

13298. But they would be fit inmates of a general almshouse for aged and infirm?—No matter what you do with them you would want some central place to treat them in.

13299. Yes, that is what we meant?—Dunsborough Workhouse is centrally situated in the midst of the union.

13300. How far are you from Navan?—About thirteen or fourteen statute miles to the furthest part of our union from the workhouse. There is portion at Ashbourne, and further on Donaghmore, where Mr. Dams comes from to represent the division.

13301. Is Clonsie in your union?—Yes.

13302. That is about the furthest point away?—No, Donaghmore is the furthest point away.

13303. Half-way between you and Swords?—On that line, in the neighbourhood of Garristown, nearly over there, and the representative has nine Irish miles to come to the union—that would be about twelve or thirteen English—that would be about twenty-six statute miles to leave him there and back.

13304. It is just the same distance as Clonsie if you measure the road on the map, precisely the same distance?—Clonsie is a very direct road.

13305. The other is straight enough too, going by Rathoath. Then your opinion is very strongly against amalgamation or breaking up the workhouse?—As far as the needs of the sick and the destitute poor go, I would be very strongly opposed to it.

Mr. THOMAS HALLINAN examined.

13306. CHAIRMAN.—Are you one of the Guardians of Dunsborough?—Yes, Vice-Chairman.

13307. What part of the union do you live in?—Sion.

13308. It is not farther to Navan than it is to Dunsborough from your place?—Something about the same distance; about a mile, or probably two miles, further to Navan.

Feb. 10, 1904.
Mr. Laurence Ward.

Mr. William Lynch.

Mr. Thomas Hallinan.

Feb 10, 1904.
Mr. Thomas
Moffigan.

13309. Would the people about you mind much which union they went to?—They would, as far as I know.

13310. Would they prefer Dunscaughlin?—Yes.

13311. Why?—They look on it more as their own union at present, and will for the future.

13312. It is absolutely right there, but if it be dissolved?—Surely.

13313. No, Dunscaughlin Union. I was wondering why the people would prefer to go there than to Navan, which is only a very small distance more from them?—They would prefer to go there. They know so much more about it. They don't like to hear of coming into a town at all.

13314. Would the Guardians prefer going to Dunscaughlin, where there is no business for them to transact than to Navan, where they transact their business?—Yes, it would be a matter of indifference to them in that case.

13315. Which would they prefer for their own case?—So far as I am concerned, and any I know, would prefer Dunscaughlin.

13316. What would be the reasons influencing them to prefer Dunscaughlin?—It is more convenient in a sense. In Navan they would have to go through the town. They might have no other business and a little more expense probably; in my case it would be.

13317. There is no temptation to expenditure in Dunscaughlin?—Not so much.

13318. Mr. M'Keever.—Have you anything to say as supplementing Mr. Lynch's remarks?—With regard to the accommodation of the workhouse, when we had it under consideration, if there is any part of the house done away with it would be the body of the house, and then there is a question asked about what purpose could it be put to, and we have come to the conclusion if it was done away with it could be put to no other purpose, and that portion of the building would become quite useless. Of course, as Mr. Lynch and Mr. Ward, our chairman, have described, the infirmary, the fever hospital, and the maternity ward would need to be retained. Then you would practically be doing away with nothing only a small portion of the body of the house.

13319. CHAIRMAN.—A large portion of the building would be useless for any other purpose?—Yes; it could not be turned into anything like a hospital auxiliary.

13320. This happened in a union called Gortin, in the Co. Tyrone, which was swallowed up by Omagh Union—Mr. Murnaghan's union. There they had the same difficulty. The buildings were worth nothing it was thought, but they were pulled down, and made building materials for houses and things of that sort?—That could be done, too, with it.

13321. They could be got rid of in that way?—Yes. Then to take it from the ratepayers' point of view. The people, at least in my district, don't like to hear of amalgamation at all, owing to the very high expenditure that has been hitherto in the poor school in Trim. That is on account of the large area and the high valuation.

13322. You still send children there?—Of course. There are no children at all in Dunscaughlin workhouse except infants—one or two.

13323. They go to Trim when three or four years old?—Yes; and are kept there until they are fit to go into the world, and they cost a great deal for it to the ratepayers.

13324. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—What do they cost?—The union I have got is about between £30 and £35 per year for the last fifteen years.

13325. Dr. BROWN.—Pre head?—Yes, and that is an enormous sum—like the premium that would be paid in a college. The ratepayers look to that. The ratepayers look on amalgamation as being the same thing.

13326. CHAIRMAN.—I may take it the Dunscaughlin Board are totally against amalgamation?—Yes, as far as I am aware. And then, of course, the tramp business. We entirely agree with the chairman—Mr. Ward—in that, that if it was possible to have an alteration in the militia it would strike at the root of it as far as Dunscaughlin is concerned. Then I have so far under your notice that from Dunscaughlin Union there are very few cases come into the county infirmary here. They pay their portion all the same.

13327. That is a county-at-large charge; you pay your share?—Yes; and except lately it has been changed, there was only one or two cases in fifteen or sixteen years sent in from Dunscaughlin Union.

13328. If there were an amalgamation, and if you were left your hospital, having regard to the fact that you get so little value out of the county infirmary, do you think it would be only fair to make these local hospitals into Dunscaughlin county-at-large charges on the same basis as the county infirmary?—Yes, it would appear fair on the surface. Of course I could not go into it and say how it would work out.

13329. It would work out you would have to pay much less for your hospital?—Yes, but it might work out similarly to the Trim joint school.

13330. Then you would have to blame yourselves for it?—Yes.

13331. Dr. BROWN.—What was the reason then were so few patients going into the county infirmary from Dunscaughlin?—It did not seem to be popular, and there did not seem to be any mode of having them recommended and taken in. It was hardly known until lately how to make application to go in and the authority was.

13332. What was the mode of conveyance?—Their own vehicles or neighbors. They had to hire a horse. Generally it was to hospital.

13333. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—Under the old system the people did not know they could take advantage of the infirmary?—No, they were not aware until it was recently debated in the County Council.

13334. And it was considered a sort of endowment place for the well-to-do?—Certainly, from the Dunscaughlin point of view.

13335. The poor thought they could not get in at all?—Yes.

13336. Mr. M'Keever.—Would you make any recommendation with regard to any alteration in the present Poor Law in the way of out-door relief?—Yes; in that direction I find in our district some great trouble with regard to the quarter statute acre clause.

13337. CHAIRMAN.—You would like to enlarge the limits for out-door relief?—Yes, to do away with that clause altogether. It clashes altogether with the Labourers Acts.

13338. Would you put any other limit?—Then should be some safeguard, of course.

13339. Would you go in for an absolute repeal of the clause or a large quantity of land?—Not an absolute repeal of the clause altogether.

13340. So that a man with ten acres of land you could, if you thought fit to, give it to him?—It is desirable or impossible, with some other safeguard.

13341. What other safeguards occur to you?—I could hardly propose one. It is my own proposal.

13342. Does any other safeguard occur to you?—Not at present.

13343. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—Would you still keep it in the hands of the Guardians?—Yes.

13344. CHAIRMAN.—Is it partly in order to be able to give out-door relief to labourers in labourer cottages?—Yes, to meet that. The local representatives and the relieving officers are very often in danger of surcharge in these cases; when the auditor turns up he may at any time surcharge a local representative.

13345. It would be illegal to give it at present?—Quite so.

13346. Of course you would not give it?—It is very hard to get over the matter where there is a very heavy case or a case of great hardship, and then think of the auditor coming on.

13347. Would those people on out-door relief be continued as your tenants of the houses?—Yes, they should.

13348. How would they pay any rent if they had to get out-door relief?—In some of those cases the children provide the money to pay the rent—in many cases that I know of—although the tenants may not be able to maintain themselves at a particular time.

13349. They would not be destitute if they had children earning, and they would not be eligible for out-door relief?—The children are not legally responsible to support them. They might pay the rent.

13350. You would not consider that a questionable thing to do—to pay children so much for supporting their parents?—Not to pay them so much, but if children undertook to keep a house over their parents' heads I would not object to that.

13351. You would pay them out-door relief?—I would pay the parents in cases of hardship, or where they would be ill.

13352. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—Is there much out-door relief in your union?—Not very much.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER OWENS examined.

Feb. 22, 1894.

By
Mr. Christopher
Owens.

13353. CHAIRMAN.—You desire to give special evidence as regards the boarding-out system and the management of children?—The extension of out-door relief in connection with district houses—

13354. What about the boarding-out system of children?—I believe that the system adopted at present in Town School is altogether at variance with human nature. These children are placed in this school at an early age. They only go outside the walls once in ten days for exercise, and naturally children ought to go out into the country; and they are associated with themselves—no other children with them. They lose their self-respect and self-respect by being kept within the institution. I am altogether in favour of the boarding-out system, because I believe that these children would be brought up with other children of the same age, and that they would not lose their individuality as paupers; that they would go to school with the other children, and they would be brought up with the other children they lived with, and they would become inured to the hardships of the world, and eventually they would attain that self-respect which they ought to have to become useful members of society, and the foster parents would have a motherly or fatherly feeling for them, and if they went into the world to do for themselves, that they would have that home to come back to if sickness or anything else overtook them.

13355. They would become members of the family?—Yes, and the expense of sending to a school is enormous. In fact you could send these children to the Continent and send them to school there at the same price. The price is enormous.

13356. Are you a member of the committee?—I am a member of the School Board and the Naven Board of Guardians.

13357. What do you attribute the great expense of the institution to?—I cannot attribute it to mismanagement.

13358. Running it on too high a scale, is that what you put it down to?—I do not. I believe they are bound to a trade and all get a trade, and I believe these are children there not capable of taking a trade, and therefore the work they do is not sufficient.

13359. They cannot become tradesmen in after life?—They cannot.

13360. You think only a percentage of the children brought up there become real tradesmen?—A very small percentage become. It is not at all surprising. They have not the same intelligence as the other children. What I would suggest, if the boarding-out system were adopted, that these children, when they would be going to the National schools throughout the country, the masters would be very good judges of their character, and if they found one capable of doing a trade—we have a new system of education going to be brought in throughout the country—if they found one with an aptitude for a trade, then the Board of Guardians of whatever union that child belonged to would give a fee towards it.

13361. You would not be in favour of giving a high-class trade to what you may call the waste of our life around us. You would not be in favour of giving to them advantages in excess of those given to the children of the tradesmen and the poorer classes?—No, certainly not; but if I saw a child develop sufficient intelligence and talent, I would give him all the advantages that his talent and intelligence entitle him to. I certainly would. I believe that a child, no matter what parentage he has come from, that God has endowed him with a soul and mind, and that he will make his way if he has the stuff in him, and I would give him the chance to make his way if I saw he had the stuff in him. But I would say that as to the children who are boarded-out, the Guardians ought to have the power to give them a fee to bind them to a trade, because I think that children who are brought up to a trade, if they get a trade, when they go out to make their way in the world, the least is thrown at them by their fellow tradesmen that they received their trade as pupils in a school, and it will break down their self-respect. I believe the system is radically wrong from the bottom.

13362. The institution system?—The institution system; and in connection with that I would say, as to the tramp system here and the character of the tramps, I believe they have been born and reared in workhouses, going from one workhouse to another, but if you have a boarding-out system it would be helping to keep the people away from workhouses as much as possible.

13363. You would cut off the supply for future ages?—Yes. I believe I would be at the root of the evil.

There is another point. We see tinkers or tramps who sleep at the backs of districts. I pity the children who are with them. I know them. I see them.

13364. You would allow the Guardians to take these children from them?—They should take these children compulsorily from them, and I certainly could not see my way to board out these children, but there are various industrial schools in the country.

13365. Why could not you see your way to board out these children?—What would you do with the father and the mother?

13366. If you put them into an institution, what would you do with the father and the mother?—The father and mother are tramps, working at their trade—tinkers—grapes we call them. If you could find a means of dealing with the father and mother it would be quite easy dealing with the children. These children have never gone to school.

13367. If you take away the children from them at all it does not make much matter whether you board them out or put them in an institution?—But naturally the instinct of the father and mother will cling to the children, and they will come and try to enforce their way.

13368. If you think they are not fit to have them you would take them away from them?—Yes.

13369. Mr. MURKIN.—You think the parents would go to the house where the foster parents are and trouble the foster parents?—I think so.

13370. If they found them out?—Yes.

13371. That is the difficulty you apprehend?—Yes; but it is a pity there is no law to take the children from these wayward tramps. They are the propagators of tramps, and the children will be tramps, and their children's children will be tramps.

13372. CHAIRMAN.—Was there any other point?—One of the witnesses mentioned that the half-acre of garden belongs a respectable man who has worked from getting out-door relief. He has a sentimental prejudice against going to the poorhouse hospital, and won't go in. I know several cases, and they will not go in, because there would be the hint of pauperism about them.

13373. Would you agree with that recommendation that was made?—I would strongly recommend that when a man becomes sick, we will say from influenza or some other case, temporary or permanent, and if he becomes feeble, I would not ask the man who tried to battle with the world—he may have lived an improvident life, certainly, but when illness overtakes him, and he has this objection to go in, I think the law ought to allow us to give out-door relief.

13374. You would limit it to cases of temporary incapacity due to illness?—Yes.

13375. You would take the doctor's word for that?—Yes.

13376. It would limit the field for abuse?—Yes.

13377. Mr. MURKIN.—You would not say want of employment?—I would say want of employment especially, because the Guardians would know whether this man is actually in want of employment.

13378. Then you would go in for extending out-door relief generally, not merely for the sick?—I believe when a person is old and has a rooted sentimental objection to go into the poorhouse—

13379. CHAIRMAN.—A natural objection?—A natural objection. I believe that a person would be cheaper on the rates to be left out, and it would be much better for the person himself, because if a person reaches seventy or eighty years of age, if you take him from his natural way of living in the country and lock him in the prison, what I call a workhouse—

13380. Would you be afraid a considerably increased expenditure would result from this?—No, but a lessening of expenditure. I say in this union of ours that two and a half persons could be relieved on the old rates—

13381. But then how many more will apply for out-door relief if they think they can get it?—Those who are responsible will limit the number within the strictest possible bounds.

13382. What would you make the area of charge for relief, the union or the district?—I would make the district.

13383. The union or the district?—The union if you would extend it so.

13384. Then in Naven Union would you make the town one area of charge and the country another, or would you have the union the district?—You make me as being a rural Guardian. Certainly, from my own point of view, I would make the urban district support its poor.

Feb. 10, 1904.
 Mr. — Christopher
 Owens.

13385. Mr. MURKIN.—What you would suggest is this, that in case there was an amputation in this county, and there was a central home for the infirm, you would leave it optional for the Guardians to say whether they would send a destitute person to the central home or give him a certain amount of out-door relief temporarily. Is that the point?—That is the point; but I would not send a person to this central infirmary against his will.

13386. Not an infirmary, but an almshouse—some place or other where there would be accommodation for the aged and infirm?—Yes, that is my point. With regard to destitute nursing, I believe all these unions, if they are broken up, I would certainly be in favour of one union being sufficient for the Co. Mayo, but I would say where there had been a union, the hospital should be retained, and that the unions, if destitute nursing is established, should find their homes in these hospitals. They would be in the centre of the union when the doctor requisitions them where a person wants nursing in his own home, and it would be more economical to nurse him there. These three unions could be requisitioned from this hospital.

Dr. F. W. SULLIVAN examined.

Dr. F. W.
 Sullivan.

13387. CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the surgeons of the County Infirmary?—I am an honorary surgeon of the County Infirmary.

13388. Have you any other public appointment?—No, but I have had nine years' experience as medical officer of the Navan dispensary district.

13389. What points do you wish to call our attention to?—In my opinion the standard of accommodation for hospital patients for the population of the county should be for all diseases about one bed for every 150 of the population. I think that a county hospital should be centrally situate, such as Navan, where there are four lines of railway converging on it, commanding almost the entire county. I think that the county hospital should be thoroughly equipped with every modern improvement, and that the staff of the hospital should consist of a resident medical officer, who would also act as apothecary, and that should be made an annual or bi-annual appointment.

13390. Would such a man be a good man to take for compensating?—Yes; he must have a certain amount of experience. I should certainly give the preference to a man who had been resident pupil or clinical clerk in a city hospital. This hospital I think should be supported by the county-at-large.

13391. As at present?—As at present; and should be administered by a committee of the County Council and governed by subscriptions as at present, but it should be under the inspection and control of the Local Government Board. The surgeons, I think, should be paid, having due regard to the responsibility and to the proportion of the work. Surgery and medicine have made vast strides since the passing of the Infirmary Acts several years ago, when people were treated by depletion, and cupping, and firing more than by scientific means. The time has arrived now when professional services should be duly recompensed. The hospital should be controlled by a patron with administrative abilities.

13392. You would say she should be a trained nurse?—Yes, and as well as being a trained nurse, she should be able to satisfy the committee that she would have administrative abilities. She might be a tremendously good nurse and have no administrative faculty. The county hospital should be used as a training school for supplying nurses to the county-at-large except maternity nurses. The staff nurses might be placed at the disposal of the public for private cases on payment, if they were equal to it, and I would give a preference to every nurse who was trained in the county hospital for all county appointments requiring nurses.

13393. Or would you put it in a different way, and say that all the county nurses should be nurses for the county and sent wherever their services would be required?—Yes, that is the same thing in different words.

13394. Giving them an absolute appointment?—I don't know you could bind yourself to that.

13395. You might want three nurses in one hospital in some weeks, and one might discharge the duties for a very long time afterwards. You could move them backwards and forwards as required?—Yes. I would advise an improvement in the general scale of distaff. Although the crude material is of most excellent character, perhaps the coarseness and service are open to improvement. Good wholesome food is often rendered inferior by indifferent service. Invalids require better cookery than the ordinary labouring man or woman, as the case may be, and with the variation of cookery they would do better. As to the payment of patients, I would make two scales, a minimum for those who could afford, in general wards, and a maximum for those who used private wards in a hospital.

13396. You would only have two rates of payment?—Yes, a minimum and a maximum.

13397. Would you object to the system in operation in Enniskillen Infirmary, where every patient is required to pay in proportion to his means, some only a shilling a week and others full cost?—That you would have to deal with by the person making the ticket of admission.

13398. In consultation with the surgeon?—Yes, although he would not be in a position to know their means probably.

13399. They find no difficulty there?—Yes. With regard to fever hospitals, I would have the treatment in all fever hospitals free, for the purpose of encouraging the people to make use of the hospital, and as a benefit and protection to the public.

13400. If a comparatively wealthy person from the town went in you would not give him the benefit of the free hospital?—I would, if I thought it would prevent the spread of infection.

13401. If they wished to go into hospital they would be proper persons to pay?—It is a debatable point whether it would not be cheaper in the end to prevent the spread of infection or epidemics.

13402. Dr. BROWN.—You are speaking from the public health point of view?—Yes. Except you might guard it in such a way that people in a certain social position could not have free admission. But at present the position we find is that any one who is a domestic servant or a cook taken from anyone's house, comes under the denomination of domestic servant, and they have to pay for him. The result is they are concealed in fever cases rather than pay for them so that the fever may spread.

13403. Very few people are so foolish as to take a servant with fever into their own house?—Some of them will do it sooner than pay for him. That is my experience. It may be rather unique, but it is a fact all the same. With regard to the ambulance service, it is practically useless for the county; useless as it at present exists, because each union has only the ambulance at the disposal for its own union. There ought really to be an ambulance available for the county-at-large.

13404. They have one at Lifford Infirmary?—Any properly administered hospital should have an ambulance available to go anywhere. Our ambulance is not available to go to Lifford, only a few miles away, because it is in another union. With regard to tuberculosis cases, I suggest they should be all treated in a sanatorium such as authorities like Arthur Latham highly approve, because their treatment in unions will bring the treatment, which is a most valuable one, into dispute. With regard to the old people, I am all for keeping them out at a moderate amount of pension, having them under the supervision of inspectors of the Local Government Board, not pauper children. I would educate in a central establishment, and have them taught a trade and not boarded out. Boarded-out children have no future before them.

13405. CHAIRMAN.—Have you any personal experience in these matters?—I have some in the Dispensary here. Boarded-out children are taught nothing. They are made practically slaves to the people who board them out, and they are taught no trade.

13406. Why should they not be employed as farm hands? why do you want to give them a trade? why should not they work as farm hands?—Isn't you think it is very good for them?—If they were in a central establishment they could be taught farm labouring in a scientific and a better manner.

13407. Is there any better way of teaching them than putting them in a farmer's house and letting them learn?—I was struck with this; they seem more slaves than anything else.

13408. Any one who does work is a slave in a certain sense; even doctors are slaves sometimes?—Very often they do not seem to have any limit, and are willing until after fifteen without any remuneration except their keep, and that would be hardly the way. They should be free agents by then.

13409. Would you make them come of age by fifteen?—I think I would. I would be all for the continuance of the dispensary system as at present, but I would have attached to the county hospital an out-door department.

13410. The dispensary system does not come within our warrant?—There should, in my opinion, be auxiliary hospitals for a limited number.

13411. Dr. Broom.—Where would you place them?—In suitable districts.

13412. Where in this county?—In all the thickly-populated towns.

13413. Do you mean to say as well as the union hospitals?—Not as well as the union hospitals. Only in the event of closing the union hospitals.

13414. In closing the union hospital you would leave the district hospital in the same place?—Yes.

13415. CHAIRMAN.—Otherwise the county is sufficiently provided with hospitals?—It is over provided.

13416. Dr. Broom.—Why did you say one in every 800. Is that for acute diseases?—Yes, that is about the standard for acute cases. That would not cover the infirm, or imbecile, or chronic cases, but acute cases; and that would not cover it in large towns, but putting the urban and rural districts one against the other the average would be about one in 800.

13417. That would not do for large cities like Dublin?—No, but taking the county-at-large and the population.

13418. About training the nurses in the county infirmary, what about giving the nurses lectures, and that sort of thing?—That would devolve on the surgeons and the matron.

13419. Would not they have to receive lectures?—Yes.

13420. Before you would think of recognising the institution for training purposes?—Yes; nurses have almost better facilities in a large county hospital than in a clinical hospital, because the work done there by medical students would often devolve on the nurses.

13421. There are no lectures given in the Co. Meath Infirmary?—I have done so, but I discontinued it.

13422. Mr. MURKIN.—You say the county is over-hospitalled at present. Do you mean by that, you could do without some of them?—There are so many unions, and each having a hospital.

13423. You think some of them could be done without?—Yes, I think, but I would not wish to express an opinion on the point. I would suggest that there should be a maternity department in connection with the county hospital, because the use of the union hospital for such purposes is distasteful to the respectable poor, and the result is that the poor people are deprived of the comforts of hospital treatment.

13424. CHAIRMAN.—That would only benefit Navan?—I don't know. The hospital would be available to the county.

13425. It would not benefit a much larger area?—They could all get tickets of admission except in emergencies.

13426. That is what you must think of?—Every case would not be an emergency case. The union hospital will not be used as a maternity hospital by the respectable poor.

13427. Unless you restrict it virtually to that class?—Yes.

Mr. JAMES GANNON examined.

13428. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Ardee Board of Guardians?—Yes.

13429. Portion of your union is in the Co. Meath?—Yes.

13430. We had the views of the Ardee Guardians at Dundalk, and there we learned that they were opposed to amalgamation?—So they are.

13431. In the Co. Meath you are of the same opinion as the Co. Louth portion?—Yes.

13432. You prefer to continue to go to Ardee?—Yes.

13433. We had very full information at Dundalk about the Ardee Union. Is there anything you would wish to say in addition, that you would wish to mention yourself?—I don't know any more than that the people are very keen on this since it was rumoured that there was a possibility of it, and they are all afraid there would be an amalgamation. We don't like to leave Ardee on account of the low rates, something about 70 per cent. lower than the surrounding unions. I live on the border between Navan and here, and the people outside the border would rather get into Ardee if they could.

13434. Would you be willing to take them?—I think we have enough.

13435. Mr. McKee.—With reference to the poor, do you think it would be advisable to have the hospital moved from Ardee?—No, I think not. There is plenty of accommodation, and it is our district, within an easy distance of it, and the poor are well done for and no complaint from them at all.

13436. Your rate you say is 75 per cent. below that of the adjoining unions?—About that.

13437. Do you think with any system of amalgamation that the ratepayers of that union could be compensated?—I don't think it would be possible.

13438. CHAIRMAN.—You think we could not save money for you if we had an amalgamation of unions?—No.

13439. If we did show a saving, what would you say then?—If we got a guarantee.

13440. If we said there would be a saving?—We don't believe there could be a saving.

13441. If there could be you would not object to it?—Of course.

13442. Mr. McKee.—If the ratepayers could be assured they would pay less rates than at present, there might be no objection?—They might not object, but it is very doubtful.

13443. Mr. MURKIN.—It is simply a question of cost?—No.

13444. What is it?—Convenience for the poor. Ardee is very central and they have not very far to go. If it was amalgamated with another union they would have a considerable distance to go.

13445. Mr. McKee.—What is the very farthest distance from the remotest portion of the Meath district to Ardee?—About six miles.

Feb. 18, 1904.

Dr. F. W. Sullivan

Mr. James Gannon

Mr. T. B. DRUMGOLE examined.

13446. Mr. McKee.—You are Clerk of the Ardee Union?—Yes.

13447. Have you made a calculation as to the average amount of poor rate for the last three years in Ardee and the adjoining unions?—I have.

13448. What is the result of that?—The result is broadly in other unions surrounding Ardee it is 75 per cent. greater than in Ardee, and I have even extended the comparison to thirteen years back, and the result is the same proportion is preserved all through.

13449. To what do you attribute that?—Because there are certain circumstances in the case of Dundalk. It is largely influenced by the population of the workhouse. In the case of the Meath Unions—Navan, Kells—it is not influenced so much; very little in the case of Navan.

13450. CHAIRMAN.—Is it pure economy as regards Navan?—There is not such a disparity in the population of Navan and Ardee, but it must be economy; it must work out as a test of economy for Ardee.

13451. Mr. McKee.—Taking it on an average, per head per week per family, how does that work out?—

13452. CHAIRMAN.—What is the average cost of food and clothing?

13453. Mr. McKee.—Food, clothing, and upkeep, taking everything?—I have taken last year from the returns. The average for Ardee is 7s.; Droghda, 8s. 3d.; Dundalk, 8s.; Kells, 12s. 6d.; Navan, 8s. 3d.

13454. So roughly it is 75 per cent. less there than?—In the case of Kells it is over 60 per cent. less.

13455. Take it that the workhouse hospital was retained, and all the other branches of the union dissolved and distributed among the adjoining unions, how would that work out as regards the finances of the union?—It would not lower the financial liability at all. The greater portion of our staff is absorbed by Mr. T. B. Drumgole.

Feb. 10, 1904.

Mr. T. B.
Dromgoole.

the hospital at present. In money our total staff at present costs £265. Of that there is solely absorbed by the hospital at present £235, and then there are general officers belonging to the workhouse in general who must be retained if the hospital is retained.

13455. CHAIRMAN.—These are all figures we have got in the books and papers, and there is not much use in giving them to us in this way.

Mr. M'Keever.—My idea was to prove, so far as I could, to you—

CHAIRMAN.—What Mr. Dromgoole's view is, but he does not take the same basis as we do at all.

Mr. M'Keever.—But what I wanted to show was that it would be of no advantage to the ratepayers that any system of amalgamation should be introduced.

CHAIRMAN.—Mr. Dromgoole's opinion is all according to his estimate. He is merely taking estimates on a very limited area that we would not take. He may be quite right in everything he said, but it would not affect a very wide scheme at all.

Mr. M'Keever.—What I wanted to show was that our ratepayers would not gain any advantage by amalgamation with any adjoining union. The only way in which I can do that is by showing what the ratepayers are at present paying in the £, and what the adjoining unions are at present paying in the £.

CHAIRMAN.—We have that.

Mr. M'Keever.—Assuming an amalgamation, I have asked him—

CHAIRMAN.—You are assuming an amalgamation that we would never dream of adopting or recommending, so you are really killing a dead horse.

Mr. M'Keever.—I have at least done this, shown that our union is worked 75 per cent. more economically than adjoining unions, and, of course, I would insist, in the terms of your reference, that our ratepayers should receive an advantage rather than be put to any disadvantage by any scheme of amalgamation.

CHAIRMAN.—They made that clear at Dundalk. The gentleman who appeared there took exactly the same line there.

Mr. M'Keever.—If I can make myself clear a far as that is concerned, I am quite satisfied.

CHAIRMAN.—That is quite clear. We get all these figures from the clerk. We will issue returns for him to give us statistics, and we will work on these statistics.

Mr. M'Keever.—Of course the ratepayers of the Ardee Union would be perfectly satisfied that any scheme which would modernise the system would be carried out, but they would be very chary to consent to a scheme which would increase their liability.

CHAIRMAN.—So we understand. They took up a very strong position in that respect at Dundalk. They said it would be an injustice to them to do anything to increase their rates, and claimed it should not be done. We have that clearly before us, their contention is the matter; but the only thing is if we want to go into these statistics we would have to sit here for very many hours asking him questions on the basis of these calculations. As they are given they are useless. We would have to test everything he says. It would take hours and hours. We will do that in our own office when we get the papers from Mr. Dromgoole's (Witness).—We have not the outlines of any scheme.

We have not yet either. They are only stating.

Mr. M'Keever.—Of course sometimes we find a pretty fair idea of what a scheme is to be before it is formulated. That is the only witness I have at present.

Mr. JOHN CHAMBERLAIN examined.

Mr. John Chambers.

13457. CHAIRMAN.—What are the views of the Dublin Union?—I am entirely opposed to amalgamation. I think it would be a hardship on the poor, in the first place—the difficulty of removal—and I think it would not serve the ratepayers either.

13458. If a scheme could be put before you that would make it appear there would be a saving to the ratepayers?—We would take that, but we would look to the poor first. We are very generous to the poor in Kells.

13459. In what way do you show your generosity there?—I think we have one of the best-kept hospitals in the county. At all events it is the most expensive. But we have no power over that. It is the doctor's business.

13460. The doctors asked for a great many things you did not give them?—I think we supplied them with everything except baths.

13461. Dr. Brogan.—Did you do all the doctor asked?—If we did we might be beggared.

13462. CHAIRMAN.—Is it not a rich district?—In the northern end it is not.

13463. Dr. Brogan.—Would you not be ashamed if you saw some of the western districts where the people are very poor and the poor are better treated?—I was never able to travel.

13464. CHAIRMAN.—If you took a look in at Hillinger it would be an advantage, if you want Dublin to be preserved?—I don't go on that at all. I have as much for any union to be preserved.

13465. It would cause them to go to a better-managed institution?—I cannot see any mismanagement except that the doctor is a little bit extravagant.

13466. Is there anything else except the question of amalgamation you wish to speak about?—Nothing else, except the Trinit school, which I heard condemned here, and I think it a splendid institution. I approve of the way in which the children are brought up. Even for the time they are going to Trinit—some of our children go to Trinit—and there are cases of tradesmen in our place who were in the school, and I think they have done well. I approve of that institution. It was stated they cost £35 a year. It is only a little over £20 in our union.

13467. Dr. Brogan.—Are you Chairman of the Kells Union?—

13468. CHAIRMAN.—I was speaking of Dublin all the time?—I was wondering why you were running us down so much.

13469. We saw a great deal we liked in Kells. I invited Dublin witnesses up?—Don't mistake me for Dublin again.

Mr. A. GOGARTY examined.

Mr. A.
Gogarty.

13470. CHAIRMAN.—Are you from Kells, too?—Yes.

13471. You got a shock when you heard these remarks?—I was going to preface my remarks by saying we were shocked at our end of the table when we heard it. I did not think we were altogether so bad as that in Kells, but the only evidence I have to give is I am opposed to amalgamation. There are two grounds we go on. The removal of the poor such long distances, be wherever they may be sent, and I know from the railway company they will carry no infectious diseases. Therefore, I consider that fourteen or fifteen Irish miles is too far to take a fever patient.

13472. But they would have fever hospitals for their own places still?—That would be something in favour of it.

13473. That would take away that part of the objection?—Yes; but I was going to show, which I think unnecessary now, our union is able to accommodate a far larger number than we have got in it, and, as vice-chairman, I find fault with the way in which the doctor classifies his patients in it. We have two buildings running parallel with one another—

13474. I think we had better not go into that now. We have no jurisdiction on these detailed questions. It is merely general evidence we want?—Then I am in favour of locating the lunatics in a central position, for I think that where there is only twenty or twenty-five, as we have presently, they cannot be looked after as well as if there was a central place for them, where they could get what I might term a certain amount of exercise. They are not, as a rule, invalids. Therefore I think it would be more healthy for them to get walking about, and indeed I think there are a number of patients in our union who should get outdoor exercise, and not be cramped up as if they were in a hospital. We have seven or eight acres of ground and fields enclosing them, and we think if the doctor would not be exactly confining them to a certain compass—

13475. Are you now referring to aged and infirm?—I am referring to what the doctor classifies in his hospital that is solely under his charge; and another thing—of course I don't think you are going into it exactly—this, that the master, in my opinion, should have control over the house, generally speaking.

13476. You would not approve of doing away with him altogether?—I would not, because the doctor will be only there for about a very short time in the day. He cannot supervise the undertakings in the place and see that they do their duty.

13477. The doctor only looks after the hospital?—That is all; but after some again the matter should have power to get the workhouse.—

13478. To pull up the nurses?—Yes.

13479. We would be very sorry to agree with you in that?—I heard it described here that we are a very expensive machine. So we say, for we have three trained nurses, and as a gentleman to my right describes it, we are a staff they might get in with us and might suffer by it. The doctor is the cause of that. We have no control over the doctor, and if we feed them well we are willing to pay for it. With regard to the boarding-up of children, I am totally opposed to it, opposed to the people that the children in the houses of these people are looked on as pauper children by the people they are with, and the other members of the family, and all the members of the family in the same neighbourhood; and also, as they may get into some slight little room with the other children, they will not be properly treated. On that account I believe a place like the Trins Schools is far better for the poor children than boarding them out would be, and I am totally opposed to what I may call house pensions.

13480. Old-age pensions?—Yes, that is to support the poor at home in their own houses. While it may be better for them to have open air and open space about them, still they will not be as well treated. I don't care how well they are never looked after by a relative or other people as they should be. They will still spend some of what they get in a useless manner, but if confined in a workhouse they will be properly looked after. That is my opinion.

13481. About tramps?—The tramp system I had a particular opposition to it until I found lately, on looking into it, it is not so expensive on the union after all. It is a very small cost in the tramp at the end of a year. Ours would only come to about 27. Another thing I look on. I believe that if these three parties that get a year each in Trins the other day, I believe even if they had got into the workhouse they would not have got a year each. We must still try to protect these parties from one another. By going into the workhouse for the night they will find a lodging, and they will go there instead of sleeping in an out-house, where they are very dangerous to other people; so I changed my mind as to them. I was thoroughly opposed to them, but we find now it is safer for the community at large and for themselves to be so, and it is a small expense.

MR. T. CARPENTER CHAIRMAN.

13482. CHAIRMAN.—Are you also from Kells Union?—Yes.

13483. Do you agree with your colleagues?—No.

13484. What is your opinion?—I have been a member of the Kells Board of Guardians for five years. I am also a member of the Visiting Committee. I am in favour of amalgamation. I believe it would effect a great saving of public money and be little or no hardship on the poor. I think it should and would be to have so many workhouses as we have at present that are not needed. I don't say all of them are not needed, but certainly some of them are not needed. When the workhouse were built we had a population of 253,000 in our Co. Meath, and at the present time we have but a population of 67,000, or about one-third of what it was then. In my own union—Kells—the workhouse was built to accommodate 711 inmates, and at one time I have heard them were 1,000 inmates in it. Last week when I was there there were but 146 inmates, and I have learned that the same state of things prevails over the rest of the county.

13485. And the country too you would say?—I dare say. I am firmly convinced that two workhouses would be quite sufficient for this county, one in the northern portion of it and the other in the southern portion of it. After the amalgamation I think that one of the divided workhouses should be set apart as an auxiliary asylum. On account of its central position, I think Navan would be the most suitable for this purpose. To this asylum should be sent all the lunatics of the county that are at present confined in the workhouse. They should be placed under the care of a special lunacy doctor, and receive special lunacy treatment suited to their condition, which would be a great improvement on the present system. Of course the Government or the Treasury would give the usual grant to this auxiliary asylum. I think, and I may say I am certain, that Kells Workhouse would be the most central for North Meath.

13486. Have you any opinion about the southern half?—My knowledge of South Meath is rather limited.

13487. You would prefer not expressing any opinion on the matter?—Quite so, but I believe Kells would have sufficient accommodation for North Meath. As I stated previously, it was built for the accommodation of 711 inmates; our water supply is excellent; we have a new ambulance, built according to the specification of the Local Government Board, which relieves to a minimum the fatigue, danger, and hardship of carrying the sick poor to hospital; we have also another ambulance in good working order. Then we have erected improvements lately, such as new beds, and other things; and also as regards railway accommodation, Kells has a good train service, so that a certain portion at least of the inmates could be brought to and fro on the railway. As regards the infirmary portion of it, we have 130 beds, and last week we had 126 inmates, and going through the workhouse, I quite agree with what my friend Mr. Gogarty says that there are parties in the infirmary who could very well be in the body of the house. Of course I am not a medical man, but I express it as my opinion.

13488. On commonsense observation?—Yes, that they should be in the body of the house. Our nursing staff is very efficient. We have two trained nurses in the infirmary, and nine assistants. As regards our fever hospital; our fever hospital was built to accommodate thirty-six inmates.—

13489. Those assistants are partly paid workhouse?—All paid. Those nine assistants and two trained nurses are paid.

13490. Dr. Brogan.—Nine workhouse?—Some of them are of the male gender.

13491. Workhouse or workmen, are they all in the infirmary ward?—Yes; nine assistants in the infirmary and two trained nurses. Our patients number 105. The fever hospital was built to accommodate thirty-six patients, and all who were in it last week were there, and the nursing staff consists of one trained nurse and three assistants, and the average cost per head is pretty high, being 6s. 3d. Of course if we had amalgamation, and if the North portion of Ardee Union were taken in, and Oldcastle and portion of Navan, the cost per head would be considerably lessened, as I believe that there are too many paid assistants in the workhouse at the present time. I think that the workhouse left open would require very little, if any, increase of paid attendants after the amalgamation.

13492. CHAIRMAN.—If any?—If any. As regards the Trins District school, I quite agree with the two witnesses who have gone before me. We are paying parties—we are paying 326s. We have got eighteen inmates, but when we consider these parties are getting a trade, and are made respectable members of society, and do not gravitate back again to the workhouse, as such persons formerly did. As regards out-door relief, I think that the road limit is open to objection. I think it should be discretionary with the Guardians to give out-door relief to parties who have more than a roof of ground. As an instance, I will just tell you we had a case in our union—a very old creple, man and woman—who lived on an acre of cut-away bog, and we could not give them relief as they had this much land and they were in a starving condition. We understood that, and eventually this old man conveyed his title of the property over to another, on consideration that he would bury him decently. That was the only consideration, so we gave the couple the out-door relief.

13493. MR. MURTAGHAN.—You got round it?—We got round it.

13494. You did not think it a bit of harm?—Not a bit. I think it may be incurred in the breach than the clearance, the road business, but there might be other cases that we should not get round so easily.

13495. CHAIRMAN.—You would rather have an open shed?—We would if it would be discretionary with the Guardians, and not bind us to the road.

13496. You would like the area of charge the present union?—Yes, I think it good enough for certain purposes. It is pretty hard to support so much of the urban population at the same cost as we have ourselves, but we must take into consideration that a great many of these paupers came out of the country into the towns, so I think it as well to have them a union charge.

13547. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you wish to express any view with regard to county boundaries? Would you like to see the county self-contained?—Yes.

13548. You would like to see Meath all to itself?—Yes. That is why I said I think we should take in Oldcastle and Ayles. I believe a county should support itself, and I believe Meath would be able to support itself, notwithstanding the objections that are made that we are extravagant. I believe we are not extravagant at all.

13549. You have a rather large staff at Kells?—Yes, it is not our fault. It was forced by the Local Government Board.

13550. You did not kick a little bit?—We did, but our kicking was of no use, and we kicked a good little bit. Unfortunately some of the officials whom we had resigned, and then we had to appoint these trained attendants in their place. We did appoint parties who were not trained, and the Local Government Board would not sanction their appointment.

13551. CHAIRMAN.—Was Dr. Smyth, the Inspector, in the workhouse?—Yes.

13552. Did not he say there were too many attendants?—No, but he wanted us to get more.

13553. Did not he say there were too many attendants but not enough of success?—He wanted us to appoint more trained nurses.

13554. Did he say there were too many attendants?—He said it would be better to have more qualified assistants and fewer unqualified ones, but we considered that the more paid attendants we had the more we really have attendants waiting on attendants.

13555. He thought you had too many?—He would us to appoint more trained nurses.

13556. You appointed all were wanted?—He would us to appoint another.

13557. For night?—Yes.

13558. What nurses have you now?—We have two nurses. They do alternately day and night.

13559. You have only one nurse then looking after 100 patients?—Yes.

13560. If you think that is enough I won't ask you any more?—Considering we have nine assistants in addition.

13561. Nine assistants tending over such a case, knowing nothing about nursing duties?—I think if we had a couple more nurses we would want as many assistants to attend on them.

You have given us very interesting evidence.

Mr. Murphy.—That is all from Kells; but I wish to convey the opinion of the Guardians with regard to your last question, that is the last witness considered one nurse in the day time sufficient for 125 patients. The opinion is that there is not more than from ten to twenty in bed that require nursing. The rest are walking about.

13562. CHAIRMAN (to Mr. Murphy).—There are few acute cases, but they are mostly chronic invalids. Yes.

That does put a different face on it, certainly.

Mr. THOMAS MALONE examined.

Mr. Thomas
Malone.

13563. CHAIRMAN.—You come from the Drogheda Union district?—Yes.

13564. A large part of the union is in the Co. Meath?—Yes.

13565. What is the position your Board of Guardians occupy mid-way between the two counties?—They came to a resolution, which I am sorry I have not, that they would not go in for this amalgamation, on the grounds that they could not see that it would be economical, but of course they have accommodation actual. It was built for 600, and 300 is the present number.

13566. Would you be against the view that each county should have within itself all the means connected with the county?—Oh, I don't think that should be. I think the system at present, where two or more counties come close together, is good enough.

13567. You think that is more convenient for the people who are attending the market towns, as Guardians, and for the sick coming in?—Quite so. There has been a great deal of discussion about the boarding-out of children. We heard out whatever children come there, and it is very much approved of. Of course I always thought there was a drawback in this boarding-out system.

13568. What do you fancy is the drawback?—Simply the idea they may be competent to take trades. They won't have the opportunity, and they are then confined to becoming farm labourers.

13569. Is not that a class that is very badly wanted in the country?—No doubt.

13570. Don't you think it is a great service if the Guardians can provide some of that class?—I admit that, but at the same time I think that an opportunity should be given, if possible, to children in that position of life to better themselves from the ordinary labour, only they never can under that system.

13571. You would rather approve of giving them opportunities for raising themselves that are not given to children of the poorest independent class?—There is something in that, but those are depending on what the Guardians can do, and what the public can do for them. The others are not.

13572. Do you think that would be part of your duty as a public man to give them a better start in life than children of small farmers?—Putting it in that way, I don't think it would be part of my duty; but if these children come under the care of the Guardians, I think they ought to do the best they can for them.

13573. You would not make doctors of them or barristers?—I would, most undoubtedly, if they had the stuff in them, and if you could give them the education.

13574. There are no half measures with you?—That is putting it in the extreme, but I would not deny them.

13575. But there is a difference between debarring them and what you might call over-educating them?—I am afraid we have gone too far. Some of the children are sent to a day school being boarded-out. Certain children we are sending to Trin School, and I who are eligible for it. We have both systems, and I am not sure would it be competent to board out children to a certain age, and take them to Trin School. Of course I could give you the numbers and the cost.

13576. We have those in our statistics, thank you. Have you any other witnesses from your union?—No, there is no other.

Mr. WILLIAM CURRY, J.P., examined.

Mr. William
Curry.

13577. CHAIRMAN.—What is the Navan view, Mr. Curry?—I would ask permission to make a brief statement. The workhouses of this country were built to accommodate a much greater number of inmates than that which they now contain. The absence of railways and other modern facilities for travelling, together with the extreme distribution of the poor at that period, may perhaps have rendered it necessary to build these large houses. Navan Workhouse was built to accommodate 1,134 persons, and the fever hospital to accommodate 250 patients, thus providing accommodation in Navan Union for 1,384 persons. From inquiries I have made, I find that, excluding the Drogheda Workhouse, which is in Meath but closed in 1894, there were in the five workhouses closed in Meath on the night of Saturday, 29th of December,

629 persons. Navan Workhouse can, therefore, accommodate 505 persons, together with the inmates of all the other workhouses in Meath on that night according to the original standard of accommodation. Having regard to the decreased population and the improved travelling facilities, there are more workhouses in Meath than are necessary to meet its present requirements. The average percentage rate for poor relief expenses—about 15.60—would be reduced owing to savings in officers' salaries, &c., by amalgamating some of the surrounding unions and closing workhouses. Dissolved workhouses could be utilised, one for harmless lunatics, epilepsy, &c., of whom there were 105 in the workhouses of the county according to the last yearly report of the Local Government Board. Another could be utilised as an auxiliary lunatic asylum. The average number of inmates from Meath in Mullingar Asylum for the past three years was 261. The average demand of that institution on our county for a similar period was £12,559 18s. 10d., or average of over £41 per head. The withdrawal of, say, 100 inmates from Mullingar and accommodating them in Meath would relieve a great deal of the congestion that exists in the former place, and whilst getting any further additions to it, it would be of great benefit to the latter to have some of the funds expended in the county in which they are collected. Quite recently—this is in regard to Number 3—our Board had a communication from the Local Government Board, which stated that a Select Committee of the House of Commons had written them to take a typical urban and rural union in each of the four provinces of Ireland, and make exhaustive inquiries to be made as to the number of persons in the workhouses of such union over sixty-five years of age who were mentally and physically fit to live outside an institution, and who had friends or relatives with whom they could reside in the event of their getting a pension of from 5s. to 7s. per week. Navan Union was selected by the Local Government Board as the typical union for the province of Limerick. Our Board appointed a committee to make the necessary inquiries, and got the information required, with this result: they found forty-two persons over sixty-five years of age who were mentally and physically fit to live outside. The clerk was then directed to write to the friends or relatives of those persons. Out of all written to five replied that were willing to take them out. Four replied they were willing to take them out, but had not sufficient accommodation, four refused to take them out, and the remainder did not reply. From this it seems to me that the boarding-out system is rather desirable now feasible. Similar experiments have been made in England, with, I believe the same result. The children of the union, excepting twelve, who were boarded-out, are provided for in Trillick Industrial School. The inmates of dissolved workhouses should be transferred to the retained workhouse, which would be sufficiently large for the improved classification of inmates by the removal of imbeciles, &c., as before indicated, to one of the closed workhouses. Poor relief expense should be raised off the county-at-large. Such a change would be the most equitable mode of raising funds, because the poor, when they did not starve or emigrate, flocked into the workhouse in search of employment. The abolition of electoral division rating, and the adoption of union rating under the Local Government Act, in other words, the trend of modern legislation, is in the direction of equalising rates. With regard to hospital accommodation, there is none required, because in addition to our workhouse hospital, which contains fifty-six beds, in charge of a very able doctor and staff of fully-trained nurses, and equipped on the most up-to-date lines, with a perfect water supply, and hot and cold bathing, &c., we have a fever hospital capable of containing over forty beds, on both of which we have recently expended over £1,200. We have also a county infirmary capable of containing fifty beds, in charge of an able surgeon, and visiting surgeon, and matron, and a full staff of trained nurses. The hospitals of dissolved workhouses should be retained for treatment of ordinary cases of sickness, serious cases to be sent for treatment to the county infirmary. With the hospitals associated from the workhouse surroundings and converted into district hospitals, several changes could be made, such as allowing patients to wear their own clothes, with the doctor's approval, and a few others; classification to be improved by the removal of the imbeciles and epileptics from the retained workhouse, and the re-arrangement of the remaining class according to age, good character, &c. As to pay wards, in all hospitals it would be desirable admission should be granted, and all sick should be charged in proportion to their means. Tramps, in my opinion, should furnish the relieving officer with a ticket from the police of the district before being granted an admission ticket to the retained workhouse, thus giving the police authorities necessarily a close scrutiny and supervision of this undesirable class. They should be made perform suitable labour, and they should be detained until the second morning after admission. The existing laws, in my opinion, contain ample means of dealing with any of this tramp class who refuse or neglect to perform their allotted tasks within the required time.

Mr. FRANCIS BERRIDAN examined.

Mr. Francis
Berridan.

12523. CHAIRMAN.—Would you kindly let us have your views on the matters that we are inquiring into?—In answer to the first query, I am of opinion that amalgamation is absolutely necessary, both as the interests of the ratepayers and in the interests of the poor; and what I would suggest is that these workhouses should be retained in the county and those dissolved. I need not mention the workhouses that I mean. This should be left to the Commissioners, but the workhouses to be retained shall be selected on the ground of facility, accommodation of the population, and being so situated as to be easy of access. I presume that these retained workhouses would give accommodation to the infirm and able-bodied of the dissolved unions. Of course provision in anticipation will be made for the children, which is already made in the Trillick School, and provision will be made for the lunatics, and therefore the only class of patients to be accommodated in the retained workhouses would be these two classes that I have mentioned—the infirm poor and able-bodied. From the evidence that has been given by Mr. Curry, and by other gentlemen, it is quite clear that even one workhouse would be more than sufficient to accommodate all the able-bodied and infirm poor in the county. I now come to the dissolved unions, whatever they may be. I suggest that the hospital be retained, and that the expense of the master, and matron, and the nurses would be a relief on the rates. Take Drogheda, for instance, as an example. I suggest that the Meath portion of the inmates in the Drogheda Union could be sent to some of the retained workhouses, that is the infirm poor, but that the hospital should be retained for the accommodation of the sick poor in the Meath portion of the Drogheda Union. Just take it as a sample. It may refer to the other unions just the very same as Drogheda. With regard to the lunatics, I think I have made that perfectly clear. I may further observe that, on the grounds of economy for the ratepayers, that while would effect a considerable saving to the ratepayers without doing any injustice to the poor, for these reasons, that these hospitals be retained in the dissolved unions should only consist of a head nurse, who would act as matron and head nurse in put and attend the patients, and a night attendant. The clerk could be dismissed, and the master and matron, and these are all very highly-paid officials, and the services of these could be dispensed with, and the benefit to the ratepayers would, in my opinion, be very considerable. I also fall into line with the opinion of Colonel Eveyard, that district nurses should be appointed, at least in all these dissolved unions. Now, having a lot of experience in rural districts, where the head of a family gets sick—he may have a cold—a doctor is sent for—he visits him and orders him into the workhouse, probably for the reason that he may not have to give a second call or a third call, if necessary, and he orders him in on the spot; whereas if this poor patient were visited by a district nurse, probably a little medicine, and a little cleanliness, and all the little surroundings made all right, probably this poor man would be made all right in a few days.

12529 The doctor would not have to give a second visit at all?—But in any case the doctor would certify that the illness was of such a nature as would necessitate his coming into hospital. These dissolved unions should be made available for such exceptional cases as these. In answer to the second query—this is for the auxiliary asylums—I am of opinion that a union centrally situated, in a district comprised in a district lunatic asylum district, such as Mullingar, which comprises the counties Meath, Longford, and Westmeath, I am of opinion that workhouses in a central position, so as to afford the necessary accommodation for the inmates, that this would be made available, or what would be much better, on second consideration it occurred to me that this auxiliary asylum for the harmless lunatics should be in Mullingar, by building an annex to the present lunatic asylum. I give two reasons for this. In the first place, there are three resident medical officers in Mullingar Asylum and a consulting medical officer. There are four doctors, and these could be made available for looking after the harmless lunatics; and there is another reason, that these harmless lunatics are very useful on land, and could be made to work, and very actively self-supporting, and could be classified so as to have no communiaction at all with the dangerous lunatics. I think the classification of lunatics is a very serious matter, and by having the removal of these harmless lunatics away from the dangerous lunatics, I think it would go very far to effect a cure in a great many instances. These are the reasons why I would go for having the asylum for the three counties at Mullingar. Another reason, that the Local Government Board insist, where we have an auxiliary asylum for the treatment of harmless lunatics, that we must have two medical officers to attend them, and probably a whole staff of nurses, and if we were to utilise a disused workhouse in either one or three of the counties, that the large amount of structural alterations to be made for their accommodation would be more, and would be far more than would be required to build an annex to the asylum in Mullingar. Therefore, on these grounds, I am of opinion that the asylum for harmless lunatics should be in Mullingar. The other question is with regard to the boarding-out of workhouse inmates. I am in thorough accord with the suggestion made by Mr. Curry, that, from the inquiries he has made and got from parties who would be very likely to take them over, the boarding-out of workhouse inmates would fall through. I think it would not be a success; and besides, these poor workhouse inmates over sixty-five, they have their diags to go to, and plenty to do; they have fire, and so on, and if they went out, say four or five miles away, they might be neglected and die alone. As a rule, some friends or relatives are very ungrateful, and I do think these people would be better off in a workhouse than they would be outside. With regard to boarding-out, I would like to make a few observations. I am entirely opposed to boarding-out under certain circumstances. Of course it is a very contentious matter, the boarding-out system, and a great many of my friends differ from me considerably in opinion as to whether the boarding-out system or the Trim School is the better one. In some instances the boarding-out system, as, for instance, in Navan, where we have some of the children cared for, with this system with us they are all right. Some of them are with their grandfathers or grandmothers, orphan children, well protected; but I object altogether to the boarding-out system of sending these poor little waifs and strays to strangers. They may be neglected. They may not be sent to school, and even if well cared, where are their chances? They can be nothing more than farm servants. In fact they will never arrive at anything.

13530. Is there anything else you wish especially to mention?—With regard to boarding-out, I was reading a pamphlet the other day by a lady in England. She says:—"It is cruelty to take it for granted that because children are boarded out they soon become members of the family, and leave helpless orphans to the mercy of persons who may ill-treat or neglect them." I only want to allude to this matter to give my expression of opinion with regard to Trim School. I don't think it is an expensive one, but this enormous expense, which was stated at so much per head, was due to the large amount of money that the Board of the Trim School had to borrow to make the necessary structural alterations and accommodation for the children. That was one of the reasons, and then the basis of admission per head is based upon the valuation of the money, and this may become very unduly in some instances, but I think, on the whole, the Trim School gives a chance to a young lad or a young girl to become somebody in the finish up of the day; by a course of discipline and training they will eventually be something. I want to show the public none of the children sent to Trim School ever come back, with one exception. That one exception was a boy from the Navan Union, who was hired out to a farmer, and his hand got lame—he had a bad hand—and he was quite unfit to work, and with the exception of that young lad there was not a single boy or girl ever returned back from the Trim School again, or ever became a burden on the rates.

13531. What, briefly, is your opinion about the tramp?—I would give them plenty of work.

13532. In the workhouse?—No, I would have a farm of land attached at a place near the workhouse. There are too many facilities given, and in fact the Boards of Guardians are actually making new tramps out of the old ones by the accommodation that is afforded them.

13533. Would you give the law power to enable people to arrest tramps, and detain them as compulsory farm servants?—That might necessitate a change in the law.

13534. It would, of course?—No; I would rather take my own view of the matter.

13535. I don't see how you would get them to work on the farm if you did not give them power to keep them there?—If a tramp was admitted to the Navan Workhouse—there are two classes of tramp, the legitimate tramp and the professional tramp. The professional tramp, there might be some means of dealing with him. The only plan, in my opinion, is give him work at the ordinary rate of wages. If he refuses to work let him starve or go about his business.

Mr. JAMES MAGUIRE examined.

Mr. James
Maguire.

13536. CHAIRMAN.—You wish to deal with the Trim School?—I am a member of the Committee at present. No doubt it is a very expensive institution. At the present time we board out some of our children, but my opinion is this, if the members stick together and create the reforms we are about doing in it, it will be a very good school. We are aiming at it at present. There is no use in suggesting the boarding-out system now that all the expense is gone to. With a little reform it will be a good institution. With regard to the tramp question, it is one I take a deep interest in, and as the outset I would say there are three classes of tramps to be dealt with, that the most expensive one is the militia tramp, because the moment he comes out of the militia, he has what he calls a reserve pay every two months. He spends whatever money he has the moment he comes out, and then returns in the workhouse until two or three days before his time is up; he writes an application to where he will be found for his money, then he goes out, spends it, and comes back again. That is one class of tramp we have no law to deal with. Some of them have cost the ratepayers up to £800 between themselves and their families. The other class of tramp is the vagrant, who never provides a home or a home for his family. I hold he should be arrested and imprisoned, and have his children taken from him.

13537. Or put to a labour colony?—Yes. The other class is the itinerant musician, who spends his day singing, gets money for it, and goes to the workhouse at night. The most serious evil is the company tramp; he may be a townsman if you will. He gets a doctor's ticket and is put into hospital, and his wife and children are put on the rates, perhaps to the tune of 8s. a week. That goes on for six or seven weeks until he is discharged. Application is then made by the relieving officer for another week until he is perfectly well outside. Then he works for another day or four weeks, when the same thing goes on again. This is the man who puts the expense on the rates, because he is costing you up to 12s. or 15s. Then the establishment charges of a place are very expensive, and my own opinion is, if the master, clerk, and doctor of any union are in collusion, they can run it any way they like. They can walk on any Board of Guardians.

13538. Mr. MURDOGH.—Do they combine?—That is a question I won't answer; but it is very hard for any Board of Guardians to know it except they attend regularly. If you once lose a week or two from a Board of Guardians you are at sea for about three months until you get on it again.

The Sitting terminated.

TWENTY-EIGHTH PUBLIC SITTING.—THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 11th, 1904. Pgs. 11, 1904.

At the Courthouse, Trim.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman), and Dr. COST BIGGER.

Mr. FRANCIS GARDNER examined.

13533. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the Trim Board of Guardians?—Yes, sir.

13541. What is their view on the question of amalgamation of unions in your county?—Well, as far as amalgamation, I don't see very much what is in it, as far as my opinion is concerned.

13541. The board passed some resolutions—you recommended that one workhouse should be closed?—Yes.

13542. You don't say what workhouse that should be?—Well, we did not mention that.

13543. You had no personal opinion yourself, I suppose on that?—Well, I thought Dunsheughlin might be the one to be closed.

13544. And then what would you do with the Dunsheughlin buildings?—Either to use it for lunatics or for a consumptive hospital.

13545. And you would recommend that the full Government grant of 4s. a week should be given for all the patients sent there instead of 2s. given in the ordinary auxiliaries?—Yes.

13546. Then, as regards the five unions, Dunsheughlin you would make into a district lunatic asylum, you would use two as infirm workhouses for all the infirm and able-bodied inmates of the five unions?—Yes.

13547. One in the north and one in the south, and those should take in tramps, and nowhere else should tramps be taken in?—Yes; that was what was suggested.

13548. And you would use one of the other workhouses as a consumptive hospital?—Yes.

13549. What would you do as regards the sick?—Well, I think with the exception of Dunsheughlin, the sick should be still kept in each of the other workhouses.

13550. You would keep on an infirmary or hospital in each of the others, both for fever and the ordinary cases of sickness?—Yes.

13551. But would it be Trim, in the south, for the infirm people?—Yes, and Kells, in the north.

13552. In order to provide for the sick and the maternity cases, wards and a staff should be maintained in all the five hospitals. You don't think that any of the adult workhouse inmates should be housed out?—I don't consider that would be a feasible plan at all.

13553. You think that would be too likely to lead to extravagance?—I am sure it would be a most extravagant way of treating them.

13554. Are you in favour of giving out-door relief?—Yes, as far as cases that require to get it. We see very often in Trim in giving anything unless in what we know are cases that should get it.

13555. About how much a year do you spend in out-door relief?

Mr. F. J. Sheridan.—In the last year, £1,955; about £2,000.

13556. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think the sum of charge for out-door relief should remain as it is, as a uniform charge?—Yes.

13557. Do you represent a rural or town district?—Rural.

13558. You don't object to pay your share of the town out-door relief?—Certainly not.

13559. And, then, as regards the infirm and old people who are sent to those unions, you would charge such union with the amount per day that they cost?—Yes.

13560. And tramps you would make a county charge. Does it occur to you that any more stringent legislation ought to be passed as regards tramps?—I think the Vagrant Act should be put in force, and I think it would be quite enough to deal with these fellows.

13561. To give you the powers which the Vagrant Act gives to the English Boards of Guardians?—Yes.

13562. Now, you are in favour of disconnecting the hospitals from the workhouses as far as possible, and making them more district hospitals?—Yes.

13563. And you think in that way the hospitals would become more popular and more likely to be used by the sick poor?—Yes; and better in every way for the sick poor.

13564. And you would like to have pay wards for patients who could afford to pay?—Certainly.

13565. Do you think the amount that people should pay might be determined by the discretion of the Board of Guardians?—Yes.

13566. And that they should be compelled by law to pay such an amount as was assessed on them by the Board of Guardians?—Yes, I would say they should be compelled.

13567. Now is there any general evidence beyond what you have said that you would like to give?—I think you have touched on all the subjects.

13568. It just occurred to me that there might be something else that you would like to mention?—Unless what I heard about the evidence given in Kavanagh yesterday about dispensing with the industrial school, and really I think that would be about the very worst thing that could be done, for it is a most useful thing; and although there are a good many people in the union—the Navan people especially—that wish to do away with that, I think it is a most necessary institution.

13569. You have been connected with it a long time?—Yes, since the commencement.

13570. If you would just give me a little sketch of the commencement, and its history since, it would be very interesting?—There were some gentlemen in the neighbourhood of Trim. Mr. Goodman was the prime mover—and he, seeing this disused prison, that was useless there. I was one of the deputation that went to the Castle to wait on the Prison Board to get it as an institution for this purpose, and they complied with our request. We renovated it, and did everything.

13571. How much did it cost you to put it right?—We must have spent £5,000 or £6,000 in the first instance.

Mr. L. Sheridan.—Something over £3,000 the first contract.

Witness.—Then we borrowed £1,000 afterwards.

Mr. L. Sheridan.—That was for additional buildings.

13572. CHAIRMAN.—Was the £4,000 to put it as it is?—About that, or £5,000.

13573. What arrangement was made as regards children going there?—The five unions became contributory—Droghda, Navan, Kells, Dunsheughlin, and Trim.

13574. Not Oldcastle?—Oldcastle would not join with us.

13575. Nor Edenderry?—Nor Edenderry. So the children were collected in from all these unions; they got a proper training—a better training than they could get in the workhouse—and all of these that are capable of taking trades get them; and some of them have been most creditable in the institution. I know myself, from the reports at the present time, that we have some of the best tailors and tradesmen that could be got.

13576. What trades do you teach the boys?—Shoemaking, carpentry, bakery, tailoring, and making wire mattresses.

13577. And you have competent teachers?—Oh, certainly; first-rate men to teach these trades.

Mr. Francis Gardner.

PA. 11, 1904.

Mr. Francis
Gasson.

13578. I suppose Mr. Sheehan will be able to tell us how many boys and girls have passed through the school?—Yes.

13579. About the girls?—They are trained laundresses and stitchers, and all that sort of thing; and I know there are a great many of them in my own neighbourhood as servants, and there are no better servants.

13580. They teach them domestic service?—Yes.

13581. Including laundry work?—Yes, and cooking.

13582. Do they teach them how to cook a little?—Certainly.

13583. They come out plain cocked?—Plain cocks, and the best of general servants for farmers—no better.

13584. And I suppose you are not able to give them any experience for dairy work?—No, they have not that; they have no cows to carry on that.

13585. And they make their own clothes?—Oh, yes; they are taught sewing and knitting.

13586. Have you been on the committee from the start?—Yes, sir.

13587. Are you quite satisfied with the management of the institution?—Yes, I would be very sorry to see it interfered with now, at all events, after all we went through. I think it is a good institution, and has done great good to these poor people.

13588. My colleagues and I went through the institution very carefully, and we thought the girls looked very well and strong, but we were sorry we could not say that for the boys?—I am surprised to hear that—the boys are very well kept.

13589. They were shockingly dirty and untidy, and neglected looking—shoes bad, clothes ill-fitting, not at all creditably turned out. There may have been some special reason for it on the occasion of our visit, though?—Did they know you were visiting?

13590. No, certainly not; they were not on dress parade. Is there anything else you would like to say about the school?—Nothing; only I would not like to see it done away with after all we have gone through with regard to getting it up, and from what we know that it is going on well. There may be a few tramps that may want to break it up, and say the children would be better on outdoor relief, but I say not.

13591. Your opinion is strongly that way, after all the expense and trouble you have gone to?—Yes.

13592. Dr. Beaumont—Do you know the cost per head of the children in this school?—Well, I saw a report that they were costing up to £28. At a meeting where I was some members of the board told me they cost up to £28 a head. On that day I was in the chair myself, and I found £8 10½d. was the amount that came before us for their weekly keep, and then I looked afterwards to see how could £28 a head be made up, and I could not make it up. They exaggerate a good deal—the members of this school.

13593. CHAIRMAN—Way do you think there is any feeling against it?—I could not tell you.

13594. Part the natural contrariety of human nature—what one man supports another man attacks?—We never had any ill-feeling towards this school until the last two years—since we got new men coming in.

13595. Mr. Beaumont—Is there a feeling against the school in the district for the last two years?—Not in the district. It is only one district, and I would say that district is Navan, for I think every other district is most favourable to it.

Mrs. M. J. CULLENAN examined.

13596. CHAIRMAN—Are you one of the Guardians?—Yes, I have been for some time.

13597. Are you connected at all with the Trim Industrial School?—Yes, I have been on the School Board also for five years.

13598. You have had the advantage of hearing the evidence at Navan yesterday?—Yes, I had; I went over to hear it purposely, because I knew they would say things about the Industrial School.

13599. What was your view of the evidence?—I think it was Mr. Owens spoke about the school?—I don't mind him, he has an aversion to the school, simply because we would not do what he wanted—he wanted to spend a lot of money in starting a large library for the boys.

13600. He was not willing to go as far as Mr. Carragee?—No, that was it. We supplied them with books, but because we did not do what he wanted he has rather taken a dislike to the school. But, as far as the schools are concerned—and I have heard, Mr. Dunne, my father talking about all his life—I think there are only four boys one of the whole number that left the school that ever went back to the workhouse. One came back three weeks ago, and is at present in the workhouse; he was taken out by his grandmother, and joined the militia, and came back from the militia. I know another boy who was not very strong, and he went back to the workhouse—and two more very wild boys—those were the only four that came back.

13601. They came back to Trim?—One went back to Navan, another to Donaghuaigh, one to another union, and one to Trim; but these were the only four boys. Last year, when the row arose about the school, Mr. Kelly, the master, wrote to so many places as he had sent boys to, and tried to find out how they had done. He has that height of letters, saying what wonderfully good workmen and tradesmen they have been wherever they went. My idea about boarding out children, especially in this county, is that they really get no home education, because in other counties there are small holdings, where the children are taught to work with their parents. Here they have not that advantage. They may have a school to go to, and get an education of that kind; but I think for this county, at least for this district, the Industrial School is a much better place for them. They are taught a trade, they are taught a little discipline, and taught to be regular and up to time in everything; and, after all, I think that is rather a useful thing later on in life; and, you see, they leave it at sixteen. I heard a person say yesterday that the expenses were very high, and they could not give a reason for it. One of the reasons, I suppose, is that as soon as the boys really become of use as in their trade they go out. We have more applications than we can supply for boys, and as soon really as a boy knows his trade he goes away, and it is little boys that are always working in the school.

13602. Dr. Rogers—Do you think any boy could know his trade at fifteen or sixteen?—I know three carpenters that left the joint school, and if you go up and look at our new church, the wood-work of it was done by a boy straight out of the Industrial School.

13603. CHAIRMAN—You mean the carving of the pews?—Not the pews, but the carving of the rails in front of the organ loft. He had not a man over him. He was left there by the contractor. I think that is very fair evidence. He did not do the pews, but all the wood-work round the church was done by that boy.

13604. Dr. Rogers—Were there no other boys that could have helped him in the work?—There may have been, but the contractor put such confidence in this boy that he left it all to him to have it finished.

13605. CHAIRMAN—Was he in the school at the time?—No, he had left it—he had just left it.

13606. Do you happen to know what wages he was getting?—I think it was 18s. a week.

13607. Dr. Rogers—That is not a tradesman's wage?—No, they don't get very high wages when they leave the school; that is one of the things I am always fighting against. They often go out at 10s wages, but we think it is better to send them to a respectable place to begin with, and let them get low wages, than to send them, perhaps, to a place where they would get better wages but not be as well looked after. It is in the same idea with the girls. I think the girls are not taught quite as much as they might be in ways; they go out, too, when they are very small, and know very little.

13608. CHAIRMAN—At eighteen the girls go out?—They cannot be taught much cooking, because the kind of cooking that is done in a large school like that is not the kind you have in a private house, and the laundry work is just the same. Those girls have to do all the washing for the school. There is not very much fine washing; they are taught the rough work.

13609. More of what you would do in a farmhouse?—Yes; but we have not had any complaints of girls sent out.

Mrs. M. J.
Cullenan.

13610. Can these girls make shirts?—They have got to make it for the school; I suppose they can; the food seems very well cooked; I have often seen it.

13611. Can they make tea?—I think they would do that very readily, but I think it is not fair for people who don't go into the school and see things to say things like they said in Navan yesterday.

13612. Do you visit the school often?—I do often, and go at times when not expected.

13613. How do you account for the boys' condition?—Some time ago they were not as clean as they are now.

13614. I should hope they were not as dirty?—I don't know what happened; one time it was very hard to keep them; they are supposed to be very well minded; I don't go in to look at their clothes.

13615. If you go in at this time of the day, for instance?—It is not so easy to keep boys' clothes right.

13616. It is not, but still when there is a good good and a tailor on the premises and a shoemaker you would expect these boys would be always dry shod and decently clothed, and their skin would not be chafing in unwashed places?—I know they do look very shabby, but yet they are well fed and well minded; I suppose they get up with the clothes.

13617. Dr. BROWN.—Do they go outside for walks together?—They do not go as often to walk as they ought to go; they are supposed to go once a week, but I don't think they do.

13618. Have they a special suit of clothes for that?—They go out in their Sunday clothes.

13619. So the Trim people see them at their best?—Yes; and the girls the same.

13620. CHAIRMAN.—The girls were clean, and rosy, and comfortable-looking?—They have the same to mind the girls; they are easier minded than the boys; it is not easy keeping clothes on boys.

13621. It might not be so difficult in a place where there is such a high bill for clothing and a tradesman on the premises; your clothing costs quite as much as in the Ulm Joint School; quite a great deal more, in fact?—I don't know how it is.

13622. Now, is there anything else on the school matter before we leave it?—I don't think there is anything else.

13623. Dr. BROWN.—You mentioned that there were only four boys you knew of that had not done well; there may be others; you could not tell?—About this time last year the master wrote to all parts where he had sent boys, and he had replies from nearly everywhere.

13624. But you have no register keeping in touch with the boys?—No; and I think that is a pity.

13625. How many boys have left the school since it was established?—I was trying to think this morning, but I could not remember.

13626. How many years is it established?—Thirteen.

13627. Of course for the first number of years there would not be many boys to leave the school?—No; the school has greatly improved in the last couple of years since all the boys that came in first have left; the first boys that came in were much older and difficult to manage.

13628. CHAIRMAN.—Not so manageable?—No; so long as any of the boys that came in first remained, the boys were much harder to manage than they are now.

13629. Dr. BROWN.—Now you get the boys coming from the school directly?—Yes; the same take the small boys and start their education, and they are really much more manageable than when the older boys were in it.

13630. But the number of boys that have left the school cannot be so very large nor can you have much experience of them how they do in after life, seeing you have only started thirteen years?—Yes; but those that have left have done very well.

13631. At the first blush of freedom they may work very well, but afterwards, when things come against them, they may not do so well, and they might want the institution life again?—We have got a good record so far.

13632. CHAIRMAN.—Can you tell us anything about the girls, how they get on in after life?—They have all gone as servants.

13633. What class of service did they go to?—They go to small farmers.

13634. And shopkeepers in towns, perhaps?—Yes; very few go to anything else; people do not like taking a workhouse child, as they call them.

13635. Is your industrial school looked upon as a workhouse?—It is; and you cannot get people to think otherwise.

13636. Do you find it difficult to get the girls off?—Yes, to what I would call really good places; they will get £5 or £6 a year, or £4 a year.

13637. You would not send them to a public-house, for instance?—We have sent one or two, I think; but we don't send them now.

13638. Dr. BROWN.—Is the reason of people taking them simply because they can get them at such very low wages?—That is the reason, and they think they have no place to retreat to; they will do the work sooner than go back to the school.

13639. CHAIRMAN.—They never go back to the school when once they get out?—No.

13640. Dr. BROWN.—Have you followed them up?—Yes; we have followed up a great number of those girls; there are quite a lot of them in good situations in Dublin getting £18 or £20 a year.

13641. CHAIRMAN.—How many of these girls, to your knowledge, have gone back to the workhouse?—I know three.

13642. Was that to the Trim Workhouse?—One came back to Trim, but the poor girl was not exactly fit for the world.

13643. And two others you know of at other workhouses?—Yes; I heard of two or three in Dublin. The girls, once they get away do not wish us to find them, and it is much harder to discover the girls than the boys; when we tried to find out last year where all the girls had gone to we could not; all those who had done well replied, but then some girls did not reply at all.

13644. But the girls look to the ordinary eye more hopeful subjects than the boys there; what is your opinion of them; do you think they have done as well, or better, or worse, than the boys?—I think the boys have done a great deal better—much better.

13645. In what way?—The boys have made a name for themselves; you have no idea of all the letters that come begging for boys, and men will keep situations open to get the boys.

13646. Dr. BROWN.—To what do you attribute that?—They say they are very orderly and practical, and have many good qualities that they cannot find in boys they take from their homes.

13647. Have the wages anything to do with it do you think?—The boys, generally, get much better wages than the girls. I know some of the good tailors in Dublin like to get boys, and their best men are boys from the industrial school, and they give them as good wages as the other men.

13648. CHAIRMAN.—They would not go straight to Dublin from the school?—No. The three I know of in Dublin did not go straight from the school, they passed through a local hand first, and then went on to Dublin. There are numbers down in the West and all over Ireland; everywhere they go the priests and the people in the neighbourhood have nothing but good to say of them.

13649. You only know a very small percentage that have turned out badly, but you are not as sure in your mind about the girls?—No; I don't think the girls are such a success, and I don't know what is the reason. They cannot be taught their trades for after life as well as the boys because they have to do all the rough work; they do all the washing, which is a large item in that school; they have the cooking, and when that is done and their school hours over, there is not much time left for teaching dressmaking and other things.

13650. I think not dressmaking?—They have a dressmaker.

13651. I was asking the sister in charge, and she said not dressmaking, but they sew; they are not outers out; they don't make dresses for other people?—If a girl is going out she is supposed to make her own outfit.

13652. They don't cut out themselves?—The dressmaker is supposed to teach them.

13653. I suppose they could make a dress for themselves?—Some of them know how to cut out and make dresses, for I have seen them.

13654. I suppose there is not the same demand for dressmakers as there used to be before, so many ready-made clothes shops were established?—No; if we could give a girl a good training for one special branch—as a cook or laundress—before they left school it would be much better.

13655. Is the milk for the children brought from outside from farmers?—Yes; a contractor supplies it.

Feb. 11, 1894. 13656. Did you ever think of keeping cows?—No; but I wanted to start fowl last year, but the Board all said—"Yes; put more expense on; it will do no good." There is a place they could keep fowl in very well.

13657. I suppose you could get land adjoining near enough to keep cows?—Yes.

13658. And have the cows driven in; that was never considered?—No; those things were always said to be putting on expense.

13659. In a great many workhouses the Guardians keep their own cows, and find it an economy—and it would train the girls; they are taught nothing like that now.

13660. They would not be useful girls for a country home; they would know nothing about fowl or cow management or feeding pigs?—No. They go out well educated.

13661. Literary?—Yes; and they are taught to be very clean and tidy, and, generally, obedient girls all round; but as for their knowledge it is more of a general kind.

13662. It is not practical for farmhouses?—No; not for everyday life afterwards. That cannot be helped, I suppose, in a big institution.

13663. Would your feeling be in favour of boarding out girls?—If suitable homes could be had for them, but in this county I don't know such a thing. We could not get homes that I think would be suitable in which to rear girls; they are better off in the school than in most of the homes about here.

13664. Having regard to your evidence about the girls and their after life, and the difficulty of placing them, I thought perhaps you might consider boarding out for the girls would be the best?—It would be if proper homes could be got for them.

13665. Whereabouts were you thinking that homes could not be got; inside the Trim Union?—All this part of the county. You would require a comfortable home before a girl could be sent out. The people who would take them would simply live on the money paid to rear these girls, and they would make them absolute slaves.

13666. Would that be of the farming class?—There are not many small farmers about here.

13667. About Oldcastle there are a great many small farmers?—Yes.

13668. That would not be too far to board out children from Trim?—I don't think the Guardians of any union would like to send children away out of the union district.

13669. Oh, then do; the South Dublin Union send their children off to the County Wicklow?—We have some children boarded out, but, personally, I don't think there are sufficient homes in this county to rear girls properly.

13670. What would your ideal of a home for these girls or children be?—Where they would be well treated and kept clean.

13671. Would you say a farmer's house?—A farmer's house, where they would have fowl and milk, and a little house-work to do; where they would be well treated and get good food and ordinary home teaching.

13672. Ordinary food; you would not look for food better or a situation better than the labourers' children have themselves?—I think they would be made slaves of in that class; they would do all the hard work. I don't think there are places in this county that would suit them; they would be brought up dirty and untidy, and be taught nothing.

13673. I was trying to get at the kind of place you would wish to put them in?—Where they would have home comfort, bread and milk and stout, and ordinary country children's food; be kept clean.

13674. Attend school and have a decent place to sleep in, and all that?—Yes; all that. That, I know, they would not get in this part of the county. They would be kept dirty.

13675. There is a very large grazing district down about Limerick, and there the Guardians have a very large number—some hundreds—of children boarded out. Of course they don't look for an extra comfortable place; their idea is to rear these children without any undue hardship, but to let them take what is going?—Limerick is a very different county to this.

13676. I was thinking of it as somewhat similar to some extent—a good deal of grazing?—Oh, no; the Limerick people are very different to the South people; they are very much more thrifty; and the people in Limerick work a good deal harder than the South people.

13677. There is not much hard work about Kilmuck and Harrow?—They are great people for working calves—even the smallest and poorest. They don't do that with us; they won't rear fowl. Even in Galway I know of children boarded out, and they will do very well; I go and see them there, and they are well reared, and you can take those children afterwards and make servants of them.

13678. Where the circumstances of the country are suitable you think boarding out is good?—I do; especially for girls.

13679. But here in this great grass country you say there are not the people who would be suitable for boarding out with?—No.

13680. And you would not like to send them to a distance, such as Oldcastle, or Galway, or Limerick?—Oh, no.

13681. Why not, if you come to look at it critically?—I don't see why it should not be done, but I don't think it would be agreed to. Personally, I don't see why.

13682. Some of the Welsh Guardians are sending their children to Cumberland and Westmorland; that is a long distance?—I should think it might be very good. For instance, down in Wicklow; that is a place where the people are very industrious, and the best servants come from Wicklow and Wexford, because the girls are well-reared.

13683. Do you see any objection to sending your children there?—No; personally I should send them where they would be best minded and trained.

13684. What would be the objection among the majority here?—I don't think they would like to send children to another union district.

13685. Rather keep the money in the county?—I think that would be the idea.

13686. Is there anything you would like to say about the Poor Law generally?—I certainly think that something ought to be done for the hospitals. I know it was all gone over yesterday several times. I think there ought to be amalgamation to begin with; all the infirm people should be put into one house, and let them be well minded and well cared for.

13687. You would classify the poor according to the houses?—Yes; I would put the aged and infirm into one and make them comfortable, and then I certainly think that you would require to keep the present union hospitals; it would make a difference, because at present in the hospitals there are nothing but old people; they are not patients; they are simply infirm.

13688. Well, there is a small percentage in every hospital; there are a number in Trim who are actually sick?—Very few; may be three or four in a hospital at a time.

13689. I think you would find that rather too low an estimate?—I think all the year round it is very low from hospital patients.

13690. Of course a person who has to be in bed practically all the year round?—I don't count that. I would put that down as very infirm indeed.

13691. Would you put it down as sick or infirm; would you not say that a person in that condition wanted most careful nursing, and should not be handed over to the tender mercies of an untrained matron?—I would not hand them over to the untrained matron; if the aged and infirm were put in one house I think they require good nursing—just as in the hospital; but I would separate them from the sick people. You won't get sick people to go into a union hospital, because they object to being put in a ward with infirm people.

13692. Dr. Browne.—Have you found that from your own experience?—Yes; over and over again.

13693. You think if the old people were removed the hospitals would be more availed of?—Much more availed of as a hospital, and the sick people could be better minded, and it would be half the expense. At present we have three nurses in the hospital; they have to spend most of their time with the aged and infirm—we might nurse and three day nurses—and they spend their time with the infirm people.

13704. CHAIRMAN.—How many workhouses should be kept in the county; would you have one or two for the infirm?—I would have two.

13705. One for the males and another for the female?—I don't see how you can get the old men and women from the far end of our county, near Edenderry, to Navan. In the first place they would have to go by train; they might leave their homes at seven o'clock in the morning and they might not reach Navan until seven in the evening. I would have two—one at this end of the county.

13706. Each for male and female infirm?—Yes.

13707. And if any old couple wished to be together you would have them arranged so that they could be?—I would, certainly. I think you would get many people to come in by doing that. I think if there was only one general workhouse for the aged and infirm a great many people would sooner stay out and starve.

13708. You think it would cause hardship?—I think it would cause a great deal of hardship. Perhaps they would say it was cheaper to leave them outside and support them by giving them 2s. a week or 2s. 6d. than to have them brought into the workhouse—well minded and well cared.

13709. They prefer the permanent outside?—As a rule, and even this year we have had applicants to pay a nurse to mind them outside.

13710. One for each family?—Two old ladies refused to come in; they said they wanted a woman paid to mind them at home.

13711. Dr. BROWN.—Of course you did not?—I think in one case.

13712. CHAIRMAN.—You would have Kells for the infirm of North Meath and Trim for the infirm of South Meath?—I think it would be most central.

13713. What would be done with Navan?—Send the lunatics to Navan; they have the County Meath Infirmary in Navan.

13714. They have a very fine hospital building?—And I don't see why any portion of the County Meath is to be paying its proportion of £1,200 a year and never having a patient in it. I think that hospital ought to be handed over to the Navan people and the northern end of the county altogether.

Mrs. McCann examined.

13715. CHAIRMAN.—You are also a Guardian?—Yes. 13716. You have heard what Mrs. Callaghan has said; is there anything you would like to add?—I agree with all Mrs. Callaghan has said; I have not much experience; I have not been long on the board.

13717. Mrs. Callaghan has put forward your views?—Yes, decidedly. She has a great deal of experience, and her views are quite mine.

13718. Are you on the Joint School committee?—No; I know a good deal of the girls who have been sent out, and they are all very satisfactory about our place. The more often send out girls to my part of the country; they are all very good girls.

13719. What part of the union do you live in?—Athboy.

13720. What class of situations do the girls get there?—With small farmers.

13721. Any shopkeepers?—No; I have never known a girl sent to a business house.

13722. How do these girls get on afterwards?—One feature of their character is that they say in the houses they go to, and become one of the family in a small house, and I have known a couple with heads who raised all their family, and eventually some of them got married out of those places to servant boys, and gave great satisfaction; they are very domesticated girls. I know one woman who has a girl like her own daughter.

13723. At what age do they go out?—Fifteen or sixteen; the supply is not equal to the demand for girls; they have not enough girls to send in so, for women are waiting for them.

13724. Is there anything as regards Poor Law administration you would like to mention?—The only thing I would ask you to do is if you could extend the out-door relief to small farmers holding a half-acre and upwards where sickness comes in.

13705. You don't use it here?—There may be two or three petitions the whole time.

13706. Dr. BROWN.—For how many years are you speaking off?—I know there have been two petitions in the last two years.

13707. CHAIRMAN.—It is beginning to be used?—Yes; since they divided it and have three doctors.

13708. I suppose you have a member of the committee in the town?—I am one of the governors.

13709. Have you given orders yourself for admission?—They won't go.

13710. Did you ever give an order for admission?—I did, one; I got one man to go after great persuasion; they will not go into Navan. I know it is a very well regulated hospital, but it is no use to this part of the county.

13711. Is it because it is a short distance—only seven or eight miles?—Six miles; they won't go.

13712. What is the reason, I wonder?—I don't know.

13713. Is there a really hostile feeling to Navan?—They always say they would rather go to their own doctor. I know four patients went from Athboy.

13714. They would rather go to the workhouse here than to the infirmary in Navan?—Neither; they would rather go to Dublin.

13715. You would have Navan for lunatics; what would you do with Dunsinghilla?—I would close it up, but leave the hospital. Hospitals would want to be left at each place where there is a hospital at present.

13716. Then there is Oldcastle?—I don't know about Oldcastle. There is one thing we want in the county, and want badly, and that is a place for consumptives. I have been trying to get up a consumptive hospital for the last five years, but I cannot work it. If something is not done for the consumptive people in Meath we will all die of consumption; they are dying by hundreds, and nobody takes the smallest notice. I have had statistics from doctors round the country, and it is appalling. Whole families have been wiped out about here. I hope the result of this Commission may be to make a change.

13717. You would not want a hospital for Meath alone?—We would very nearly supply one from Meath. We said we would put the consumptive people in Oldcastle, because it is nice and dry.

13718. It is a very good site; is there anything else?—I think that is all. I think I have said quite enough.

13719. Would you put any limit; quarter-acre is the limit at present?—There are some people with half-acre and one acre and up to two acres, bog land, very much poorer than the people who are getting it.

13720. Would you say the limit should be changed from quarter-acre to two acres?—According to the discretion of the Guardians. I know people with two acres of bog land who cannot make it out of it because it is covered with water, and we are often asked is it possible to get relief for these people, and it is against the rule to give them more than one week's provisional relief, and consequently they are in utter starvation.

13721. Do you think they ever could support themselves on these farms?—They are never dependent on that; the man is generally a labouring man with some farmer, and when his wife knocked up there is a large family of children.

13722. As long as the health lasts them is no necessity?—No.

13723. But when illness comes you then find you would wish to have the power to give them some relief?—Very often in our district where you see desecrating cases.

13724. Would you limit it still further, saying two acres for sickness only?—Yes; decidedly where the man of the family gets sick or the woman gets very sick and the man has to stay at home to mind the children. At present I think the administration of out-door relief is ridiculous, but I cannot get the Guardians to consent with my views.

13725. Is what you say it ridiculous?—There are several people getting relief who have some working; I believe that is allowed, and the case I have just described now is not allowed by the Local Government. I heard where a woman has a son working, and is up to sixty-five, and has 2s. a week.

Feb 11, 1904.

Mrs McCann.

13736. Did you ever mention these cases to a gentleman called the auditor?—No; I never met the auditor at all.

13737. Because you might be surprised at the result if you did. You must not take it that cases such as you mention would be getting relief with the approval of the Local Government Board?—I know that they are on a long time, and it is a kind of pension as our part. The Guardians say they are infirm and that their sons will not support them, but I know there are several deserving cases that don't get relief.

Mr. F. Sheridan.—In nearly all these cases you have to get a certificate for the auditor from the medical officer that they are infirm.

13738. CHAIRMAN.—Are not these cases you are referring to cases where the sons and daughters are able to support them and don't?—Yes.

Mr. THOMAS HEWITT examined.

Mr. Thomas Hewitt.

13739. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Trim Board?—Yes.

13740. Are you from a rural district or the town?—Rural.

13741. You have heard the evidence that has been given by the lady Guardians; are their views practically those entertained by yourself and other members of the board?—Well, yes; to a certain extent.

13742. What would your own view be?—I don't believe in having two workhouses in the County Meath; I certainly think we should only have one workhouse and hospital.

13743. Would it not be a very long way to take the sick from Oldcastle or Clonsilla to the central hospital?—Yes, of course; it is very long, no doubt.

13744. But you consider it could be done without hardship?—I think so.

13745. Where would you put the hospital and the central workhouse?—As far as I can see Trim is almost the centre of the County Meath.

13746. You would not say Navan is nearer it?—No; the centre of the County Meath lies between Trim and Navan, but it is still nearer to Trim.

13747. Anywhere as the Tellinora direction?—No; two and a half miles from Trim and four and a half or five miles from Navan would be about the centre of Meath; Trim is the county town.

13748. What would you do with the Trim Workhouse; would you see that for the sick and infirm?—I would have the sick there; we have a very good doctor in Trim—one of the best in Ireland, I believe—and we should take advantage of that.

13749. And give the county the advantage?—Yes.

13750. And would you then leave the Navan infirmery?—I expect so, as it is nearer to the centre. I would try to come to the centre of Meath as well as I possibly could. I did not come here prejudiced against any place.

13751. What about the Drogheda Workhouse?—I don't consider that in Meath; that is more of a Leath workhouse.

13752. What about the part of Drogheda Union that is in Meath; you would let that still go to the Leath Workhouse at Drogheda?—Yes. I expect the Leath people would make some arrangements there themselves. It is a very large town, Drogheda.

13753. Did you ever hear talk of the idea of having each county an area for Poor Law administration as well as for county government?—Yes; I have heard of the idea, but as a general rule I always work on my own ideas.

13754. What do you think of the idea?—I would prefer to give it the go-by in many instances.

13755. You have heard what was said about out-door relief?—I don't quite agree with that either. I would not believe in extending out-door relief to people that would have two acres of land.

13756. You think the present limit is a fair one?—I certainly think the present limit is a fair one.

13757. Mrs. McCann.—In case of sickness?—Yes, of course.

13758. CHAIRMAN.—You are not in favour very much of out-door relief?—To all cases that require out-door relief, of course.

13759. Is your tendency rather to restrict out-door relief?—Yes; because it is a very expensive item.

13760. Do you like the present area of charge for out-door relief?—No; I would have divisional ratings.

13761. Has the out-door relief increased, so far as you are aware, of recent times?—Yes; it has in this way. Since it became a union charge it has become very heavy on certain electoral divisions. Take Athboy, for instance, where they are very liberal in out-door relief.

13762. You would rather that the people who are giving a good deal of out-door relief should pay for it themselves?—Yes; that is my idea; and then I think the system would not be abused so much.

13763. A place like Athboy is a little little country town, and a great many of the country people go in there looking for work?—Yes; and get knocked up. I don't expect a great many country people go in to look for work there; there is no work for them.

13764. Don't you think a great deal of the town population is made up of people who come in from the country and settle down there?—No; I cannot say that in the case of Athboy, for they are nearly all business people in Athboy; you have not in the town of Athboy those sham houses.

13765. You think the people in Athboy have been old residents there, and not country people who want to do work there and get knocked up afterwards?—I mean the dispensary district of Athboy. I don't say there is very much relief in the town; it is in the dispensary district I complain of, because it comprises several towns.

Mrs. McCann.—Kildallery is the district really where the poverty exists; in Athboy they are very thriving.

13766. CHAIRMAN.—You go as far as Kildallery; that is just at the edge of the Dublin Union. As regards the people coming into hospital, would you like the Guardians to have power to charge people who come in as much as the Guardians thought they could afford to pay?—Yes; I think it would be a great advantage, and would improve the union hospitals very much.

13767. It would give the people who come in a feeling that they were not paupers?—Exactly.

13768. And it would provide a certain amount of money in aid of the rates?—Exactly. And there are a great many people that would come in. Of course I should make a distinction in the hospitals for paying patients and non-paying patients.

13769. Take the ordinary case of a man earning 15s. or 21s. a week; you would not call a child of his coming in a paying patient?—Well, no; I would not.

13770. And yet that child if it stayed at home would cost perhaps 1s. a week to keep it?—Yes; or something more.

13771. You think that man might be safely asked to pay 1s. a week?—Yes; but I would not go in for such small charges as that.

13772. These are the kind of charges I am thinking of; to get the independent spent up as much as you can; and if a child would cost 1s. a week at home, to pay, at all events, that much for it?—We have very few labouring men in this county getting 15s. a week.

13773. Do you mean to say they are not getting so much?—10s. and 12s. is the general rate in this county for labouring men; when you get to 15s. you commence a tradesman or a clerk.

13774. In the case of a man earning from 12s. to 15s. there would be no hardship in charging him 6d. for a child in the hospital for a week?—Yes; I see how it would do away with the present system of pauperism, no doubt. I would be in favour of doing away with the present system of pauperism so far as I could.

13775. So that you might charge a man what would not hurt him and what he would save by the child being away?—Yes; there are a great many difficulties to be surmounted in the present system.

13776. There is too much money spent now?—Yes.

13777. And you think amalgamation is really necessary, or highly desirable, in the interests of the people who have to pay?—Yes; in the interests of everyone at the present time.

13778. But you would not wish real hardship to be caused to the sick in removing them too far?—No.

13779. You would suggest that only the one hospital should be in the county if possible?—But if doctors and people who have made the matter their study think that would involve too much hardship.

13780. You would not press anything that would cause hardship for the cause of economy?—Certainly not; I would fall in line; we could have two hospitals then. I take for instance a fever hospital; we have a fever hospital attached to every workhouse; I cannot see the idea of that at all. Take Tyne; in our fever hospital we have a nurse, and once I remember it was a year and a couple of days without a patient. I consider there should be only one fever hospital. It might be a little bit risky to close a fever hospital, because if fever came and you had not the hospital built you would have fever spreading over the country very quickly. But we need not close the fever hospital.

13781. You would leave a caretaker in it?—Yes.
13782. And then get a nurse on a case comes?—Yes. I only consider the nurse at the present time caretakers of the fever hospitals.

13784. But you would not close the hospital altogether?—No; for this reason—the minute a fever patient comes into the hospital we get a trained nurse down to attend for the night; we would do away with a good deal of expense in that way.

13785. Now, is there anything else you would like to refer to?—Well, no; I am powerless.

13786. Are you not on the committee of the school?—No; I think the whole system of the school should be changed.

13787. How would you change it?—That is the way the difficulty comes in.

13788. Would you go in for boarding out or would you still keep the school?—I go in greatly for boarding out, for this reason—that the boarded out children always turn out more respectable than children reared in the school.

13789. Is your view then that the school is unnecessary and boarding out would be a substitute for it?—Some of the children are fairly careful children, and get trades.

13790. If they get trades they must have tradesmen there to teach them, and tradesmen cost a lot of money. I suppose that is where the expense very largely is?—There is great expense, no doubt; wherever it is I do not know; but it is a great deal more expensive than in Glou; I have a good knowledge of Glou, for I have some friends on the board.

13791. You have not gone into that here; tried to find out where the extra cost is?—Not now, but I expect I will.

13792. You have it "on your list"?—Yes, it is on my list, no doubt.

13793. As regards tramps or casuals, you think the law would require to be changed?—I do; if possible to do away with tramps altogether.

13794. How would you do that?—I expect we would want the aid of the Government to do away with the tramps.

13795. What would you suggest the Government should do?—Take them into some docks.

13796. In Germany the Government arrest them and put them as prisoners in a colony; do you think that would be a good plan here?—That is what I was coming at; something of that sort. The tramps are a great nuisance in the country.

13797. They are a useless class?—Yes; I think every-one admits that.

13798. A harmful class very often?—We would not want so many workhouses if the tramps were done away with.

13799. There are some decent men out of work occasionally, going from one place to another?—You would have to classify them.

13800. What would you do with those?—We would have to adopt the system they have in England.

13801. They are not able to stop it in England. I don't think they are getting any further ahead than ourselves?—I don't think they are.

13802. Their law is more stringent, certainly, but Germany is the place where they make it impossible pretty nearly?—Yes; they put them into these government docks; they transport them; but they certainly should be classified; a real tramp should not be at large; he is going to do nothing, only idling, through the country.

13803. Then the poor fellow who is looking for work, when he has lost it in one place and is looking for it—perhaps a tradesman or seaman—what would you do with him?—You could do nothing with him. I should not consider him a tramp. It would be pure necessity that would be causing him to tramp.

13804. The other fellow is always trying to put himself forward as a respectable tradesman or workman out of employment?—Yes.

13805. The difficulty is to distinguish between the two; I suppose you would have to leave that to the police and the relieving officer to make the best judgment they could in the matter?—Yes. In many places masters and porters of workhouses are able to distinguish between those fellows; it is very easy to know a professional tramp.

13806. You would lock up the regular tramp and enable the police or the relieving officer to provide for the benefit of the man who was honestly looking for work?—Yes.

MR. LAURENCE SHERRIN examined.

13807. CHAIRMAN.—You have been Clerk of the Tyne Joint School since the start?—Yes.

13808. About what year was it started?—April, 1893. It was opened a couple of years afterwards.

13809. It started in 1890. I have got here from the Local Government Board reports for the year ending March, 1901, the receipts and expenditure for the Glou and Tyne Schools; I find that the Tyne School received from the rates last month—£5,795.

13810. And from the Parliamentary grant?—£210.

13811. Making a total receipt of?—£5,995.

13813. And for clothing?—£445.

13814. And for salaries and rations?—£280.

13815. Making a total of?—£4,737.

13816. Then there was other expenditure?—£1,294.

13817. Making a total expenditure of?—£4,731.

13818. Now we have followed up all the heads of expenditure except the item for "other expenditure"; what was that other expenditure made up of?—Principally establishment charges.

13819. What establishment charges would it be, exclusive of salaries and rations, which are charged separately?—The staff that we get in for the different shops—dishes and staff.

13820. I would like you to give me for any one month the details of the expenditure under the head of "other expenditure"?—For the year ended 30th September, 1902, there was £2,780, money supplied by the board.

13821. Just take the one heading, "other expenditure"; you have provisions, clothing, salaries; do your accounts go according to those headings?—No; they don't run the same way.

13822. What are your headings for 1903?—For maintenance and clothing, £1,597.

13823. Have you salaries and rations there separately?—No; it is all together.

13824. What is your next head of account?—Other expenditure, £1,745.

13825. Give me details of the £1,597?—Provisions and necessaries and coal.

13826. Candles and gas?—Yes.

13827. Soap?—Yes.

13828. Black lead?—No; I don't think that would go under the head of necessities; it principally consists of soap and coal and light.

13829. Now the "other expenditure"?—£267, doctor; teachers' salaries, £258.

13830. What teachers are under that?—Master and two assistants, a nun and two assistants.

13831. And tradesman?—The tradesman does not come in there; that relates come to £222.

13832. Who pays the rations?—All the male officers—the tradesmen are extern, they do not—the master and two assistants and the porter.

13833. Do their rations come to £232?—A portion of that is fuel and light.

13834. You told me you charged that under the head of maintenance and clothing?—The sums get their proportion of fuel and light.

13835. The sums don't take rations?—No; they get £20 a year and £25 in lieu of rations.

13836. That is not charged in the £232?—No.

Feb. 12, 1904.

Mr. Thomas Sherrin.

Mr. Laurence Sherrin.

Feb. 11, 1894.
Mr. LAWRENCE
Sheridan.

13637. Where else is it charged, if not charged there?—No, that is merely the ration, and fuel and light.

13638. Then where is it charged?—Portion goes for the schoolmaster and schoolmistress, and portion in that £205 for salaries of other officers.

13639. You have got returns 2332, and you cannot give us what we want about that yet. What is the next head?—Medicine, £2 5s. 6d.

13640. What is next?—Other expenses come to £666.

13641. What are they; that is too much for a lump sum. Can you not give details of it?—I cannot give details from the abstract. I can give it from the expenditure book.

13642. In a general way, what do you think that £660 includes?—It includes, as far as I can recollect, a good lot of steam coal, used for the steam boiler for cooking.

13643. That would not be among the ordinary fuel and light?—No.

13644. What else would there be. Have you got the trifles charged separately?—Yes.

13645. What are the other headings?—Industrial department, £76.

13646. What expenditure is that?—In connection with the industrial department—shoemakers.

13647. What would that include?—I can tell you when I get the books.

13648. Would it be leather, materials, or things like that?—No, sir.

13649. What is your next head of account?—Interest on repayment of loans, £13 1s.

13650. What is the next?—For law expenses, £19 11s. 6d.

13651. What is the next heading?—That is all the headings.

13652. Where are the wages. You have given me the doctors and teachers. You must have the teachers in the other expenses of 2661?—I think that is where it runs into.

13653. You have five contributory unions. Are all the expenses apportioned according to the valuation, or partly according to the valuation and partly per head of the children?—The clothing and maintenance according to the collective number of days.

13654. That is the bare support of the child is charged to each union for each child sent?—Yes.

13655. Then the rest of the expenditure?—According to the valuation.

13656. So that the unions would pay for each child that proportion of the sum of £1,567?—Yes, sir, according to the number of days that each child spent there.

13657. And the other expenditure would be apportioned according to the valuation over the various unions?—Yes.

13658. Can you show me the apportionment there, the charge against each union?—Yes; for the half-year ending March, 1903, the £1,567 is apportioned over the unions—Droghda, £403 14s. 5d.; Dunshaughlin, £215 6s. 8d.; Kells, £230 7s. 6d.; Navan, £475 3s. 10d.; and Trim, £554 10s.

13659. That is how much they pay out of £1,567?—Yes.

13660. How much did each union pay out of the other expenditure?—Droghda, £418 7s. 11d.; Dunshaughlin, £238 13s. 10d.; Kells, £209 5s. 6d.; Navan, £435 17s. 6d.; Trim, £547 7s. 5d.

13661. Have you got the totals for each union. You do the first column according to the collective number of days?—Yes, and the second according to the valuation.

13662. Do you divide the collective number of days, showing how many children they would represent. Did you divide the collective number of days by 365?—No, sir, but just the exact number of days.

13663. You could not tell me how many children would be charged to each union for that year. Have you it only according to the collective number of days?—The number of children in the school were 178 for one half-year, and 177 for another. We have only about 150 at present.

13664. Can you give me the relative number of children for each workhouse?—It is according to the collective number of days I have it, but these are just exactly the children that come in and out; they don't represent the exact number as an average. The collective number of days were—for Droghda for the year, 13,789; for Dunshaughlin, 8,147; for Kells, 6,543; for Navan, 13,459; and for Trim, 15,810.

13665. That divided by 365 will give us about the number of children?—Yes, sir.

13666. For that half-year, how much would it cost per child in the school?—The last two rates that were adopted by the Board of Management amounted in the year to £5,013; that divided by 152, the present number of children in the school, would give a cost of about £33, without taking into account all the official salaries.

13667. Every bit of expenditure?—Not the workhouse; you only take in the average cost.

13668. We take in a great deal more; we don't go as such a very green house as that. You cannot tell me how much it costs Droghda and every other place for each child sent you?—No, sir, I did not make that calculation.

13669. Some of the local bodies have made that calculation. One man told us it cost £25 per child; that would be a great surprise to you?—Taking the rate struck for the last two years into account, 183 children, and the rate £3,013, that would be just about £20 a head.

13670. But then it is not apportioned that way; it is apportioned partly according to the valuation and partly according to the expenditure. Did the original order forming the district school district fix what charges were to be on valuation, and what per head?—No, sir.

13671. How did this arrangement come of apportioning the expenditure in this double way?—The same way as in the workhouse. The clothing of the children in the workhouse is apportioned according to the collective number of days.

13672. You are speaking of the old times, when there was electoral rating?—There is no charge made.

13673. You are treating the joint school arrangement as if the joint district were a union and each union an electoral division?—Yes.

13674. Are you sure there was not any provision for that in the original order forming the district?—An most certain.

13675. You think it was merely a course of action you took up and the officers passed?—Yes; there was no distinct provision, only to follow out the course under the old system.

13676. The old system did not provide for it; it would be only by analogy you could take it?—The preparation of all the books was left to myself, and the only basis I could work on was what I had as clerk of the union. The Local Government Board never gave me any assistance as regards the books of the establishment. When the Glen School was established, they sent to me for the books I had here, so they are on the same basis.

13677. Dr. BIGGER.—How many children have you in the whole school?—150.

13678. And your total expenditure for last year was?—

13679. CHAIRMAN.—£3,597, and then for a year less that I have the Local Government Board report on, it was £4,431. I think you may take £4,000 as the normal expenditure.

Dr. BIGGER.—For 150 children?

CHAIRMAN.—You may say 150; it is over 150.

Witness.—The numbers have reduced of recent years. Droghda had upwards of sixty children in the school, but they must be boarding-out because the number has been reduced below forty.

13680. Dr. BIGGER.—That runs up to £25 or £26 a year, counting 150, which is the maximum number?—Then there are the salaries of the different officials and tradesmen, which come to a good sum. Baker, 30s.; tailor, 35s.; carpenter, 32s. 6d.; shoemaker, 30s.; dressmaker, 30s. a week; there are six nurses, porter, and master.

13681. CHAIRMAN.—But you don't pay for six nurses?—Yes.

13682. Dr. BIGGER.—Do you keep an account to show the profit on these different departments?—There is, sir. There was a loss on some of the shops last half-year, and a profit on some of them.

13683. If there is a profit on some, should it not work out below £26 a year?

13684. CHAIRMAN.—Where is the profit; in any one it is not much, I suppose?—The net loss on all the departments was £40 for the half-year.

Dr. BIGGER.—Is that including the salary of the tradesmen?

13685. CHAIRMAN.—It is a material account, or what?—There is one general account for all the departments.

13686. Dr. BIGGER.—You have not a shoemaker's account?

Mrs. Callaghan.—There is.

WITNESS.—There is a profit there.

13997. Dr. BIGGER.—Are the salaries of the tradesmen charged against the departments, and then the quantity of the material, all put down on the one side, and whatever sales there are on the other?—Yes.

13998. Then if you only lose £30 or £40 on the total of the tradesmen, you cannot account for much of the expenditure there?

13999. Mr. NEWITT.—Are the salaries of the tradesmen charged to the accounts?

Dr. BIGGER.—So he says.

14000. Mr. NEWITT.—Am I to understand that as being correct?

CHAIRMAN.—We would like to know how the profit and loss account—take the shoemaker's shop—is made up, whether wages go in with materials; and then we would like to see how the boots, manufactured articles, and repairs are charged.

Mrs. CULLINANE.—There is just the cost price put on, because they are nearly all for the unions; there is very little profit put on.

CHAIRMAN.—The boys have them for their own use. Mrs. CULLINANE.—Yes, and they make them for the unions.

14001. Dr. BIGGER.—Do you charge for Trim School the same as you would charge for an outside union?

Mrs. CULLINANE.—No, he only puts down what the material costs; we have charged that this year.

CHAIRMAN.—You are entitled to a fair profit on your own use.

14002. Dr. BIGGER.—You could charge the Trim School the same profit as you charge the other unions. Do you do the same for bread, and so on?

Mrs. CULLINANE.—No; the price of bread is made for each union.

14003. Dr. BIGGER.—Do you charge Trim the same price for bread as the other unions?

Mrs. CULLINANE.—I don't know that.

CHAIRMAN.—I am afraid we are rather in a fog about these accounts.

(Witness produces Abstract Book.)

14004. CHAIRMAN.—These are the details of your expenditure, but have you no summary or classification of them?—No.

14005. £470 is too big an item to throw at us under the head of "other expenses." I want the details of it?—There is £21 17s. 6d. for coal.

CHAIRMAN.—The best thing will be to adjust for heat, and afterwards you can give it to us.

On resuming after lunch,

14006. CHAIRMAN.—Now we want the sub-items of that sum, £470?—Painting, £21 6s.; result fees, £117 1s. 4d.

14007. That is levied on all the unions according to valuation?—Not according to the valuation; according to the report of the school inspector.

14008. But it is paid for by the several unions according to the valuation?—Not according to the valuation; according to the number of children.

Mr. P. SHERIDAN.—For establishment charges it should be valuation, and for provisions and necessaries the number of children.

14009. CHAIRMAN.—There is painting £21, there are number of small items, and then the next large item, £117 1s. 4d., that is for result fees. How much of that is the girls' school teachers get?—About £25.

14010. And the male teachers, £65, that is divided half-half to the master, and the remainder is divided between the other two assistant teachers.

14011. Then the master's salary, as a whole is—master £40 a year, as schoolmaster £50, and for result fees he has £20; that is, his salary is £120 a year?—Yes.

14012. Does he get rations besides?—Yes, £25 or £26 a year.

14013. Has he any other allowance?—No.

14014. What is this item?—Architect's fees, £24, and repairs of buildings, £27 12s. 10d.

14015. What is the £125 6s. 11d.?—For books, advertising, and school requisites.

14016. Coal?—£131 18s. 9d.; that is for the steam boiler; that is for the year.

14017. That is about 25s. or 30s. a ton?—It varies; less than that.

Mr. KELLY, Master.—I think 15s. or 17s. a ton. They get the very best. It has to supply the waterworks.

14018. Dr. BIGGER.—That is about 150 tons a year.

Mr. KELLY.—Something about that. We have our own waterworks, and for the last year we had to dry almost all the clothes by steam, and all laundry work and cooking is done by steam, and the water is all heated by steam.

Dr. BIGGER.—Then it is £1 a year for every child in the school.

14019. CHAIRMAN.—What is this item?—Hardware, brushes, &c., £134.

Mr. KELLY.—Buckets, and things like that, and spades and shovels; it is all of that nature.

Mr. NEWITT.—Where those figures supplied to you?

Mr. KELLY.—All those bills pass through my hands.

14020. CHAIRMAN.—Are they from the one contractor?

Mr. KELLY.—No, sir; two contractors, or you might say three.

14021. What does one contractor supply?

Mr. KELLY.—I could not exactly tell you, but there is one contractor at the present time supplying, from a very large lot, brushes of all sorts, enamelled plates, enamelled dishes, bricks, and cement.

14022. You don't see much cement?

Mr. KELLY.—I don't know about that particular half-year, but for the last half-year we never used 2 cwt. There is half-cutting machines, cutting the boys, never more than one or two of those used in the half-year. There is a miscellaneous catalogue; there are sixty or sixty-five items on the list.

14023. CHAIRMAN.—Then plumbing expenses?

Mr. SHERIDAN.—Repairs to boiler, £36 3s. 4d.

14024. Was there much done in the year, as far as you recollect?

Mr. SHERIDAN.—There was. I know the Guardians at our meetings are very particular going through our accounts.

Mrs. CULLINANE.—When we get them.

14025. CHAIRMAN.—Now we want the details of the salaries, and the number of officers. The chaplain gets how much a year?—£25.

14026. The boys and girls are all Catholics?—Yes.

14027. Is there daily Mass in the institution?

Mr. KELLY.—On Sundays, and sometimes one day in the week, and sometimes two, and on holidays also, and Benediction often two or three times a week, and the chaplain holds his examinations very often.

14028. CHAIRMAN.—Then Mr. SHERIDAN gets £63, the matron £55, and there are six sisters, and five get £25, and one £45.

14029. What for rations?—The salary is £30, and £25 for rations.

14030. Then the doctor?—£57 at present.

14031. Does he visit daily?—Yes.

14032. And then the porter £25 a year and rations?—Yes.

14033. Dressmaker 15s. a week, carpenter 32s. 6d., shoemaker 30s., the tailor 35s., and baker 30s. Then the total amount of salaries and rations comes to £860 a year. Have you been able to find out what is the average cost of each boy, and how much each union pays for each boy that it sends?—No, except what I have told you before.

14034. That was a very general thing. I want if in pounds, shillings, and pence, according to your average. You may take a note of that, and let us know how much, taking the last three years, the average per child has been. Would it be the same for boys and girls?—It would be the same.

14035. And how much each union has paid per child, including both its share according to the valuation and its per capita payment?

14036. Dr. BIGGER.—There were four intern officers. The average cost of provisions for the master, porter, and two teachers, their rations come to £232, you said. Can you explain that?

Mr. KELLY.—There are four officers. The average cost of provisions is, per week, £1 15s. 4d.

14037. Dr. BIGGER.—I am speaking of the total expenditure.

Mr. J. SHERIDAN.—Does that include necessaries?

Mr. KELLY.—No; necessaries are 22s. 6d.

Mr. J. SHERIDAN.—There are necessaries supplied to the unions in the shape of fire.

Mr. KELLY.—There are six men; the necessaries for four are 22s. 6d.—coal, candles, soap, starch, and bins.

14038. Dr. BIGGER.—How is the coal supplied?

Mr. KELLY.—In buckets averaging 2 stone a bucket.

It is taken out of the general supply of the establishment.

14039. CHAIRMAN.—What amount are you entitled to use?

Mr. KELLY.—5 stone a day in winter and 3 stone in summer. The officials only take what necessaries they require in starch, blue, and soda. All their clothes are washed in the establishment, and all soap, starch, blue, and soda is sent to the laundry; it is all handed to the matron. None of the officials use their full amount of coal.

13930. It is not a real entry of what takes place at all?

Mr. Kelly.—The necessities, such as starch and blue, were never delivered to the officials.

13931. Dr. Brogan.—Is it charged in this account against them?

Mr. Kelly.—I cannot say.

13932. CHAIRMAN.—Is it included in the £232 a year?

Mr. Kelly.—I could not say. I make up what the actual provisions and necessities would be if consumed on the establishment, and it goes into the laundry, and the matron is able to do a lot of the children's clothes with the same amount that is charged to the officials. I brought the matter before the Board on one occasion, and tried to get it changed, and to get the officials more fed instead of necessities.

13933. CHAIRMAN.—The only benefit is you get your clothes and washing for nothing.

Mr. Kelly.—Yes. With the exception of 12s. 9d. for coal, the remainder goes to the laundry out of the necessities.

13934. Dr. Brogan.—Is 6d. a week is a good deal to go to the laundry in a week.

Mr. Kelly.—It goes to wash the officer's clothes and a good deal of the children's clothes as well.

Mr. Herd.—The average in the workhouse for provisions and necessities is 4s. 6d. for each official.

13935. Dr. Brogan.—Could you tell us the total consumption of soap and these necessities in the school altogether?

13936. CHAIRMAN.—It is a very remarkable thing that at Glin there were 289 children and here you have 241. They have 91,000 collective number of days in Glin and 62,000 here, that is one-third higher than here, and yet their cost is a great deal less than here. That is very remarkable.

Mrs. O'Connell.—Where does the largest difference come in?

13937. CHAIRMAN.—That is just what we are trying to find out.

Mrs. O'Connell.—Is it the officers' salaries?

Mr. SAMUEL KELLY, Master and Principal Teacher, examined.

Mr. Samuel
Kelly.

13938. CHAIRMAN.—First you enter on one side the materials and wages?—Yes.

13939. Is there anything else on that side of the account?—No.

13940. What have you on the other?—Cash actually received for work done for the public outside, and the value of the school work.

13941. What value do you put on the school work?—The value I always put on the school work up to the last date. Supposing we used £20 worth of material in the shop during the half-year for school work, and the wages cost £10, the value of the school work for that particular month would be £30; that is the way I calculate it. Take, for instance, the tailoring shop. If he made ten suits of clothes, I calculate the average amount of material consumed for each suit.

13942. That is no profit and loss account?—No; any profit made or loss sustained is an apparent one.

13943. You can run it into a very real transaction. What is your new method, might I ask you?—The auditor has ordered we should put down so much value on each suit of clothes. My idea never was to show what work could be done for outside, but rather to show what it cost to make it inside.

13944. Have you a time-book?—No; but there is a time-book in the school, and the boys are working for a certain time.

13945. You don't keep a time-book such as a tradesman would keep, showing how many hours a boy worked, and at how much an hour?—I never considered any wages for them at all.

13946. You put it only down for the teacher?—Yes; the skilled labour.

13947. Although the boys might have made some of the clothes?—The boys do the most of the work. I always insist on that except in the tailoring shop.

13948. Dr. Brogan.—Do you keep any time-book for the tradesmen?—The porter's book; he is working the whole time or teaching.

CHAIRMAN.—They are liberal here.

Mrs. O'Connell.—I think they are, decidedly so. When were the accounts audited last?

Mr. Sheridan.—Mr. Kine was here a few weeks ago.

13949. CHAIRMAN.—Mr. Connolly was here on the 2nd of November, 1903.

Mrs. O'Connell.—We were left rather a considerable time without anybody; nobody knew what was happening.

Mr. P. J. Sheridan.—In the half-year ending 30th September, 1903, officers' rations were £63 1s. 1d. added to that for fuel and light, £46 1s. 4d.—£109 15s. 4d.

13950. CHAIRMAN.—We are only looking into it because questions were asked at Navan yesterday which charged this place with great expense, and in looking into it we saw that the Glin expenses were very much lower.

Mrs. O'Connell.—They don't feed the children as well as we do.

Mr. Kelly.—The necessities for the half-year ending September, 1903, £36 0s. 4d., paid at the beginning of the half-year. We received £132 15s. 16d. of necessities, making £168 15s. 2d., and at the end of the half-year there were £115 2s. 14d. worth of necessities on hand. That leaves necessities £53 15s. 4d. for the half-year.

13951. Dr. Brogan.—That is £2 a week?

Mr. Kelly.—That includes coal and gas, soap, starch, blue, soda, and candles.

13952. How do you estimate the gas?

Mr. Kelly.—We don't estimate it; when the gas-bill comes in, by the clerk's direction, I put it in the provision account for that particular week.

13953. CHAIRMAN.—How do you apportion that in the officers'?

Mr. Kelly.—I think the clerk does that.

13954. If you were giving your ponies, would you like to have it calculated on all this soda, and blue, and starch?

Mr. Kelly.—I have never thought of that yet.

13955. Dr. Brogan.—Why do you keep such a large stock of necessities on hand?

Mr. Kelly.—We get in the year's supply of coal in August and September.

13956. CHAIRMAN.—Have you any profit and loss account for the shops?

Mr. Kelly.—The auditor last year charged them altogether. My usual custom was to show what actually was the value of the month's work.

13957. Do you examine carefully the porter's book?—Decidedly.

13958. CHAIRMAN.—The day we went over the shop we did not find all the men in occupation?—The porter was there and the tailor.

13959. No, he attended as afterwards?—Well, if we lunch time; he may have gone out for a second.

13960. Dr. Brogan.—Do they ever have breaks time?—Except with the permission of the Board. They get six days' leave in the year, and can take two days at a time by permission of the Board.

13961. They never stay out half a day?—They generally regulate these—unless it is very important but none—to suit the requirements of the establishment.

13962. Would it not be better to keep a proper time-book?—Really the tradesmen are working from the time they come in until they go home.

13963. CHAIRMAN.—You don't find tradesmen having such kind confidence in their employees; they should keep a time-table?—The time-table is kept in the establishment.

13964. These men are paid by the week?—Yes.

13965. Would it not have been cheaper to pay them a yearly salary when the same men are employed all round?—That would be a matter for the Board.

13966. You don't deduct their wages if sick?—No, the Board give leave. I stand at the gate myself, and we the men coming in every morning, as a rule, unless I am laid up.

13967. Dr. Brogan.—What hours have they?—From a quarter to eight until 6 o'clock in the evening, with the exception of the dinner hour; they have three-quarters of an hour for dinner.

13968. You are aware your expenditure is a great deal higher than in Glin?—I never saw a return from Glin except once, and I noticed the average cost of provisions and necessities was a great deal lower than ours, but we give our children a very generous dietary.

Working boys have meat every day in the work except fraser—a quarter of a pound; they have turnips and vegetables two days in the week, and Irish stew on one day. The boys work from 6 in the morning until 6 at night. They have to go to school from half-past 6 to half-past 7, and they have to work from half-past 7 to half-past 8, cleaning dormitories, and yards, and shops.

12988. CHAIRMAN.—You don't often give them a day in the country?—Since scarlatina broke out the doctor did not allow them out; they generally go out on Sundays, and Thursdays or Tuesdays.

12989. Is it all right now, the scarlatina?—The doctor has not taken the restriction off yet. On Friday evening we give out the clothes for the whole establishment, and Saturday is the play evening for the boys.

The two assistants, the master, and myself, look after the washing of them every morning.

12991. The clothing and beds ought to be in better repair?—We are pressed at the present time with the work from the unions.

12992. Those are only explanations why things are not right. It would be much better to have them right. About how many children have left the institution?

Mr. J. Sheridan.—101 on the boys' side and 79 from the girls.

12993. You don't pay the costs of parents coming to see the children?—No.

Mr. F. J. Sheridan.—They have to pay themselves.

Mr. Kelly.—It is very seldom we have any people coming to see them from Drogheda.

The sitting terminated.

Feb. 16, 1904. TWENTY-NINTH PUBLIC SITTING.—TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 16TH, 1904.

At the Courthouse, Mullingar.

Present:—MR. MICKS (Chairman), and Dr. CONY BROGH.

Mr. N. J. Deane, Solicitor, appeared for the Guardians and District Council of Mullingar.

Mr. Andrew Moore.

Mr. ANDREW MOORE examined.

13974. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the County Council?—Yes, sir.

13975. Did they consider the queries that were issued by this Commission to them?—Yes.

13976. And what was their view as regarded the Co. Westmeath, and what should be done with regard to the amalgamation of unions?—They recommended the Union of Delvin would be closed.

13977. And Athlone and Mullingar should remain?—Should remain.

13978. Devoted to their present purpose, or would they suggest any change?—No; just as they are.

13979. Did they consider whether some classes might with advantage be removed from workhouses and treated elsewhere?—No, that was not raised.

13980. How far is Delvin from Mullingar?—I don't know exactly the distance; about twelve miles, I should say.

Mr. Shaw.—Yes, Irish.

13981. CHAIRMAN.—Is it proposed then that all the Delvin inmates should be moved to Mullingar?—No Mullingar or the surrounding unions, where it would be convenient.

13982. Would there still be left any village or local hospital for treating the sick of that locality?—I am not acquainted personally with the locality of Delvin, and I am not able to answer that.

13983. The County Council did not consider that question as far as you are aware?—They did; but I think the chairman of the Delvin Union will be here to-day.

13984. There was one query—how far, in the case of persons who are not destitute, it would be desirable to introduce a system of payments or contributions in aid of the cost of treatment: was that question considered?—It was not.

13985. Did they express any views about what might be done to mitigate the tramp nuisance?—Yes, they were very warm on that point. The tramp system is a great evil to the ratepayers of this county, and they are chiefly reserve and militiamen who are going about travelling here during the winter.

13986. You find you have a great number of militiamen here as tramps?—Yes. In Athlone, where I come from, that is the gate to the West, and now I might say, on behalf of the Athlone Union, that if this system of training were changed from summer to winter, it would give those tramps an opportunity of getting employment during the summer. It is in the winter time we have these chiefly tramping about.

13987. From a military point of view, that might be an awkward time for manoeuvres?—It might. But if the adjoining counties would close some of their workhouses, that would curtail the tramp system very much.

13988. If you had no half-way house between here and Kells, if you closed Delvin?—Yes; and if Ballymahon was closed they would have to walk to Longford.

13989. That would diminish their comfort, at all events, if it would not lessen the evil?—It would.

13990. Did they consider the question of a convalescent hospital?—No, sir; that was not entertained at all at the meeting.

13991. Did they pass any written resolutions on the matter?—It was a committee appointed to consider the matter, and their report was adopted.

13992. Have you got their report?—Mr. Levinge will get it.

13993. Are you a member of the County Infirmary Committee?—Not now.

13994. You were originally?—I was.

13995. Is there anything that occurs to you personally, or was there any question about the county infirmary at the meeting of the County Council Committee?—No, sir.

13996. It is working smoothly?—It is working very smoothly.

13997. And satisfactorily; there is nothing you wish to suggest about it?—No. I was a member also of the Asylum Board for three years.

13998. That is not within the limits of our inquiry?—No, sir; but my experience there was that these are people in it who might be accommodated in some of these unions if they were closed as unions, such as epileptic and harmless lunatics.

13999. Would you be disposed to make an outlying lunatic asylum of the Delvin Workhouse?—It is very suitable for that purpose.

14000. You have not seen it?—No, sir; but it is a small place not very large.

14001. The state of repair, if you saw it, you might not have a very favourable view of its fitness for any such object?—My reason principally for assuming that point is that the cost of maintaining the Mullingar Asylum is so very great that people could be kept much cheaper.

14002. I believe it is the most expensive asylum in Ireland?—It is one of them.

14003. Now I have here a copy of the resolution passed by the County Council. You propose that Delvin Union should be amalgamated with Mullingar, and three other rural districts, namely, Ballymahon, Coole, and Killebeggan should be changed either to Athlone or Mullingar Unions as most convenient?—Yes, they would meet the want of Delvin Union.

14004. In what union is Ballymahon?—Ballymahon.

14005. You would break up Ballymahon and take the Ballymahon Rural District into Mullingar?—Yes.

14006. Then Coole is part of Granard?—Yes.

14007. And you contemplate the breaking up of the Granard Union and the addition of the Coole district to Mullingar?—Yes.

14008. And Killebeggan, what union is that in?—The town of Tullamore.

14009. Do you contemplate breaking up the Tullamore Union?—I think not.

14010. You propose taking away the Killebeggan district from that?—Yes.

14011. What are your grounds for proposing to take that away?—Well, there is not much of the county in the Tullamore Union, I believe.

14012. Are you influenced by a desire that the county should include all the Poor Law administration within its own bounds?—It would be better to have it that way.

14013. That is the object the County Council had in view?—Yes, they wished to have control over their own affairs.

14014. They wished that there should be no Poor Law body connected with any other county interfering with their county?—No.

14015. You only propose to take as much of the Co. Westmeath as is in the Tullamore Union—the Killebeggan district—and you don't propose to take more of the Granard Union. You only just want to get your own county?—Yes.

14016. Would you take all Delvin that is in the Co. Westmeath?—Yes.

14017. Fines, of course, is in the Coole district?

Mr. Deane.—It is on the very borders of the Coole district.

14018. CHAIRMAN.—From Fines to Castlepollard, is that the Coole district?

Mr. Deane.—Yes.

14019. Is Castlepollard in Mullingar Union?

Mr. Deane.—Delvin; the Coole district just goes to the town of Castlepollard.

14020. How far would it be from Fines to Mullingar, that would be the extreme distance?

Mr. Deane.—It would be fourteen Irish miles.

Feb. 16, 1904.

Mr. Andrew Moore.

14021. And from Clonsilla?

Mr. Deane.—About sixteen.

14022. That would be the extreme length of the new proposed Mullingar Union. There are populous districts, relatively speaking; you have the big villages of Clonsilla and Fines.

Mr. Deane.—Yes; otherwise it is not.

14023. It is a grass country, I know. As an alternative, the County Council suggest—"That the sick and infirm poor in each county belonging to the Unions of Ballymahon, Gennard, and Tullamore be sent there." I don't understand the meaning of that?—The meaning of that is that in case there were people who were very sick and could not be brought on to Mullingar, they could be accommodated there.

14024. That they should be brought to Ballymahon, Gennard, or Tullamore?—Yes, pay for them there.

14025. Did they propose to break up the Ballymahon and Gennard Unions?—I don't think they meant that. They merely propose to take away the part that is in Westmeath. The feeling of the County Council was that the counties that these unions are in might decide to break them up.

14026. They want to make it a comprehensive unit for all local authorities within the county?—Yes.

14027. Then there is no direct expression of opinion from the county that any union should be broken up?—Except Delrin, in our own county; we have only three unions in the county.

14028. As regards an auxiliary asylum, you say you are not in a position to make any suggestion?—Unless one of these three or four workhouses were closed, that one of them could be made use of for epileptics and harmless lunatics.

14029. So as to leave none of that class in the workhouses?—Or in the asylums.

14030. You think they could be kept at a cheaper rate than lunatics are at present kept in the Mullingar Asylum?—I think they could.

14031. In answer to Query 3, you say: "We are of opinion that no children should be kept in workhouse up to fourteen years of age, but should be boarded-out?"—It is a great success in Athlone Union.

14032. I heard of that when visiting Athlone lately. Do you find any difficulty in getting suitable homes for them?—No, sir; the children come in every month for inspection.

14033. Do you think that is a wise thing. I would suggest your considering that, whether it is a wise thing to bring boarded-out children into the workhouse, where they will have an opportunity of feeling their connection with it. I should think one of the great advantages of the boarding-out system is to make children unconnected, and make them forget, if they ever do remember, that they ever had any connection with pauperism or workhouse?—It gives the Board an opportunity.

14034. Yes, but is it not at the risk of making the child always remember that it is a pauper?—They are so very young they would not be able to distinguish.

14035. I am afraid coming into the workhouse for inspection?—I see your point.

14036. I think it is worth considering, really. In some cases children who are boarded-out may come back to the workhouse. We have only heard of a couple of suggestions of such cases, but where that would happen it would be very likely, because they know of the workhouse by going there to be inspected?—They seem very pained coming into the workhouse.

14037. Yes, but afterwards it comes back to them why they came in there. In by far the majority of unions they have given up that plan of inspecting boarded-out children at the workhouse, and instead they have committees to inspect them at their own homes?—We cannot get that. There were ladies invited to form a committee to go around, and they never turned up.

14038. I think if you get not one committee, but if you get a number of small committees—two or three ladies in each locality—get a number of ladies out near Ballymahon, say; let two or three ladies there visit and report from time to time; not have a big union committee, but little separate committees in different unions, and let them report how the children are getting on, and then the inspection is of a sort that can do no harm?—If they fail in turning up there would be no inspection.

14039. I should hope you would get them to meet. The inspection by one Guardian would be as good an inspection as any other. So far back as 1869, I remember the Limerick Board of Guardians used to delegate the duty to one member of the Board to report on the children in the neighborhood, and used to receive his report and deal with it. He went when it was convenient to him; he was not tied to a day or week; just made the inspection of children and reported on them, and there it worked exceedingly well—I am very glad you give me this much information. I will make use of it.

14040. I think you will find really that it is calculated to get out of the children's mind any idea that they are paupers, or any idea that the workhouse is the place they could go back to, which is, I think, the great advantage of the boarding-out system, and I am glad to see your Council has such a strong opinion in favour of it. With regard to the alms-houses, you say: "We suggest that the dietary for this class be of such a nature as will not be any attraction to those people to frequent the unions." That would operate in keeping away these tramps and ins-and-outs. I suppose in towns like Mullingar and Athlone you have people who drop in for a day or two and out again?—Yes.

14041. Would you have many of these in Athlone?—Not very many.

14042. There is a good deal of employment in Athlone?—Very great employment.

14043. You don't suffer from poverty except, I suppose, where a family is drunken, or from want of health?—There is scarcely any poverty. I am a member of the St. Vincent de Paul Society, and there are scarcely any applications.

14044. With regard to Query No. 4, you recommend that the law with regard to out-door relief should remain as it is at present. You don't suggest any change about the area of charge for out-door relief?—No; we approve of the area of charge as it stands at present.

14045. At all events you, as a town Guardian, would approve of that?—Well, I am concerned both ways.

14046. To No. 5 you say: "We consider that there will be sufficient accommodation in Athlone and Mullingar for all the sick." Then, in answer to No. 6, you say: "That after the amalgamation of unions, one closed workhouse should be selected for harmless lunatics; the particular workhouse might be determined by the Local Government Board." No. 7: "Persons not destitute, and able to pay, should be called upon to pay the actual cost of maintenance and treatment." That you have power at present for. The queries we issued were rather with another object. It did not refer to any particular point, because in the case of any person able to pay you have the power to enforce payment by way of loan. The Commission meant, in issuing the query, that the Guardians would, in their discretion, have power to oblige a patient, or his responsible relative, to pay, not the actual cost, but such sum as he might be considered able to pay without hardship. For instance, if a labouring man, earning 12s. or 14s. a week, sent a member of his family in, that member would at all events cost 5s. to 1s. a week to support, and if any extension of the law, such as is indicated, were made, then the Guardians would be able to require that man to pay 6d. or 1s. a week, as they might think fit, and from that small sum, which would be the lowest possible fee I suppose you could agree from that, you might bring it up to the actual cost of maintenance, which might include perhaps payment of an additional nurse, which would make it a very heavy bill, would you, as an old Guardian, approve of giving such a discretion to Boards of Guardians to enable them to recover, if they thought fit, the cost of treatment from everybody using the sick wards of the infirmary, such a sum as might be considered they could pay without hardship?—I would.

14047. Are you aware that such a system has been tried in some parts of Ireland already?—No.

14048. In the north of Ireland, at Benishillen, and again at Lisburn, the county infirmaries there have adopted such a system, and we got evidence that it was wonderful success. They charged very small sums up to the actual cost, and quite a large revenue was brought in, and the system was popular with the people, because instead of coming in as paupers or free patients, they came in paying as much as they could fairly pay?—It is a very good idea.

14049. And it was a very large assistance to the rates?—Something similar to that is practised here in the county infirmary, according to the person's valuation.

14050. If a person who had not land came in, how would they manage then. Suppose a railway official came in—a guard or a porter—how would you fix that?—I think the railway company pay for them, if I don't mistake.

14051. Well, some men who would not be paid for by a company?—They would be all free.

Feb. 16, 1894.

Mr. Andrew
Nicols.

14052. Although they might be able to pay, and perhaps have been willing to pay?—Quite so.

14053. I think we have heard all you had to say about tramps?—There should be some means of making them fellows work.

14054. Would you approve of having for all able-bodied people one workshop in some central position, with land attached to it or workshops attached to it, where they would be put under proper supervision at really hard work, so that in the ordinary institutions in the country you would not find any able-bodied at all; that they would be all drafted to the central institution, very much on the present lines, where they would be detained and obliged to work. I am not now speaking of cases of deserving poverty, but cases of thriftless and idle, vagabonds and tramps. Would you be in favour of such an institution as that if it did not add to the rates?—I would, but I don't see how it could be worked, because those fellows, if they saw they were going to be drafted off to a workshop, would take their discharge.

14055. But if the law were amended, giving the Guardians, or whatever the working body would be, giving them power to detain them. You are aware from your long acquaintance with the Poor Law that these people are very often attended by their families?—I know they are.

14056. In one union we happened to meet four generations of the same family in receipt of relief?—They claim the house as being their own.

14057. Would you be in favour of an amendment of the law enabling you to take the children from these people, and either board them out or deal with them putting the Guardians in loco parentis?—I would indeed.

14058. It might be a little expense at first?—But it will save the children.

MR. NICHOLAS McNABES EXAMINED.

Mr. Nicholas
McNabes.

I am from the County Council, and I am also Chairman of the Board of Guardians, so I am in a rather awkward position. The County Council are in favour of amalgamation and the Board of Guardians are opposed.

14070. The Mullingar Board of Guardians are opposed to amalgamation as far as their own union is concerned?—Yes.

14071. Would they be opposed to take in Delvin and parts of others?—They think Delvin can be worked much cheaper at Delvin.

14072. So they are opposed in fact to amalgamation?—Yes.

14073. And you were one of the minority at the County Council?—Yes.

14074. Then we would be very glad to hear your views as representative of the minority?—We have not proper means of conveying papers from Delvin Union to Mullingar—it would mean a lot of extra cost—and I think they can be managed much cheaper at Delvin, and doing away with Delvin, you would have no union within twelve miles; the nearest would be Kells.

14075. If Kells were broken up?—Then you would have Leamford and Oldcastle.

14076. Did you make any financial estimate or calculation in support of your view that amalgamation would not be an economy?—Yes.

14077. Have you got your figures with you?—I remember them.

14078. What was your calculation?—That is for the maintenance of paupers in the different unions.

14079. You come to the opinion that it would not be an economy to the rates to break up Delvin?—Yes.

14080. On what financial ground did you come to that conclusion?—The Poor Law rate in Delvin is only about half what it is in Mullingar. They are able to maintain them much cheaper in Delvin than in Mullingar. I mean Poor Law. I am not referring, of course, to the District Council.

14081. Oh, quite so, Poor Law altogether?—It does not follow in the case of amalgamation of unions that the District Council would also be amalgamated.

14082. Certainly not; we have nothing to do with that?—Then it would be altogether against the interest of Mullingar that we would amalgamate with Delvin—the District Council—but the unions could be worked much cheaper in Delvin; in fact at half the cost.

14083. Taking that a little further—this is now an argument about Westmeath—would not your argument apply to every county in Ireland, and is not your opinion, if you follow it up, is it not virtually an ex-

14059. And stop a continuation of the system?—It would.

14060. Dr. Baugher.—You mentioned about the county infirmary—about the qualification for admission there. What did you mean by a land qualification?—To make it cheapen according to their position, which was determined by their valuation.

14061. How was that determined?—So much per week, according to the valuation.

14062. Does that work at all satisfactorily?—I am not in a position to say. I am out of office for the last twelve months. I was in it for three years.

14063. You were on the County Infirmary Board before that?—No; only since this Local Government Board Act came into operation.

14064. You would be aware if it did not work satisfactorily?

Mr. Baugher.—There is a member here. Witness.—I was three years in the asylum, so I am a harden lunatic now.

14065. Dr. Baugher.—The County Council, you have answered, did not consider the question of a county infirmary?—That was not entertained by them at all, but in connection with the Athlone Board of Guardians, I say now that it would be a very useful thing to have in the county.

14066. Your own idea would be that it would be a very good and proper thing to do?—Yes.

14067. Are you aware that Dr. Shanley is in favour of it?—I did not hear him express it. The Guardians of Athlone did not discuss the question at all.

14068. But have you heard any expressions outside the Board?—The feeling of the Board of Guardians at Athlone is that amalgamation would be useful.

14069. But as far as the treatment of consumption?—I have not had any opinion upon that.

provision of opinion that there is no saving in any question of proposed amalgamation?—It is according to how the unions are situated.

14084. There are 150 odd unions at present. Supposing fifty or seventy of these were broken up, say you not see that the country at large would probably be a saving?—I would want to know how they were valued at present.

14085. Certainly, but if you saw that a large number of staffs and officers would disappear—the salary of the clerk of the union would vanish, subject to a life interest; the payment of a pension; and the salaries of the masters, matrons, and minor officials would vanish. Yes, but it would take some time.

14086. Coal and fuel, and various other expenses for keeping up the light and heat of the house, would go, you would also have the upkeep of this house coming to be a Poor Law expenditure. You can see that if you halve the number of houses in Ireland there would be, at first sight, a very large saving in it; but when you come to apply that from the general idea to the Co. Westmeath, then you say if you take one of the three workhouses away, that is if you take 50 out of 150, you would have no economy, you say?—Yes, reducing to Delvin, I mean.

14087. Is that because they have such an abnormally low rate?—Yes, and the extra cost it would mean to Mullingar conveying paupers to that district.

14088. Do you think the same ambulance would not be available?—Certainly not, because the union is very large at present.

14089. Did you get any statistics as to the number of trips the ambulance makes in a day, or week, or year?—No; I don't know what is the exact number.

14090. Are you aware that there are unions a great deal larger than the proposed Mullingar Union that are worked with only one ambulance. It is a fact, I may tell you?—Perhaps there are not so many people in them.

14091. You are supposed to be a very thinly-populated country here?—Yes, but there are a great number in the union always—about 300.

14092. I think there would be as much in some of the parishes in the West as there would be in Mullingar?—It is the big gross lands that are pushing them all into the union.

14093. You have not gone into it on a close pound, shillings, and pence calculation. You have only an impression that the rates are so low in Delvin that to scheme that you have in view would effect a saving. Is that your view?—Yes; and I don't think we would have sufficient accommodation at present in Mullingar for the inmates we would take from Delvin Union without going to a lot of further cost.

-Feb. 16, 1884

Mr. Nicholas

14098. Are you aware how many sick you have one time with another in the workhouse, including both fever hospital and ordinary infirmary?—The clerk is present, and can tell you.

14099. I may tell you, you may take 90 a fairly high figure, including both fever hospital and infirmary; then you would have just double of that, 180, and again 180—There is not accommodation for that number, or over 84.

14100. You are building for them?—The buildings are finished, and the present accommodation is for about sixty, not more.

14101. You have got twenty-nine children?—Thirty.

14102. And you have got very few—only ten inmates and epileptics?—Yes.

14104. We had a suggestion that I will go into later on with you about that. Then a large number of aged and infirm. You are very much overcrowded in Mullingar with those, and you would not have room for them, unless getting rid of those classes would give it to you; but if Mullingar was made a county alms-house, Mullingar Workhouse, outside the hospital, if that were made a county alms-house, and if you had only two classes of paupers in the Mullingar Union, if one part of it was an hospital for the sick, and if the other part was what we might call an alms-house for the aged and infirm, do you see any advantage or disadvantage in that idea?—I still think the union would be too large; you could not have proper means to convey the sick people.

14105. This would be even worse from your point of view, because it would be proposed to take into the Mullingar Workhouse, or Alms-house, or wherever it might be, it would propose to take in from the county all the aged and infirm. Do you know what number that would be?—I know the different districts, but I don't know the number it would mean. It would be Killebeggan, Ballymore, and Cool.

14106. You may take it that there are aged and infirm in the county, 120; there would be no difficulty whatever in your comfortably disposing of those 120 aged and infirm, in addition to the sick, at Mullingar if the whole workhouse was at their disposal?—No; we would have sufficient accommodation for up to 300 or 350.

14107. Take the number I have in this return, which was made in mid-winter and must be pretty nearly the height. You had in Mullingar 145, in Ashboro 120, and in Delvin only seven, the reason being that Delvin had very few inmates, and most of them were up in the sick ward?—You should count in portion of the Tallisore Union, Killebeggan, Ballymore also, and Cool.

14108. Even taking 400 or 500 as a possible number, would you not still have enough room?—Not for 500.

14109. But with no other class?—I don't think we would be able to accommodate more than 400.

14110. Well, 400 is more than you would have to accommodate, but even if you were pinched to it, would you not have room for more than that?—Yes.

14111. So that this workhouse of Mullingar would be sufficient for the aged and infirm of the county and the sick of its own neighbourhood?—In a case of emergency up to 500, whether the doctor would recommend that or not.

14112. If you had only one class in the workhouse, would it not be possible to sub-divide these according to their respectability and character, and you would have some wards for people of good character, and you would be able to have some wards divided into cubicles for old married couples?—It would be a great advantage, too, having 400 or 500. I don't think you would have sufficient accommodation to classify them that way.

14113. You could classify them according to character; at all events, if any old couples did wish to be together that might lead to some little structural alterations?—Yes, you could not accommodate the same number in that case.

14114. But you could classify them according to character, roughly. People of decent, well-behaved inmates could be separated from many, turbulent, troublesome people?—Yes, but you would want to do away with the stamp inmates altogether.

14115. The tramp would be excluded; he would be looked after in one central institution for each province of Ireland, or something of that sort; he would be taken possession of and put there?—If all you suggest was carried out, I would not be opposed to amalgamation, and I am sure the Board of Guardians would not.

14116. Always providing that there would be no additional expenditure?—Yes.

14117. That is a view we have heard. We are bearing that in mind. We consider that the origin of this Commission was a desire to reduce taxation, if possible, without impairing efficiency?—That is our motive also.

14118. But we should be sorry to suggest anything that would not be an economy, so that if that scheme could be carried out, and at the same time economy preserved, would you approve of it?—Yes.

14119. We were speaking just now of girls coming into workhouse to have illegitimate children. We received a good deal of evidence about that, in large towns, such as Dublin, Belfast, and elsewhere, and the suggestion that were put before us were somewhat to this effect, that girls who were about to have illegitimate children, their present course of action is to come into the workhouse some few months before their confinement, when they can no longer remain outside without observation. They come into the workhouse, and for three or four months before their confinement they are associated with rather a depraved class, and owing to workhouse classification, it is really impossible to keep them apart; you know that as a Guardian?—Yes.

14120. Then it was suggested to us that in future workhouses should not be open to that class, that they should be sent at the expense of the rates—nothing very much in excess of the present expenditure—that they should be sent to a penitentiary. There are various penitentiaries conducted on religious principles by different religious bodies, and that these girls should be sent to these institutions, when they would remain prior to their confinement. That either there should be, as in some, lying-in wards attached to the institution, or, in others, that they should go to lying-in hospitals outside and come back to the penitentiary; and the object of these institutions should be to reclaim these girls and start them on life, and provide with produce for the child, requiring the girl to contribute to its support, and to try to prevent the poor girl from falling again, as they so often do now?—And keep the child out of the workhouse?

14121. The child would never be in the workhouse. It would only be until it reached the age that it could eat what was going in this institution, and then it would be boarded-out?—I think that would be a splendid arrangement. It is very defective at present in the workhouse. You have girls of the class who fall once mixing with bad classes.

14122. We have seen them coming back with five or six children?—The accommodation they get in the workhouse the first time they are in does not tend to bring them back again.

14123. There are obvious objections to it?—It would make it more known.

14124. No; make it less known. They would be out of their own neighbourhood, and it would make it comparatively easy for a girl to get rid of her child. But the evidence we have got is that a girl gets her first child without any thought of the child, and it really would not operate as an immoral incentive, the fact that another girl was able to start again fresh and get rid of her child?—It would be a great improvement on the present system.

14125. The present system is bad?—Very bad.

14126. Did it occur to you when you expressed an opinion against amalgamation strongly, that it would cause great hardship to the sick if they were obliged to travel long distances?—That is one of my principal reasons.

14127. The hardship that would be inflicted by closing Delvin and obliging the Delvin sick to come very long distances, as from Clonsilla, we will say, eighteen Irish miles, into Mullingar; that would be a hardship?—Yes; and then in case of an urgent call, the van going from Mullingar would be a long time going twenty-five miles and back.

14128. I think the Commissioners here would be all disposed to acknowledge the weight of that objection, and they have received, very generally, suggestions that even if a workhouse was broken up, some small hospital provision should be made in the centre where the workhouse is for dealing with the sick, for treating the sick, that the sick should never be obliged to go further than they do at present?—It would be very necessary, if a workhouse was broken up, to have something of the kind.

14126. You would have a little hospital, with a nurse or two nurses, and the doctor of the locality, and the chaplain of the locality; that would be just the expense you would have there; the great objection you had to it would then disappear. I suppose you would be rather afraid that leaving the hospital there might take away the economy of closing the workhouse?—It would mean a staff there.

14127. It would mean a small staff. You would still get rid of the master and matron, subject to those pension rights?—If all the suggestions you mentioned a few months ago were carried out, I would be in favour of amalgamation, and I am sure all the Guardians would be, too.

14128. But when you gave an opinion against it, you were rather affected?—By the long distance.

14129. By the idea that if Delvin was broken up there would be nothing to take its place, and it would be incorporated in the large Union of Mullingar?—Yes, and would overcrowd the Mullingar Union.

14130. Dr. BROOKE.—One of your reasons against amalgamation was on account of the difference of the rates?—It is one of the reasons. I have several reasons.

14131. Is what you did you make that out?—Because the cost of maintenance in Delvin is much less than in Mullingar Union. And I think small unions can be worked on a cheaper scale than a large one like Mullingar, and that Delvin can work its union much cheaper than we can work it on their behalf here.

14132. That is not a generally accepted view?—That is one of my reasons.

14133. For instance, now, if you have a small institution with a fixed number of staff, master, matron, porter, clerk, and schoolmaster, the salaries of these officers, and rations, and so forth, divided amongst a few inmates, would run up the average cost greatly?—Not having sufficient accommodation in Mullingar, it would mean a lot of extra cost being put in here.

14134. Do you see what I mean?—I understand what you mean.

14135. Did you get what it cost to keep the union in Delvin?—Yes.

14136. The food and clothing in Delvin, according to the report of the Local Government Board, is 4s. 7½d. and in Mullingar 5s. 5½d.; then, when you take the case of the officers, I take it it would be much higher per inmate in Delvin than in Mullingar, because the proportion of staff is much higher in Delvin in proportion to the number than it is in Mullingar. The small applies to all the small unions?—Yes, we have not so large a staff in Delvin as in Mullingar; we have a staff only in proportion.

14137. CHAIRMAN.—Rather out of proportion, you have more in Delvin than in Mullingar in bare numerical proportion?—I cannot account for it then unless it is better management in the Delvin Union.

14138. CHAIRMAN.—I don't think you may rely on that supposition. You may congratulate yourself that Mullingar stands a long way first.

Dr. BROOKE.—What other reason have you against amalgamation?—The inconvenience attend.

14139. CHAIRMAN.—The only figures you took were the cost of food and clothing?—That is all.

14140. You did not look at the total cost of the union and divide that by the number of paupers?—I did not.

14141. That would be, of course, the proper test?—No; but the paupers coming here would be put on the same rate as the paupers in Mullingar are getting.

14142. Dr. BROOKE.—Would it not reduce Mullingar, because you would not increase the staff in the same proportion as the number of extra inmates you might receive?—It was the other way I looked at it—that each patient coming from Delvin would in a short time be costing the same as the patients at present in Mullingar.

14143. Then, again, there would be a saving at Delvin, and Mullingar would get its proportion of that if it were one rate for the combined unions?—Not interfering with the District Council, Mullingar should not stand in loss or gain by Delvin so much.

14144. CHAIRMAN.—But you dislike the idea of any possible amalgamation of districts as opposed to unions?—Yes.

14145. Dr. BROOKE.—How far did that influence you in going against the amalgamation. Was it really on that ground?—Yes, until I heard it from this gentleman here, that the District Council would not follow the amalgamation of unions; of course it had a powerful influence against amalgamation.

14146. CHAIRMAN.—As I have said, we have nothing to do with that here. Our authority is only to inquire into Poor Law arrangements. We have no power to inquire into road expenditure, or anything of that sort?—Then it is possible for the district to follow.

14147. Dr. BROOKE.—What I wanted to know was, how far that influenced you in your idea against the amalgamation of workhouses?—It was a very strong factor.

14148. CHAIRMAN.—What is the secret of your objection. Is there a heavy expenditure in Delvin for such?—Yes; and they have borrowed a great lot of money in proportion to their valuation.

14149. Labourers' cottages?—Yes, and other public works.

14150. Dr. BROOKE.—You don't want to be an asset to liquidate their debt?—No.

14151. The Mullingar Guardians did not take into consideration the advisability of a sanatorium treatment for consumptives?—No, I don't think so.

14152. You have a great many consumptives in this district?—Yes, a good number.

14153. And of course you are aware that it is an infectious disease?—Yes.

14154. Still the Guardians have not made any arrangements?—No; they made no suggestions with regard to that.

14155. They made some little alterations in the infirmary?—I have often heard suggestions outside the Guardians for a central place for all Ireland.

14156. Would it not be better for a county, or a combination of counties?—Yes; to be worked in the same way as the asylum is worked, it might be better, but not at such an expensive scale.

CHAIRMAN.—A consumptive patient costs a great deal; no matter where they are, the dietary has to be very good.

14157. Dr. BROOKE.—But it might also tend to reduce the disease itself, which would be true economy, wipe it out. If the same care was taken with consumption in human beings as is done with diseases in animals; they can stamp out diseases in animals with precautions. However, you think it would be a desirable thing to have a consumptive sanatorium?—I think it would.

14158. And you think the Guardians should join in such a scheme?—I am certain they would.

14159. CHAIRMAN.—You have had experience of the boarding-out of children here?—Yes.

14160. How is it working in your union?—I don't think the children are given to the proper people. We don't receive applications from the proper people. It is generally from the labouring class, where they have no cost. And then going out of the union we always give an order for clothes; after that they get no clothes from the Guardians. I think it would be very desirable in the winter months for the children to come to the union, or some place outside, and get a suit of clothes, say £1, and in the summer months get half that amount, because the people who get the children are not able to support them on £7 a year. They are not able to buy boots. The children are good enough for the first six months, but after that they are in a terrible state.

14161. Then the practice of your Board of Guardians is to give them a suit of clothes going out, and after that not give any clothes, but let the people buy them out of the £7?—Yes. It is 1s. 2d. a month, and it is not sufficient to buy clothes.

14162. You would be in favour of the Guardians in some way supplying clothes?—Yes.

14163. And over and above the clothing to give them so much for the keep?—To give them the same allowance as at present, and 30s. a year, £1 in winter, and 20s. in summer for clothes; and another matter, the Guardians have not proper control over the children. There are twenty-nine children at present in Mullingar Union, and the parents will object to these children being boarded out. I think it would be a very advisable thing if the law was amended in such a way that the Guardians would have complete control over every person to whom they give relief.

14164. That they would have discretionary power. In some cases it would be, of course, intolerable and harsh to take away a child from a person who, owing to a series of misfortunes, became a pauper for a time?—Every case to be considered on its own merits.

14165. If you gave such power to the Board of Guardians, what appeal would you allow from that decision in the case of a parent objecting?—I don't know what objection to offer in answer to that.

14156. Would it be a reasonable thing to allow them to appeal to magistrates at Petty Sessions?—I don't know. I could not give any opinion about that, but I know the Guardians have not power enough over the children.

14157. At all events it would hardly do that the power to take away children from parents should be given to a board sitting in a non-judicial capacity—that they should be able to separate fathers and mothers from their children without some appeal to a court of law. Do you see the force of that?—I do.

14158. You and I know how Boards of Guardians work. They have a great deal of business to do, and cannot afford to spend time over the case of a child—to think it out thoroughly; they would, like sensible men, come to a conclusion in a short time on the rough facts of the case, but then it would hardly do to let such a decision separate fathers and mothers from their children—I think it would be hard in some cases, but without any reason they object very often in the union, where they are remaining in the union themselves.

14159. You would propose that a discretion should be left to the Guardians to pass a resolution, as they are in some places already, placing the Board of Guardians in loco parentis, and that they would then be able to board out children or deal with them as they thought fit. The only thing I was suggesting was that it might be fair to have an appeal for a parent objecting?—It would be only fair to the parent.

14160. Then all your suggestions about out-door relief are rather with a view to amending the present system. You don't object to the system, but merely like to improve it?—Yes.

Rev. HILL WILSON WHITE, B.D., LL.D., examined.

I am a resident of the Mullingar Union, but it is not proper of the union inquiry so much I have come to you to-day as a representative of the County Infirmary. The Board asked Mr. Nooney and me if we would come and represent the infirmary, and give our opinion about certain matters. What I was most anxious to speak about was the advisability of keeping our county infirmary intact, and that in any arrangement or re-arrangement that might possibly be made of infirmaries in the country, that no interference should be made which should wipe out our county infirmary, a place where a number of respectable poor people are quite willing to go when they are sick, who would shrink from going to the union hospital. Members of the better class receive great kindness and attention in every way in our county infirmary, and many of these I think would die in their houses if the alternative was being sent to the union workhouse.

14171. CHAIRMAN.—Of course there are a great number of cases who would be operated on by up-to-date methods in your county infirmary who could not be so dealt with?—Could not be so dealt with in an ordinary union hospital.

14172. Your argument would not be merely the maintenance of the institution was useful, but that it was one which, on account of its efficiency, should be recognized as a county centre for operations and for the treatment of the very poorest?—For the very poorest, where we would have the best surgical appliances.

14173. You have got a good operating-room?—First-rate; a very clever surgeon, and a first-rate staff.

14174. A beautiful ward; we went through the institution and were greatly pleased with it?—I would draw attention to the great economy with which our county infirmary in Westmeath is worked. It is worked on the very cheapest lines, consistent with efficiency; there is no waste-fulness of any sort.

14175. Do you find it hard to meet your out-goings and pay your way?—I think we pay our way remarkably well.

14176. Without any undue straggling or cutting down; you have not to deny your sick?—Nothing is more generous than the dietary which all our patients get.

14177. And the doctors and nurses are satisfied with the arrangements for treating the sick?—Perfectly satisfied. The only case where we have dissatisfaction is the treatment of consumptive cases, and for the last four or five years I have been personally agitating to have these cases isolated from the ordinary hospital cases. I think it unfair to bring consumptive cases into a ward—a criminal thing, spreading infection—what modern science has pointed out that consumption is one of the most infectious diseases, and the result of that agitation has been the reconstruction of the wards you may have seen the other day. We have had these wards properly boarded, and to a certain extent made suitable for these cases, but our great anxiety is for the erection of out-door shelters, and if anything could be done to modify the Act under which the county infirmaries are worked. At present no mounds can be erected on any external structure improvements; the house can be kept in repair, but no new building can be erected, and so if we want to have these out-door shelters they can only be erected by appealing to the public at large, and erecting them by public subscription. We have collected £12 towards this. I was greatly disappointed. I had an idea that when an appeal was made for a purpose of this sort there would have been a generous response to it.

14178. This Commission may have stopped the flow of money for this purpose, for it is generally recognized that an establishment for the treatment of consumption is one of the matters on which we are to report?—I am very glad to hear that.

14179. Would you be in favour of treating consumption in your county infirmary in no other way except just merely as filling up the gap?—Scarcely not; in the possibility of this sanction being erected, it would be far better to treat them in that way; but then a large proportion of the cases that come to our infirmary are really tuberculous cases. I would fancy 70 per cent., at a low average, are from tuberculous. I have been a governor of the infirmary for twenty-five years, and before that for a number of years governor of the infirmary in Navan, and I have taken a great interest in the care of the sick in this way during all those years, and it has been a sad thing to see consumptive patients put into beds next the others, who perhaps might be confined there for months with a broken leg, and all that time inhaling the consumptive infection. Then I was anxious also to draw attention to the fact that of later years shop assistants and domestic servants are charged a small sum for their treatment in the county infirmary, and if any suggestion could be made by your Commission as to how we could extend that system of the reception of paying patients.

14180. You think you have not sufficient power to do a good deal yourself that way?—We have not sufficient power.

14181. I would recommend you to communicate with the committees of Fermagh and Antrim at Baniskillen and Lougharn. You will be astonished to find how much they are doing without having any more powers?—We have passed general resolutions. But there is no sanction behind our law. We have no power to enforce it. It is a broken falcon. We say we will charge any person who Poor Law valuation is over £20 a year. We furnish the bill, but we have no power to recover.

14183. We have had very good evidence to that effect from witnesses, pointing out the double advantage. People feel more independent, and they like it better. They could not, of course, pay 10s. or 15s.; but there are plenty who can pay a small thing?—And there are people who can pay 10s. and 15s. willingly. We have had cases of gardeners connected with the bank in Mullingar who were treated in the infirmary; it was impossible for them to pay anything.

14184. But they got free treatment?—Absolutely free. In some instances they made a donation to the infirmary on going away, but that was not exactly business, and there have been many cases in the county in my experience of well-to-do people getting necessary treatment in the infirmary from whom we could exact no charge.

Feb 19, 1904.

Mr. Nicholas
McNabes.

Rev. Hill
Wilson White

Feb. 16, 1906.

Rev. Mr.
Wilson White.

14183. How far do you live from any hospital?—Seven miles from Mullingar. I live at Wilson's Hospital, Mullingarham. One of the witnesses was speaking of ambulance accommodation in the county. There is a very admirable ambulance in connection with our workhouse here. I have had to use it several times in connection with sending patients to the fever hospital, and nothing could exceed the kindness in the fever hospital to the patients sent in there. I think it is better the public should know that, because in numbers of instances scarlatina patients are kept at home, people dreading to send them to the fever hospital, and if they knew the kindness in the fever hospital, and the comfort of the ambulance, and the attention the nurses pay to the patients coming in, more people would take advantage of it. I think there would be no risk, and cases would be selected at once.

14184. Dr. Broome.—How does the method of charging according to the rateable value work?—I think it works very badly; we get very little money.

14187. Does it exclude a large number of those who could pay, and would pay, and would wish to pay, which you cannot charge at present?—It excludes nobody; it is a brasserie between absolutely.

14188. You say it is not a good system. It is not on a good basis. The valuation of the person's property might be one thing, but they might not own the property.—That has been pointed out in many instances. A man with a large valuation might have a large family and be a poor man.

14189. CHAIRMAN.—A case for discretion?—Yes; but there should be some law behind to enable the payment to be enforced in cases where it would be equitable.

14190. Dr. Broome.—You say you cannot spend any money out of your grants for improvements?—That has been laid down as the law to us.

14191. Can you not build an annex?—Yes, we have built sanitary annexes within the last few years; that was simply for bath-room and water-closet accommodation.

14192. CHAIRMAN.—How did the Longford people manage to spend £1,200 or £1,300 on a new wing?—We would be very anxious to know. We were told distinctly that we could not build this shelter for consumptives.

14193. And the Co. Tyrone, 2000 or £1,200 for their infirmary?—Was that from the rates or public subscription?

14194. Partly from both?—Eighty some years ago built a splendid new ward, but that was out of Mr. Wynne's bounty; he gave the money for it.

14195. There are ways of managing these things, but you would like to have it put clearly?—Put perfectly clearly, that we would know where we would be.

14196. Dr. Broome.—You would not suggest that the treatment of consumptives should be in connection with the county infirmary?—I should do so if no other provision was made.

14197. You have not sufficient ground there?—I think so. I was sometimes ago at a consumptive sanatorium near Rossmore, and it struck me we were very much better off in the county infirmary at Westmeath. We could have a better place here. It is all surrounded with trees, and it struck me we had a far sunnier and more open place.

14198. That place is sheltered with very good walls and plenty of ground round it?—We have a great freedom from trees at the infirmary.

14199. What acreage have you?—I cannot tell you. I suppose 1 acre or 1½ acres. It is not an ideal place. But my idea was to have isolation for the present between tuberculosis cases and non-tuberculosis cases.

14200. CHAIRMAN.—It would be certainly better to have them locked after three than nowhere?—It is on the principle of half a loaf.

14201. Dr. Broome.—In any case you would propose that the treatment of consumptives should be a county charge?—Certainly.

14202. The same way as the county infirmary?—Certainly.

14203. CHAIRMAN.—I don't know whether you look into these financial matters very closely, but on the question of the sick, all over the county we have received suggestions, in some cases, that the maintenance of the sick should be a county charge. One argument in favour of that was that all the people pay for the county infirmary, but only a comparatively small number of the infirm get the full benefit of it?—We have patients from Meath and Athlone.

14204. But most of your patients are from a small radius?—Yes, about ten miles.

14205. But the people at Fines or Athlone will say:—We are paying for a hospital at Athlone and for a hospital at Granard, and if we are paying for a county institution, we think all the local institutions might be county charges, too?—That is local Poor Law salaries?

14206. Yes?—But are they not county institutions to a large extent?

14207. Yes, but they are defrayed out of local rates, not out of the county?—A certain amount of our income at the county infirmary comes from subscriptions.

14208. It is very little since the Act of 1868?—Yes, we have now only seventeen subscribers; we had a large number before, but we have a large number of life members.

14209. Did any one pay a life subscription since the Act?—Yes, Lord Castlemaine, in 1899; we have had five annual subscribers who have come in since; a great number of our annual subscribers fell off.

14210. How much do you get from voluntary sources?—£65 14s. was what we got last year, but then we have the interest on the life subscriptions, which comes to over £70 a year.

14211. You would pay a name out of that about?—Yes.

14212. Practically you get very little voluntarily; it is not anything special here; it is the usual thing?—I think we have more subscribers here than in many places.

14213. Dr. Broome.—What do your patients cost per year?—About £31 5s. 0½d.

14214. Per occupied bed, it is very low?—Yes; the daily average cost of patients is 2s. 6d., and that is including establishment charges.

14215. That does not work out £31?—I am reading our last audited account.

14216. 2s. 6d. a day is very nearly £1 a week?—The daily average cost per patient, including establishment charges, 2s. 6d.

14217. Then the yearly cost per patient must be nearly £50?—Here in the return (produced). I will for granted the figures are right.

14218. It is the average cost per bed per annum; it is not per occupied bed?—For the future I shall draw the registrar's attention to that, because it is misleading.

14219. How many beds in the institution?—Number of beds maintained, thirty. Our average number of patients during the year was 135.

14220. CHAIRMAN.—Do you treat typhoid?—We do; we have had three cases during the last month, we have two cases now. That is the only fever we have. There another species of disease that I mentioned for years against its being admitted into the county infirmary, and that was diphtheria. It is extremely unfair that a patient in the hospital, as we commonly call it, should be brought into the county infirmary to the disturbance of respectable patients. It is too small an institution. If a man is in delirious frames he should go to the workhouse or to jail.

MR. MARK MURRAY EXAMINED.

Mr. Mark Murray.

14221. CHAIRMAN.—You see Chairman of the Dublin Board of Guardians?—No, of the District Council.

14222. I think the union and the rural district come to the same conclusion on the question of amalgamation?—Yes.

14223. What is your view?—That the workhouse be retained, provided that the union be enlarged.

14224. What enlargement would you suggest?—The Coole district.

14225. Grenard does not want to be broken up?—That is more than I can say.

14226. You think you can take in some of the Coole district. How far would they be from you?—Castlepollard is seven miles, and they would be ten.

14227. Would the most distant point be Fines?—Yes. Delvin goes to Fines Bridge ten miles.

14228. How far is it from Castlepollard to Delvin?—Seven. I never looked over the distance.

14229. Castlepollard to Fines is almost eight English, so sixteen or seventeen miles state is the distance?—If Delvin were amalgamated, how would you manage Free East and Free West.

Feb 16, 1904.

Mr. Mark
Murray.

14230. Supposing a hospital was left for the sick at Delvin—I would imagine that one workhouse is enough in the county. If Delvin was made the county workhouse, and abolished Mullingar and Athlone; it is more rural; it is too much congested about Athlone and Mullingar for a workhouse at all, and it is too near a resort for the tramps.

14231. You would make them go a little bit out of the way?—Yes.

14232. Would you take in anything else but Athlone and Mullingar. Would you take in Tallagore, the Kilbeggar part; take in the whole county?—I think with the service and locomotion in the near future it will be very easy to fit it.

14233. Motors?—Motors. We are getting a new railway from Mullingar direct. If you had a motor service one county workhouse would be sufficient.

14234. Would you think that it ought to be within a couple of miles of the end of the county. How far are you from the county bounds of Meath—two miles?—Far more.

14235. Dr. Baggot?—3 or 3½ miles; certainly not more!—Only union goes very near to Oldcastle.

14236. CHAIRMAN.—I am taking the nearest point?—It is very near Trim and not so far from Oldcastle; but then I am looking at the locomotion generally. Mullingar and Athlone are two very congested areas, in my opinion, and Delvin would be more rural to have a county workhouse in, that there can be a service from Oule or Castlepollard, a motor service.

14237. Is there any other suggestion you have?—In one the workhouse is abolished it should be turned into an infirmary asylum. That is the opinion of both the Commissioners and the Guardians.

14238. If it were abolished would you leave any provision in Delvin for the sick?—Oh, yes; have a hospital in it, for which a nurse and the medical officer of the district would suffice.

14239. It is very moderate, but it is not in tune with your first idea?—We are out of the first and into the second now.

14240. Query No. 3?—That an old-age pension scheme, on the lines of the Continental system, be passed by the Government.

14241. Can you refer me to any Continental system?—There are several you could refer to.

14242. Had you any scheme before you when you passed this resolution?—Yes, there was; I demonstrated it; it was mentioned. There is a witness here that will give the reference, Mr. Sutton.

14243. No. 3 was as an alternative to out-door relief?—Yes; for instance, England has an old-age pension.

14244. Are you thinking of possibilities or facts?—Facts.

14245. Is there an old-age pension scheme in England?—It is in Lancashire. I don't know about all England.

14246. What evidence have you of the existence of that scheme?—I have been an eye-witness to it myself.

14247. You know a person that is drawing money out of it?—Yes.

14248. How much did they get?—I did not take down what they were getting, but I know it is a common system to go on Sundays to the different churches to get assistance for those persons from the workhouses, and to apply to the workhouses then, if deserving, for 10s., 7s., or 5s.

14249. You would like Delvin to have the same advantages?—I would not expect Delvin to be exceptional to other parts of Ireland.

14250. No. 4?—We consider divisional rating, if reported to, would be more satisfactory than union rating, particularly in connection with out-door relief, as it would make each Guardian more vigilant to see there was no abuse, and we consider poverty, not destitution, should be the test for the granting of out-door relief. We consider also the decent poor should be kept apart from the vicious, and old married couples should be allowed to end their old days together.

14251. As regards the area of charge for out-door relief, how does the present system work. Do you think there is any extra generosity in cases under the present system?—I have been a Guardian these twenty years myself.

14252. You had, up to the year 1896, divisional rating; after that you had the union as the area of charge?—Yes.

14253. Do you prefer the old area of charge to the new?—Yes, I do.

14254. Now, why?—When a case turns up it does not interest the particular Guardians, and if it is not deserving it passes; nobody looks after it.

14255. A Guardian brings forward an applicant for relief?—Through the relieving officer.

14256. An application for relief is brought forward, and then you say that no one says anything against it, and it goes through?—Yes.

14257. Is that because it comes off a large area of taxation?—I believe so.

14258. Have you opinion that if a small area had to pay for it, the question of whether or not relief should be given would be left largely to the vote of the representatives of that district, and they would be very careful not to put too big a burden on their ratepayers?—Yes, or give it only to deserving people.

14259. Have you known any getting it who were not what you would call deserving?—I have, indeed.

14260. Under what circumstances—what class of undeserving people have you known to get it?—It occurred on several occasions when I would be administering it. I could not know, but I heard of it afterwards, where people did get relief and were getting relief, and drank it.

14261. Then you would get them knocked off?—Quite so.

14262. But they would have a pull out of it before they get knocked off?—They would.

14263. Do you think the same difficulty would not arise if the electoral divisions were the area of charge?—I believe myself that if a Guardian saw this system going on it would be questioned at the next Board meeting, but when it is union rating, why, nobody is interested. It has a tendency to become relaxed.

14264. What is everybody's business is nobody's business, and you think having it on the big area makes more get it?—I have found out myself that relief has increased since it has been administered in that way.

14265. Obviously you don't object to out-door relief, because you suggest an enlargement of the qualification?—I quite agree with out-door relief, only not to abuse it.

14266. And the chief safeguard you can suggest is that of narrowing down the area of charge so as to make people look closely into it?—Yes.

14267. We have received the same suggestions from all parts of the country. Now, No. 5?—That the hospital be detached and isolated from the workhouse proper as much as possible.

14268. And approached by a private entrance; that would be necessary if we shut up the workhouse?—Yes.

14269. Do you think that would be a good way of carrying out your recommendation, No. 5, to close the workhouse?—I have not a bit of objection to have it closed if it were worked as economically.

14270. Then if it could be shown to you that there would be a saving in it without any hardship to the sick or poor, would you be in favour of closing the workhouse?—I would before night, at once.

14271. No. 6?—This query was not replied to.

14272. We have been discussing some of them already, No. 7, whether paying patients should be taken into hospital and charged for their treatment according to their means. You have heard the discussion we have had here with other witnesses?—I have.

14273. About getting contributions and giving Guardians power to fix how much a man ought to be able to pay, and having legal power to enforce that. Would you approve of that?—You have legal power already, as far as I know, over any paying patient. I always administered it that way.

14274. You never made an order for payment of 1s. a week?—Not so low, but I have made it for 12s. a week.

14275. There is a good deal of difference between the two—the power may be there—but as all events in practice what you go for is to recover the average cost of maintenance—is not that it?—Yes.

14276. Well, the principle that is now suggested is that Guardians should have the power to make an order for payment of a contribution, not of the whole cost. Would you think that where people could not afford to pay the whole cost, it would be a wise thing to give the Guardians power to recover as much as the people could pay without hardship?—I would quite concur with that.

14277. Will you tell us the view of your Board about the tramp question?—That the tramp system can be dealt with by making the tramps work for their board and lodging, and that a colony should be taken over by the British Government, and to send those who persist in vagrancy out of the country altogether.

14278. What is generally meant by a colony is a colony within the country, and not outside the country. They call it a labour colony. There is no such thing as transportation at present; that has gone out of fashion. When they speak of a labour colony they have an idea merely of having a farm, with suitable buildings and enclosures, and keeping them at work. That would meet your view?—It would.

14278. If they lost their liberty and were confined until they proved themselves worthy of being set again?—Yes, that would be a good plan. I think the proposal and accorder of this thought the Government might send them out in South Africa. The proposal is here in court.

14279. Did you second it?—No, but I approve of it. I happened to be chairman of the committee—to get them out of the country altogether. The County Council, as answers to 8, had a different view—that if they applied at the workhouse more than once a year, they should be sent away to some place.

CHAIRMAN.—They virtually wanted the application of the English law to Ireland, which enables the Board of Guardians to shut them up if they come back so many times, by periods increasing in length according to the frequency of the visits.

14280. Dr. BROWNE.—In answer to Query 5, you say the hospital to be detached and isolated from the workhouse proper as much as possible; do you think that would make the hospital more popular and more availed of?—I think so; if it were isolated properly a great many pauper patients would go into it.

14281. Do you think they would in its present state?—I don't think workhouse hospitals are popular at present.

14282. Did you go into it to inquire why they are not popular?—I did not. I don't know is it an objection the people have in the country generally to going into the workhouse hospital; it is very hard to get them to go in. I know that several who did venture have been properly treated, and are very satisfied with the treatment they get.

14283. Have you gone through it at all?—I have been in it many times.

14284. What do you think of the arrangements?—I think they could be greatly improved. The arrangements, as far as I remember, in Dublin, are fairly good, but they are nothing like the hospitals I have seen in Dublin.

14285. You are in Mullingar to-day. It might repay you well if you just go and look at Mullingar Workhouse Hospital, and then look at Dublin tomorrow. In the interests of humanity I think it would be well to—There is one thing I want to bring under your notice, that Dublin is a small town, with a very small valuation, £53,000, and any little increase of £200 means 1d., and any little thing means 1d., and there is a regular scramble. In Mullingar there are forty-one electoral divisions, and any of the divisions is, by £1,000, larger in the valuation than any in Dublin. That makes a vast difference. You never could improve according to the inspection of the Local Government Board.

14286. Why could you not?—It would leave the rate too high.

14287. What is the rate in the 2 in Dublin?—About 2s. 1d.

14288. Do you know that there are many much larger than that, nearly twice that?—I don't know, but I know it leaves any chairman very unpopular in putting on a heavy rate.

14289. But is it not your duty to the poor to do it?—There are two parties always neglected—the poor and the ratepayers.

14290. Take my advice and visit the Mullingar Workhouse to-day?—Has it been newly constructed?

14291. No; it has been that way for years, and if you have any other Guardians from Dublin here, take them with you?—Mullingar is a very popular workhouse, I am sure.

14292. CHAIRMAN.—And if you want to Adonis you would see it very good there?—If Dublin is made the county workhouse, I am sure we will have it fitted up in the newest style.

MR. SAMUEL B. SUTTON EXAMINED.

Mr. Samuel B.
Sutton.

14293. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Dublin Board of Guardians?—Yes.

14294. We had some conversation just now about old-age pensions, and I think you were to tell us something about it?—He confused it; it was the Continental system I speak of.

14295. Can you refer us to the Continental system?—Is there not such a scheme on the Continent?

14296. That is what I want to know from you?—I only know it theoretically. I believe in Prussia it is in existence.

14297. But you don't know?—No, except theoretically. I would not be up in the statistics of it, but I would be prepared to make the bold statement that workhouses could be abolished altogether by reverting to such a system.

14298. As the Continental system?—Yes.

14299. What is your idea of the Continental system?—Giving a certain sum per annum to the destitute decent poor, to be kept by their friends, and in the absence of having any friends, to go to Government institutions kept by various religious denominations at the expense of the rates.

14300. You would close workhouses and have these pensions for deserving old people?—Yes.

14301. And you would send others to institutions kept up by religious bodies?—Yes, in case they had no friends.

14302. Would you be afraid that there would be a great rush for these pensions, and many would go for them?—Of course it would need proper vigilance, to see that there were no abuses of the system.

14303. How would you safeguard such a system. Supposing that these pensions were to be given, would you give them to everybody in the whole country?—Oh, certainly not. I don't think so. I think the deserving poor are easily known.

14304. Some people say that everybody should get them, but let them not claim them unless they like; but you would say: "No; draw the line at deserving and aged poor?"—Quite so.

14305. Do you think a great many people would be apt to try to get themselves forward in that category?—It would need careful vigilance to see that there was no abuse of this system. But that is only an abstract question at present; the workhouse system must exist until we get a better scheme.

14306. If you give us a good system to replace it, if it is too abstract, we cannot get hold of it?—It is very hard to put it into the concrete.

14307. That system could not touch the sick. We must provide for the sick, apart from the poor. The class you are mainly concerned in are the class known under the Poor Law as the aged and infirm?—That is so.

14308. That is your idea, the idea that it would be cheaper and better to board these old people out with their relatives or friends than to keep up an institution for them?—That is my own individual opinion.

14309. You say in some cases they might not have any relatives or friends to take them?—Yes.

14310. What would you do in such cases?—I expect there would be religious denominations according to their creed to keep them.

14311. I don't think religious people keep up almshouses?—If the workhouses were abolished, could they not be formed?

14312. I am afraid you would be jumping into my if you did that; the economy would vanish?—Before the workhouse system it worked very well with non-profits.

14313. The population was very thin then?—Was it? I think it is thinner now.

14314. When Henry VIII. dissolved the monasteries you had a very small population in the country. If a destitute and deserving person had no friends or relatives, do you think there would be any hardship in doing as they do in some Continental countries. I am speaking theoretically like you. I have heard that in Switzerland they put a man up to contract, to be considered for; a bill on the wall says that orders will be reserved on such and such a day for the support of Pat Mooney and his wife?—I think it would be quite as cheap as the workhouse system at present.

14315. If that system of boarding-out the aged and infirm were adopted by a locality, say the Dublin Union, or any other locality you like, don't you think it would be extravagant to keep up an institution at the same time. Ought not the Guardians to be obliged to declare which of the two systems they would take?—I say, sir, you should abolish all workhouses under that system.

14316. Or abolish all institutions run on one line or the other?—Yes.

14317. Or if some places felt they could not manage the boarding-out system, like big cities, if they wished to have the institutions, let them keep the institutions and not you the other?—Yes, let it refer to either.

Feb. 15, 1894.

14319. Is there anything else that occurs to you?—Except the hospital. I think one or more hospitals would be enough in a county; that is in the case of the abolition of the workhouse system.

14320. Assuming now the abolition of the workhouse system, where would you put the hospital for Westmeath?—I would say in the capital of the county.

14321. That is Mullingar?—Mullingar.

14322. You would be in favour of breaking up Delvin?—Yes, if all the workhouses were to go.

14323. Then you would have to go with the rest?—If you continue the present workhouse system, I suppose we compare favourably in rates with Mullingar, and if you go in for amalgamation of unions, I would go in on a more gigantic scale, amalgamating two or three unions in every province, and have a large quantity of land attached to them.

14324. As a means of employing the inmates?—Yes; I think amalgamation should be on a more gigantic scale than Delvin with Mullingar.

14325. Perhaps you are prepared to go further than you think? But do you not think it would cause great hardship if the sick were moved from distances like Fless, Adilone, and Clonsilla into Mullingar?—Take the case of Delvin Union.

14326. What are your extreme distances there?—There are parts of Delvin Union nearer to Mullingar than to Delvin.

14327. How far would it be from Delvin, and how far from Mullingar?—I think the extreme point would be twelve Irish miles. I mean if Delvin were amalgamated with Mullingar as a hospital, the extreme point would be twelve miles, that is Clonsilla. At present it is about five miles from Delvin; Castledrop would be five more. I think eight miles would cover the extreme point either way.

14328. How far is Athlone from Mullingar?—I suppose it would be thirty miles from Delvin; you would be nearer to Dublin at Delvin than at Athlone.

14329. Don't you think there are almost prohibitive distances to take the sick. You must remember the sick cannot go by train in the worst cases. They have to be moved carefully in an ambulance and driven from the home of the sick person to the hospital door. Would you not think it a terrible thing to drive sick people such long distances?—Except you maintain hospitals in the extreme unions.

14330. That is what I want you to come to—if you kept a large hospital for cases of acute sickness?—Yes, if it would not take a large staff.

14331. You would not need many officers in connection with a small hospital?—You would want a clerk to keep the accounts.

14332. You might not want much of a clerk there. You would want a doctor and a nurse or two?—You would want one at all events.

14333. And chaplains for the religious requirements of the sick?—But I think, as far as Delvin is concerned, that it is quite within reach of Mullingar, meaning you were not doing away with Mullingar Union.

14334. How far do you call Delvin from Mullingar?—Ten Irish miles.

14335. And you don't think it would be too much to send them that distance?—That depends on the illness.

14336. The people about Delvin have always been accustomed to a hospital at their door for a long time, therefore they would feel the loss of it a great deal?—I would go in for workhouse hospitals more up-to-date than any hospitals I have yet seen.

14337. Do you know the county infirmary here?—I do; and I would say it is infinitely superior to any workhouse hospital I have ever seen.

14338. You would rather have them on those lines?—Most decidedly.

14339. Have you seen the workhouse here?—I have not.

14340. Dr. Siger has just suggested to the last witness that he should see the infirmary here. If you both went together you would get a good look at it?—It is a notorious fact that any sick patient I have ever met would greatly prefer to go to the county infirmary than any union hospital, not only in this county, but I am familiar with Wicklow and Dublin.

14341. I know plenty of people who go into workhouse hospitals now without the least objection, except that they dislike the idea of the connection of pauperism with it; but as far as the treatment in a great many workhouse hospitals goes now it is really very good. It is not good for surgical operations or things of that sort, but except for that it is very good—good nursing and good food?—The atmosphere of the workhouse is objected to.

14342. If you close the workhouse and leave the hospital you lose the atmosphere?—That is so.

14343. Dr. Broome.—You have heard it stated that the principal number of patients comes from a radius within a few miles of the county infirmary?—I believe it extends all over the Co. Westmeath.

14344. Patients coming to the infirmary?—As far as I know, I believe it is available for any case of accident.

14345. You can easily understand the difficulty of getting an accident case removed sixteen Irish miles is very considerable?—It would be.

14346. There is no ambulance at present in the county infirmary. They don't send for any patients, and the patients themselves cannot get an ambulance to remove them.

CHAIRMAN.—Don't you think there ought to be power in any case to keep an ambulance?—I think there ought.

14347. Dr. Broome.—I think you suggested that in addition to the county infirmary there should be small cottage hospitals in the outlying districts?—In case of Delvin being abolished, we would rather contribute to the county infirmary than to the workhouse hospital.

14348. CHAIRMAN.—Wait until you see Mullingar before you go home?—I know the deserving cases would rather go to the county infirmary.

14349. Dr. Broome.—If the workhouse was done away with at Delvin?—I don't think it would save the rates one bit.

14350. A small hospital left there, it would be practically the same as the county infirmary in a smaller scale?—But you have still to deal with the clerical staff, which would swell up the rates.

14351. I don't see how it would?—Would you not necessarily want a clerk?

14352. CHAIRMAN.—No, a doctor and nurse ought to be able to keep any books that are necessary?—The clerk at Delvin has about half the salary of the clerk at Mullingar.

14353. Dr. Broome.—There are 300 cottage hospitals in England with very small staffs?—Cottage hospitals would be a fine system in this country, too.

14354. CHAIRMAN.—You would rather have that than oblige the sick to go long distances?—I would say so; by all means look after the sick.

MR. EDWARD GARGAN EXAMINED.

14355. CHAIRMAN.—Are you a member of the Delvin Board of Guardians?—I am the Chairman.

14356. You have heard the evidence your two colleagues have given. Is there anything you would like to add to their views. Is there any point that they put forward that you dissent from?—Very little.

14357. Tell us, briefly, in your own words, what is your view?—My view is that if there would not be a hospital kept in Delvin it would be a terrible inconvenience to the sick poor.

14358. As regards the other part of the house—the aged and infirm—do you think it would be any hardship to oblige them to go to a central workhouse such as Mullingar?—I think it would.

14359. How many aged and infirm would you have, in a rule?—I am not able to answer.

Mr. Murray.—Last week the master told me there were ninety-six inmates all told, children and all; forty-three aged and infirm.

14360. CHAIRMAN.—On the 1st of January you had only seven—three males and four females—you would not keep up a workhouse for seven?—I would not.

14361. I am taking the total at a good deal higher figure than you mentioned just now. I am taking the total of Delvin at 203 inmates, so I am allowing even a larger population than you are giving.

Mr. Murray.—It could vary from your data.

14362. It could, but how many people do you say are in the workhouse?

Mr. Murray.—Ninety-six.

14363. I am taking 103; but you put down forty something for aged and infirm.

Mr. Murray.—Yes, and the rest were composed of children and the tramp class.

Mr. Edward Gargan.

Feb. 16, 1904.

Mr. Edward
Gwynn.

14354. CHAIRMAN.—You had thirty children in the house and a large number of tramps. If you had a very small number both of aged and infirm, as long as the sick were dealt with as before, you would not keep up the house?—So long as the rates were not increased.

14355. And, if possible, economize the rates?—Yes; if the rates were not reduced I don't think amalgamation would answer at all.

14356. I must say I agree with you that unless you could get some great improvement?—Unless I could get an advantage; it is an advantage to the poor to have Delvin Union there.

14367. I think we all agree with you that if there is no saving on the money?—It is a great advantage to the poor in all cases to have the union there.

14368. Unless some very great advantage could be gained?—For the ratepayers.

14369. Unless some very great advantage could be gained even outside the ratepayers, one ought not to touch it unless there is economy?—No, and great economy. I would not go in for very little.

14370. For what class is it advantageous to have the union there?—The old and infirm, and all the poor that are communicating with them; it is near them and they can be brought there, and then the sick and the lame cases.

14371. But in any case you would have a little hospital for them. I understand your position. You would be against amalgamation?—Unless there was a great saving.

14372. And if there was any hardship?—There is certainly hardship to the sick poor. If amalgamation goes on it is a hardship to bring the poor people such a journey as from the outside part of Delvin Union to Mullingar—sixteen miles—and we have a thickly-inhabited country over in North Westmeath.

Mr. MICHAEL GUNNELL examined.

Mr. Michael Gunnell.

14373. CHAIRMAN.—From what public body do you attend?—The Rural District of Delvin and the Poor Law Guardians.

14374. What are your views on the question. Will you kindly tell us?—I believe that the Poor Law could not be properly administered, owing to the long distances, representatives would have to travel to Mullingar if Delvin was amalgamated.

14375. You think it ought not to be amalgamated?—Yes.

14376. You are rather looking at it from the point of view that if Delvin Workhouse were broken up the district there would become part of Mullingar or some other union?—Yes.

14377. And it would be too far for you to come to Mullingar?—Yes.

14378. But if you were allowed to keep your sick there, and had a local committee or body to manage the hospital, and if you just paid your share for any aged or infirm that went to the central workhouse, would you see any objection in that?—That would improve matters a bit, in the case of amalgamation, it would be the next best thing.

14379. Then as regards classification in the workhouse, what is your view there?—The decent poor I would suggest should be kept apart from the wicked or ill-conducted, and separate apartments should be provided for old married couples.

14380. It is very difficult to find out who the decent poor are, but you would leave that to the discretion of the local body?—Yes, they could easily find out that.

14381. Although it would often be a difficult question to decide which a man was?—No difficulty at all in deciding what a man's character was during life.

14382. You would give them the benefit of the doubt, and put them into a better class if you had a difficulty?—Yes, I would give them the benefit of the doubt.

14383. You would like the hospital to be separated from any other building for the relief of the poor?—Yes; it would give it a greater advantage.

14384. And the people would avail of it to a larger extent?—There is a certain feeling on the part of people against entering a poorhouse hospital, which would not be if it were a separate building.

14385. Did you ever try to find out in your own mind the reason why there is that feeling about the workhouse?—That is easily found out. People object to go to the poorhouse and any building in the centre of the poorhouse, as hospitals, usually are, must be poorhouses, and people object to go there.

14386. What is their reason?—The poorhouse has a bad name, and the reason is that they don't want to be absolutely supported by charity; their spirit is above that.

14387. That would influence a good many people, but don't you think what influences them more is what you call the bad name of the institution?—Yes.

14388. That is what makes people unwilling to go there?—That has a whole lot to do with it.

14389. Would that be because of the birth of illegitimate children and the class of people who are there. Is that what would keep respectable women from going in and using the institution?—That has a good deal to do with it.

14390. And then the class of tramps and rough people who are going there?—That, when they are hospital cases, should be kept in a separate part.

14391. What is your view about children?—That, as far as possible, they should be boarded out, and where there cannot be sufficient foster parents got, I would have a central institution established to send them there.

14392. But preferably boarding-out?—Preferably boarding-out. I believe if there was a central institution established that education would be better looked after, and the more intelligent could get trade.

14393. Have you any experience of central institutions such as you refer to?—No; no personal experience.

14394. As regards the administration of outdoor relief, what ought to be the test for it?—I have known many cases where there was extreme poverty in a family when sickness would come upon them, and they could not be relieved because they were small farmers. They held a small portion of land and could not get relief.

14395. You don't like the present restriction of a quarter-acre?—The present restriction is objectionable.

14396. To the proper administration of Poor Law?—Yes.

14397. What restriction would you put. You know at present in the law a quarter-acre. What would you think a proper restriction to put?—If I was going to place a limit, I would say seven acres. I would have it a discretionary power with the Guardians.

14398. To relieve anyone that had not more than seven acres of land?—Yes.

14399. That might be a very valuable piece of property, the seven acres?—Yes, and it might not.

14400. Do you think the acreage in itself would be a sufficient test?—I don't think it would.

14401. What would you add to it. What do think would you make. Would you have valuation and acreage?—I did not consider that point. I would have it a discretionary power with the Guardians.

14402. You would have no test at all; that is, just repeal the quarter-acre clause and put nothing in place of it?—Yes; not have any limit.

14403. Now about tramps?—I would say that all tramps, men and women, should get a week's hard work on entering the workhouse, and be detained for a week.

14404. That is, all people who could be called tramps?—Yes; those persons that are coming in a flock night after night, I would detain them for a week's hard work, and if they came a third time, I would have them sent to a central institution that would be provided—one of these disused workhouses.

14405. Take their liberty from them?—Yes; and place them in one of these homes and make it self-supporting by their labour, until such time as they would improve in habits and become respectable persons.

14406. Would you take their children from them?—Yes, I think it would be a judicious thing.

14407. To prevent the continuation of the breed?—Yes; until there would be some hopes of bringing up the young children decently.

14408. Unless rating, that is the rate that exists at present. You prefer that to divisional rating?—Yes; the present law of rating better than divisional rating.

14409. What division do you represent in your union?—Ballinlough.

14410. That is a rural district?—Yes.

14411. And you don't object to pay your share of the town outdoor relief?—No.

14412. Why I suggest that is, there are some divisions that are very thickly populated with poor, and those divisions would require most relief, and consequently we would have the poor supporting the poor without any assistance from their better-off neighbours?—Yes.

14413. You would have union rating for outdoor and all other purposes?—All Poor Law purposes.

Mr. PATRICK JOSEPH TOHAN examined.

Feb. 16, 1904

Mr. Patrick
Joseph Tohan.

14414. CHAIRMAN.—With what union are you connected?—Tullamore. I am Chairman of the Kilbeggan District Council.

14415. Does your Council agree with the Board of Guardians you belong to, or have you a different opinion to the Tullamore Guardians?—We have a different opinion.

14416. The Tullamore Board of Guardians are against amalgamation. You are in favour of amalgamation with Mullingar?—Yes.

14417. Or else that a part of Mullingar should be given to your district?—Yes.

14418. You think you have too small a district for the support of the poor?—Yes; it leaves our rates too high.

14419. About what are your rates of recent years?—2s. 10d. in the £.

14420. Do you happen to remember the valuation of the district?—I don't, exactly.

CHAIRMAN.—Well, we can get it; it must be very low when your rates are so high.

Mr. Downes.—£211,420.

14421. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose you have spent a good deal on labourers' cottages, have you?—Yes, we did, a good deal.

14422. The instalments are included in that?—Yes; there are about twenty in the district, and the roads are very high, principally main roads.

14423. You don't know how much of that is Poor Law expenditure?—It is about 2s. 3d.

14424. That seems rather more than it is likely to be. Oh, your district rate is 2s. 10d.; that would not benefit you under our inquiry here. What you really want is that your rural district be abolished, not the Union of Tullamore?—Not the Union of Tullamore.

We wish to be included in the Union of Mullingar.

14425. You don't mind about the Union of Tullamore. What you mind about is the Rural District Council you belong to for roads, and such-like purposes?—Yes.

14426. And in order to get rid of the rural district you would propose to get rid of the Union of Tullamore, so that you might be thrown into the Union of Mullingar?—Either that, or, as an alternative, to increase the area of the district.

14427. And so increase the area of the Union of Tullamore by taking part of Mullingar from it?—Part of Mullingar and Ashmore, the nearest parts.

14428. Did you look to see what parts you think might be put in?—Tyrril's Pass, and that district; it is nearer to Tullamore than Mullingar. Tyrril's Pass and Horseleap, and that direction.

14429. How far would they have to go from Horseleap to Tullamore?—It would be about eight miles.

Mr. MICHAEL ROSS examined.

Mr. Michael
Ross.

14430. Mr. Downes.—You belong to the Mullingar Guardians?—Yes.

14431. Did you form one of the committee that considered the question sent by this Commission?—Yes.

14432. On the whole, are you for amalgamation—joining in portions of other unions—or are you against it as a body?—We are against it.

14433. Is that because you considered the union large enough, or whether you doubted there would be any savings?—No; on both grounds.

14434. In considering the expenses, were you under the impression that the District Council expenses would come under the consideration of this Commission?—Yes, we thought it possible.

14435. Did that influence you in the decision you came to?—It helped to influence us, but I don't think that in itself would be sufficient.

14436. If the plan ultimately adopted would lead to a considerable saving, would you like amalgamation, or would you be still against it?—I think you cannot very well have amalgamation under existing circumstances.

The Union of Mullingar at the present time is a very large union, and amalgamation, taking in patients from other districts, would mean further expenditure on the part of Mullingar; part of it would be chargeable to the Union of Mullingar, and the Union of Mullingar has laid out a considerable sum of money in providing for its own sick poor, with a result that after this year, I think it is not very far-fetched to say we will have a large reduction of the rates. Then to take another union into it and additional sick poor and infirm would 14430. How far is it from Kilbeggan to Tullamore?—Six miles.

14431. Is it Meade you are looking after?—Between Meade and Horseleap.

14432. So you want to get a King's Co. Division. You would not get the benefit of that in Kilbeggan. You would be a rural district of Westmeath. You would not get the benefit of any part of the King's County that would go in?—We might get part of Westmeath between Horseleap and Meade.

14433. There is practically none of Westmeath there?—There is part of it in the Streamstown division.

14434. What is that in at present. That is the far side of the railway. There is not much valuation there, or anything of that sort?—It is thickly populated.

14435. What is the valuation of the district in Westmeath that you think you might get. Did you look into that?—I did not look into that.

14436. Is there anything else you would like to mention?—No, there is nothing else.

14437. Dr. Rogers.—What about patients and sick poor coming from Kilbeggan?—It would be a hardship on the poor to have to come to Mullingar.

14438. How far are you from Tullamore?—Six miles.

14439. And how far from Mullingar?—Twelve miles.

14440. Would you approve of the county boundary being the division, the Kilbeggan district altogether going into Mullingar?—Yes, sir.

14441. For all purposes?—All purposes.

14442. Sick and rural district?—If the sick could be treated in Tullamore Union and the Kilbeggan district included in Mullingar.

14443. Would you approve of paying to Tullamore as much per patient per week?—Yes, sir; if there was a small hospital established in connection with the large convent in Kilbeggan, patients might be treated there.

14444. CHAIRMAN.—You are six miles from Tullamore. Would not that be too short a distance to have two hospitals?

Dr. Rogers.—What is the population of Kilbeggan?—I don't know exactly; the town is 1,000.

14445. They could go to Mullingar without any great hardship?—They could.

14446. Would you prefer doing that to remaining as you are at present?—Yes, sir, that is the unanimous wish of the Council and people of Kilbeggan.

14447. CHAIRMAN.—And you think that desire would be made stronger if they had a legal right to board-out the sick in the Tullamore Workhouse?—Yes, that is the only objection we would have—the hardship it would entail on the sick poor to come such a distance.

mean further expenditure, and I think that would be a monstrous thing to ask the Mullingar people to do after doing so much themselves for the sick poor of their own union.

14448. You have all the provisions that are practically necessary or useful at present in your hospital and infirmary?—Yes.

14449. Supposing the reduction in the inmates, by taking away children and objectionable characters and tramps, enabled you to use the buildings without an increase of building operations, would you still consider that amalgamation would be undesirable?—I think amalgamation in a great many cases is very good and useful.

14450. But it is the local circumstances you consider?—In this particular case I cannot see how you can have amalgamation in Mullingar without bringing an undue burden on Mullingar, that has done, I think everybody must admit, fairly well for its own sick poor.

14451. You say you consider there is no necessity for an auxiliary asylum?—Yes; if you have an auxiliary asylum it means an additional staff, and additional cost again, and you have an asylum here in Mullingar, and the necessity for an auxiliary asylum in Westmeath does not exist that might exist in Longford or Meath, where they have long distances, at great cost, to bring patients.

14452. You have some observations to make in reference to the classification of inmates in workhouses?—Yes. I think there ought to be classification for well-known bad characters. I think they ought not to be along with deserving sick poor; but there is a great difficulty in that. If you get an institution and put them into it, you have the question of their freedom to consider, and all that sort of thing. I think that even if there had to be some small apartments built, even in Mullingar, or adjacent to any other union, that it is so important that even that should not stop classification, even going to that expense.

Feb 16, 1904,
Mr. Michael
Keeve

14463. It would be going to some expense?—It would.

14464. But you consider that should be done in order to have proper classification?—I do. I think something should be done.

14465. Your committee considered the sending of children out of the workhouse?—Yes.

14466. What is your recommendation on that?—In Mullingar all the children that can legally be sent out are sent out, and in the National schools of the district I have come from, there are eight or nine of the children going there. I think the existing system is a first-rate system, but I think that instead of having an inspector appointed by the Local Government Board, a number of Boards of Guardians should group together—six or seven, or eight or ten—appoint an inspector; and the reason I say that is that in my district the lady inspector reported favorably upon two children which we had in a week's time to take in, and would have taken in before had we not been waiting for the report of this lady inspector, so that goes to show that her reports are not to be relied upon; anything I am speaking about is not personal to her—I never saw her—but it is the system. These children were taken away by the Board of Guardians on the ground that the relieving officer visited the school and found them not in a clean state, and the local Guardians also thought they should be taken away, although she reported favorably upon them.

14467. Your idea is that there should be a general inspector for a number of unions, who would from time to time examine all the children and report to your Board and the other Boards?—That is so.

14468. CHAIRMAN.—What are the precise grounds on which you took away these children from their foster parents?—The relieving officer came there and examined the children at the school, and found that they were not in a very clean state, and then the local Guardians also saw that these children were not properly treated.

14469. Now in what way, exactly?—They did not consider they were properly clothed; they did not think the parents should be foster parents for nurse children.

14470. They thought they had made an unwise selection in selecting these parents?—Originally; that is so.

14471. But beyond the dirt which the relieving officer found on this occasion, was there anything?—There might be local circumstances, which the inspector could not possibly be aware of, but this is what an inspector should make himself aware of.

14472. I was trying to come to the real ground why the children were removed?—It is not exactly in my district, and therefore I do not wish to go into it.

14473. You do know?—I was one of the members of the Board of Guardians.

14474. And there you heard the reasons why. You prefer not making public the reasons?—I have no objection to it, but one of the reasons was that one of the children, I believe, used to be sent to the public-house for drink.

14475. That is a very proper reason for removing. That, of course, would not be known to the Inspector, and even if you join with four or five other unions, and employ an inspector, would not the same reason still apply?—I don't think it would, for this reason, that if you have an inspector appointed by the Board of Guardians, or a number of Boards of Guardians, that inspector will very likely call to the Guardians of the different districts, and make inquiries, which a Local Government Board Inspector will not do; at least taking up the attitude that a great many of them do at present.

14476. I thought the complaint was that they inquired a little but too much sometimes?—Not at all; I don't think so.

14477. At present are you aware of anything in the law that would prevent your Board of Guardians, either by itself or in conjunction with other bodies, from having such an appointment made?—You would have two inspectors then. That would mean a Local Government Board Inspector and an inspector of the Board of Guardians, and that would mean additional expense, because, of course, the members of the Local Government Board out of their own pocket won't pay their inspector.

14478. The local bodies don't pay the Local Government Board Inspector?—I am aware of that; at all events it comes out of public funds.

14479. It comes out of the taxpayers' pockets, out of the country at large. Is it your idea that the local inspector appointed by a number of unions should be paid out of public taxation or out of the union funds—which?—My idea is also, that I would have an inspector responsible to the Board of Guardians and responsible also to the Local Government Board, or to some central body; that is my idea.

14480. By whom would that inspector be paid, and by whom would that inspector be appointed?—He would be appointed by a number of Guardians.

14481. A joint committee of the Board of Guardians?—That is so.

14482. Who would pay that inspector?—Out of the Imperial taxation, as she is paid at present.

14483. Then your suggestion comes to this, that the Guardians and not the Government should make the appointment of the inspector?—Quite so. I would have them responsible to the Board of Guardians.

14484. Paid for by the Imperial Government and responsible to the Board of Guardians?—That is a thing I would like, but not a thing that is very likely to occur—but I see quite clearly what you mean—but even if this inspector was to be paid by the Board of Guardians, I would have him responsible to the local bodies.

14485. There is no objection under the present law to your making such appointments. At the present time you have local inspectors in the relieving offices?—But they have a lot of work to do.

14486. And perhaps they are not exactly the kind of men you would select as inspectors of children, although they may be very good men as sanitary officers and relieving officers?—That is so.

14487. You would possibly select some lady who had experience?—Yes, she would want to have experience.

14488. There would be no objection, as far as I see, to Guardians proposing to appoint such officers if they could substantiate the necessity for such appointments?—I don't know.

14489. There is no doubt about it, the more these children are wisely inspected the better?—I think also that all children who are in the union should be looked-out, that is all who are properly chargeable on the union as the law at present stands.

14490. A great many are now in your workhouse, the illegitimate children of women who are in the workhouse. The mothers object to their leaving the workhouse. They won't have any separation. You think it would be wise to empower the Guardians to board up such children?—Yes; we did our best some time ago to have all these children boarded up, but the mothers would not allow us; we could do nothing. There is another matter I would like to refer to, and that is, first there should be some power given to the Guardians regarding inmates coming from other unions. A case came before the Board of Guardians three weeks ago, where a mother with a child and an infant, and her mother again, came from Galway Union in the train here for admission to Mullingar. We had no alternative, if we did not refuse admission and turn them out on the roadside, and that we could not do; and that woman, with her mother and two children, became chargeable on the rates of the Mullingar Union.

14491. If you succeeded so that you could make the Galway people pay for their inhabitants up here, we would have to make up your mind to pay the Dublin people for the Workhouse people that are in Dublin. You might lose on the exchange?—I don't think so, because the majority of the inmates of Mullingar are not natives of Mullingar at all. I remember two years ago getting a return about it, and there was a large number not natives of Mullingar Union at all.

14492. Mr. DEANE.—Your committee considered the necessity for proceeding for consumptives?—Yes; there should be some arrangement made, of course, for consumptives. If there was a disused workhouse a number of Boards of Guardians, I think, should contribute to the support of that institution, and have consumptives sent there for treatment.

14493. You say your committee have made no recommendation for the sick poor?—Yes, for Mullingar.

14494. With reference to the tramp unions?—I would put the existing law—the Vagrancy Act—into force.

14495. You would not consider it necessary to get any additional power such as was mentioned to-day?—The more power you get regarding that class the better.

14496. CHAIRMAN.—You need not use it if you don't like it?—No, but if the Vagrancy Act was put in force and the police took it up as they should, you would get rid of a good deal of the tramp unions. There is another thing, too, that crops up as the Board of Guardians in Mullingar very often, and that is the attitude of the Local Government Board towards Boards of Guardians. It means very often a lot of wasteful expenditure. I will give you a case. In the fever hospital the fever nurse got leave of absence last summer. There was not a case in the fever hospital. There were no vacancies there; one had considerable experience in nursing, being for a few years in the county infirmary. The medical officer was quite satisfied she was quite capable of taking care of the hospital whilst there was nobody in it.

Feb. 16, 1904.

Mr. Michael

14934. I would say she would be equal to that, certainly—if you allow me for a moment. There was nobody in it. The medical officer was quite satisfied with the arrangement made, and it was with his approval the Board of Guardians made it, and notwithstanding that, the Local Government Board wrote insisting on a trained nurse from Dublin, and a trained nurse was brought down at considerable expense, and remained there all the time without a patient, and if there was a patient to be attended to, the medical officer could have got a trained nurse in two hours by wire from Dublin.

14935. I think there must have been some misunderstanding somewhere. I could hardly understand such a thing being insisted on. The arrangements, you say, seems to have been perfectly feasible. I cannot conceive that any other arrangement should be suggested. I think there must have been a misconception somewhere. Not at all; the thing was quite clear.

14936. There could have been no reason for the appointment of a trained nurse being insisted on unless it was to take charge of a patient?—But there was no patient.

14937. Therefore there must have been a misconception. I will suggest to you how the misconception may have arisen. Very probably your clerk of the union may have sent up a coupon of the fever hospital weekly to Dublin with a number of patients appearing to be in it. For instance, if Dr. Dillon Kelly kept other patients there who were not fever patients the names would go up, and without an explanation it would be assumed they were fever patients. I asked the other day some patients there who were not fever patients?—There are a few chronic cases.

14938. These people would be returned to Dublin, and there is nothing to prevent anyone in Dublin looking down the list and seeing a number of patients in the fever hospital thinking they were fever patients?—Yes; but they must have seen on the warrants from the Board of Guardians that it was with the medical officer's approval we were making this arrangement.

14939. I am afraid that would not be conclusive?—Don't you think when you have a medical officer there—a thoroughly qualified man, who understands the business—don't you think he will see that his patients are well treated and properly attended to?

14940. That is a very proper view for you to take, but if the Local Government Board send a number of patients put down in a hospital list they will naturally conclude they are fever patients, and in the absence of any explanation, prescribe accordingly. Were these patients there at that time of any sort?—I remember being through the hospital that very week, and there was nobody in it, not a single person of any sort.

14941. If you will look into the thing again you will find, I think, that there must have been a very great misconception or some misintention as to figures?—I am aware that there are a couple of chronic cases in the fever hospital nearly always.

14942. A good hand of them I saw there?—There may have been one or two of these cases out on the ground that day.

14943. They were in the wards eating their supper?—I am speaking of what occurred some months ago and I am speaking of a few days ago.

14944. I was speaking to Dr. Dillon Kelly, and he explained these people were regular inmates there. I think you will find it is capable of a simple explanation if we had the precise facts before us, but you may take it for granted that the Local Government Board would not do such a foolish thing as to ask you to get a trained nurse to take care of an empty hospital?—Rascally or unknowingly, it occurred.

14945. That is what I doubt. I think you will find that that hospital has not been without inmates?—I don't know.

Mr. Rosen.—Without fever inmates.

14946. CHAIRMAN.—Quite so, but if you get a return of inmates in a fever hospital you naturally come to the conclusion that they have fever, and that the doctor is not putting there any people who ought not to be there. Here I have, on the 1st of January, eighteen patients in the Mullingar Fever Hospital. There was not that number of fever patients in the union on that day, I am sure. If the Local Government Board see a return of eighteen fever patients, and a proposal to employ a handy woman because she has had some experience in the county infirmary, they would not consent to eighteen patients being left in her charge. That is the explanation of it, of course.

Mr. Rosen.—Anyhow, as I take it, Mr. Rosen's real point is that we ought to have a little more home government; there appears to him to be a little too much interference.

CHAIRMAN.—And he gave us an instance that the Local Government Board asked them to appoint a trained nurse to take care of an empty hospital.

Witness.—Yes, and insisted on it.

14947. CHAIRMAN.—How are eighteen patients on the 1st of January, probably not one of them fever, how is the Local Government Board to know that?—Did that occur that there were eighteen patients in this particular week?

14948. The return is up there?—I would like to see the notebook of that particular week. I remember the matter being discussed thoroughly by the Board of Guardians.

14949. Where the misconception has arisen is, you are supposing that ordinary patients can be kept in a fever hospital. That is not so. The fever hospital is for fever patients. If a return comes up to the Local Government Board saying there are eighteen patients in the fever hospital, we assume they are fever cases?—Don't the Local Government Board know that no doctor is going to have eighteen fever patients without a trained nurse?

14950. I am afraid we cannot assume that?—However my evidence is this, that I think as far as Mullingar is concerned, regarding all events the sick poor, that if there was less interference from the Local Government Board—of course I don't mean to say you should not have a control body, you must have that—but if there was less interference as far as Mullingar was concerned by the Local Government Board, what I, as a Guardian, consider very often and in interference. I think the sick poor would be better attended to, and things would go on smoother and be done better. With the Guardians there is always a deterring feeling that the Local Government Board will step in, and they very often do, and do very evasive things.

14951. That is, of course, a matter of opinion. You have your opinion, and I am not in the least showing any disrespect to your opinion, but if you give a concrete case, such as you have done in the fever hospital case, I would like to go into it, but beyond that is your general view, and you are entitled to your opinion?—I understand that your Commission is supposed to be a reform Commission of the Poor Law, and I consider there is no part of the Poor Law wants to be more reformed than the Local Government Board, or, at least, the attitude which the Local Government Board takes up against the Boards of Guardians.

14952. From that point of view, what would you suggest their function of central government should be?—I think that the action of the central government should be open to discussion, and that the men should be men who were competent, or had some standing or learning in the Poor Law business, then they should be proven men, who understood the Poor Law and the working of it in the rural districts.

14953. Such as chairmen of Councils?—Ah, no; for instance, men who have made a study of the Poor Law. Another thing I think you should have upon it, some men appointed, of course, by the Government or the Treasury, because there are Treasury grants, but you should also have men selected by the local bodies.

14954. That is as regards the qualification and the mode of appointment. What function would you give them to do. What duty would you permit them to discharge?—The function of a central body.

14955. And what is that?—They will have to oversee and inspect, and all that sort of thing; very much upon the lines that the Local Government Board is supposed to do it at present.

14956. Is supposed to do it, or does it?—Well, I don't know. I am afraid we are getting into a debating question.

14957. Speak for yourself. On the lines that they are at present?—I believe that the Local Government Board is not acting the part of a central body towards the public bodies through the country—towards the Boards of Guardians. I believe that the Local Government Board, very often without due consideration,

Feb. 16, 1904.

Mr. Michael
Kenna.

hampers and ties the hands of the local bodies, who are doing the best they can, knowing the local circumstances, for the sick poor and the infirm.

14525. Have you any instance to point out what you mean exactly as regards Mullingar in that point of view?—To give you a particular instance, at present I don't know that I could, but I am giving it generally.

14526. I know that, but I would like a particular instance to explain the force of your argument?—I am after giving an instance of what they did with regard to the fever hospital.

14527. And I am after giving you what I think may be the explanation. Now is there anything else?

Mr. Downes.—Paying wards in district hospitals?—Yes. I think there should be paying wards in district hospitals. At present in Mullingar you have not room to lay by a ward for paying patients, but if you had a paying ward, cut away from the other parts of the hospital, you would have a number of people who are not able to pay for medical attendance at home at the present time, and whom you cannot get into the district hospital. They will die at home sooner than come into the district hospital, because they would be mixed up with paupers.

14528. You think these people would be anxious to pay in the pay wards?—I think they would pay in a great many cases.

14529. CHAIRMAN.—Why don't they pay in the county infirmary, where they cannot be got to pay?—There is a question regarding the county infirmary, regarding the issue of tickets. At the present time the people who issue tickets are governors. I think every medical officer and clergyman should have power to issue tickets for the county infirmary, for, after all, it is supported out of public funds, and there are some districts in the country where for miles around there is nobody to issue tickets. I know one particular case where the person who got a ticket was the very person who would go to a district hospital.

14530. Are you aware of any case in which the Infirmary Committee declined to take in persons recommended by a doctor in the country?—I am not.

14531. Are you aware that the practice is to accept persons recommended by doctors in the country?—Oh, yes, I am aware. I do know a case that was not taken in when a doctor recommended it.

14532. Was that on account of the disease not being suitable for treatment?—No; I believe that the doctor did not think it necessary. I don't know the exact circumstances. I know such a thing did occur.

14533. You heard of such a thing having occurred?—I know it occurred.

14534. What was the case as far as you know?—It was treated afterwards in the union hospital, and I believe it should have gone there in the first instance. I am not questioning the right in that particular case. I believe, in the first place, it should have gone to the district hospital.

14535. Then you think it was a proper case for refusal?—In that particular case I do.

14536. That is the only case you have mentioned where there was a refusal?—But I think, at the same time, all clergymen and medical officers should have power to issue tickets to the county infirmary.

14537. Would not doctors be better judges of cases for admission than the clergymen of various denominations?—Yes, but the dispensary doctor has a very large district.

14538. Still he has to attend all the sick in it?—I would be even satisfied with that.

Mr. Thomas J.
Shaw.

Mr. THOMAS J. SHAW, J.P., examined.

14539. Mr. Downes.—You also belong to the Mullingar Board of Guardians?—Yes.

14540. Did you consider these various questions that were sent from this Commission?—Yes; I was Chairman of the Committee that considered them.

14541. I think I am right in saying that the report I have before me was drawn up principally by you?—Yes, as Chairman I drew it up.

14542. Now would you give shortly what your own views are, if they are in any way different from the views of the committee, and generally what the committee's view was about amalgamation, about hospital treatment, about the separation of the various sections in the unions, and also about this question of consumptives?—The committee, when considering the matter, took things as they found them. At present the rating is based on a combination of Poor Law and district charges, and they estimated in all probability that if there was a dissolution of any of the unions that district charges would follow, and they took that very largely into consideration when considering the question of amalgamation.

14543. CHAIRMAN.—At all events, there was the danger of their following?—That was one of the chief and principal reasons why the committee reported as against amalgamation with the adjoining unions; the second reason was because the cost of the Unions in Delvin Union was considerably lower than the cost in the Mullingar Union, and the third reason was, because the committee did not see any crying necessity for the use of the buildings of the Delvin Union for any other purpose in the county. They did not see it was required as an auxiliary system, and if it was shut up they thought it would inflict trouble and hardship on the poor from far-away districts, and also those in the neighbourhood; and taking the general question into consideration, they thought that as there were practically only two unions in the county, for Athlone only takes in a fringe of Westmeath, they would not recommend amalgamation. Further, the hospital accommodation we have in Westmeath is very excellent and well-conducted, but at the same time it is limited. Dr. Kelly informed me yesterday that the district hospital accommodates about seventy properly. There are about 500 or 600 passed through it in the year. For treatment for the quarter ending September 30th, there were 128 persons treated, of whom eighty-six were discharged cured.

14544. You have little over seventy in the infirmary?—About that. Of course if the committee saw the buildings of Delvin Union were required for any special purpose, they would perhaps have taken a somewhat different view, but they imagined if Delvin Union was done away with the buildings would be left idle; and it should be maintained all the same, I presume.

14545. There was the case of a workhouse in Tyone, half-way between Strabane and Omagh. It was closed, and it was sold for old stores and road material. There is not a trace of it now, although it was in existence ten years ago?—We were inclined to think it would be a hardship on the sick poor to abolish it.

14546. You altogether considered the question from the point of view of local amalgamation, taking the inmates out of Delvin and putting them into another workhouse?—Very largely; it was dealing with the local question.

14547. I don't know whether you were here in the early part of the day and heard the suggestions about moving the different classes out of the workhouse?—I heard that.

14548. Leaving none in the local workhouse that might be closed except the sick, removing the aged and infirm to the central institutions, and so on with the different classes. If you were going into the matter again, and looking at it from that point of view, and if you found that the breaking up of, say, fifty out of 150 workhouses was feasible, and that a large gain to the country at large and the districts in particular would result from such a scheme being carried, would you still have an open mind on the subject, ready to consider the matter again, or would you be in favour of leaving things remain as they are?—There are some counties where there are a number of unions, and it would be very desirable to break them up.

14549. You have a number of unions or parts of unions in your district?—You have six unions or parts of unions?—The committee say, in regard to those, that—The districts of Killybeggan, Ballymore, and Coole form part of the Unions of Tullamore, Ballymahon, and Granard, the workhouses of which they closely adjoin, and from which they are administered, and they consider, leaving out the financial question, to which the committee pay considerable importance, that it would inflict hardship on the sick poor to have to come such a distance to Mullingar.

14550. Supposing the Coole people were authorized by law to board out in the Granard village or district hospital their acutely sick at so much a head, instead of sending them to Mullingar?—I brought forward that question.

14551. You see there is not a loss of money in it. If a person gets sick at Coole, instead of going to Mullingar, where the average cost would be 5s., or whatever cost you choose to put it, instead of that they go to Granard, where they might have to pay 4s. 6d. or to it; it is as broad as it is long?—That is quite true. There is nothing of the sort in the existing law at present.

14545. There is not. We are looking at things with a fresh eye, to report what changes might be made. What I was rather anxious to get from you would be, whether the opinion against amalgamation that your committee has given, whether that opinion is really against amalgamation when removing all cases from one workhouse to another workhouse, or whether you think a great deal might be said in favour of such a proposal as has been outlined to-day?—I think it was a very good proposal that I heard outlined to-day—the removal of the children, the removal of the mothers, and the removal of the consumptives, which I think is a very important matter. The workhouse after all is a kind of refuge for persons without a home. I have known of cases occurring in Mallow where they had to seek a night, or a few nights' refuge, due to circumstances over which they had no control, in the workhouse, and under the scheme which has been outlined, I don't know exactly how they would be treated. I know the case of a young lad who had to be taken in for a few very bad nights. He had no money and no home. I authorized the relieving officer to take him in, or he would have had nowhere to sleep.

14546. Was he a decent boy?—A respectable young fellow.

14547. Is not that a case that would be met by an industrial school?—He was over that age; he was not what you would call an idler, but just force of circumstances. I think there are various cases where persons are forced to take refuge in a workhouse.

14548. They are very rare, and it is dreadful in those cases whether it is wise that they should have such a place to go to?—That is quite true. I admit that.

14549. Were you going to say something about the tramp?—The Committee considered the existing law should be strenuously enforced round about this district. There is a great deal of trouble from persons who are tramps but don't frequent the workhouse so much. It costs very much on the increase in recent years, of parties sleeping out in the road in tents, leading a vagrant, gipsy life.

14550. You have seen more of that than in past years?—Yes.

14551. Are those people in caravans selling baskets?—No; people living on their wits, in small little tents. The number that live that sort of life is very considerable, and increasing. You will see a regular number of people with a few donkey carts—fishers—out in all weather—a mixture of every class—well, generally, a lot of children.

14552. Would you be in favour of really strong measures for those, to put them under restraint?—I don't know what to say; the tramp question is a very big one. If they are not allowed into the workhouse it will add to the number of vagrants about the roads.

14553. Those people don't come into the workhouse?—Some of them do; they lead a nomadic life.

14554. Are those classes known to the police?—They are; the police may move them from one place to another. There are lots of them to be found about, especially in the summer portion of the year.

14555. What is their present pursuit?—Begging is their principal pursuit.

Mr. Moore.—They are criminals.

Witness.—There are a great number of them. As regards children, the Committee were unanimously of opinion that no children should be reared in the house; that they should be all boarded out, and a preference should be given to the foster-mothers who, otherwise complying with the necessary conditions, guaranteed to support or provide a situation for the child after the necessary limit has been reached.

14556. CHAIRMAN.—It is hardly necessary to put in that. They do hold together without any agreement?—In the majority of cases that occurs; very few go back to the workhouse.

14557. And I don't think you could enforce that agreement after the payment ceases?—Foster mothers apply to the Board of Guardians on special days, meeting in lovers of recommendation, and it is with reference to that point that we put in that proviso. As has been already mentioned, the Board have for some time endeavoured to board out all their children; they found it rather difficult, and some persons in the house refused to allow them to send out their children.

14558. You would like the powers of the Board extended?—Certainly; the Board are most anxious to board out all children, and if they got permission to board out all children, they would without any expense practically be able to provide for the classification of inmates. In the Mullingar Union there are two practically deserted school-rooms and two yards, originally meant for children; those are practically idle, and the Committee had the view that they could be used for the better class of people.

14559. Mr. DOUGLAS.—You have some recommendations about consumptives?—They were unanimously in favour of recommending that power should be given to allow Boards of Guardians to send patients either to a district workhouse or to a sanatorium for consumptives.

14560. CHAIRMAN.—They have power now if the institutions existed, but they don't exist. You think it would be wise that institution should be started?—Certainly. There are a good number of consumptive patients there at all times; they form one of the wards of the hospital, and I think it is not the proper place for them.

14561. I don't know whether you are aware that a doctor in an adjoining county has started a sanatorium in the workhouse at Cootinell. He is strongly of opinion that any buildings that are to be put up for consumptives should be temporary—made of wood—because, he says, there is a certainty of stamping out the disease if it is simultaneously grappled with by all public bodies?—On Query 6, the Committee reported that more stringent regulations should be framed for the admission, retention, and discharge of persons who become chargeable on the rates, so as to secure, as far as possible, that workhouses should be hospitals for the sick and destitute poor, and not refuges for the lazy and able-bodied. One of the reasons that brought that forward was that some time ago a case was brought up in which a girl was charged with insubordination. It turned out that she could demand her discharge, and had demanded it the previous week. She went out and remained out two nights, and came back and had to be admitted, and on inquiry we found that any person who is an inmate of the workhouse can take a discharge on three hours' notice. The Board considered that that was a very extraordinary state of affairs, and, therefore, with regard to the discharge of persons, we recommended more stringent regulations, and much more stringent regulations for the admission.

14562. What would be your idea of stringency as regards admission?—In my opinion it is rather too easy to get admission to the workhouses; the onus is thrown on the relieving officer.

14563. To improve the allegation of destitution?—Yes; the onus is thrown on the relieving officer, and if he does not give a ticket he is responsible.

14564. Could you suggest any way in which you could restrict that?—I would limit the time in which admission could be sought. At present the relieving officer is bound practically to be at his post all day, and it is not very easy for him.

14565. You would hardly catch him at his own house, if that is what you mean. He has other duties to discharge?—His house is his office for giving out tickets.

14566. And the workhouse master?—The workhouse master is bound to admit anybody he thinks destitute.

14567. There is a discretion in the Board of Guardians to discharge, and there is a discretion on the part of the officers to refuse to admit. They won't readily refuse to admit, but serious consequences might ensue?—I would make them apply during certain hours. Admission to the workhouse should be sought between 3 and 5 in the afternoon, and application to be made at the workhouse by persons who were not sick, so that their cases might be more easily investigated. At present they can turn up at any hour at the workhouse, and the result is that between one thing and another it is rather too easy to get admission to the workhouse. The Board of Guardians, especially when they meet after District Councils, have not much time to look into cases that have been admitted. About a fortnight or three weeks ago a case was brought before the Board, when a woman and her five children had gained admission to the house. She had had a quarrel with her husband after Christmas. He was a man in receipt of fair wages. She came here demanding admission. The next Board did not look into the question; it was a local Guardian who raised it. It was found she and her five children had become chargeable on the rates. I think in every Board of Guardians there should be a Finance Committee, say of fifteen or twenty members, with the chairman, and four or five of a quorum, to examine the bills sent in.

14568. It is very bad management that there is not such a committee?—There is not one here; it is not compulsory to have such a committee.

14569. Yes, but what is compulsory is that all bills

Feb. 16, 1904.

Mr. Thomas J. Stan.

should be examined by the Guardians, and if they decide that to a committee, it is a businesslike way of doing it?—I think the committee should meet half an hour before the Board and go through all the bills.

14570. That would take the day from the Guardians and put it on the Finance Committee?—I would put it on the Finance Committee to report to the Board. At present, whereas the duty is on, they don't go into it closely. I think there should be a Finance Committee to exercise the same control over the payments as a man would over his own affairs. The present Board is composed of 105 members, and various members turn up at each Board. You would require a committee to meet at a specified hour.

14571. Do you think your Board is too big?—It works satisfactorily; these are times it is a bit crowded. If we got in Delvin and other places we would have to build a new board-room. Speaking of centralisation, it will make it much more difficult for the representatives of these districts to come in and see that matters are properly discharged.

14572. If the local hospital that is to remain had a local committee to manage it. Supposing Delvin were broken up and the hospital remained, with a local committee to look after it?—You would practically have to have that. It would be the only way to manage it.

14573. Don't you think that would be a sensible and businesslike little body to deal with a small hospital like that?—The tendency recently was to abolish all committees.

14574. Dispensaries have nothing to do with us, but a great many people were anxious to tell us that they thought it a great mistake to abolish dispensary committees?—I think it was; it throws on the Guardians the duty of examining the books.

14575. Do they do that carefully?—They only sign their names. How can they examine them. It imposes a lot of expense and trouble.

MR. JOSEPH S. VAUGHAN EXAMINED.

Mr. Joseph S. Vaughan.

14576. CHAIRMAN.—I understood that the Athlone Guardians are not attending to-day?—No, sir, I am sorry that they are not here. There were two appointed to express their views, but they were unable at the last moment to attend, and they asked me to try to mention what they are. They did not go into the whole subject until the last meeting, and they asked me roughly to take down what was their opinion on certain points. They would, first of all, recommend the amalgamation of unions, and they would suggest that Ballymahon be amalgamated with Athlone on the ground of economy.

14577. And partly with Longford?—Yes; the Westmeath part with Athlone and the Longford part with Longford. And they also considered that one workhouse, as a workhouse, would be quite sufficient for the county, and would recommend Mullingar as the central workhouse. They suggested that Mullingar ought to be used entirely for tramps and able-bodied men. Then the number of inmates in the county they consider not sufficient for the sick poor, and they would consider that the Athlone Workhouse Hospital, owing to Athlone being so central to the two lines of railway, and to the fact that the workhouse hospital is said to be one of the best equipped workhouse hospitals in Ireland—I don't know whether it is the fact, but it is the impression of the Guardians—

14578. It is very good?—They consider it would be advisable to convert that into a district hospital, as distinct from a workhouse infirmary. In Athlone also there is no isolation hospital, but if this plan were carried out some of the existing buildings could be used for that purpose.

14579. Not the workhouse buildings?—Yes.

14580. For smallpox?—For smallpox.

14581. That would be rather close quarters?—The building is very large. The Guardians also consider that some steps ought to be taken to have a consumptive hospital, and perhaps a home for epileptics, in the county, and they would suggest that either Ballymahon or Delvin be used for that purpose; they are very strong on that point. I am sorry Dr. Shanley, our medical officer, was unable to attend to-day, as he was very strong on the point. He intended to come, but Sir Ashmun McCullagh is at Athlone to-day in connection with the smallpox.

14582. Have you smallpox at present?—We have one case in the fever hospital.

14583. When did it come in?—Friday last. As to boarding-out children, the Guardians adopted the plan some ten or twelve years ago, and found it a great success. Almost without exception the children turned out well, and contracted ties in the various parishes they were sent to. The Guardians noticed that with the exception of Mullingar and Delvin, this boarding-out Act has not been availed of in the various unions, or to any extent at least, and if the Act were amended to embrace children other than destitute children, it might be more availed of.

14584. You don't mean that to refer to all Ireland?—No; but to our own county. Grassard has not done it, or Tullamore. Grassard has only one child boarded out; Tullamore one, at least by the last report; Killymahon has no children boarded out, whereas we have over thirty. Then, on the question of tramps, the Guardians are of opinion that as the majority of tramps are militia and reserve men, this could be greatly reduced by the period of training being changed from the summer to the winter. They can get plenty of employment in the summer, and we noticed that the year the South African War was going on the number of tramps fell to 827 for the year from 1,419 the previous year, so if the law could be changed we would get rid of a good deal of them; and we also suggest that they be kept longer in the workhouses and not allowed to get their discharge until they have done a certain amount of work; or twisting on giving them a cold bath would keep them out.

14585. That would never do; you might kill one of those men!—It would be subject to the opinion of the medical officer. They consider that the proximity of unions to one another is also a great encouragement to tramping; they have really only ten miles to walk every day. Those were all the views the Guardians expressed. They only considered the matter at the last meeting.

14586. They said nothing about paying patients?—No; but I am sure they would fall in with the views expressed to-day.

14587. From what you know of the working of the Poor Law system, you would recommend them to do so?—I would, by all means. I think it would be a very good idea if carried out.

14588. Have you ever sent away any consumptive patients to extern hospitals for treatment?—We applied to send two away, but they died before we could get a ticket for admission to the Wicklow Hospital. We got two tickets of admission for a certain date, but before the date arrived the patients died.

14589. They would not have suitable premises for admission. They don't take people in the last stage?—We had to wait a long time—six weeks; that is why the Guardians are most anxious that some consumptive hospital for the county, or for several counties combined, should be established.

The Sitting terminated

THIRTIETH PUBLIC SITTING.—WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 17TH, 1904. FEB. 17, 1904.

At the Court-house, Longford.

Present:—MR. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURNAUGHAN, and Dr. COBY BIGGER.

Mr. John Muldoon, B.L.—I appear for the Urban District Council of Granard and also some ratepayers who are largely interested in the Granard Union, and they object to the Granard Union being broken up or joined with the Longford Union in any way. It may be at first sight suggested, that as the Granard Board of Guardians have themselves passed a resolution by a majority of thirty-two to twenty-one in favour of the breaking up of their union, the ground is swept from under my feet. I will endeavour to convince you that the very contrary is the fact; and considering the character of the Granard Board of Guardians, the present body—it must not be forgotten that the present body are only elected for three years, and at the end of three years there may be an entire change of persons in these boards. At all events, lately constituted as the Granard Board of Guardians is at present, they were not unanimous on this question—a majority of twenty-one, some of whom will be before you to-day, have been opposed to the amalgamation of the Granard Union. First of all, if I am correctly informed, the Granard Union is one of the lowest-rated unions in this county; the rates there are much lower than in Longford, and, presumably, at all events, the amalgamation of Granard with Longford would lead to an increase in the rates which are now imposed upon the ratepayers of the Granard Union, and that is one of the reasons why my clients—whose position in the matter is perfectly intelligible—are opposed to Granard coming into Longford. My clients, upon the general question of amalgamation, coincide at once that there are too many unions in Ireland, but when it comes to the local question of the Granard Union, they say there are several circumstances in the case which would make it inadvisable, unwise, and independent to interfere with the integrity of that union. In the first place, the Granard Union—the buildings of which are admirably situated for their purpose—is now situated in the centre of the district; part of their union is in Cavan and part in Westmeath, and no portion of that union, if I am correctly informed, is more than seven miles from Granard, which is the centre. The purpose of the establishment of these unions was to ensure speedy relief to the sick poor, and if Granard is to be destroyed several of its divisions would have to come to Longford, which would be a distance of sixteen miles, or seventeen, Irish miles—that, at all events, does not appear to be in the interests of the sick or destitute poor of the Granard Union.

CHAIRMAN.—You might also consider the alternative of leaving the hospital there.

Mr. Muldoon.—They have considered the alternative of leaving the hospital there, but the question for the Commission is, whether when you leave the hospital there, and when you superannuate the staff, the saving that would be effected to the union would be considerable—in fact, some of our witnesses will go so far as to say it will be almost all, and in addition to that, it would not meet the needs of the destitute poor of that part of the union at all. Then, again, the ratepayers of a large portion of the Granard Union are small ratepayers; the rating of a large number does not exceed £10 in annual value; it would be a great hardship, in fact it would be impossible for some of these people to come into Longford, if elected on the Poor Law Board of the Longford Union. The breaking up of the Granard Union would lead to the disfranchisement of Granard, and they would be coming into the Union of Longford, which is at present highly rated—at all events, it would tend to prevent the best class of Guardians or representatives from coming into the town of Longford, because they could not be expected to give up their business and time to come into weekly meetings at Longford under the new regime. Then, as regards the finances of the union, our contention is this—that when all the questions are considered, if a district hospital is to be maintained there with a staff, and if the present officers of the Granard Union are to be superannuated, the saving would be almost nil, if, indeed, it would be anything at all; it would not be worth the additional danger and trouble in reference to the sick and deserving poor. At present it is unquestionable the rates of Granard are very much lower than at Longford, and although the Granard Union have themselves gone in for amalgamation with Longford, no doubt some of them, perhaps, held the poor opinion that it would be generally in the interest of the ratepayers. The rates of the Granard Union appear to be 1s. 1d., while in Longford they are 1s. 7d., and if any of the ratepayers of Granard think that in five years' time they will still be paying 1s. 1d. in the 1d. I think they are under a complete delusion; and I would advise them to make a very large contribution to the poor-box in their own churches by reason of having escaped from a position of great peril. I venture to prophesy that they will be paying a considerable sum more, and that a great portion of the present Granard Union which is now in favour of amalgamation will be exceedingly annoyed and irritated about the way they are represented in the Longford Union, and the high rate which will eventually result. I am informed that the workhouse buildings at Granard are admirably situated for their purpose; they contain a great many more persons than are there at present; and quite recently, I am advised, that over £300 has been spent on workhouse buildings.

CHAIRMAN.—We have inspected the workhouse lately.

Mr. Muldoon.—The town of Granard is also a Quarter Sessions town, has a weekly market and monthly fairs, and as present it is the meeting place of three District Councils, who meet there monthly. This Commission is not concerned with the constitution or area of District Councils, and, I presume, at all events these Councils have to continue to meet there, and it will be manifestly inconvenient if, as District Councils, there would be three bodies meeting at Granard who, as Poor Law Guardians, will have to meet elsewhere. I submit that is a considerable inconvenience if amalgamation is to be carried out with any of the adjoining unions. The amalgamation of Granard is a very old question—it has been considered and decided several times. So far back as 1856 the Earl of Longford raised before the Poor Law Commissioners the question of the dissolution of the Granard Union, and the reply given by the Poor Law Commissioners to the proposal of the Earl of Longford may interest you. I believe it was published in a local paper.

CHAIRMAN.—It is published in the annual report of the Local Government Board.

Mr. Muldoon.—I assume you will have it before you, and I need not, therefore, take up your time with it now. And then again, in 1856, the dissolution of Granard was again so far before the Local Government Board as regards the taking away of the Cavan divisions to Cavan and that was considered by the Local Government Board and decided, and it was arranged that the integrity of Granard Union as a whole should not be interfered with. But, lastly, on July 26th, 1901, there was an inquiry upon this very question into a proposition placed before the Local Government Board by the Cavan County Council to annex Granard No. 2 Rural District to the Cavan Union; and, further, into the dissolution of the entire Granard Union, that is to say, to transfer Granard No. 1 Rural District to the Longford Union, and the Okeale Rural District to the Mullingar Union. That was the subject of inquiry before Major Rutledge Feir on the 30th of July, 1901, practically the very question we are dealing with here to-day, and a great body of evidence was taken at that inquiry—expert evidence as to the result, from a financial and other point of view, and the Local Government Board considered that fairly, and here is their reply, which I would almost say except the Local Government Board from asking any other order as the result of this Commission of Inquiry. At all events, if they make an order which dissolves Granard Union, it will hardly be consistent with their order which bears date 18th of April, 1903:—"To the Clerk of the Granard Union.—Sir,—The Local Government Board for Ireland desire to inform the Board of Guardians of the Granard Union that they have received the report of their Inspectors, Major Rutledge Feir, on the inquiry held by him respecting the proposal of the County Council of Cavan to transfer Granard No. 2 Rural District to the Cavan Union, and the general question of dissolving Granard Union and amalgamating the three rural districts comprised therein with the adjoining Unions of Longford, Cavan, and Mullingar. The Board have given the two proposals mentioned their careful consideration, and in the case of the suggested transfer of the Granard No. 2 Rural District to the Cavan Union, they find that if such a transfer took place the result would be an increase of rates not only on the electoral divisions comprised in that district, but also on the remainder of the Granard Union, while the destitute and sick poor would be obliged to travel a much longer distance for relief. Under these circumstances, the Local Government Board are of opinion that the proposed transfer of this district to Cavan should not be carried into effect. With respect to the question of the dissolution of the Granard Union and its amalgamation with the surrounding unions, the Local Government Board find that although the financial effect of this scheme would be beneficial to the unions in Longford, Cavan, and Mullingar, it would be injurious to the ratepayers of the Granard Union, and it was not shown that there was anything to be gained in the interests of the sick or destitute by the change. The Local Government Board can find no sufficient reason for dissolving the union in opposition to the wishes of the Board of Guardians. I submit that nothing has happened since to make desirable that which the Local Government Board two years ago considered to be undesirable from a financial point of view and in the interests of the sick and deserving poor.

Mr. John Muldoon, B.L.

Mr. John
Muldoon, M.P.

CHAIRMAN.—That was a proposal to break up Granard and distribute it in accordance with the provisions of the existing law; now the question is whether any amendment of the law could be made so as to cause a general scheme of amalgamation throughout the country to become advantageous.

Mr. Muldoon.—I should expect to hear from those who are recommending the amalgamation of unions here to-day, and from Longford, if they propose to take in Granard, some evidence which sets made the evidence which the Local Government Board acted upon two years ago. It is for those who suggest a change to show that something is to be gained by making a change. Up to this moment we have no evidence from the Longford Union, or any ratepayers there, that they are anxious to take over Granard; and we have not any case to meet made by anybody since that, that it would be an advantage for Longford or Granard to make the change.

CHAIRMAN.—At Mullingar, yesterday, the evidence was in favour of taking over the Cooles Division to Mullingar.

Mr. Muldoon.—The view our clients take of this is, on the question of the general change, the Granard Union could not be usefully dispersed with; and from the geographical position of Longford county it would be best served, best poor-lawed by a union at Mullingar and one at Granard, which would serve the needs of the entire county, while a district hospital would suit Longford. At all events, my contention at this moment is—I have not any case to meet—that what was decided in 1903 by the Local Government Board remains; that nothing has happened since to make it desirable that they had to be undesirable in the interests of the sick and deserving poor, and in the interests of the finances of the Granard Union. The ratepayers of the Granard Union are immensely interested in the result of this Commission, and in their amalgamation with anybody; and on the face of the question as it stands, to bring a union rated as low as they are into amalgamation with a union rated so much higher, as Longford, would not be in the interest of the Granard Union, and it would not conform to the best interests of local government over such a large district of this county.

Mr. P. M. Rymar examined.

Mr. P. M.
Rymar.

14090. Mr. Muldoon.—Were you formerly a Guardian of the Granard Union?—Yes.

14091. For how many years?—Nearly twenty years.

14092. Where do you live?—In the town of Granard.

14093. Are you a large ratepayer there?—Yes.

14094. You have property situated in the Union and also in the Urban District of Granard?—Yes.

14095. Have you yourself considered the question of the amalgamation of the Granard Union with Longford?—Yes.

14096. Would you be opposed to the breaking up of the Granard Union?—Oh, yes.

14097. On what ground?—First, on the ground of inconvenience to the poor, the loss that the poor of the district would sustain by having to come to Longford. Granard Union is made up of a lot of small villages and towns, in which a lot of poor live; the union is large, and in addition to the loss to the poor, it would be a great inconvenience to the Guardians to have to come up to twenty Irish miles.

14098. First, as regards the poor. I believe at the present time the outlying districts of the union are no more than seven miles from the workhouse?—About that, all round.

14099. And if these districts had to come into Longford they would have about how far to come?—Some would have to come nearly twenty Irish miles.

14100. What are the means of locomotion?—Nothing—except on foot, car, or horse; there is no train.

14101. Are there good roads?—No.

14102. Therefore, you say it would be a great hardship upon the destitute poor?—Yes; and then it would be an inconvenience. I would nearly say the Guardians could not possibly attend; and if they would attend it would be at a considerable loss of time and expense.

14093. What are the villages in the union?—Edgeworthstown is the largest; Finis, in Wintesth; Scrubby, in Cavan; Kilscoy, Bunkley, and Ballinacree—these are all villages within from four to six miles from Granard.

14094. Are those all populous centres?—Populous centres, with a lot of poor in them.

14095. And, knowing the locality well, you would say that it would be exceedingly inconvenient to bring those to Longford, and difficult?—Yes.

14096. Generally, in the Granard Union, the rates are small?—Oh, yes; very much lower than in any other union of the county.

14097. You also suggest it would be difficult to get Guardians to take the responsibility and the pains when they would have to come to Longford?—I do. The Guardians, generally, cannot go away to a distance without money in their pockets; and the Guardians nowadays are poor men, as a rule—a lot of small men.

14098. At present any householders may be a Guardian of the poor?—He need not be a householder at all—any boy.

14099. If he has a smoke he can be a Poor Law Guardian?—Yes.

14100. And at present, as far as Granard is concerned, they are in the habit of attending these markets and fairs, and upon other occasions, and they make use of that opportunity of discharging their representative duties?—Quite so.

14101. A great portion of that district has no connection at all either in the market way or fair way or attending Quarter Sessions at Longford?—Nearly two-thirds have not.

14102. Would you say as a result of amalgamation that Guardians would not come in from those places?—I would.

Feb. 17, 1904

Mr. F. M.
Reilly.

14613. And, of course, that would mean taxation of that district without representation?—Quite so.

14614. Have you considered at all whether there would be any financial gain to Granard by being joined to Longford?—On the contrary, I consider it will be a financial loss.

14615. Do you happen to know at present what is the poor-rate in the Granard Union?—I cannot tell what this year's rate is, but it is less than last year. Mr. Edgeworth will tell you that.

14616. Have you a notion of what the poor-rate is in Longford?—I always heard it said that it was from 6d. to 8d. in the £ dearer than Granard.

14617. And amalgamating Granard would bring it into a union much more highly rated?—Yes.

14618. And you know the feelings of the local people about Granard well?—I do, well.

14619. And you gave evidence at the Inquiry before Hogg Rutledge Fair?—Yes.

14620. And you gave it then as your opinion that the local people were opposed to amalgamation?—I knew it, for I know the feeling of the people.

14621. You know that at that time there was a protest signed in the locality against amalgamation?—Yes.

14622. And do you think any of those people live in the division?—All over the Union.

14623. And do you think any of those people have changed their minds?—There might be some.

14624. But, generally, you would say the people are opposed to the breaking up of the Granard Union?—Yes; I think it would be quite natural they would. It would be very queer if they would not, for it would be a loss to themselves.

14625. The Granard Board of Guardians passed a resolution in favour of amalgamation?—Absolutely; I think so.

14626. By a majority?—Yes.

14627. Now do you account for their doing that—do you think they represent the feelings of the local people in doing so?—A good many of the Guardians did turn up at all, and the men that formed the majority were principally County Cavan men, who would like to get their five divisions that they are fighting for for some time into the County Cavan. I believe the majority of the County Longford people were in favour of retaining things as they are. The Cavan people, if they went away, would not suffer as much as the Longford people.

14628. You know the buildings of the Granard Union?—I do.

14629. Are they very fairly suitable for their purpose?—Yes; they may not be sufficiently attended to lately owing to the friction that has been going on, and this question of amalgamation was in the air for some time, and on those grounds the Guardians were so unsettled in their minds that they neglected to comply with all the requirements of the Local Government Board.

14630. The present board has not been getting on very well with the Local Government Board?—Not too well.

14631. But there is a minority there that carries the Union?—Yes.

14632. As minorities sometimes do?—Generally do.

14633. Are you aware that recently £200 has been spent on buildings?—No; I am not a Guardian this year.

14634. Did you hear that?—I heard that. I think there can be evidence before the Inquiry that will prove that.

14635. Are you aware yourself that this question of amalgamation has been up several times, and has been considered by the Local Government Board, and previously by the Guardians of the Granard Union?—I am aware that it went to a test twice.

14636. And amalgamation was refused to be carried out?—Yes; and the Local Government Board on the occasion when the Guardians, by a majority, asked for amalgamation refused.

14637. Has your Urban Council considered the question?—Yes.

14638. Have they passed a resolution one way or another—have they actually passed a resolution on the subject?—They have.

14639. And that is, opposing amalgamation?—Yes.

14640. On the ground you have stated?—Yes, and other grounds as well.

14641. On the general question of amalgamation of unions in this county, and in the event of the Commission being in favour of amalgamating unions, what arrangement would you suggest?—I was asked by the Urban Council as a ratepayer to state my views, which I forwarded to this Commission last week, and I gave my view then that I would recommend a reformation of the present Boards of Guardians generally. As far as I know in Granard there are too many Guardians, and the work cannot be done efficiently. I was there for sixteen or seventeen years in the old board, and everything went on very smoothly and nicely; I was there for three years under the new Act, and there were so many there things were not done well at all.

14642. In the multiplicity of Councils there is confusion?—Yes; I came to the conclusion that one elected Guardian for each division would be sufficient. I would be inclined to say that the clergy should have representation, either by co-optation or election, because in a matter where there are so many concerned the clergy have a good deal to do with them, and I would say that the clergy of all churches should have a say in the arrangements of all the unions; and, in addition, I would say that it would be only fair to large ratepayers, such as magistrates, in the union, who always take an interest in the work of these things, that half-a-dozen, or more, of the local magistrates should be co-opted every three years who would be a useful addition to the boards.

14643. In the event of some of the unions being swept away, where would you leave unions in this county?—As I stated to the Commission, I am not in favour of amalgamation at all. I would like that every union should be kept, because they are wanted in their own districts. But I would say there should be one in the north and one in the south division of the county; and if any union was done away with Longford, I thought, could better afford to be done away with, owing to having railways and water-power, and they could turn their businesses into factories. In Ballymahon or Granard there is no room for factories—there are no rivers and no means of conveyance. Anything you do with the workhouse in Longford would be in the hands of the County Council. They meet here monthly, and they could arrange to carry on factories and works in the town, with its large population of working people.

14644. And the Longford Workhouse would make a suitable auxiliary asylum?—Quite so, or factory.

14645. You think it would be a better arrangement to have a workhouse in each of the two ends of the county?—Quite so.

14646. If Granard were swept away you would have the two union workhouses as one Parliamentary division of the county?—Yes; but then Ballymahon and Granard take in a small fringe of the surrounding counties, and if they were taken away, not alone would the poor of Longford suffer, but the poor we have from Cavan would also suffer inconvenience more than we do, because they would have to go larger distances.

14647. Do you think that the carrying out of the suggestions you have made, of bringing in clergymen of all denominations and some magistrates into the boards, as at present constituted, would lead to harmony at the meetings of these boards?—I do; I have experience, too; of course, I have no experience of clergymen; but I really think that when they are eligible in England and Scotland for these boards, we should have them, too. They are very useful, and have a wholesome influence on the people.

14648. You think it would lead to harmony at the board meetings?—That is my opinion.

14649. Do you think the qualification of Guardians and District Councils is quite sufficient?—I would say they should have a reasonable qualification. I would like to have men of sound judgment and soundness and responsibility spending the money of the ratepayers.

14650. Mr. F. W. Delany—I appear for the Longford Rural District Council, and we think somewhat differently from Mr. Reilly. I would like to ask him a few questions. You take a great interest in this matter of amalgamation?—Yes; I was always opposed to it.

14651. You are aware that one of the grounds that induced the Local Government Board not to give way to the suggestion of amalgamation on the last occasion was the fact that the Guardians of Granard were opposed to it?—Yes; that is quite true.

Feb. 17, 1904.

Mr. P. M.
Rally

14652. You have told the Commission, I think, that the Guardians, by resolution, have changed their minds?—Yes.

14653. Do you happen to know if that was a resolution came to after notice to the Guardians to attend?—I don't know that.

14654. But there is no question about it that the present Board of Guardians is in favour of amalgamation?—I don't say that the majority of the Board of Guardians are.

14655. Has that resolution been rescinded?—It has not.

14656. Your view is that Longford, if there is to be amalgamation at all, should be done away with?—I don't say that; but I say Longford would be the most suitable house to turn into a factory or asylum.

14657. Would not that place these two unions of Granard and Ballymahon at least twenty miles apart?—No; Ballymahon comes in within a mile of Edgeworthstown.

14658. I am speaking of the houses?—They would be sixteen miles apart.

14659. And that is greater, I take it, than the furthest point any portion of the Union of Longford is from the workhouse?—No.

14660. Do you happen to know what is the furthest point in the Longford Union from the workhouse?—Oh, I don't know anything about Longford Union at all.

14661. Would you be surprised to hear it was fifteen miles?—I would—Irish miles.

14662. You suggest to the Commission that the furthest part of the Granard Union from the workhouse is only seven miles?—I am not sure if I said that.

14663. I thought so?—I said Granard Workhouse is situated in the centre of the union and I know myself that Rathnew is eight miles. I think there is a point in Arva which is about ten miles from Granard.

14664. How far is the furthest portion of Moyne from Granard—sixteen miles?—Not at all; not ten. Arva is only ten miles from Granard, and Moyne is not so far.

14665. Edgeworthstown is connected with Longford by railway?—It is.

14666. Bellinaloe is only six miles from Longford?—Yes.

14667. Bundaghy is within one and a half miles from Bellinaloe?—More; about three miles.

14668. Is it the distance that would keep the Guardians from attending?—Yes.

14669. How many Guardians are there in the Workhouse of Granard?—I may tell you there are ninety?—There are thirty-six divisions, and each division has two.

14670. And some three?—No.

14671. Do you happen to know what is the average attendance?—No.

14672. You have dealt with the question of rates—Granard, admittedly, has been lower than Longford?—Always.
